Rachins: “You’re the one who said to stop messing around, right? Listen up, Shitty Subaru. Although I don’t want to be lectured by that bastard Reinhard, I also don’t want to run into trouble that could kill me. Since what happens next is entirely dependent on my mood, you’d better be careful with your next words.”

Although Rachins still held some measure of doubt, he wanted to hear the details. Surprised at this reasonable judgment, Subaru decided to continue with the conversation.

Subaru: “I understand, sorry. The Witch Cult’s Wrath is planning to attack this square. She will appear at that clock tower, and her target is everyone in the square, not any specific individual.”

Rachins: “That’s consistent with the Witch Cult’s style. Damn it, how much time do we have?”

Subaru: “There’s probably only five minutes left. So, seriously, call him right now.”

Rachins: “Five minutes?! You’re kidding! Why didn’t you say that sooner?!”

Subaru: “That’s what I was trying to tell you five minutes ago!”

Although Rachins was outraged at the lack of time, Subaru had spent ten long minutes finding him and convincing him. Subaru had not wished to walk this kind of tightrope, if possible.

Running around the city and calling for Reinhard would have been more reliable than talking to Rachins. However, time did not allow that of Subaru.

Subaru: “Anyway, please, could we stop messing around so you can call Reinhard? According to your conversation yesterday, it’s through something like fireworks, right?”

Rachins: “Fireworks, what’s that…? I shoot magic in the air, and that bastard Reinhard can see it and recognize it as the signal.”

Subaru: “…That’s simple and clear, which is good, but what would happen if someone else suddenly fired magic into the air?”

Rachins: “There’s no need to worry about that. Apparently, the red-haired bastard can tell who’s responsible for which magic.”

Even being unaware of the details, Subaru could tell how out of the ordinary that ability was. Then, he belatedly realized the obvious—It seemed that, during the past year, Rachins had also improved himself to the point where he could use basic magic. It was hard to imagine that he was capable of using magic back when Subaru first met him, one year ago.

Rachins: “I’m not a performer, so move aside already, you annoying bunch!”

Rachins finally gave in to Subaru’s persuasion, and prepared to call Reinhard.

The crowd, who had been whispering “Are they starting yet?”, “Is it finally happening?” backed off, disappointed, as Rachins raised a hand, kneading Mana.

Seeing the swirl of red Mana—of fire-attribute magic, Goa—Subaru felt an odd sense of unsettling disconnect.

This time, the situation should have drastic changes, and move forward.

Although it had been a rather extreme case of persuasion, Subaru was still excited to learn that he could work with Rachins like this, even if the latter’s actions were based on self-preservation.

This could be said to partially amount to Subaru’s growth in the past year, and his defeat of Petelgeuse. Rachins, too, had changed in the year past. Whether Subaru or Rachins, if one of them had not changed in the previous year, then this collaboration could never have happened.

Therefore, this result had been born of a simultaneously optimistic yet realistic growth.

Reinhard would come here.

As a result, dealing with Wrath would also be easy. No matter how powerful the enemy was, they would be dwarfed by the Sword Saint. The Authority of Wrath surely would not work on Reinhard. For some reason, Subaru trusted that mysterious sense of his.

Rachins: “Goa!”

Rachins recited the incantation, and a red flame burst forth from his raised arm. The flame skyrocketed, and soon exploded with a dry sound in the blue sky.

Call it fireworks or magic, it seemed a little shabby, but that signal was presumably more than good enough for the hero it was meant to reach.

Perhaps what happened next was due to that hazy relief.

Because of course. It was obvious. He should have thought about it.

Had the thought of Reinhard’s arrival caused him to relax so much that he neglected to pay attention to his surroundings?

Sirius: “—Oh my. There seems to be a fireball in the sky. What a beautiful, blinding light.”

If any commotion arose near the clocktower, it was only natural that the enemy would detect it.

3

Sirius, appearing on the white tower, wore that bandage concealing her face, as always.

However, the expression she wore was obviously a smile. Something about the tone of her voice reflected a little bird chirping melodies in the sunny Spring.

Sirius raised a hand over her eyes and squinted at the brilliance of that Goa. She seemed to be regarding that red flame with the same admiration most people would treat fireworks with.

Sirius: “This is great! Well, everyone, my apologies. Good morning!”

That unusually high-pitched sound snatched the crowd’s attention from the fireball, and they turned to face Sirius.

Even Subaru did. So, he could not blame their collective reaction.

Subaru: “No, don’t look!!”

Seeing that fierce, bandaged smile out of the corner of his eye, he immediately issued a loud warning.

However, not a single person heeded his warning and looked away. Of course. Subaru himself had held the same feeling about Sirius since their first contact.

Even if he turned his face, his left cheek could still feel that intensity. Those vicious waves of danger that existed to threaten his life.

Faced with a bloody carnivore, how could anyone avert their gaze? Looking away from a dangerous pair of sharp fangs could only be done by those who had already given up on living.

Refusing to die, their human instincts directed their gazes upon Sirius.

Sirius: “Oh my. Silence came much faster than I expected. This must be thanks those two men who attracted your attention before I appeared. Thank you. Please applaud those two young men.”

Sirius clapped her hands together as she spoke, the chains attached to them clattering on the floor, as she regarded Subaru and Rachins, who still held his arm outstretched.

Subaru, feeling a cool breeze on his face, clenched his teeth and attempted to refrain from reacting to Sirius's gaze.

Redirecting Rachins's attention would be impossible. He had already been entrapped by Sirius. No matter what Subaru did, he would be unable to get through to Rachins, and then Sirius would entrap him as well.

In fact, now, Subaru could not bring himself to cover his ears.

He had expected that even being aware of Sirius would mean her charm would become irresistible. Therefore, what Subaru had originally intended to do was immediately avert his gaze and cover his ears. Even if such measures would render him defenseless, he would not be subjected to her mental manipulation.

However, after his eyes were captured, that premeditated countermeasure was no longer available.

And why would he cover his ears? Because he didn't want to hear Sirius's voice.

However, why would he willingly deprive himself of such a pleasant sound?

Subaru: "…"

His attention placed on her, Subaru forgot himself and turned to look at Sirius.

Sirius watched Subaru as he did so, gleefully clasping her hands together and shaking her body from side to side. The chains again rubbed against the ground with metallic friction and a rattling noise, as if reflecting the defenses of Subaru's strong heart being broken down.

Sirius: "All right! It took nineteen seconds for everyone to see me here. My apologies. But I am very happy. And, although I do not know why, it seems to me that there is a child here who loves me far more than expected. Well, then, I have to introduce myself."

As she spoke, Sirius lowered her head respectfully, facing a whirlpool of anxious gazes. Raising her head, basking in everyone's gaze,

Sirius: "I am a Sin Archbishop of the Witch Cult, representing Wrath. I am called Sirius Romanée-Conti."

She reported her daunting name.

That title should have been symbol of disgust and terror, and should have evoked an incredibly negative response. Instead, as she opened her speech, the crowd reacted as if she had introduced herself as a friendly neighbor.

Sirius: "Oh, thank you. My apologies for taking up everyone's time like this. However, please rest assured that I put an end to all this soon."

???: "—Will you? Then it seems fortunate that I rushed here as soon as I could."

The voice that replied was deeper and softer than Sirius's fictional kindness, and permeated, touched the hearts of the people of the square, Subaru included.

Sirius: "…"

Sirius lowered her gaze once more, and Subaru and the rest of the crowd turned to the side.

They were all facing the waterway which ran behind the square. A smooth flow of water erupted alongside the wind of someone moving at incredible speed.

There, a red flame burned.

There, clear, sky-colored eyes blinked.

There, a fair, calm face revered by all who gazed upon him appeared.

—The embodiment of the concept of a hero, envisioned by all humans, was now a reality.

Reinhard: “Searching for a shortcut took a little bit of time. Sorry for being late.”

The hero took not five minutes, but thirty seconds to arrive, and offered his apology. Having sprinted through the roads—no, having traveled by waterway, the recently-arrived Sword Saint swept his eyes quickly through the circle of people, before raising his eyes towards Wrath and sighing.

Reinhard: “I understand why I was called. That judgment was correct, Rachins. Or was it you, Subaru?”

Leaping from the water to the ground, and then into the square, Reinhard relieved the stiff Rachins, then patted Subaru’s shoulders with his hands.

Recognizing the touch of those palms as real, Subaru gave several gasping exhalations as his whole body shuddered.

Subaru: “Rei-Reinhard?”

Reinhard: “Yes, it is me. From the looks of it, this is quite the emergency. Standing overhead, at the tower… That is a Sin Archbishop, right?”

Reinhard, offering a reassuring nod, stood in the spotlight.

Subaru saw his fair eyebrows wrinkle as he deliberately chose not to face Sirius. Reinhard seemed to also understand the danger.

Subaru: “She has a brainwashing ability. Although it feels a little better now… If I heard her voice or looked at her now, I’d immediately fall back under its spell.”

Reinhard: “I know. And not just sound and sight. It seems that even feeling her presence in my skin will have that effect. I do not know if I am able to remain calm for long, when near her.”

Subaru: “You’re kidding, even you…?!”

Hearing Reinhard’s vulnerable statement, Subaru fell into speechless despair.

Although he had no basis in believing so, he had been convinced that as long as Reinhard were here, everything would be fine. However, Reinhard himself had told Subaru that he would not be unaffected by Sirius.

In that case, it would be difficult to even come up with an idea on how to deal with that wicked presence.

Sirius: “I apologize if mistaken, but could it be that you’re the famed Sword Saint-san? If so… what a wonderful day this will be!”

Reinhard: “As you said, I am Reinhard van Astrea, the current inheritor of the title of Sword Saint. Unfortunately, I think that title is too heavy for me now.”

Sirius: “Nonsense! But that poses no problem! It is very nice to have you here. Because this country bears the greatest trust and highest expectations in you as a Knight. Everyone loves you, and you love everyone. You are the embodiment of my hope, the ideal of my Love!”

Reinhard: “Am I?”

Sirius was indeed shaking her hands noisily and engaging in an ecstatic dance. Reinhard, although facing away from her, was chatting with her quite casually. If communicating with her would lead to falling under her spell, then Reinhard’s lack of action equated suicide.

Subaru spoke up anxiously.

Subaru: “Hey, hey, Reinhard… going on like this isn’t good. It’s not good at all. It’ll be really bad. Although I can’t say why.”

Reinhard: “…That looks to be the case indeed. And that is not applicable to me exclusively. Taking the others into consideration, I cannot prolong this too much.”

Subaru should feel anxious, but gradually became unaware of why. Reinhard sighed at his puzzlement, and took a step forward. Then,

Subaru: “Reinhard?”

Reinhard: “I cannot hold on for too much longer—So, I will get rid of the problem as soon as possible.”

As soon as those words faded, Reinhard tensed his legs slightly, and leapt forward.

That was the same movement he had used to leave the waterway—but this time, it produced a rippling blast, and everyone in the area gasped as they felt the impact of waves spread over the ground.

Leaving behind that share of amazement, Reinhard turned the explosive energy into ascending momentum.

Sirius: “Hahahaha! Ah, how impressive this is—”

The kick of the ascending Sword Saint effortlessly struck Sirius, who had crossed her arms to receive the blow, and she was flung far into the sky above the white tower.

Chapter 22:
A Casual Response

1

Could this be called aerial warfare?

Reinhard had leapt toward Sirius, knocking his opponent from the tower and sending her flying through the sky. Touching down on the white walls of the clock tower, he flew off like a bullet by slightly bending and stretching his knees again.

Sirius: “Hahaha! Ah, how impressive you are!”

As the heroic figure flew toward her, she raised her voice, ecstatic, and waved her arms about. Accompanying that motion was the piercing whine of her chain unraveling from her wrist.

That fully extended chain could now be used as a whip, although its merit as a weapon relied more in its intimidating appearance and violent sound, rather than convenience. Only a deviant with no common sense would opt for such a weapon.

That iron snake had undoubtedly tasted the blood of more than just a few people, and, at this moment, it was partaking in one of its routine hunts. Attempting to crush its prey with its iron jaws, the whistling wind it created resembling applause.

But even that blunt snake, who could approach the speed of sound, was clueless.

—In this world, there was a human existence as departed from common sense as Sirius, albeit in a different manner.

Reinhard: “A chain, how troublesome.”

Hearing the sound of the chain entering the fight, the Sword Saint frowned and gave a troubled mutter.

In the midst of such an intense battle, he seemed to be letting out a slight grievance that was better suited to the atmosphere of a mild annoyance in one's daily life.

Sirius: "Hahaha!"

Sirius, on the verge of panting, revealed her passionate laugh to the spectators.

Surely, that was inevitable. However, the reasoning behind Sirius's delight was mysterious. Whether it was because of desperation, or whether she was genuinely happy, that much was clear to all the spectators looking up at the scene, Subaru included.

This was a situation that only Sirius would have laughed in.

Reinhard: "…"

Sirius flew upwards, and Reinhard pursued her from below.

With Reinhard as her target, Sirius delivered a quick, precise blow, slamming the chains of both her arms. Even facing that oncoming chain, Reinhard did not reach for the sword hanging at his waist.

If his words from long before were true, it was not that he did not intend to draw his sword, it was that he was unable to. Reinhard's legendary sword would only allow itself to face worthy opponents.

In that case, he had been condemned to be unarmed while fighting that horrible freak. Even Reinhard, who Subaru had the utmost trust in, would need to undergo a bitter struggle—perhaps he would even fail to live up to Subaru's expectations, in a show of human weakness.

If so, then that trust would soon be shattered.

Aiming a follow-up strike of her chains at Reinhard, a high-pitched noise echoed.

Shockwaves and sparks danced violently. To Subaru and the other spectators, lightning seemed to flash through the sky. The ability to accomplish that kind of witchcraft was precisely the proof that Reinhard transcended the boundaries of human skill.

Reinhard met the chain head on, lifting his slender right leg to defend.

That attack had been so surprising that it would have elicited a laugh from anyone. Right after the impact, Reinhard wrapped the chain around his foot with a turn of his ankle, moving it to suit his own will.

The movement itself had not been anything special. Reinhard had met the approaching chain with his right leg and wound it around his foot in a makeshift weapon, using it to open an immediate follow-up.

In only a moment, he had easily shifted from offense to defense.

Needless to say, not everyone could keep up with the fight. Among those present, only the handful of people with combat training could follow those rapid, continuous shifts between attacking and defending.

In that moment of understanding, there was an urge to laugh. Subaru gave a long sigh and relaxed his shoulders. Fortunately, Reinhard was a comrade, and Subaru had never been happier that he was on his side. If he were the enemy, then Subaru's shoulders, knees, and bladder would have all given out.

Sirius: "Haha, hahaha! Aha, HAHAHAHA!!"

Sirius laughed loudly, her right arm spinning wildly like a tornado.

Since her left arm had been captured by Reinhard, she could only resort to the use of the right one. However, although the whistling snake tore through the sky, flying from every direction, it was blocked by the chain on Reinhard's right foot, creating a high-pitched whine and a shower of sparks.

Every spark dancing in the blue sky, was accompanied by the sound of a metallic musical instrument that permeated the square, in a whirling performance of red and yellow.

A strike, another blow, but during that period, Reinhard had further closed the distance between himself and Sirius. Soon, after exchanging an array of blows, he reached her.

Sirius: “How unexpected! You’ve actually reached this point! Amazing!”

Reinhard: “You are very proficient. I find it a shame that you’ve committed yourself to evil.”

In those moments, the two exchanged words the way they exchanged attacks.

Reinhard quickly pulled back his right leg and thrusted his left hand with aligned fingers. Sirius greeted it with a powerful swing of her arm, the undulating chain diving at Reinhard with exposed fangs. And, although that chain was made of steel, Reinhard had used his own hand as a blade and cleaved it in two.

In the past, Subaru had witnessed the perfect splitting of disposable wooden chopsticks—a party trick. If Reinhard were to partake in those performances, he could split a steel blade like paper. The fact his strike had had the beauty of a sword was enough reason to believe so.

The severed portion of the chain continued with the same momentum it had into the clocktower, the violent collision shattering one of the building’s walls. The sight of smoke and the rubble crashing into the square shook Subaru out of his trance.

He had been completely fascinated.

Reinhard and Sirius’s fight—No, Reinhard’s fight, had entranced him. Whether it was envy or fear that had caused said fascination was another matter entirely.

Subaru: “Leaving her to Reinhard is fine. Then, I…!”

He could not continue to dawdle here, blindly ogling the fight and waiting for an outcome.

Subaru squeezed through a gap in the crowd, running to the opening of the tower. Now that Sirius’s attention was fully devoted to Reinhard, Lusbel, who had been prepared for her speech, had probably been abandoned in the clock tower.

Saving him would ease Subaru's worries.

Just in case, so that if Sirius got away from Reinhard, Lusbel's safety would be guaranteed. Subaru climbed anxiously up the spiral staircase, again tasting that dark, damp air.

The tower was much brighter now than it had been fifteen minutes ago, much thanks to the light flooding in from the walls broken by Sirius's chain.

After safely ascending the spiral staircase, Subaru discovered Lusbel, bound in chains, on the top floor. He had been left face up on the ground, the floor wet by his incontinence. The child's sobs touched Subaru deeply.

Subaru: "Lusbel! You're safe now, don't worry!"

Subaru tenderly took the chained Lusbel into his arms. He ignored the warm moisture as he saw Lusbel's desperate, tearful gaze turning away from his own, terrified of Subaru's face.

Lusbel: "Mmm!"

Subaru: "It's alright, I'm on your side. And as for that monster, a reliable hero is fighting her right now. So, let's take this time to get you out of here."

Lusbel: "Mmm."

Subaru spoke with the utmost sincerity. Gradually, Lusbel's body lost its strength, abandoning his struggle, and he faced Subaru with a tearful but clear expression.

After Subaru nodded in response to that inquiring gaze, Lusbel began sobbing anew, for a different reason than before.

Subaru: "Wait a second. Let me get this off you."

After gently stroking the crying boy's head, Subaru started cautiously working on the chain as not to hurt him. From shoulders to ankles, the chain had been wound tightly, and he had also been gagged with it. Subaru took care to avoid hurting the child as he unraveled it.

Subaru: “Well, I got it off. Can you stand up? If not, I can carry you.”

Lusbel: “D-Don’t worry, it’s… thank you… hk.”

Lusbel rose unsteadily to his feet, shaking his stiff legs, offering his gratitude. Although his face was stained with tears, he was still a strong child. Subaru patted his head again.

Then, as he turned his gaze to outside, where the violent offensive and defensive sounds were repeatedly triggered,

Subaru: “Staying here might actually be safer, but we should probably get out just in case. Can you walk? Are you hurt anywhere?”

Lusbel: “My right arm, just a little bit…”

Lusbel frowned and obediently presented his wound to Subaru.

On his outstretched right hand was a sharp laceration that had been made by a snake-like weapon. Its origin was clear. Seeing the blood oozing from the wound, Subaru contorted his face in discomfort.

Subaru: “Bastard, tying up such a small child, and even doing this to him.”

Lusbel: “No, no. This just suddenly… suddenly started hurting while I was tied up.”

Subaru: “Suddenly?”

“While he had been tied up”, Subaru registered distractedly.

At least, Subaru should not have hurt him in the process of unraveling the chain. His movements had been cautious, and Subaru would have noticed if he had caused Lusbel an injury this serious.

—Terrible, ominous apprehension rose in Subaru's heart.

Subaru: "…At any rate, we can't stay here. Let's go."

Subaru took Lusbel's uninjured left hand, running away. Leading him to the bottom of the spiral staircase, to the exit of the tower. And upon Subaru's return to the square, he heard—

Crowd: "—Kill her! Kill her! Kill her! Kill her!"

The mob had plunged into a frenzy, eagerly awaiting the execution of that captured freak, calling for vindication. Eyes filled with bloodlust, mouths twisted in snarls, howling for murder.

Endless abhorrence of evil. Incredulous aversion to unnatural monsters. Wanting to be rid of an enemy who could not be accepted at a physiological level. Such negative emotions called for murder.

And what was this called?

—This was known as Wrath.

Crowd: "—Kill her! Kill her! Kill her! Kill her!"

A crowd of complete strangers stood side by side as comrades, moving toward the same goal.

Crowd: "—Kill her! Kill her! Kill her! Kill her!"

Their very hearts united in the face of adversity, and the philosophy of good and evil being questioned in those extraordinary circumstances.

Crowd: "—Kill her! Kill her! Kill her! Kill her!"

Choosing to be united in such extreme conditions, pushing that limit, that was—

Crowd: "—Kill her! Kill her! Kill her! Kill her!"

Sirius: "Joining feelings into one… this is surely Love, correct? Well, there is no doubt that this is a scene only Love could achieve, don't you agree?"

In front of that hellish scenery, Sirius murmured in her usual voice.

Sirius had been pressed to the side of the clocktower by the hero. The surrounding crowd eagerly cheered for the death of that unnatural person, knowing that their Sword Saint had the power to kill the abomination.

Sirius even seemed to have lost the chain on her left hand, now in a precarious situation. With both hands unarmed, the monster had no way to defend against Reinhard's knife-like hand.

She was clearly facing a dead-end—however, Sirius wore her usual placid smile.

Reinhard: "Are there any last words you wish to say?"

Sirius: "Thank you. Then, allow me to offer you a piece of advice. The other Sin Archbishops may not be as docile as me, so if you wish to ask their last words, you might suffer for it."

Reinhard: "—I will keep that in mind."

In the face of Reinhard's warm kindness, Sirius spoke calm, provocative words. Reinhard nodded in compliance and stepped forward, ready to execute her with the blade that was his hand.

Crowd: "—Kill her! Kill her! Kill her! Kill her!"

As the voice of the crowd grew in intensity, Sirius's fate had been sealed. This was obvious, so why?

Standing at the entrance of the broken tower, Subaru felt a throbbing chill, which threatened to break his heart.

Why? What did that mean? He desperately wanted to speak, but his mouth could not move. Once it did, Subaru knew what he would say.

Subaru certainly would join the loud cries of "Kill her!".

Sirius: “We know each other. Mutual humility. Mutual recognition. We forgive each other. That is exactly the correct form that Love should take.”

Subaru feeling subdued, Sirius continued to preach her rhetoric.

At first glance, she seemed to make sense, but taking into account that it was Sirius saying so, the proposition and the atmosphere itself became horrifying.

Reinhard: “…”

Reinhard seemed to have made the same judgment as Subaru.

There was no longer any meaning in letting Sirius speak, so Reinhard moved forward. However, just before Reinhard reached her, Sirius smiled and held her arms into the air.

Immediately, accompanied by a crackling sound, chains were ejected from the cuffs of her coat. Those chains were fired through her sleeves, and then wrapped around the tower as Sirius began to fly once more. She intended to escape—but just before she could, Reinhard stomped on the ground. Shockwaves spread upward, like an explosion, and a red flame attacked Sirius.

His hand struck at her in a smooth, upward motion. A one-hit deathblow. In that moment, Sirius’s life would end.

Crowd: “—Kill her! Kill her! Kill her! Kill her!”

And the crowd’s cry, would be fulfilled.

With tremendous momentum, Subaru’s heart spiked with fear. And driven by a sudden impulse—

Subaru: “Reinhard!!”

Calling upon the hero’s name, Subaru yelled, guided by the impatience of the crowd.

Subaru: “—KILL HER!!”

Reinhard slashed.

A clean line swept neatly from Sirius's left shoulder to her right flank.

That exquisite cut was so sharp, that even Sirius's slashed body did not react to the slash for a few seconds. Finally, the blood in her body noticed the wound, and her body collapsed diagonally as blood began to spray.

Sirius: "…Ah, this gentle world."

Her internal organs spilling out, Sirius's body was cleft in half.

Her upper body continued soaring upward, pouring blood and intestines through the air, while her lower body, left in place, became a fountain, sprinkling blood through the square.

A nightmarish spectacle had been propelled into the heavens above and the earth below, respectively.

No one could bear to look straight at that horror. However, no one looked away.

No one could look away.

Reinhard: "…It cannot be."

After landing, Reinhard uttered a stunned mutter.

Subaru saw that his blue eyes were shaking with grief, the shadow of despair enveloping his fair, handsome face.

—And then Subaru could see no more.

Subaru: “…”

Subaru, and the rest of the crowd, lay scattered in the square that had turned into a pool of blood. From their left shoulders to their right sides, everyone had been bisected, as clear as day.

Subaru: “…”

Blood and viscera spilling out, Subaru’s consciousness did not have time to understand what had happened before being pulled into the embrace of death. Just before that happened, he felt something else.

A boy’s left hand, whose owner had also been split in twain, squeezed Subaru’s own right hand tightly, seeking salvation from him.

It seemed like he had felt that somewhere before.

2

Liliana: “After the song ends and they chat again, shouldn’t we prepare food and drinks for them, Natsuki-sama? Indulging in sweet snacks will certainly create a mood that will close the distance between them, don’t you think so?”

Subaru: “—Ghk!”

Beatrice: “Ow! Ow, that hurts! It hurts in fact, Subaru!!”

Immediately after the blink, Subaru was surprised to hear the voice he had just heard.

The sudden switch in consciousness had him clinging to Beatrice’s hand with the same vice grip that he had been making before his Return by Death, strong enough to crush Appas.

Beatrice tearfully kicked Subaru’s shin after suffering from that sudden atrocity, who recoiled in pain and loosened his grip on her hand.

Liliana: “Wh-Wh-Wh-Why did you do that? Why would you attack Beatrice-sama’s lovely hands so suddenly? You’re going to ruin then… but it’s okay, I… I-I’ll kiss and lick them and to heal them, ha… haha.”

Beatrice: “It’s alright, I suppose! That’s quite gross, in fact!”

Beatrice flushed with panic as Liliana grabbed her hand, blushing and breathing heavily. She ducked behind Subaru. Even if he had injured her hand, her trust in her partner had not diminished.

Emilia: “Subaru, are you alright? Just now, you suddenly turned pale…”

Subaru: “E-Emilia-tan…”

Emilia joined his side, reaching a hand to his cheek, her face rife with concern. Subaru saw himself reflected in her amethyst eyes and breathed a sigh.

He had come back.

He patted his shoulders and chest, which had been bisected. His abdomen had been cut, and his head had been smashed. Although Subaru was confident in his experience with deaths, this had been his first clear experience of being slashed down. Taking precedence over pain was a sense of astonishment and loss, the knowledge of death tugging at Subaru’s soul. This was a death that Subaru, who was commonly subjected to them, could accept.

Subaru: “Why, can’t I find a simple conclusion…”

Once again catching up with the memories he had inherited, the realization of death assaulted him, forcing him to recognize it. Although he had not registered much pain, the sense of loss and shock hit Subaru one after the other. His partial understanding of the phenomenon grew, albeit not completely so. There remained an event beyond his understanding.

That is, this time, the cause of death—

Subaru: “Disgusting…”

Needless to say, he had long understood.

Subaru had been killed exactly the same way that Sirius had been, this time. To put it bluntly, Subaru had died in the exact same manner Sirius did. Looking back thirty minutes, to that first death, Subaru died shortly after joyfully witnessing Lusbel’s death. The previously unknown cause of death had now been identified.

—Somehow, someway, Sirius could deliver death to any who witnessed death.

Not just brainwashing with emotional changes. Even changes that occurred in the body could be shared. It was not merely brainwashing, but bodywashing. Or could it be called soulwashing?

In other words, killing her meant that the people in that square would all be killed.

Subaru: “What to do…?”

Defeating Sirius using brute force could be achieved by calling Reinhard.

However, that would come at the price of the life of everyone in that square. In that case, the result would be no different from Sirius’s intended atrocities.

Summoning Reinhard was nothing more than a correct and easy-to-understand solution at first glance, but it was, in actuality, the wrong answer. In this case, what could he do?

Subaru: “Call Reinhard, and tell him to take her alive…?”

That was unlikely, but perhaps not impossible to him.

Since Reinhard was capable of killing Sirius, he should also be capable of depriving her of her consciousness. The problem was that it was not clear if her mental control would end would her being caught alive.

Subaru had come in contact with Sirius and Lusbel, and had gone mad and died. If that mysterious madness continued to infect everyone, then capturing Sirius would be fruitless.

If she were killed, everyone else would die with her.

If she were caught, there was a possibility that she would spread her contagion of irresistible madness.

Just existing made her a threat to others, she was this kind of bomb-like existence. She truly deserved her title of Sin Archbishop.

Subaru: “What else can I do?”

Unable to find a breakthrough, Subaru found himself in a dilemma.

If Reinhard were called, he would surely be able to kill or restrain Sirius. Would that be okay, ignoring the possibility of falling into madness?

Subaru: “…”

Time passed even as Subaru pondered. Seeing Subaru staying quiet, those around him all appeared uneasy. Subaru did not want them to remain worried, nor to reveal what was going to happen.

He hurriedly changed the expression on his face and announced,

Subaru: “Ah, right. That is… Yes, I suddenly felt like I was going to puke up the daisukiyaki from this morning. My chest was a bit uncomfortable.”

Liliana: “Ah, I see, I see. I, too, often feel nauseous, which is accompanied by a lot of gas…”

Subaru: “Stop right there. No matter how you act, you’re still a girl.”

Subaru interrupted Liliana’s jokes with a smile and turned towards Emilia. Seeing that, Emilia lowered her gaze.

Emilia: “If Subaru says so, I’ll believe it… this is a special case, okay?”

Subaru: “Mhm, thanks… Then, I’ll go buy desserts, as Liliana suggested. Emilia-tan, please continue to enjoy the song.”

Thanks to Emilia’s kindness, Subaru was able to make an announcement after wavering. Then, holding Beatrice’s hand again,

Subaru: “Beako. Come shopping with me. Let’s take a walk and flirt like we always do.”

Beatrice: “What are you suddenly—Mhm. Betty understands, in fact.”

Beatrice, whose face turned red, showing her tsun side, changed attitude upon seeing Subaru’s face, showing the dere side. To put it more appropriately, she accepted his offer after noticing his pleading expression.

Subaru took the confused Beatrice’s hand and ran from the park for the fourth time, pulling on her hand. This time, rather than leaving Beatrice behind, he would bring his reliable partner with him. Even though he had yet to reach any kind of breakthrough.

Priscilla: “—Hmm.”

—Staring at the retreating figures of Subaru and Beatrice, the woman of crimson watched the duo with a thoughtful expression.

Chapter 23:
Disrupted Situation

Beatrice: “So? Tell me what happened, in fact.”

Having left the park, Beatrice waited until they had left Emilia and the others’ sight, and slowed her steps, speaking up. Although she had slowed down to talk, Subaru grabbed her arm and led her forward.

Beatrice: “Subaru?”

Subaru: “Sorry. We have to talk where no one else is around. There are many things that I want to discuss thoroughly, but we don’t have enough time—In fact, we have less than fifteen minutes.”

Beatrice: “…I understand, I suppose. Explain while we walk, in fact.”

Beatrice marched along obediently as Subaru turned his face away, trying to hide his anxiety. The presence of his understanding partner lightened Subaru’s heart, and he carefully sorted through the thoughts swimming in his mind as he tried to relay them to Beatrice.

Subaru: “The Witch Cult will attack the square that we’re heading to, and we have to stop their evil deeds.”

Beatrice: “Witch Cult… hk.”

Beatrice’s breath caught, and she urged Subaru to continue.

What troubled him were the rules and penalties for giving out information learned through Return by Death. Even if he had been able to safely relay tidbits to Rachins, there was no certainty that he could do so with Beatrice—That was the nature of the devil of shadows whose hand bound Subaru.

The Witch that interfered with Subaru’s disclosure of information acquired via Return by Death would make a decision and pass judgement only after determining not only what Subaru was divulging, but also the person he was talking to.

If that were not the case, then why had Emilia's heart been crushed after the secret had been revealed? That was the only explanation he could come up with.

So that was why Subaru paid careful attention to what he told Beatrice. If it were just Subaru withstanding the pain, then that would be no problem. It was scary. It was. But it was not something he was unable to endure. However, if that devil's hand reached Emilia or Beatrice, Subaru would be crippled by guilt.

She might be forgiving to Subaru, but that Witch would be merciless to others.

Beatrice: "As usual, you can't say anything, I suppose?"

Subaru: "…Sorry. I'm so unreasonable."

Beatrice: "Fine, in fact. Betty will believe it without any basis, I suppose. They're Subaru's words, so Betty will believe them, in fact."

Beatrice took Subaru's hand with her own, who bit back his own powerlessness. Saved by the warmth transmitted from that palm, Subaru searched for his next words. Sirius, Wrath, emotion sharing, soulwashing—scrutinizing the information that could be conveyed, and he would share awareness of the danger with Beatrice, little by little.

Subaru: "First of all, the member of the Witch Cult that's going to show up is the Sin Archbishop of Wrath, who is, uh… A freak."

Beatrice: "If that's the information that needs to be conveyed then Betty thinks that Subaru is having bad thoughts, I suppose."

Subaru: "I'm just probing what's safe and what's not. Anyway, there's something very important that we'll have to deal with. Her abilities… she can control emotions, or is it sharing senses between people?"

Beatrice: “Controlling emotions and sharing senses?”

Beatrice lifted her head.

She was unable to imagine it in concrete terms. Of course, Subaru also could not clearly understand the effect of that Authority.

Subaru: “Explaining is a little difficult… if the Sin Archbishop is overjoyed, then no matter how angry people around her are, they will also feel happy.”

Beatrice: “…I don’t really understand how that’s a threat, in fact.”

Subaru: “It’s this big thing where recognizing danger is impossible. No matter how dangerous the situation is, you don’t get that feeling of crisis. You’ll accept it with delight and won’t be able to correctly grasp the situation, understand?”

A crying, pleading child who did not want to die had been cheered for by the masses.

They had found joy in everything in front of them. Horrifying. Subaru was sure that, in that state, he would have been delighted up until the point a knife touched him. Even if it meant his head would be disconnected from his body by that blade.

Beatrice: “I understand the sharing of emotions, I suppose. What about sharing senses, in fact?”

Subaru: “That’s not all. When someone else feels pain, I’ll feel it too. If the Sin Archbishop’s head is cut off, then the heads of everyone watching it will also be cut off.”

As he explained further, his frustration at the hopeless situation began to surface again.

If you decapitate her, your head will also be chopped off—There were few abilities that would make one more hesitant to kill than that. He had been able to escape through Return by Death, so he could think of measures in advance now. But everyone affected by that Authority before had no way of overriding that at all.

Subaru: “But even if you try to catch her alive, then there’s the possibility you’ll go crazy just by being in the vicinity. If she dies, then we’ll all die too. She’s really the worst kind of enemy, troublesome alive or dead.”

On his second death, Subaru had been swallowed by fear and driven mad. The origin of that fear had been Lusbel, who desperately sought for help. However, on that occasion, Lusbel had continuously felt the horror that led up to that madness. It could be taken as meaning that Subaru had less mental fortitude than the boy.

For Subaru, it was hard to say, “I should have been better”. Because it was hard to imagine that Lusbel, who he had spoken to earlier, would be able to resist such overwhelming terror.

Something other than just being made to share fear must have killed Subaru, in his second death. Something beyond just sharing emotions and senses—Without the knowledge of what that was, finding a strategy that could defeat Sirius would be difficult.

Subaru: “…”

Subaru did not continue to speak, but he kept a grip on Beatrice’s hand, nonetheless.

Obviously, he had taken Beatrice, but he still had not found a solution. As such, Beatrice would probably be entangled in a battle with no real hope of victory.

What should he do? The easiest thing to do would be to have Reinhard take Sirius alive, considering the possibility of madness being induced. Subaru considered just summoning Reinhard like last time, giving enough explanation, and having him capture Sirius.

Why not call Reinhard before Sirius appeared? Before the sudden attack on the square, he would talk to Rachins again, warning him of life-threatening danger, and Reinhard would be called to deal with the crisis. Reinhard would not attack instantly, without asking for details. Even if Subaru explained why he had made an emergency call, there would be at least a few minutes until Sirius would make a move.

Subaru: “Am I an idiot? No, I am definitely an idiot. If Reinhard’s called, then Sirius is going to react immediately. There won’t be time to explain, and everything will speed up just like last time.”

Subaru needed to inform Reinhard before his battle with Sirius started.

Could he do it? Subaru had no confidence that he would be able to express his thoughts in time. In that previous loop, although he had wished to tell Reinhard to capture her, his mouth had disobeyed him and joined the crowd in yelling “kill her”. This was an undeniable precedent.

Beatrice: “Subaru. There’s still more bad news, in fact.”

Subaru: “…Seriously? I don’t want to hear more bad news.”

Beatrice: Betty understands, I suppose. But, I have to tell you… Betty would be useless in a battlefield with Reinhard, in fact. I’d just be a cute little girl, I suppose.”

Subaru: “Huh?”

Beatrice spoke suddenly, her eyes downcast.

Beatrice: “Because of his constitution, Reinhard acts as a beacon for Mana, in fact. It’s like it doesn’t belong in this world, I suppose. The surrounding Mana in the atmosphere will follow him blindly, causing damage to the environment, which becomes a shackle to him, in fact. Spirits and magic users will be unable to use Mana, and Betty won’t be able to do anything, I suppose.”

Subaru: “What… the… That there should be such a thing…”

Even as he said so, Subaru realized that it was nothing so unthinkable. On the day Subaru had been summoned to this world, Reinhard and Elsa had fought a battle over the Insignia that qualified Emilia for the Royal Selection, in that final loop.

Subaru recalled that, while treating Old Man Rom, Emilia had mentioned that if Reinhard revealed his true ability, magic would be ineffective.

Beatrice: “If Reinhard can solve the problem, then it wouldn’t matter if Betty can’t do anything, in fact. But, if just Reinhard isn’t enough…”

Subaru: “Beako won’t have the option of being useful.”

That fantasy was also killed.

Just his presence would cause all magic to cease functioning. Calling Reinhard would now be counterproductive.

—Awful, awful, awful, awful, awful, awful, what a disaster.

Subaru could no longer see any light. Had he been right or wrong in calling Reinhard? What about bringing Beatrice? What would be the correct procedure, here?

Should he ignore Sirius and give priority to the task of saving the people in the square? In that case, Sirius would only find another place to do the same thing. There was no point.

As he contemplated, anxiety began to burn through Subaru’s mind. Subaru expended as much effort as he possibly could in desperate search of a solution, but could find none.

Even so, time ticked on mercilessly, leaving Subaru behind.

Beatrice: “…Subaru, we’re at the square, in fact.”

Subaru: “—Hk.”

Hearing her, Subaru suddenly looked up and saw the square.

The two had arrived at their destination, which would soon be marked by tragedy. No solution had been found yet. Their time limit had been cut short, little by little.

The white clocktower. The crowded square.

There were less than ten minutes before the tragedy would take place. Subaru's solution was insufficient. How to solve it correctly? What to do?

Beatrice: "Subaru, I might have come up a solution, in fact."

As Subaru's face was taut with tension, Beatrice spoke up. Subaru's blank mind was startled by her sweet voice.

Subaru: "Came up with a solution?!"

Beatrice: "Betty might be wrong, I suppose. But Subaru's description of that Sin Archbishop's abilities sounds familiar… I'm thinking of a higher-level magic, called Nect, that has a similar effect, in fact."

Subaru: "Nect…!"

Nect—It was a form of magic that Subaru had experienced in the past. With Nect, magic users could share the awareness and feelings of others. Indeed, it seemed similar to Sirius's Authority.

While wondering why he had not noticed at first, Subaru thought out loud.

Subaru: "If it's the same as Nect, is there any counter for it?"

Beatrice: "…In the first place, countering Nect is unnecessary, I suppose. It is intended to unite comrades and express feelings, in fact. Using Nect as a weapon seems strange, I suppose."

Beatrice gave her unhappy reply to an anxious Subaru. Subaru had once reluctantly shared his vision with Julius using Nect, so that the latter could defeat Petelgeuse, countering his Unseen Hands by making them visible.

Nect's ability was used for cooperation between allies. It was absolutely not the kind of magic that should be used to take hostages.

Beatrice: "Normally, there is a condition for Nect, in fact. Enough trust between the two parties so that a passage of Mana can be established is necessary, I suppose. The Archbishop's Authority probably has the power to circumvent such a condition, I suppose.”

Subaru: “So her Authority can forcibly achieve it. More than that…”

Beatrice: “How to deal with it, I suppose—Shamak is the most obvious answer, in fact.”

Subaru: “Shamak-san has arrived! It’s too versatile!”

Subaru perked up at Beatrice’s proposal.

Shamak was an incredibly familiar magic. In painful, hard, dangerous times, in the hopeless of situations, Shamak had always faced adversaries alongside Subaru. Prior to contracting Beatrice, Subaru’s main sources of strength were Rem, Patrasche, and Shamak.

And even after the destruction of his own Gate, through his Contract with Beatrice, Shamak was still helping Subaru.

Subaru: “I see, Shamak, huh… If it’s Shamak then surely everything is somehow…”

Beatrice: “Subaru seems to have an unusual level of trust for Shamak, I suppose. It’s the most basic of Yin Magic and it’s really not that useful, I suppose.”

Subaru: “Even Beako isn’t allowed to badmouth Shamak like that…!”

Beatrice: “What’s made Subaru defend Shamak to this extent, in fact?”

Beatrice listened to the incomprehensible ramblings with a sigh, then glanced around carefully while holding a finger up.

Beatrice: “Shamak interrupts consciousness—it’s a magic that forcibly disconnects one from their surroundings, I suppose. Subaru uses the magic strangely, in fact, but Betty doesn’t have any problem with it at all.”

Subaru: “In other words…?”

Beatrice: “When that magic is cast on the crowd, everyone’s minds will be blinded with Shamak, and it should be possible to escape the effects of the Authority of the Sin Archbishop, in fact. Though I’m worried about whether I can stop it from affecting Subaru, I suppose.”

Beatrice spoke with confidence and Subaru clenched his hands with excitement at this new glimmer of hope.

Subaru: “Alright, good. I’ll be depending on your magic. Then… what’s next?”

Beatrice: “Aside from Reinhard, who can defeat the Sin Archbishop, in fact?”

Subaru: “…”

With Reinhard, Beatrice would not be able to use her Shamak strategy. Therefore, he needed to be excluded from their calculations.

However, on this occasion, Reinhard was perhaps the only one who could defeat Sirius.

Beatrice: “Speaking of which, since Betty needs to use Shamak on people the moment the Archbishop is defeated, Betty won’t be able to fight, in fact.”

Subaru: “That’s right. Then… we’re back at square one.”

Without Beatrice’s backing, Subaru would almost certainly be unable to defeat Wrath. Without his trump card, just his whip alone would not allow him to escape unscathed.

Subaru: “At that time, it seemed like there were other people who could fight in that square…”

Subaru thought of the first time at the square.

Upon detecting a threatening presence in the tower, several people reacted immediately. A beastman, a blindfolded woman, a serious-looking businessman, and Rachins.

Excluding Rachins, how would the remaining three fare? Adding Subaru to their number would total four, and would that mean that victory was in sight?

Subaru: “What a stupid train of thought, asking strangers to trust me. I don’t think there’s anything I haven’t thought of now…”

???: “—That’s where I come in, because I know what I’m capable of?”

Subaru: “—?!”

A sudden voice from behind pierced into his hopeless thoughts.

At that all too familiar voice, Subaru and Beatrice looked back in surprise. Standing behind the two with their hands on their hips—

Subaru: “E-Emilia-tan? Why are you here…”

Emilia: “Subaru seemed to be acting strange, so I was worried that something bad was happening. It looks like I was excluded, that’s one of Subaru’s bad traits.”

Having been criticized, Subaru pressed his mouth shut.

Astonished at Emilia's sudden appearance, he could not respond. She should not be here. He did not want her to be here. Beatrice took his place and looked up at Emilia.

Beatrice: "You should have stayed in the park, in fact. Why did you come, I suppose?"

Emilia: "…I just couldn't wait. Subaru told me to stay, but Priscilla told me otherwise."

Subaru: "That woman in red?"

Emilia: "She said that if I didn't follow you, I'd certainly regret it. When I caught up and saw that nothing had happened, I thought about leaving quietly, but you two seemed to be discussing something serious. So I couldn't go back."

Emilia had been influenced, and the face of the villain who had driven her decision came to mind.

Subaru gritted his teeth, mentally cursing Priscilla and her arrogant, disruptive meddling. That malicious whimsy had perfectly arranged the situation Subaru wanted to avoid the most.

Subaru: "Emilia-tan, I'm happy. I'm glad, so, from now on…"

Emilia: "The Witch Cult will appear? I heard you loud and clear… So even if Subaru tells me to go back, I won't. It's not just another person's business to me either."

Subaru: "Emilia!"

He was not trying to keep Emilia out of danger for no reason.

He spoke sharply, desperate to drive Emilia away.

She must not meet the Witch Cult. Subaru could not quite articulate why, but it was not born of anything like stubborn protectiveness. He instinctively understood that it must not be allowed.

Emilia absolutely could not meet the Witch Cult. To Emilia, that cult was a poison to be avoided. Although that held true for the majority of people born in this world, Emilia was a special case.

Subaru: “We’ll manage something. Emilia doesn’t need to be involved. This has nothing to do with you.”

Emilia: “Even so, what if Subaru is hurt because I’m not there? I’d never let that happen. If Subaru fights, I’ll fight by his side. If Subaru wants to protect something, I’ll do my best to help. And since Subaru will certainly protect me…”

Subaru: “…”

Emilia: “I also want to protect Subaru. I promised I wouldn’t cry like that anymore.”

Emilia spoke with an unyielding heart.

In order to keep her away from danger, Subaru had to summon every drop of his courage, face adversity with a heart of steel.

However, Subaru, right now, was afraid. He was terrified of fighting.

Three times.

Three times Subaru had lost to Sirius, and three times he had lost his life. No matter how experienced he was with death, he had still died so many times in such a short span of time.

Death was horrible, unacceptable, and no matter how much he experienced it, he could never grow used to it.

Having his life taken was completely unreasonable. That denied his self, trampled on his existence, insulted his soul. It was something that stole from him.

Although he tried to cover everything up with frivolity, Subaru could not brush off everything that affected him. Even while stubbornly maintaining that he had people he wished to protect, he could never cast off his weak heart, that was afraid to die.

Natsuki Subaru, no matter what, had not been able to overcome that weakness.

Beatrice: “…Subaru. You should give up, in fact.”

Subaru: “Beatrice…”

Beatrice: “Emilia is stubborn, I suppose. She won’t change her mind, in fact. Betty also understands Emilia’s feelings, I suppose. Betty wants to protect Subaru the same way… Betty isn’t able to deny her that, in fact.”

Beatrice was the key to their strategy and also the party who called the shots. If she waved the white flag, then Subaru would not be unable to resist.

Emilia looked to Subaru sincerely, and Beatrice sweetly. Under their gaze, Subaru finally gave in.

Subaru: “…The Witch Cultists will target you. If that happens, think of yourself as a priority.”

Emilia: “Mhm, I understand. Even if I’m caught, Subaru will definitely save me. I believe in you and I’ll do my best.”

Subaru: “Don’t jinx it… So, how much of our conversation did you hear?”

Having been accepted by Subaru, Emilia gave a relaxed smile.

She touched her fingers to her lips.

Emilia: “I heard the gist of it. The Witch Cult is going to wreak havoc with a magic like Nect, which Beatrice wants to counteract with Shamak. During that, I have to work hard to beat that villain.”

Subaru: “That’s a child-like way of understanding it, but it works. Emilia-tan, can I depend on you?”

Emilia: “Leave it to me. I’m plenty strong.”

Emilia makes a guts pose with her hands in front of her chest. That lovely action showed a certain lack of tension, but she seemed to have understood the situation.

Subaru felt restless and useless about relying on Emilia. Moreover, the timing of Beatrice's magic was difficult for him to get a grasp on, which made it another element of anxiety. But,

Subaru: "Emilia-tan and Beako are both here, so I can't fail…!"

Instead of feeling anxious, the boy used that to fuel his determination.

Subaru: "Besides, it's almost time."

Between Beatrice's proposal, and Emilia's arrival, more than half of their remaining time had gone by. They would have to try their best responding to Sirius's appearance. If possible, it would be preferable to knock Sirius down from the tower while keeping Lusbel safe inside.

Subaru: "Emilia-tan. Soon a strange person will appear on the tower. Attack them with a big first shot. Having her fall from the tower would be ideal. Afterward, Beako will prepare her spell, so when we get the signal, we'll start the fight."

Emilia: "Mhm, I understand. Although I do not know if things will go that smoothly, but I'll try."

Emilia's expression stiffened and both Subaru and Beatrice nodded at each other. The plan was set.

Subaru: "—She's here!"

A figure could be seen moving about in the clock tower's window.

A slender body wrapped in a black coat and a head wrapped in bandages. The ends of her chain, hanging from her hands, struck the ground with rattling sounds, as the monster looked down at the square.

The people there had yet to notice that anomalous presence. Sirius stood on her stage, shaking her body and opening her arms as though admiring the people, who were unprepared for that imminent threat.

And then she clapped and made a sound—the eyes of the people who heard the sound were drawn to the monster, and her speech would begin.

Subaru: "…"

Swallowing, Subaru witnessed the arrival of the moment with a sigh.

With imposing gestures, Sirius raised her chest to speak fiercely—

Emilia: "Ul Huma!"

A huge icicle appeared in front of the tower, hitting Sirius who stood on the edge.

The thick icicle, which was around the size of five people, struck the wall of the clock tower with a violent crash. An icicle speared through the front of the tower, and the walls split apart. Subaru's jaw dropped in amazement, seeing the tip of the icicle piercing the tower.

Subaru: "E-Emilia-tan?"

Emilia: "Subaru said we needed to strike first, so I did… Did I mess up?"

Subaru: "No, good job! I just didn't expect you to attack before her introduction."

Subaru had not motioned for her to act yet, and was surprised that Emilia had judged Sirius as a threat at a glance.

Now the biggest problem would be her behavior, since Sirius had been equally unprepared. Maybe the blow had even taken her out. Moreover, the panicked crowd seemed to be entirely fine, so perhaps Sirius had indeed been incapacitated before her sense sharing had been activated.

That had been entirely thanks to Emilia's great contribution.

Subaru: "Beako, what do you think?"

Beatrice: "First of all, think of a way to address the people around us who are misunderstanding, in fact."

As Beatrice's surprise turned to pride, Subaru wanted to ask whether they had gotten Sirius.

Emilia surveyed the destruction of the tower while Subaru slowly turned to face the uneasy crowd surrounding them. The beastman and the blindfolded woman were there—how unfortunate, they were people that Subaru had considered as possible allies in this battle.

Subaru: "Uh, well, what do I do now? Explain that we didn't mean any harm?"

Emilia: "—Mm. You better do that, Subaru."

While Subaru scratched his head, pondering the explanation, Emilia suddenly grabbed his shoulders, placing herself in front of Subaru, who fell down on the floor.

In that moment, a crack sounded through the air, and a blue sword of ice appeared in Emilia's hands. She assumed a battle-ready posture, facing down the crowd, aiming the tip of the sword towards them.

Subaru: "Emilia-tan? You don't have to go that far…"

Emilia: "It's not that. Look closely, Subaru. Their eyes look insane."

Subaru: "—Eh?"

Scared by Emilia's suddenly firm voice, Subaru surveyed the crowd around them, and could not help but exclaim. Like Emilia had said, their eyes held no trace of sanity.

The people around them were tomato-red from the neck up, the blood vessels in their faces on the verge of bursting, bloodshot eyes glaring at Subaru’s group.

Rather than doubting their sanity, Subaru saw they were indubitably full of mad fury.

Subaru: “Beako! What about Shamak?!”

Beatrice: “…It failed, I suppose.”

Subaru: “What?”

Beatrice: “This magic is fundamentally different from Nect… No, it’s evil, in fact. This is nothing like magic, I suppose. A curse… it is Curse Arts, in fact!”

Beatrice raised her voice in anger, and Subaru could only answer with a frown.

He was not sure of the specifics, but Beatrice’s Operation Shamak had not worked. He understood the issue but had no solution. And there were further problems.

Then, the masses had been completely engulfed by madness…

Crowd: “It stinks. It stinks. It stinks. It stinks. It stinks. It stinks. stinks, stinks.”

It was a terrible, viscous, sound, tenaciously cursing everything in the world.

Subaru: “…”

With the sound of a detonation, the wall of the clock tower collapsed.

A crack ran through the icicle that had been embedded into the tower, and it shattered to pieces. Shimmering, the ice crystallized in the sun, accompanied by the faint sound of footsteps.

The footsteps of an abomination.

She was not unhurt. Half of the bandages wrapped around her face were stained with blood, which also dripped from her left arm and her chain. She had a terrifying appearance

Emilia's premeditated attack had no doubt had an effect.

Only, it had also caused something undesirable.

Sirius: "Disgusting, the stench of that woman, filthy and detestable, the stench of the half-devil who stole my husband from me, the stench of maggots, endless filth. Hate, I hate it so much, burning it to cinders isn't enough."

Subaru: "…What are you saying?"

Sirius: "And that other woman, she's obviously not her, but she has such a similar stench, how shameless, the stench of rotting insects, ah, ah, ah ah aaAAAAAAH! How hateful! How rancid! How vile! I hate you!"

The anomalous woman clutched her bleeding head with a harsh cry. Spit flew from her mouth as she ruthlessly stomped her feet. Subaru knew this odd behavior. It was wild as ever, but its direction was obviously different.

Sirius: "My! Are you testing the love for my husband, Spirit?! From me, were you not satisfied with taking my husband from me, YOU HALF-DEVIL WHORE?!!"

Gritting her teeth, she issued a wrathful cry as she leapt forward.

Sirius, who had fallen from the tower, folded her arms overhead, and red flames sparked into life. They sprayed from both arms, and a line of flame formed as she landed in the square.

Exercising her limbs, armed with her flame, the monster raised her head.

Emilia held her sword of ice ready as she stood in front of Subaru and Beatrice, guarding them. Swinging her gaze back and forth, Sirius yelled with a furious voice.

Sirius: “I am! A Sin Archbishop of the Witch Cult! Representing Wrath!!”

Red flames gushing forth, she bathed the crowd in heat as she raised her arms to the heavens. In a frenzied crisis completely different from the situation Subaru had expected, the madwoman introduced herself.

Sirius: “—Sirius Romanée-Conti!! Fucking half-devil and Spirit, I’ll scorch your corpses and scatter your ashes at my husband’s tomb!!”

Chapter 24:
Resolution of Ice and Fire

With flames of rising crimson on her arms, Sirius's shrieking was infernal in nature. The reason why that was felt even through the bandages was her eyes, dominated by rage completely out of the ordinary.

Those light-crimson eyes, normally so clear they seemed capable of sucking people in, were now glaring at Subaru and the others with hatred, tinged by the red-hot blaze on her arms.

—No, that was not quite right. Because,

Crowd: "Stinks, stinks, stinks, stinks, stinks, stinks, stinks…!"

Sirius had not registered Subaru's presence. She merely glared with passionate hatred at the two standing in front of Subaru—that is, at Emilia and Beatrice.

Subaru: "What's up with her? She's not the same as before…"

Subaru could not hide his wavering confusion at Sirius's rage.

In the short span of time since he had encountered her, Subaru had met a relatively normal Sirius three times. Among those encounters, although Sirius had not been a person that followed common sense, she had not been someone irrational, overrun by rage.

In fact, she had always been attempting to justify her claims to impose on others.

So, the Sirius in front of them was completely foreign. She had lost her rationality and fallen prey to rage. Putting it simply, she now seemed a perfect fit for her title as Wrath's representative.

Sirius: "I could keep burning and burning you, but it wouldn't be enough… like maggots, like flies. Haha, how much do you hate me?! Even in my saddest days, am I not allowed the freedom of mourning?”

Emilia: “…I don’t know what you’re talking about?”

Sirius: “Ah, ha?!”

Emilia responded fearlessly to Sirius’s enraged allegations, and stayed fearless at Sirius’s fierce reactions. She pointed the tip of her sword of ice at the crowd behind Sirius.

Emilia: “If you feel angry at me, I’ll hear you out. After all, the sudden provocation came from us, it’s natural that you’re angry. However, this has nothing to do with the other people here. Please liberate them.”

Sirius: “That’s the wrong attitude! If you want to let everyone go, do it right! It’s natural that I’m angry? Then apologize to me! Apologize, repent, crawl on the floor and cry and beg for forgiveness, then let me shoot flames into your ass and scorch your internal organs away!”

Emilia: “Having my organs burned would be troublesome—So, let’s settle this simply.”

Sirius tilted her head upon hearing Emilia’s low voice.

Emilia immediately twisted her upper body slightly and darted forward. Her pale wrists wielded her sword of ice as if it were weightless.

The sun glistened off the sharpened tip of the sword as she drove it towards Sirius’s shoulder.

Subaru: “Emilia-tan?”

Sirius: “—Tch!”

Subaru’s exclamation overlapped with Sirius’s snarl. Facing that swing, Sirius immediately lifted her left wrist, bringing flames to the swords. However,

Sirius: “Fucking half-devil!”

Emilia: “Please don’t say that anymore. It feels dirty.”

Emilia’s sword, although bathed in Sirius’s flame, did not vaporize into air. The pale tip of the sword did not lose against the heat, and met Sirius’s burning left wrist—only, Sirius’s chain had been also wrapped around it.

With a high-pitched noise, ice sword and flaming chain collided with a brilliant flash of Mana. After only a brief contest, Emilia’s sword shattered with a crisp snap.

Sirius: “You, damn…!”

Looking at the ice sword, reduced to a mere handle, Sirius gleefully attempted to slam her arm against Emilia. The chain, tinged with the heat of the fire, would burn wounds on those it touched.

And so, Emilia’s beautiful face was wounded—But on the verge of that happening,

Emilia: “Haaa!”

There was a shout that did not fit the scene, and this time, Sirius’s wrist was struck. Emilia’s sword of ice had deflected her.

Sirius: “Ah ah aaaah! Ah ah ah ah ah! Just die already!”

Sirius’s cries of wrath pierced the air as she swung both arms over her head. The center of the area she was targeting was occupied by Emilia.

Emilia’s ice blade extended at the hilt, its shape having been changed into that of a hammer. Sirius met its blow with both hands, retreating, only to be pursued by Emilia.

Emilia: “Haah! Hahh! Yah!”

Sirius: “Disgusting! Half-devil! Maggot! Fly! Insect! Loathsome bug!”

Through use of centrifugal force and control over her body, Emilia demonstrated an unimaginable show of close quarters combat.

Against that mallet of ice, the flame-wielding Sirius had been reduced to defense. Looking at Emilia's one-sided attack, Subaru, as a third-party observer, judged that she would triumph. Even so,

Subaru: "This isn't the time to be in a trance! No, Emilia!"

Beatrice: "Subaru, you can't be distracted right now, in fact."

If Emilia killed Sirius, the last death would certainly repeat itself. Death would be spread to everyone in the vicinity.

Although Subaru had foreseen this crisis, Beatrice quickly scolded him. Subaru, wondering what had happened, followed Beatrice's gaze.

Crowd: "—Dirty insect."

Subaru: "Crap."

The members of the crowd behind Sirius were all flushed with anger. The crowd looked at Subaru and Beatrice and made cursing gestures reminiscent of Sirius. In fact, they were completely sharing her Wrath.

That wave of anger was focused on Subaru.

Subaru: "It's not just sharing feelings, but also doing things like brainwashing a crowd into acting on her will?"

Beatrice: "Identifying the situation is good, I suppose. If a solution doesn't exist, then all we can do is escape, in fact!"

As Subaru groaned, considering his troubles, Beatrice immediately jumped onto his back. The crowd advanced towards Subaru, supporting that light body with his hands.

Subaru: "Emilia, help stall for us!"

Emilia: "I won't be too messy about it!"

Receiving her strong reply, Subaru broke into a sprint, fleeing from the crowd. Fortunately, the pace of the masses who had lost their rationality was far from normal.

They chased Subaru with hands outstretched, empty wrath in their gazes, looking not unlike zombies. The main difference was that rather than wanting to eat Subaru, they wished to rip and tear him limb from limb with their bare hands.

Subaru: “If we keep stalling like this, someone could come…”

Beatrice: “Even if someone comes, without figuring out the conditions of victory, it would be meaningless, in fact. Even if Reinhard comes, would he be able to solve this, I suppose?”

Subaru: “In short, our worries won’t end even if he comes…”

In any case, the one who could summon Reinhard, Rachins, was presently part of the crowd threatening Subaru, face colored bright-red. He was one of the people most motivated to push forward, trying to be the first to reach Subaru.

Maybe it was the influence of his own mental image of Subaru, formed even before Sirius shared feelings with him.

Subaru: “We have to think of something!”

???: “Dirty insects!”

A man leapt at Subaru, who ducked his head and threw himself past his opponent’s arms, grabbing one of them before sweeping the man off his feet and sending his body flying. The masses showed no consideration to the tumbling man until he knocked them over. Turning from this bowling-like scene, Subaru spoke.

Subaru: “They’re so angry that they aren’t thinking at all.”

Beatrice: “However, that isn’t what I would recommend, in fact. In such an atmosphere, they probably won’t hesitate on trampling on their friends accidentally, I suppose.”

Subaru: “That won’t do!”

He did not want any sacrifices. The reason why Subaru fought so hard for so many was precisely this. Of course, Subaru understood that there were things that he could not reach.

There were many things he wanted to protect. However, there was a limit to what he was able to.

Of course. Subaru was not an omnipotent being.

Subaru: “However, I’m the one who chooses that limit!”

Beatrice: “That’s Betty’s Subaru, in fact!”

Hearing the greatest possible support from his back, Subaru drew his whip.

“I’ll save as many lives as I can. So please forgive me for any injuries”, those were Subaru’s feelings. Aiming at the feet of the crowd, his whip launched through the air.

With the crack of a small thunderbolt, the whip hit the stone pavement. Although it was not lethal, it was still a weapon, and, when wielded mercilessly, could incapacitate an opponent if used with all its might.

If maybe, after witnessing that power, the mass of people be cowed into retreating,

Subaru: “It won’t go that smoothly.”

Then, there was no other way.

Subaru swept his whip through the crowd, this time targeting the leading figure. A medium stature, light-blue hair, sharp eyes—wasn’t that Rachins?

Attacking people who he knew would make Subaru feel sad.

Subaru: “Although this aches my heart, I can’t let myself be torn apart either. Sorry, Chin!”

Rachins: “I’m not Chin?!”

Subaru lashed his whip at Rachins's feet and yanked upward. His body spun in a half circle, and he caught the people surrounding him as he fell.

After doing that, Subaru moved himself to the left of the crowd, guiding the footsteps of those following him to another route so that the ones who had been knocked down would not be trampled underfoot.

Subaru: "Right, they can't think… In that case, as long as I—"

Just as he was about to say, "stall long enough", Subaru felt a chill rise on his back.

To Subaru, that chill was like the imposing intimacy of his gloomy lover. Even if he were reluctant to meet her, she gave Subaru the help he needed most. They had that kind of complex relationship.

—In other words, that was the breath of death.

Subaru: "Ah!"

Beastman: "You maggot!"

A large blade whistled towards Subaru's head, accompanied by a shrill wind.

The beastman had leapt from the crowd, aiming at Subaru's neck. Although he had prominent pointed canine ears, his nose and mouth seemed to resemble the cunning charm of a fox.

The half-fox, using his white tail as a brace, was unaffected by Subaru's tricks as he took multiple other slashes in an attempt to separate Subaru's head from his body.

Subaru: "Beako!"

Beatrice: "Shamak!"

Beastman: "—?!"

In a serious confrontation, Subaru could be cut down in only five seconds.

In a flash, Subaru had determined the difference in their power and called Beatrice's name. She immediately realized Subaru's intention and cast a Shamak which enveloped the beastman's face. His slender body and large sword were also engulfed by the dark fog, stripping his combat effectiveness away.

Subaru: "Does that cut off the link with the others?"

Beatrice: "There's nothing to that effect, I suppose. Even take the fighting, the link itself did not cut off, in fact! Most likely, that curse will stop only taking effect after that freak dies, I suppose!"

Subaru: "What do we do?!"

Beatrice: "Betty is thinking hard, in fact!"

Solving that mystery was a task best left up to Beatrice. So the only thing that Subaru could do was to give Beatrice ample time to survey and think, and to keep the brainwashed masses from disturbing her.

Subaru: "And on Emilia-tan's side…?"

Subaru turned his gaze, worried about Emilia, who was still busy confronting Sirius.

During this year, Emilia had dedicated her time to learning about both politics and combat. Her combat effectiveness was much higher than Subaru's, and she was motivated.

Even so, Subaru worried about Emilia, not because he thought he was better, but because Subaru was a man and Emilia was a woman, nothing more.

Most people would probably dismiss that worry as meaningless. And that was because—

Emilia: "Haaa! Yah! Hah!"

Emilia was shouting slightly listless battle cries accompanying her onslaught, but Sirius was ignoring all of them.

Emilia spun around, her twin ice swords slashing toward Sirius, who whipped her burning chain through the air and knocked the blade away while cursing angrily. With a crash, ice fragmented into powder and dispersed, but, bending down, Emilia pushed an ice spear upwards, its power sending Sirius flying away.

She was making use of her huge store of Mana, forging weapons of ice meant to be destroyed shortly after being used. Subaru had named this combat technique Ice Brand Arts, in honor of the ephemeral beauty of shattering ice, which reminded him of an ice fairy of fantasy.

The wreckage of smashed ice illustrated the intensity of the fierce battle between Emilia and Sirius. In that ballroom of scattered ice, the heated, fiery battle between the two warriors wielding opposing arms of frost and fire.

Emilia: “Haaa!”

Emilia spun around, twirling her spear at Sirius, knocking her back. She immediately followed up with another blow, lashing out with the tip of the spear. Sirius nimbly twisted her body in midair, avoiding her strike and capturing the spear in her grip.

Sirius: “Blazing! Boiling! Burning! My heart is trembling! Ah ah aaaaAAAAAH! This is Wrath!”

Emilia: “Ah?!”

As if echoing her call, the intense heat redoubled its efforts. Emilia’s spear was instantly turned into a spear of fire, and Emilia involuntarily released it because of the heat. Immediately after, Sirius, holding the spear, landed and attacked at once.

Sirius: “Your dirty amethyst eyes, your dirty bell-like voice, your dirty silky silver hair, your dirty fair skin, your dirty cute face! Those all exist purely to seduce men! Ah, such lust! You bitch, you dirty whore! Just die! You just want to tempt men? You want to take that person from me? You filthy slut! You disgusting half-devil!”

As a wave of heat passed over Emilia’s squinted eyes, she once again created a blade of ice. It met the spear of fire, which had broken into a three-pronged spear, head-on.

With an intense grinding sound, the madwoman and Emilia exchanged gazes.

Emilia: “My eyes, my voice, my silver hair! All of those came from my favorite person, from the most beautiful person in the world! Treating them like they’re dirty infuriates me!”

Sirius: “Fury?! Did you just say fury?! Don’t kid with me! Fury is mine! It’s the precious thing that I received from that person! This duty and the name are all gifts from that person! To, without authorization, without permission, take that away from me… I won’t allow it! Won’t, won’t, won’t, won’t, won’t, won’t, won’t, won’t, won’t, won’t, won’t, won’t, won’t, won’t, won’t, won’t, won’t!”

As her speech came to an end, Sirius’s attitude changed dramatically as she cried out in grief. She caught the spear in her grip and snapped it, driving the flames into Emilia. In response, Emilia created another pair of ice swords.

But had Emilia been affected by Sirius’s cries? Her face, which had previously worn a strong sense of purpose, seemed to have slackened.

Subaru: “—This is bad.”

After catching a glance of the side of Emilia’s face, Subaru’s instincts began to scream of bad news. There was no basis. But Subaru was sure.

Emilia’s expression had changed, or rather, her feelings towards Sirius had changed.

No matter how kind-hearted she was, there was no way she would be so easily moved by emotion mid-battle. Before the brawl had begun, there had not even been any kind of conversation to make her feel any emotion, either.

And if she was reacting the way she was nevertheless…

Subaru: “Emilia’s being affected by Sirius’s power.”

However, she had not immediately fallen into the palm of Sirius’s hand.

Emilia, currently in a defensive battle, was still matching Sirius blow-for-blow. She was not as far gone as the crowd, and was just as lovely as usual. Then, inspecting the situation—

Subaru: “When Sirius first appeared, why weren’t Emilia, Beatrice, and I affected by her emotional link?”

Emilia and Beatrice had resisted her power just as Reinhard had. Was there any individual trait, or something similar to that, which was shared between all of them? Subaru’s initial assumption had been that Reinhard had been able to resist it just because he was Reinhard, and discarded thinking any further about it.

But if there was in fact a specific reason, then he could start hypothesizing.

Subaru, who had fallen prey to Sirius’s Authority three times already, was now also able to resist her like this—that was also something to take into consideration. If that was the key to a breakthrough—

Subaru: “Bea…”

Beatrice: “Subaru!!”

The moment Subaru had wanted to convey his newly found realization, an anxious cry echoed in his ears.

As Subaru’s eyes widened, and something collided with his right side.

Subaru: “Guu—”

His body folded into the shape of a “K” from the power of the blow, and Subaru immediately hopped to the left, attempting to lessen its impact. As he coughed up stomach acid, he attempted to check the damage the blow had caused.

The blindfolded woman, moving like a shadow, had suddenly approached him. That defenseless-looking woman had delivered a rather piercing blow with her palm into Subaru’s side.

Beatrice: “Subaru! Don’t die, I suppose!”

Subaru: “Even I wouldn’t reach a game over from that… but that hit was super-effective…!”

Although his ribs ached, Subaru judged that his other bones and internal organs had not been harmed; it was nothing too serious, as long as there was no internal bleeding.

Subaru: “This guy and that guy too, why are these enemies so troublesome?”

Beatrice: “Either Subaru looks unreliable just because the enemies are strong, or because he himself is too weak, in fact.”

Subaru: “That’s true, you…!”

His whip bounced as it chased the blindfolded woman’s feet, and as she turned her attention to below her, Subaru tossed a handful of grit in her face. Although it did not affect her blindfolded eyes, it distracted her enough for Subaru to throw himself at her shoulder, knocking her over.

Subaru: “My lack of fighting strength seems to have come in handy. If the attack had been serious, I probably would have died on the spot.”

Beatrice: “…Although I can’t say that that’s something Betty would accept eagerly, that works, since we have more trouble coming up, I suppose.”

Beatrice reiterated her annoying remarks about Subaru, who breathed a sigh of relief after defeating the blindfolded woman. He tilted his head in a gesture of “I’m not listening”, as Beatrice frowned and gestured with her chin.

She indicated the large waterway connected to the square.

Subaru: “You’re kidding me…”

Subaru moaned as he caught sight of the waterway, where another gathering of enraged people had emerged.

Beatrice: “Betty thinks that they heard the commotion and rushed over to see what’s happening, in fact.”

Subaru: “Then they entered the scope of her power and were swallowed… Are you serious? Is her ability a ranged-type?”

—Panic, fear, madness, would be transmitted from person to person.

The sharing of feelings by Sirius had brought about precisely a result that reflected that phenomenom.

“Ah, so that was it”—The magnitude of her threat was worse than even Petelgeuse’s.

Subaru: “The more you try to flee, the more victims she finds… How can that be stopped?!”

Beatrice: “However, something is off about this entire situation, I suppose… Subaru knocked over that woman, and I cast Shamak on that fox-man. Couple that with how the damage to Chinkarahoi didn’t appear on anyone else, in fact.”

Because the situation was dire, Subaru did not correct Beatrice mistakenly calling Tonchinkan Chinkarahoi. And beyond that, the details that Beatrice had just pointed out could serve as a basis for speculating on the conditions of Sirius’s emotional link.

Subaru: “…Are we going to have to defeat that whole crowd too?”

Beatrice: “If Subaru has the fighting ability to do that, then we can go for it, I suppose—Betty’s Shamak can also lend a hand in stripping their consciousness away, in fact.”

Although a cruel means, that had indeed been Subaru’s initial plan.

He could avoid putting himself through unnecessary worry. Subaru needed to avoid the expansion of such a disastrous situation. Now, to act on Beatrice’s proposal—

Emilia: “Ah!”

Subaru: “Emilia?!”

Subaru attention was diverted to Emilia’s pained cry.

He turned and saw her lying on the slate ground of the square, with Sirius, who was brandishing her flaming wrists, looking down at her.

Sirius: “Growing! Growing! Love culminates! That quantity is power! There is love for all! Everyone! Human beings love each other, and become one! They can share thoughts, they can share wishes, and, be it joy or sadness, they can talk to each other and share their feelings! In that case, this is the inevitable result! The half-devil isn’t included in the bond of Love and should just disappear like a crushed insect!”

Emilia, who had held the initial advantage, had gradually lost her footing until the two were about even.

As time dragged on, had Sirius’s strength increased, or had Emilia’s strength decreased? Whatever the case, Emilia looked upwards at Sirius, breathless, regret displayed on her face.

Emilia: “Something’s off. What you’re saying is right, but… it somehow feels wrong too. Why?”

Sirius: “Because you go against the truth! Because you are a dirty half-devil who cannot understand Love, and you will live and die not knowing Love! The existence of a half-devil is evil! Even your birth, even the meeting of your father and mother are wrong! The union of trash and insects birthed an unholy piece of shit that needs to end its existence here!”

Emilia: “—Hk!”

At the end of that unbearable tirade of abuse, Emilia’s eyes changed.

Kind and gentle as she was, Emilia could not tolerate such harsh words, which demeaned not only her existence, but even her parents’ meeting.

Biting her lip, Emilia pushed against the slate ground, leaping to her feet. Her enraged gaze trained on Sirius, a silvery shimmer gathered in her hand.

Emilia: “…”

Her sword slashed through Sirius’s coat, splitting it wide open.

Emilia, in her rage, would stop for nothing as she took another swing at Sirius, her sword of ice reaching the thin body in front of her—

Emilia: “—Eh?”

???: “Mmph!”

—Subaru saw the chained girl and froze.

A blonde, curly haired girl, bound in the same manner that Lusbel had been, blood pouring from her mouth, sobbed. Her small body was firmly bound to Sirius’s slender body.

Tina—the name flashed through Subaru’s memory.

Sirius: “—That Wrath you have is scary.”

Subaru who had noticed the girl, and Emilia, who saw the girl’s tears, were overtaken by rage. And at that moment, Sirius gave her most ferocious smile yet as a wave of heat blew Emilia’s body away with alarming momentum.

The explosion whistled through the air as Emilia was knocked backwards. She flew across the stone, tumbling until coming to a stop at the very center of the square.

Emilia: “Gah, ugh…”

Emilia moaned as she writhed in pain. Sirius gazed at Emilia as she clapped, her flames burning so high they could be seen from a long distance.

Sirius: “An insect shouldn’t give me such a sweet passion. It’s incredibly disgusting.”

Emilia: “…”

Sirius: “Well, thank you. My apologies.”

With her wrists held over her head, Sirius’s whirlpool of flame roared once again.

Even steel would melt with nary a touch of that flame. If it touched her directly, then not even a shadow of Emilia would be left behind. She would be completely burned from the world.

If he did not act right now, he would not be able to save her. And not saving Emilia was unacceptable. Subaru clearly understood all this, and yet—

Subaru: “Move already, feet!”

Tina: “Mmph!”

Subaru’s feet were trembling with something like fear, leaving him unable to walk.

Subaru’s inaction had begun the moment he had laid eyes on the terrified girl that was bound to Sirius. Beatrice, on his back, was similarly unable to move.

Feelings could be shared with Spirits. Idiocy, that was not the time to think about that.

Subaru: “E… milia…”

His throat vibrated but he could not even call the name of the girl who he loved so deeply. Emilia certainly could not have heard him.

Emilia's thoughts as she lay on the stone floor, unable to move, watching the imminent blaze unfold before her very eyes.

—Even those were scorched by unforgiving fire, leaving them forever a mystery.

Terrifying heat baked the slate ground, and, as the heat wave became the impact, the world was dyed a brilliant gold.

Faced with that fantastical scene, Subaru's knees shook, and he collapsed on the spot.

Beatrice: "Suba… ru…"

Beatrice, still clinging to his back, called to Subaru in a stuttering voice.

Subaru could not respond. His line of sight remained fixed on the ground beneath him, as he refused to face reality, swallowed by an overwhelming dread.

Right now, if he looked up, he would lose to fear.

No, the heart he had long lost to fear would shatter and break. If he had to see where Emilia had turned to ash, if he had to see where Emilia had vanished from the world, then—

Beatrice: "Su-Subaru. Subaru!"

Even so, Beatrice continued desperately calling Subaru's name.

His head was knocked several times, but Subaru could only embrace his horrified and timid heart, shaking his heads slowly.

It was impossible. Even if that monster were standing right in front of him, Subaru—

???: "—I caught up."

However, the moment he heard that sound, Subaru's heart shook off that fear. Rather than fear the sight in front of him, he feared being left in the dark.

Raising his head, he looked to the direction of the sound—the place where Emilia had been incinerated.

There, a man stood.

Smoke rose from the charred rocks, which still crackled with heat. In the midst of that destruction, the man assumed a leisurely pose. There, in his arms—

Subaru: "Emi… lia?"

In the man's arms, there rested a girl who should have disappeared in flame. Although she had passed out from exhaustion, she was physically unhurt. Emilia had lost her consciousness from the accumulation of her exhaustion and fear, but she was peacefully resting, safe and sound.

Subaru: "You…"

The person who had suddenly appeared and saved Emilia's life.

His horrified heart denying him a celebration of Emilia's safety, Subaru involuntarily voiced his wavering thoughts with a similarly trembling voice.

The man who heard and turned around. Then, he spoke.

???: "I came to meet her, so it's great that I was able to catch up."

Subaru: "To… meet? What's that supposed to…"

???: "—Isn't it a matter of course that I come to meet a woman who I intend to take as my bride?"

At that abrupt utterance, Subaru fell speechless.

At Subaru's stiff lack of breath, the man—a white-haired youth, gave off an easy-going smile.

Regulus: “I am a Sin Archbishop of the Witch Cult, representing Greed—Regulus Corneas.”

It did not intend to boast, but rather speak for granted facts.

Regulus: “As promised—I’m here to take her as my seventy-ninth wife.”

Chapter 25:
Leo’s Theater

An enigmatic, white-haired youth suddenly entered the barren, chaotic battlefield that had been ripped asunder by ice and fire.

His white hair was neither too long nor too short, without any distinct style. His figure was also neither too muscular nor too slim; he had a medium build which gave off the weak impression that it would be immediately swallowed by the crowd. But,

Subaru: “Sin Archbishop… Greed…?!”

The mediocre young man’s self-introduction left quite an impact on Subaru. As long as Subaru’s ears had not failed him gravely, then that young man had in fact called himself a Sin Archbishop of the Witch Cult.

And perhaps that statement certainly had not been a lie. If that were not the case, then how else could he have been unscathed from Sirius’s final attack, like nothing had happened?

—Such an anomaly was impossible.

Regulus: “Even so, it’s great that I caught up. After all, my bride nearly turned to ash. Even I, who rarely express any particular expectations, do hope that my bride’s humanoid shape can be kept. More than that being a matter of merit, I think that it’s a matter of course. After all, I do not have the perverted habit to devote my love to a lump of ashes.”

In front of a trembling Subaru, the young man—the Sin Archbishop, who had called himself Regulus, looked down at Emilia in his arms, weaving such words, bringing with him a fear that refused to dissipate.

Although he spoke smoothly and fluently, the contents of his discourse were empty, as if he were just repeating the same joke over and over. Emilia, who was forced to listen to that joke, did not stir. She seemed to have lost consciousness entirely, her slender form only lying prone in his arms.

Regulus raised a finger to the white hair on his eyebrows.

Regulus: “Although it’s gratifying to see nothing is wrong, it seems regrettable that I can’t reveal my heroism to my bride today. I think that a heroic rescue in the midst of a dead-end crisis brings two people people’s hearts to a very important place. Well, after all, that the two’s hearts shall be connected is already an established fact, and the only question is of the timing. Isn’t it great?”

Subaru: “You, what have you been saying…?”

Regulus: “Hmm?”

Regulus, who had been speaking his self-righteous truth, discovered Subaru and frowned upon him. He then gave a very tired sounding breath,

Regulus: “Don’t you understand basic concepts like politeness? The first thing I did was introduce myself. The reason why I did so, is because it’s the most important thing to do at the start of a relationship. No matter what kind of relationship, isn’t it necessary to start with an acquaintanceship where we both know each other? So, just because I’m someone who cares about such things, I often think that no matter whom it is, I will be as friendly as possible with anyone. I’m not saying that there isn’t a chance that the other party is shy. Even if you think you want to become well-connected, when you start by introducing yourself, sometimes you cannot help but hesitate. Out of consideration for those types of people, I try to introduce myself as much as possible, and act to create a space where they feel comfortable. Of course, I don’t expect this grace to be immediately obvious. However, I do have hopes that after some time, they will be able to detect the meaning of introductions. Or, rather, that they will become aware of it. Or is it natural to talk to someone you meet for the first time without introducing yourself? If that’s the case, then there’s a slight difference between my common sense and those people’s culture. In that case, although both parties feel a sense of obligation, it becomes necessary to refuse the other side in advance as to prevent a misunderstanding. That isn’t so different from what I said before, about taking being gentle with each other for granted. In fact, saying so feels impolite. That's a lack of etiquette, and the other party is left with a lesser value. A false assessment of each other's value imposes on others. This is a violation of the rights of others. From any rational perspective, this is an infringement of my rights."

Subaru: "Oh. Ohh…? S-Sorry… my name is Natsuki Subaru."

A frenzied look rose in Regulus's eyes as he prattled on, serving as a warning siren to Subaru. Acting on that fear, Subaru trembled as he gave his name.

Then, hearing Subaru's introduction, Regulus squinted his widened eyes.

Regulus: "…Yes, that's fine. Because giving respect invites respect. Although the conditions for achieving a world that creates both comfort and respect are taken for granted, you are not obligated to seek the happiness of others. As long as you pursue your happiness, others will also correspondingly find happiness. Don't get caught up in your desires, just accept your truths and feel satisfied with your everyday needs. That is the peaceful way of life."

It would perhaps be worth questioning whether his smooth speech was serious or not. But his bright eyes proved that his words were neither joking nor ironic; rather, they were his genuine beliefs.

It was the same with Sirius—Taking his words out of context would perhaps make them seem decent. But Regulus's demeanor and words held the same superficiality and distortion as those of Sirius.

Regulus: "After all, is it really so hard to find the proper mood to establish dialogue? Why is it impossible for mankind to do this as a matter of course? Why is it acceptable to consciously, unconsciously, indifferently, continue to cause subtle harm to others? Subtle injuries hurt, don't they? On top of that, if anything serious works its way in, it might grow into a life-threatening disease. The body and the soul are one and the same. I hate those who misunderstand life to the extent that they unconsciously threaten others. Don't their minds seem warped?"

Subaru: "…"

Regulus: "Obviously, they're flawed as human beings, and it's not okay for that behavior to remain unconscious. It is, of course, wrong to impose a burden on those who are discriminated against. Most people have common sense, but why can't they consciously realize that the world is carrying on? Even without realizing that they're trampling upon the hidden hearts of others, if they don't become conscious of their twisted, flawed mistakes, then don't their feet just keep trampling and trampling?"

As if unhappy with Subaru's silence, Regulus repeatedly pressed for an answer.

Regulus's speech was gradually becoming faster and faster, clearly conveying an increase in excitement. Even so, Subaru still could not respond. At the thought of giving a response, his heart flinched.

Subaru: "All that said, don't you know…"

Sirius: "Thanks for the lesson—BURN, SCORCH, AND DISAPPEAR!!"

A cascade of fire poured down from behind Regulus.

Sirius had waved her arms to summon a flame which mercilessly consumed her fellow Sin Archbishop. Subaru, witnessing this atrocity, found himself once again unable to move.

Beatrice: "Subaru…"

Subaru: "I… know. But, it's okay."

Beatrice, also trembling in fear from Subaru's back, gripped his shoulders until they hurt. She too was worried about Emilia, who had been caught in that waterfall of flame, in the arms of Regulus.

It was impossible for Subaru not to fear for Emilia, who had been caught up in that display of violence. Even so, he held a steadfast belief.

Regulus: "—I say, to interrupt someone else's conversation like that, how awful are you at reading the mood? If you want to say something, speak up, raise your hand. Do you think I have the presence of mind to just wait for you to speak up?”

Regulus twisted his wrist, and the vortex of flame vanished.

The heatwave dissipated as if dismissed by magic, while Regulus, standing at the center of the vortex, remained untouched. Naturally, Emilia, resting in his arms, was still in the same state.

Even engulfed by the flames of that intensity, not a single drop of sweat surfaced on his face, let alone a burn.

Regulus: “You and I share the title of Sin Archbishop. Since I know that your head is messed up, I could have turned a gentle blind eye if it were just a little mistake. Fortunately, there was no harm done. Only…”

Turning away, Regulus lowered his voice and glared at Sirius, who bore that gaze as she closed her coat, once again hiding the girl bound to her from the surroundings, gritting her teeth all the while.

Regulus: “You were planning to burn this girl along with me. I would be a little reluctant to say that I will forgive that kind of behavior. Ah, it’s better to say that it would be impossible. Since ancient times, no matter what the story or the morality of the characters, if one’s loved ones are hurt, then their anger is inevitable. Because that’s a right that everyone has, I am well within my rights to take revenge.”

Sirius: “Angry! Hah, did you get angry?! Don’t make me laugh! A superficial and insignificant man like you cannot speak so lightly about anger! Anger is mine! It’s what I got from him, and it’s more important to me than anything else. To…”

Regulus: “Ohh, I see. Are you still clinging to the idiot who died while he was ahead? How annoying, how disgusting. That’s neither constructive nor rational. Death is the end. This is a matter of course, isn’t it? Unwilling to admit even that and clinging to just memories… You really are flawed. If someone you love dies, find the next one. Rather than yelling about love, love, love, exercise the rights you have been granted. Disrupting that natural cycle, ah, you really are hopeless scum.”

Sirius: “You, who laughed at that person’s death, TO SPEAK SO ARROGANTLY!!”

Sirius, who had been relentlessly demeaned, flew into a rage.

The stone flooring cracked at the mercy of the madwoman’s stomp as she directed her twin chains of flame forward, which flew toward Regulus at an alarming rate. A burning, tearing sound accompanied the weapon on its lethal journey.

The chain hit Regulus’s flesh, striking his cheek to one side. However, neither Sirius’s fury nor the chain’s attacks had been calmed by that single blow. Left to right, top to bottom, front to back, Sirius’s copper chains beat relentlessly at Regulus’s whole body. On top of that, the chains, flying at incredibly high speeds, projected waves of heat as well, completing a cage made of flames.

Sirius: “Disappear, disappear, disappear, disappear, disappear! TURN TO ASH ALONG WITH THAT DAMNED HALF-DEVIL!!”

The fence of flame converged towards its center, trapping Regulus in that raging pillar-shaped inferno.

The temperature of that storm was high enough to melt the floor tiles where Regulus stood, and the ground beneath him either evaporated or sunk to form depressions.

Sirius witnessed the blazing result, out of breath. Sharing her wrath, the crowd of wild-blooded people around her bled from their eyes and noses, making strange sounds as they congregated together.

Regulus: “I say, how many times do I need to tell you the same thing?”

Regulus stepped forward on the stone slabs, which were half-melted and glowing red, as if nothing had happened.

Whether it was his white hair, his clothes, or Emilia’s arms, nothing held a trace of injury. Only his expression had changed into one of childish dissatisfaction.

Regulus: “I’ve thought about it. No matter how many times the same thing is said, some people cannot understand. They don’t care enough to endeavor to understand what is said. Is that contempt? So, whether carving what they’ve learned in their hearts as commandments, or doing careful self-examinations, or remembering it was something to be thought about the next day—they don’t do any of that. They forget, and continue doing the same things. Saying the same thing over and over again is not only blasphemy, but also contempt which gives negative impacts to both parties. Both their own value and the value of the other party are fundamentally degraded. That’s how it is. It’s a form of violence that disregards words and actions. So, that is what I thought.”

Sirius: “You damn insect…!”

Regulus: “In the early days of the Witch Cult, its doctrine went like this, “If one cheek is hit, present the other cheek and ask why”. It showed the value of mutual understanding. Ah, but I’ve thought of this too. It’s also true that someone whose cheek has been beaten should fight back—That’s especially necessary against those who don’t know pain.”

Only listening to the content of that speech would make it seem very stern and proper. But Regulus was a distorted existence.

Regulus: “…”

Regulus, who stepped out from that depression on the floor, wore a grim smile towards Sirius. That smile was certainly no friendly gesture; rather, it was closer to the licking of a tongue as a predator surveyed his prey.

It was still unknown how Regulus had defended against Sirius’s flame and chain. Perhaps his power was purely defensive in nature, and the Authority of Greed granted no means of attack.

Therefore, it could not be said that Regulus’s behavior would have fatal consequences.

—But, he could affirm. At this rate, Sirius would die.

And there was no way that Regulus was a holder of purely defensive abilities.

If that young man took any actions, there was no doubt that Sirius would die. If that were the case, there would be no problem at all. In fact, having the number of Sin Archbishops reduced due to in-fighting would be worthy of celebration.

However, although gratifying, Sirius's death would drag most of the people surrounding her down with her. Of course, this included Subaru, as well as the crowd trapped in Sirius's Wrath, and certainly Lusbel and Tina, who had surely prayed for one another's safety and sacrificed themselves.

Subaru: "…"

Even now, fear was spreading all over the Subaru's body.

His fallen knees trembled so much that even breathing became an abnormal act. But, even in this state,

Beatrice: "Subaru."

In his ear, a weak, unreliable voice echoed.

Although the owner obviously could not hide her trembling fear, her warm voice still spoke up from behind him. It was conveying a message along the lines of "Rely on me".

Subaru clenched his teeth and staggered to his feet.

He refused to be unable to do anything and delegate everything to the slight weight of the child on his back. Having said that, he would not be able to do anything at all without her strength. Therefore, Subaru refused to struggle alone, but also refused to throw everything to one person.

If Subaru were alone, then he would have remained on his knees in fear. The reason why Subaru could stand was because he was not alone. The other people engulfed by the madness were different.

Only Subaru had someone close by; only Subaru was not by himself.

Tightly clinging to that real feeling, Subaru fought back his fear.

Subaru: “Beatrice.”

Beatrice: “I know, in fact.”

With only a single call, Beatrice could fully understand what he needed.

Confirmation with each other was unnecessary. Each of them doing their utmost to accomplish each of their respective responsibilities—as long they did that, they should arrive at their desired outcome.

Both Sirius and Regulus, the Sin Archbishops had completely forgotten about Subaru.

They could only see each other and fully intended to kill one another. Sirius burning Regulus and only Regulus to ash was the best outcome, but that would be impossible.

Therefore, Subaru aimed to stop Regulus’s rampage. He had to attract Regulus’s attention to himself and take measures so there would not be a large number of victims.

And, above all,

Subaru: “Don’t you dare touch Emilia like that…!”

Inexhaustible love pushed the fear away from Subaru’s heart, lighting it ablaze. If he did not address his dishonest heart first, then he would never be able to fight Regulus. At the moment, Regulus had his back turned to Subaru, and his attention was being completely diverted by Sirius, which was of great convenience to Subaru.

Beatrice: “—Shamak!”

As Subaru forced his trembling legs to move, Beatrice chanted a spell from behind him.

Her powerful spell, Shamak, covered Regulus's body in black haze as it severed him from the world, beautifully hindering his gait. Right before Regulus was engulfed, Subaru took a combat position and fiercely whisked his whip forward where something had been.

He was aiming at Regulus's neck.

His whip followed through as it attempted to ensnare Regulus. Surely with this much commotion, even Regulus, arrogant as he was, would have to pay heed to Subaru. Perhaps there was even a possibility that Regulus would fall victim without realizing what had happened, thanks to Beatrice's Shamak.

Subaru: "There's no response!"

Beatrice: "He's coming, I suppose!!"

Beatrice's warning had come after a heavy sense of anxiety had already hit Subaru. His whip passed through thin air; the missing presence of its target painfully obvious.

The next moment, a white-haired youth kicked off the ground towards Subaru, emerging from the black haze.

Regulus: "This has been messy from the very beginning. You've been stirring up my modest life with your magic. Could you evaporate off somewhere?"

Beatrice: "Mi… No, Murak!"

Regulus held Emilia with his right hand, as his empty left hand suddenly swiped at Subaru. Beatrice immediately gave up performing an attack in favor of casting a gravity-altering spell on Subaru. Subaru immediately affirmed Beatrice's judgment and leapt upward to avoid Regulus's reaching fingertips.

Murak was a type of Yin Magic with the effect of partially relieving a physical object from the tethers of gravity. Subaru's flesh was now lighter than a feather, flying upwards, leaving Regulus behind.

Regulus: "Why do you want to avoid it?"

Subaru: “Why wouldn’t I avoid it, it’s scary!”

Subaru cast his whip at Regulus again, who had looked overhead at Subaru. Rather than aim at any particular spot, Subaru only struck, hitting Regulus’s head. His white hair floated outward from the impact and the head that should have been lacerated by the whip was uninjured. Almost as if his hair had merely been swept by a breeze.

Regulus: “What if my bride had been injured? Don’t you think that’s it’s a matter of course that girls should be treated gently, and that it’s not something that needs to be taught? Don’t you even understand this?”

Subaru: “Don’t be stupid! The person I want to treat most gently in this world is that girl. In the first place, what’s with the “bride this” and “bride that” that you’ve been going on about…”

Regulus: “It’s been decided. It’s destiny—After all, I made a promise in my dreams.”

One hand bracing himself against the wall, Subaru was dumbfounded by Regulus’s smiling reply. Something felt awry, but Regulus clearly did not care.

Regulus: “She and I are connected. That’s fate, you know. I feel generally satisfied with myself, and I don’t want anything at all. And although I don’t particularly desire anything, I’m not so narrow-minded that I wouldn’t accept what’s given to me. Especially what fate’s given to me. Although most people do not expect this, I wish to protect my world, which is within my reach, at all costs. That would be myself and the people who are important to me.”

Subaru: “…”

Regulus: “I will protect her. I’ll welcome her as my bride and love her as she’ll love me, and together we’ll enjoy a peaceful life. Therefore, for the sake of that, I won’t refrain from exerting the power that I’ve been given.”

Subaru: "Then, what… Then what about her own will? Obviously, one of the parties has not consented yet, so aren't you getting ahead of yourself?"

Regulus's stern statement had just confirmed his ironclad convictions. On one hand, it was a straightforward, righteous, and harmless way of thinking. On the other, it was ridiculous to a deadly extent.

It was difficult to explain exactly why it was dead wrong, but it was something that had been clear from the very beginning. Because Regulus had fallen into a frenzy, everything had gone off track.

Subaru's voice trembled, but not only due to fear. At his question, Regulus smiled and continued as though discussing a disposable topic.

Regulus: "Are you worried about me? If that's the case, thank you. However, there is no problem. Fate is inevitable… In particular, either love or friendship, that cannot be established alone. If fate told me that she would be my bride, then I am fated to be her groom, and this is all something that's already been decided."

Beatrice: "…Something is completely wrong with him, in fact."

Towards Regulus and his flawed theory, Beatrice leaked a subconscious murmur of disgust.

Subaru held the same opinion. Regulus used pretty, smooth words to cover up the underlying madness of a stalker in his beliefs. Subaru did not even want to know the extent of trouble that the sentiments of a stalker would bring.

Subaru: "I've had enough. It's impossible for us to understand each other. It's disgusting to admit that such a horrible person is a rival for love."

Subaru removed his hand from the wall and allowed himself to float back to the earth. Looking at Subaru, who fell silent, Regulus nodded as if he'd grasped the main idea.

Regulus: "I see. I understand. You know, I'm sorry to say, but… the fate of a lover can't be shared. I find homewreckers to be quite unsightly."

Subaru: "Shut it! Emilia-tan is my bride. I won't give her to someone like you."

Regulus: "Ohh, this is Emilia. A lovely name. Very suitable for love birds to call softly, very suitable for this adorable girl indeed."

Subaru: "You don't even know her name… yet you say you want her as a bride? What a joke! What made you…?"

Regulus: "Her face."

Subaru was choked speechless with anger. Misunderstanding his silence, Regulus tilted his head.

Regulus: "A cute face. That's all love is about, right?"

Subaru: "Die."

Beatrice: "Drop dead, I suppose."

Agreeing with Subaru's assertion, Beatrice also denied Regulus his overly casual love.

Pedaling toward the ground, Subaru's weightless body was still under the effects of Murak. As Subaru shortened the distance between them as he rode the wind, Regulus lifted his gaze, as if shocked. At this time, Regulus could not understand the implications of Subaru drawing within close-combat range.

Subaru himself understood how stupid it was to approach Regulus. Rather than being unintelligent, Regulus did not share the familiarity with battle that Sirius did. That was not to say that he was unprepared, rather, he needed no weapon. Therefore, getting close to Regulus would be nigh-suicidal. Even so, Subaru had one pressing reason to fight with Regulus at close quarters.

—Because his trump card could only be used in close range.

Regulus: "Why did you come here? I don't really understand.

Although it’s not necessary, I do hope that you can tell me. I don’t lack thoughtfulness, after all. I wish to understand even withering opponents.”

Subaru: “Thanks for the enlightenment—Beako!”

Beatrice: “Ready, in fact!”

Regulus approached Subaru with his left hand extended. Each of those fingers was likely a fatal weapon that would reap Subaru’s life. Before that could happen, Subaru took a breath and shouted.

This was one of the fruits of the efforts that Subaru and Beatrice had accumulated over the course of the past year,

Subaru: “—E · M · M!!”

Regulus: “…What?”

The high-pitched chant made the Mana inside of Subaru’s damaged Gate sensitive to Beatrice’s manipulation, and from there, exclusive magic which no one else had yet developed was casted. One of three original spells devised by Beatrice and Natsuki Subaru—the magic of absolute defense, E · M · M, was activated.

Subaru’s body would be wrapped in an invisible magical field which would allow him to sidestep from the plane of existence, nullifying any attack on him, be it physical or magical.

Regulus’s fingertips did not bring any harm to Subaru upon reaching him. Upon witnessing this incident, for the first time, Regulus revealed an expression of stiff shock.

And then, Subaru aimed at his face and fiercely released his left fist.

Subaru: “Dora!”

Regulus: “—Hk.”

The side of Regulus’s face was struck.

Subaru had struck him with a hard blow, but not the slightest redness had been left on his face, which was pushed back. The damage had been completely invalidated. It seemed that the eternal and constant guardian of Regulus's flesh had the same effect as what Subaru had done.

Beatrice: "Not ready yet, I suppose!"

Before Regulus could counterattack, Beatrice shouted that the conditions for the next move had not yet been reached. In close proximity, Subaru needed to avoid Regulus's attacks. Being on the defense would make each action incredibly difficult. In that case, Subaru needed to give up part of his soul.

Regulus: "Don't worry…"

Subaru: "Invisible Providence!"

As Regulus suffered a blow, his words were cut off. Because he had been sent flying.

Subaru looked over the scene as he coughed blood, roughly wiping at the corners of his mouth with his sleeve.

No one but Subaru could have seen the imperceptible will of the gods.

But Subaru could clearly see a black arm protruding from his chest —coursing with dreadful power, also known as his third arm.

His entire body creaked, his soul weakened, and something venomous flowed through his body, materializing as black blood in his throat. After paying the price for the ability, Subaru was able to summon a full-out attack. That blow, which consumed so much from Subaru, probably would not match up to a kick from Garfiel.

Even so, that invisible attack should have a corresponding effect to the effort needed to cast it.

Beatrice: "Subaru, are you okay, in fact?"

Subaru: "Cough… somehow. And as for that guy, he's powerful, but his attacks are kinda flat. Among all those I've faced so far, it's about the same as Rachins.”

Spitting out the remainder of the blood clogging his throat, Subaru pointed out Regulus’s poor fighting skill. Regulus’s ability was so inexperienced and amateurish that even Subaru could face someone of his level. As long as Subaru kept his concentration, maybe those murderous fingertips could be continually avoided.

Beatrice: “…”

Subaru’s shoulder was knocked. That was Beatrice’s silent report.

Because of its potent effect, their original spells had short durations. In addition, their spells had daily limits, and overuse would result in loss of potency.

Subaru: “Although the effects of E · M · M have ended, in this case, there’s a chance even without magic. So if I can get closer…”

Beatrice: “Victory could be waiting, I suppose. There’s a glimmer of hope in sight, in fact.”

Regulus: “There’s no such thing. I apologize for the misunderstanding. I dallied for longer than I should have, being that you’re not so interesting. But that’s not the issue here. It’s not good that we’re having a disagreement. This is a violation of rights. Since I’ve been hit twice since we started, if I don’t land an attack, that would be unfair, right?”

Regulus landed from midair, glaring at Subaru and Beatrice, who had renewed their determination.

His expression had lost its original calmness, first becoming moody for a moment, and now reaching outrage. At last, he had recognized that Subaru regarded him as an enemy. But as he thought about his original purpose—

Subaru: “Wha?!”

Regulus: “…What are you up to?”

The ground between Subaru and Regulus suddenly ignited. Subaru was pushed backward by the wave of heat which bathed him, while Regulus bore the hot air as it blew past his face.

Obviously, the two turned to the culprit for this—Sirius.

So far, for whatever reason, that madwoman had not involved herself in the fight between Subaru and Regulus. Although the intent behind her inaction was unknown, Subaru would have preferred her to have remained silent. Her actions resulted in a very abrupt change.

He had no means to combat Sirius's flames, and strongly preferred to deal with Regulus, who could only engage in close combat. Even worse, he had yet to find a solution to defeat her as well.

Subaru gulped as the situation deteriorated.

But things got worse, far worse than what Subaru had imagined.

Sirius: "—I've found you."

Subaru: "—?"

Standing unsightly, Sirius stared at the two men glaring at her—no, at only Subaru.

The madwoman had completely forgotten her desire to kill Regulus, merely staring with single-minded obsession at Subaru. Her gaze was filled with madness, and Subaru's throat suddenly caught.

Then the monster lifted her previously lifeless, drowsy hands and pressed them to her face.

Sirius: "I've found you, found you, found you, found you, found you. Ah, ah, ahahah! Aaaah! Yes, it is really you! My apologies, I didn't notice at first. My apologies, my greatest apologies. This is great. It really is. Sure enough, you came back for me?!"

Subaru: "What…?"

Sirius: "Darling, where have you been?! No matter where I looked, I could not find you. Even after I tore your spares open, I still could not find you anywhere. Even though I had always, always always always always always always always always always been looking… And you noticed how I had been searching, and you came back!”

Her high-pitched sonorous voice overflowed with obvious enthusiasm.

Keeping her hands on her cheeks, she wriggled her body and gave a series of pleased sounds. It was truly difficult to put into words the state of this monster, so strangely it looked in front of Subaru.

However, if pressed for an answer, one would say those were the actions of someone who had been searching for a lover for a long time. Of a woman who had been consumed by blind love.

Sirius: “Because my thoughts have arrived! Because I want to be one with you—you finally noticed the wish that I have always been praying for! Because my Love finally reached you!”

Subaru: “…”

Sirius: “I’ve always been waiting for only you… My dear, dear Petelgeuse!”

Speaking with a frenzied smile, Sirius Romanée-Conti called the name of her bereaved lover, as she cast a tender, affectionate look at Subaru.

Chapter 26:
Spear of Love

—The already dire situation had deteriorated drastically, resulting in the worst of awful conditions.

Subaru trembled under Sirius's mesmerized gaze and her shuddering, glowing breaths.

The madwoman gave no regard to the heat scorching her bandaged face, her mad, brilliant eyes focused on watching Subaru—no, not just watching, but staring.

Subaru: "Dear… Petelgeuse?"

That was a madman's name, one which Subaru had never wanted to hear again. Subaru would be lying if he said he did not think of her as a madwoman, calling herself Romanée-Conti, and ranting passionately on her love for her late husband.

Even so, he was reluctant to seriously consider that idea as correct, as doing so would combine the existence of the lunatic Petelgeuse and the madwoman Sirius.

He did not want to think of the union between the worst possible couple, with Romanée-Conti as the surname.

Subaru: "A couple where both lovers are Witch Cultist, and Sin Archbishops at that, is ridiculously disastrous… Although it cannot be helped that he'd choose a bride like that…"

Really, the morally bankrupt all belonged to the Witch Cult. The self-righteous Petelgeuse, Sirius who imposed her love without permission, and Regulus who treated love with flimsy fatalism—they were all scum.

Subaru: "Like how your names are a bit similar. Do they all end in an S-Sound?"

Subaru tried to bury the thought in his mind under trivial, pointless thoughts. But, right now, Subaru felt as if he had found something extremely odd, although he could not quite put his finger on what it was. Try as he might, he could not find it.

Sirius: “Please do not be so silent, Petelgeuse. You are such a mean-spirited person. See, you are already, already, already giving me that usual cold attitude… It makes me really anxious!”

Sirius, unaware of the cause of Subaru’s brooding silence, took her own interpretation of it as she kept her hands on her face and her waist twisting back and forth. The nightmarish scene spread as the crowd around Sirius took up her strange, delusional expression of affection.

Regulus: “…Really, I can’t deal with you anymore. Although his trick just now probably gave you that kind of idea, it’s still really rather tragic. Fate should tie you together, no matter what kind of obstacles are faced. Like me and my brides. However, a separation by life and death before results can blossom is not only sad, but very unsightly.”

Sirius: “Yes, thank you very much. My apologies. Now, excuse me, but I am busy. You know, right? Mutual understanding is important. Mutual concessions are also important. You have completed your purpose, so could you leave as soon as possible? After all, I also have my own private affairs.”

Regulus: “Indeed, my purpose of finding my bride has been fulfilled…”

Sirius’s madness had given way to rationality, and Regulus overlooked that implication as he looked at Emilia, still in his arms. Then he turned toward Subaru.

Regulus: “But the one who wants to kill me and my bride, and who has been annoying since the very beginning, has yet to allow me proper vengeance in accordance with his infringement of my rights. I dislike taking a violent initiative, but in this case, it would only be a just revenge. Yes, this is an act of righteousness. Although I could endure this and leave, I would be doing legitimacy a disfavor. That is to say, leaving would be a loss of justice. I should not set that precedent.”

Subaru: “Don’t give me that high-and-mighty tone. Obviously, you don’t like me, so you want to kill me. Don’t justify that with some shitty doctrine.”

Regulus: “Actually being talked back to is quite a surprise. Being spoken to as if I were mistaken is even more of a surprise. You, are you the type of person who disagrees with their opponents? In that case, the only thing I can say is that your vessel is both small and superficial. I think that this kind of person, who can’t listen to the words of others with sincerity, will one day earn their just desserts, what do you think?”

Subaru: “Do you have the right to say this?”

Regulus’s eyes widened as if incredibly taken aback.

Perhaps he was being sincere, convinced that his speech was justified? No, he was absolutely convinced. If not, he could not be a leading subordinate in that abnormal group.

Establishment of rational conversations were only an illusion. Although they spoke what seemed to be human tongue, they were creatures belonging to an alien ecosystem.

Forgetting that would lead to being swallowed up by their words.

Regulus: “Sirius. You seem to have excluded him from the scope of your Authority. What happened?”

Instead of facing the silent Subaru, Regulus directed the conversation to Sirius.

Frowning at his speech, Subaru belatedly discovered that the fear which had been gripping his heart had vanished. They had not left the range of the sphere of influence—no, that was not the case, as proven by the fact that Beatrice was still slightly trembling on his shoulders.

In other words, only Subaru had been excluded. And the reason for that was,

Sirius: “Is it not obvious? Since I know that he is that person, if I continue to share my feelings, they might accidentally transmit to him.”

Regulus: “Don’t give me that shy look, it’s really creepy. Having proclaimed your love, love, love, there’s no point in pretending to be innocent. I really don’t understand you.”

Sirius: “Do you not think that allowing those inexplicable feelings that cannot be expressed with words to be felt in such a manner is tasteless? Until the end of the end, until the very moment I become one with him, I will seal that feeling inside me. I have already decided so. Yes, for the sake of Love!”

Regulus: “Because of that dishonesty, your important feelings will never be able to reach him, you know? You are calling yourself Sirius Romanée-Conti, right? Don’t you think that using someone else’s family name is rather unpleasant? I suppose that, in a sense, it’s like you are violating Petelgeuse’s legacy. Well, he’s already dead, so it doesn’t matter anymore.”

Sirius: “I and that person were in love with each other!”

Hearing Regulus’s amazed speech, Sirius exploded.

The madwoman grasped at her hair in a frenzy, spittle flying from her mouth as she screamed at Regulus.

Sirius: “After all, whenever I gazed at him, he always met my eyes! When I touched him, he did not scold me! When I spoke to him, he gave me his attention! When I inhaled his breath, he never told me off! I was allowed to sleep with him! I could freely borrow his things without him getting angry! He allowed me the honor of burning the half-devil! He gave me my name! He smiled for me! Only for me! Only for me, onlyformeonlyformeonlyforme!”

Her breathing grew wild as she sobbed tears of unrequited love.

Well, she had made herself clear. Sirius’s existence was one of dark, twisted, pure love.

Regulus: “Ah, oops—Dealing with such strong subjective convictions is tricky.”

Shrugging, Regulus spoke as if seeking agreement from Subaru.

Subaru bit back a “Do you have the right to say that?” to keep Regulus from lashing out. He needed to temper the balance between the two foolish extremists near him. Facing the two Sin Archbishops, Subaru saw no light of hope to break the deadlock. Rather, the situation had worsened due to Sirius’s interference.

Subaru: “No, did it get even worse because Sirius’s interest has shifted?”

Even if Subaru had broken away from the shared fear, there would be no marked improvement in his combat power. Obviously, Beatrice would be his main advantage, but she was trapped in an unfavorable condition, her sharp judgement dulled by terror.

At least, only facing Regulus would help.

Subaru: “…Hey, Sirius.”

Sirius: “Yes, what is the matter, my dear?”

Sirius candidly responded his call. Although Subaru was internally astonished at that unexpectedly serious response,

Subaru: “I have a bit of private business with Regulus here, so could you wait patiently for a while? Please.”

Sirius: “Do you wish me to wait?”

Making use of Sirius’s misunderstanding could grant Subaru a chance at victory.

Sirius appeared to have assumed Subaru was Petelgeuse due to his Invisible Providence, which resembled the Unseen Hand used by Petelgeuse. Although that was quite the false accusation, Subaru would have to take advantage of it for the time being.

Petelgeuse had been a Spirit. If he were still alive, it was entirely possible that he would have possessed Subaru as his next host. Although, the problem would be that Subaru had not indicated that he had recognized Sirius up until now, but Sirius, in her present state of mind, had not seemed to notice the issue.

With that in mind, Subaru hoped to break that deadlock. The result,

Sirius: "My apologies, I cannot do that. Please let me refuse, even if it is very important to you."

Sirius ruthlessly rejected his plea.

Seeing Subaru's disappointed gaze, Sirius bowed her head.

Sirius: "Of course, I originally wanted to comply. But you are quite diligent, and you will surely slip far away from my extended fingers while I wait. I know you. After all, we have been together for so long. You have always tried your utmost and overstrained yourself alone to reach your desired results… and…"

In all honesty, Subaru could not help but feel a heartfelt admiration for her love.

Even so, Sirius's regard of Petelgeuse's hard-working nature was a rather blind perspective. That willingness to toil would be welcomed if this were a mere businessperson, but as a Sin Archbishop by vocation, he would only bring harm to the world.

Sirius: "Finally, finally, we were able to meet again. It has been a year, a whole year, since I have been at your side. In this century, this is the longest we have been apart! And even after a year of not seeing me… You ask me to leave? I do not want to. I refuse. In this period of absence, I always wanted wanted wanted wanted wanted wanted wanted to become one with you!"

Subaru: "…"

Sirius: "On top of that, you still want me to wait?! And now you have a Spirit who I have never seen before! Where did you find her?! What exactly is appealing about woman like that?! She is small, her face is arrogant, and she has no breasts, no hips, no fragments of femininity! Is it because she is a Spirit?! Because you are a Spirit, your woman has to be a Spirit too? The time we spent together loses to such a flimsy reason? I'll burn you."

The direction of her speech became perverse, and became weird, and a crazed shimmer of unbridled frenzy rose in her gaze again. The crowd also left courting affection for anger, blood streaming red from their eyes and noses.

Sirius: "And, is the half-devil in his arms the reason why you need to deal with Regulus? That filthy half-devil! That silver-haired half-devil! Why are you so partial to her?! Stop immediately, shouldn't you have understood that long ago? That despicable, loathsome, hateful, abhorrent fucking Witch…! If you revive her, I'll burn her before your very eyes!"

Subaru: "You're… so increasingly incomprehensible, you…"

The madwoman gave a bloodthirsty shriek, revealing her animosity towards both Emilia and the Witch of Envy.

Was the goal of the Witch Cult not the Witch of Envy's resurrection? Subaru could not understand Sirius's attitude of loathing of the thing to be resurrected at all costs. Rather, Sirius had absolutely no resonance with the Petelgeuse she longed for.

Although he had originally thought that they could not have been companions, they turned out to be nothing but enemies.

Subaru: "…"

The three-way deadlock resurfaced.

Regulus planned to kill Subaru and Sirius.

Sirius would defend against Regulus and draw out the non-existent Petelgeuse within Subaru.

Subaru wanted to rescue Emilia from Regulus and to free Tina from Sirius, and, if possible, kill the two Sin Archbishops.

Obviously, only Subaru's situation was far too harsh. Searching for a solution that Subaru did not have the ability to attain, his forehead began to bead with sweat.

Return by Death, followed by Sirius's appearance and Regulus's debut. After that, a melee battle between Subaru and the Sin Archbishops had ensued. This loop had been the longest yet. During that period of time, although he had retrieved useful intelligence, nothing but awful things had happened.

Subaru: "…Beako."

Beatrice: "You can try either one, in fact."

From his back came the timid voice of his partner, who would lend her support to him whenever he was about to fall to fear. Subaru, who had been entrusted with what would happen next, made his decision.

And at that time.

Regulus: "—Oh."

Sirius: "…Hk."

Simultaneously, Regulus and Sirius both, changed their attitude. They each put their hands into their coats, and, from there, retrieved a book.

Subaru: "That is…"

A familiar thick book with a black binding.

There was one such book in Subaru's possession, and so there was no mistaking it. That was what all the Witch Cultists possessed, the Gospel.

Subaru: "…"

Ignoring Subaru, who had raised his guard again, the two Archbishops opened their own Gospels and turned over their pages, surveying its writ.

Then, although the timing had been identical, they closed their respective books, their expressions giving stark contrast to each other.

Regulus: “I assume the content is the same for both of us, is that true, Sirius?”

Sirius: “Shut up, Regulus. Why… Why now? When finally, finally I found him again…”

Regulus wore a light smile, and Sirius, who gritted her teeth and spoke in a voice full of remorse. Even if the predator and the madwoman held opposing feelings, their wills were unified.

The two looked to Subaru.

Regulus: “Although regretfully, it’s time. My free time with you has ended. You should thank the Gospel… Well, that’s not right. That doesn’t make sense. After all, what’s the use in being thankful to paper? So, rather, you should be grateful to me, who follows the Gospel faithfully.”

Subaru: “Thank you for your faith… But what was that about time? What are you talking about?!”

Regulus: “It’s just as you heard. We were given free time before we need to do what must be done. I took that meaningful time to retrieve my bride.”

Sirius: “I feel incomplete… In front of that person, I should not be subjected to such treatment. It is too cruel. I am being washed away by sadness, you know?”

Regulus spoke with composure, while Sirius forcibly expressed her sorrow. The crowd collapsed, and Beatrice bit back tears.

However, Subaru and Regulus both remained completely unaffected.

Regulus: “Sorry, but your small, superficial love doesn’t touch my complete self at all. At most, it makes me feel a little dirty.”

In a contemptuous voice, Regulus, with Emilia still in his arms, turned his back to Subaru.

Really, he looked as if he were just planning to let them go. If Regulus left by himself, that was fine. But,

Subaru: “Stop, you bastard! Don’t just run off! Let her go! Otherwise, I’ll…”

Regulus: “I thought you’d do that.”

Subaru: “—?!”

Regulus stopped and only turned his head to smile.

Under that smile, Subaru felt as though a blade brushed his spine, and he swallowed, his entire body stiff. It was impossible to prevent Regulus’s next move.

Regulus: “I think that if my bride finds one of her attendants gone, she’ll be lonely, and I think it’s rather heartless of me not to invite you, who was in love with her—So I won’t kill you.”

Gently, Regulus tapped the ground with his toes. Although it was a gesture of comfort, as if adjusting his shoes, his foot dug neatly into the stone slab as if it were a shovel driving into soft ground.

The wreckage of the slate flew toward Subaru. Bullets of soil seemed to defy gravity, travelling without aim. Some of them brushed the outside of Subaru’s right leg—and, in the next moment, Subaru’s leg vanished.

Subaru: “—Eh?”

A beast’s claw had torn clear through his leg. On his right lower limb, cleanly exposed in a twisted cross section, were white bone, pink flesh, and yellow nerves, and neatly severed green blood vessels.

Before he could comprehend what had just happened, the pain struck.

Subaru: “—Hk?! Gah, ahk! AaaaAAHH?!”

The world became pure white, as if his head were being punctuated by countless sharp needles.

A scream lodged in his throat, Subaru was unable to support his own weight as he tumbled to the ground. His outstretched fingers desperately held his right leg. The wound was so large that the palm of his right hand could not cover it all.

Beatrice: “Subaru?! Subaru! Subaru, wait, I suppose! Right now!”

Beatrice fell to the ground along with Subaru, noticing his severe injury, and panicked as she began a chant of healing magic. Regulus nodded in satisfaction at the scene.

Regulus: “This is adequate retaliation for your reckless behavior up until just now, so I’ll let it go. Although I did consider the possibility of you doing it again, I think I still want to look forward to your future. This pain is sure to stop you if you consider hurting another person again. Don’t thank me. Just save someone else next time.”

Subaru: “AaaAA—Hk! Kah, gah, can’t, kuu, gah!”

Pain, agony, suffering, hurthurthurthurthurthurthurthurt—!

A haze of agony. Molars being ground to dust from gnashing. A flashing world. The absence of up and down, left or right. Was he sleeping? Or was he alive? Or maybe he was dead?

Confusion. Cluelessness. Noideanoideanoidea. Even so, there was something he needed to know.

Subaru: “E-Emili…a! Wa, gah—hk, t—hk”

Beatrice: “Subaru, you can’t afford to mess around! If you have to vomit, turn to the side. If you don’t, your throat will…”

Enduring pain and madness, Subaru moved his head, his hands still holding his wound. His heartbeat was like an alarm bell and his internal organs constricted upon themselves with the sense of urgency, causing him to vomit repeatedly.

The petite Beatrice, while desperately supporting Subaru's rampaging body, did her best to cast healing magic. However, someone was laughing at her mockingly.

Beatrice: “You can't be serious, in fact.”

Sirius: “My apologies. However, this obviously is not a joke. It is only natural, is it not?”

Behind Beatrice, in abhorrent whispers, Sirius replied in a dark tone.

Around Sirius, a crowd of people rolled as they screamed in pain. All of them, with their hands on the wound left in their right leg, desperately sought salvation. Like Subaru, their right leg had been torn off by a beast.

Sirius: “My beloved Petelgeuse would say that feeling pain is living, and that those feelings allow Love to be exercised. I know that better than anyone. However, I believe there is a better way of representing that form of Love. Thank you. That representation would be becoming one. After all, Love is a prayer for becoming one! Seeing the same sights, feeling the same emotions, living the same life, ending with the same death, being together, that is Love!”

Opening her hands, her palms struck each other in a burst of clapping.

Sirius gave harsh puffs of air as she fixed her intense, envious gaze on Beatrice.

Sirius: “No matter who, everyone should experience the same feelings as him. However, only you and that dirty half-devil will be denied that experience. Who would grant you such an honor?”

Beatrice: “There's no woman out there who would be driven mad with jealousy as much as you. But it does not matter, since Betty has long been Subaru's closest confidante. Betty belongs to Subaru.”

Sirius: “—Hk!”

Beatrice refused to flinch under Sirius's cruel words. Madwoman and Spirit glared at each other, until Sirius turned away, breaking the interaction.

Sirius: “Now, I can only entrust him to you. After all, I must prioritize the Gospel’s instructions. Yes, there is no other way. My apologies. My apologies. You know I want to return to your side as soon as possible.”

At this moment, Sirius still acted madly in love with Subaru. The madwoman left the bloodstained square with a single jump. Beatrice had no choice but to give up chasing her. She understood that refusing to allow her to escape would merely result in more sacrifices.

Beatrice: “—Subaru.”

With fluttering eyes, yellow bubbles burst from Subaru’s mouth.

Beatrice pressed her palm against his wound, attempting to stop the flow of blood. The wound was too deadly, and any slip in concentration would lead to Subaru’s death. For Beatrice, saving Subaru was, naturally, her greatest priority. Although, there was another priority Beatrice had to follow.

Subaru: “If you don’t treat the other injured people…”

The number of wounded people rolling around the square was over thirty. They had all suffered the same injury as Subaru, and in a cruel twist, the healing being performed on Subaru had not reached them. She would need to heal every injury individually.

That was the burden Beatrice needed to take up. But, even if she exhausted her store of Mana, it would still be insufficient.

Beatrice: “—Subaru, I’m sorry, in fact.”

Desperately trying to heal Subaru’s injury, determined to keep a strong facade, Beatrice spoke with a hoarse voice. A stream of tears flowed down her white cheeks.

Beatrice: “I’m sorry. I’m sorry…”

Beatrice voiced a string of constant apologies. Even though she knew her voice could not reach Subaru, rendered unconscious by pain. Even knowing that it would not solve anything.

Beatrice: “I’m sorry, Emilia—”

Sirius had created so many victims and left the plaza. Regulus had taken Emilia with his overwhelming power.

—The two Sin Archbishops had been released into the Watergate City of Priestella.

Chapter 27:
Noise

A piercing sound.

Abrupt, vibrating, heavy, empty, distant, nearby.

The vibration was in his nearby vicinity. The sound coming from his eardrums shook his skull, travelling through his bones to the tip of his limbs.

The flow of his blood dulled, as if his blood vessels were infected by an inflow of sludge. His organs were sluggish, as if filled with clay. And oxygen did not reach his brain, leaving his thoughts foggy and unreliable.

That heavy echoing sound showed no signs of relenting, making him feel as if his eyeballs were rolling around aimlessly behind his eyelids.

???: "…"

The sensation in his body was very slow, and he felt tired and unable to move. Accompanied by nausea and sluggishness, Subaru slowly opened his eyes.

The darkness he had become used to faded, giving place to a sudden white light, which his eyes were unable to accept. In that white light, forms and shapes moved about, as if children had cast paint everywhere in a room of white.

Such emotions became distant, as the world he saw gradually settled down.

Everything became distant as he entered a calm world, and, after tens of seconds, his eyes were restored to their original state, as darkened rooms and dirty ceilings opened. He felt the breaths of many bodies moving around and keeping busy in his surroundings. People moving around in order to keep the surroundings busy, and their bodies.

???: “—Hey, bro, you’re awake!”

Ears ringing with tinnitus, Subaru was attacked by a sudden sound with an unnecessary amount of strength. It had sounded with such volume that the people who had been busy in his vicinity stopped moving, their eyes focusing on the source.

???: “Cat-eared young lady, over here! Everyone else, keep working! Sorry, but keep working! We’re fighting against time!”

???: “Really nyow, you’re annoying. People need quiet here, so quickly get back to work.”

With a bow of his head, the large being apologized for his loud voice. An angry young woman—no, a young man approached the beastman with a dog’s head, who spoke with a Kansai dialect. Wearing a revealing dress fit for a woman, a bloodstained Ferris looked down at Subaru with a sigh of relief.

Ferris: “Now that you’ve woken up, do you understand the situation… Actually, can you speak right now?”

Subaru: “…Ah, Ferris?”

Ferris: “Yep, it’s everyone’s favorite Ferri-chan. You’re Natsuki Subaru-kyun, and we’re at a field hospital right nyow since you were heavily injured, got it?”

Ferris quickly explained the situation to a hoarse Subaru. Reluctantly, his brain digested his speech word by word.

Looking around, Subaru identified his surroundings. At last, he noticed that he was lying on a simple bed made of pieces of cloth. And in fact, as Ferris had said, the surroundings looked like a field hospital.

Around him, people lay writhing in pain, awaiting treatment like Subaru’s.

The smell of blood, and miserable, whispered cries. Just healing magic could not keep up, he could see that wounds had been sewn together by needles and threads.

Subaru: “What… What the hell is this?”

Ferris: “Looks like you’re still confused. Slowly, try to remember what happened before you fainted. If you recall that, you’ll find the answer.”

Ferris’s words were not gentle, but that was not because of his mood. Rather, he had no energy to spare for gentleness. His sleeves were rolled up, and his white skin and face were stained with blood.

Imagining just how much work Ferris, a first-rate healer, had done in the face of this tragedy was not difficult. And, the cause of this tragedy was—

Subaru: “The Witch Cult…”

Ferris: “Really, those guys are the worst. My understanding of them was too naïve… I never expected them to pull something like this. Of course, nyo one else was expecting this either.”

Remorsefully biting his lips, Ferris lowered his chin at Subaru.

The regret that made Ferris tremble was painfully clear to Subaru. Although Subaru understood that, there were other uncertainties. There were other things he needed to check.

Subaru: “E-Emilia?! What happened to Emilia? Is she here?”

Ferris: “…”

Subaru: “That bastard, Greed… the Sin Archbishop took Emilia. Then, I…”

He spoke those last words with a tremor, because he knew that he had been right to be anxious. In Ferris’s lowered gaze and silence, Subaru found a clear answer. At the very least, Emilia was not here.

Then, if his impression before passing out was correct, she had been taken by Regulus.

Subaru: “And Beatrice?”

Ferris: “…Beatrice-chan?”

Subaru: “Yes, the little girl who was with me? She has an arrogant, adorable face, and curly twin-drills as… What about Beatrice?”

Emilia had more than likely been abducted by Regulus.

Judging from Regulus’s attitude, the likelihood that he would hurt Emilia was low—although that was uncertain. Although he could not be forgiven, that was the case for the time being.

But what had happened to Beatrice? Sirius and Regulus had both been present, and Sirius had held a strong hostility toward Beatrice. Since Subaru had been safely carried into the field hospital, they had escaped from Sirius. So, who had protected Subaru?

Subaru: “Hey, please. Tell me. Beatrice…”

Ferris: “…”

Not finding an answer to his unease, Subaru desperately sought an answer from Ferris, who closed his eyes. Standing next to him, a giant beastman closed his eyes—Ricardo, the Captain of the Iron Fang, who was looking at his side.

Following his line of sight, Subaru widened his eyes.

Subaru: “Beatrice…”

Lying away from the people receiving treatment was a lone maiden in a dress. Seeing her not moving at all, in a makeshift bed like his own, Subaru lifted the towel covering his stomach and attempted to run towards her.

However, halfway to his feet, severe pain crippled him. On top of that, his right leg stopped obeying him, and his posture broke down completely.

His head was heavy with fatigue, and he could not understand why he was unable to move his right leg. Hurrying to take a look, the horror of his own leg left Subaru speechless.

Subaru: “Oh…”

Ferris: “Subaru-kyun would’ve lost a foot without Beatrice’s healing magic. You’ll have to thank that kid later.”

Subaru’s right leg was missing about half of its flesh, and was quite obviously in a poorer condition compared to his left. The wound was also wrapped in several layers of thick bandages, and a board had been fixed to his heel. All those had caused him to lose his balance.

He could not help but brush it with his fingers, and, in that moment, a bolt of realization struck him.

Subaru: “I remember…!”

The consequences of Regulus’s last blow before his departure.

Before taking Emilia, he spoke nonsense, and kicked the ground up as easily as he could kick sand, and that soil had poured on Subaru’s leg. At that moment, Subaru’s right leg had been wounded as if mauled by a wild animal’s claws. And that had resulted in the present state of Subaru’s right leg.

Ricardo: “When I stumbled upon the scene, your leg looked like it was connected by only a piece of flesh and skin. That cryin’ lil’ miss desperately healed ya before we got a proper healer.”

Ferris: “After that, Subaru was carried here and treated by Ferri-chan. Although Ferri-chan’s treatment cannot guarantee that your leg will be the same as before, nyow the bones and nerves are linked, and the flesh is regenerating, so you have to rest.”

Crossing his arms, Ferris made a cross, prepared to deal with Subaru’s reluctance, however, Subaru obeyed in silence, his attention focused on Beatrice’s bed. As Ferris sighed in relief, a large hand supported Subaru’s shoulder, hooking around it like a worm, and, Ricardo: “As for gettin’ ya to that lil’ miss, I can handle that.”

Subaru: “Sorry about this… Thank you.”

Ricardo: “No worries.”

Ricardo moved Subaru’s entire bed near Beatrice’s. From there, Subaru leaned forward to take a better look at her. Immobile, the little girl was sleeping so quietly that Subaru could not even hear her breathing.

Even though she was a Spirit, Beatrice slept like a human. Unlike Puck, she could not dematerialize into an Anchor, so this was how she reduced the burden of materialization on her Mana.

For this reason, seeing Beatrice’s sleeping face was hardly uncommon for Subaru. Only, this was the first time he had seen her sleeping quiet to the point it nearly seemed like she was dead.

Subaru: “She’s, just sleeping… right? Still, I’m worried…”

Ferris: “Asleep isn’t the right word. Right now, she’s lost her function as a Spirit… A state of suspended animation might be closer.”

Subaru: “Suspended animation? Why…?!”

Touching Beatrice’s forehead, he was surprised to find how low her temperature was. Brushing her adorable eyelashes and her face yielded no reaction, just as Ferris had reported. In response to the look on Subaru’s face, Ricardo squatted down.

Ricardo: “Accordin’ to the cat-eared lady, this happened because she overused her Mana. That’s all there is to it. I found the square ya were in by complete accident, bro. Everyone there had pretty much the same injury, which the lil’ miss was taking care of on her own.”

Subaru: “…”

Ricardo spoke with a sigh, leaving Subaru silent for a while.

Injured people with the same wound as Subaru—that was the result of sensory sharing. The injury Subaru had gotten from Regulus was propagated to everyone else, which had been Sirius's doing. The madwoman seemed to have left the scene, and Beatrice's fight had begun there.

She had given equally thorough treatment to Subaru and everyone else who was wounded.

Of course, Subaru was a greedy man who asked for too much, and the child who accompanied that Subaru likewise refused to give up anyone. So Beatrice had squeezed out every last drop of her Mana to save all those people, at this heavy price.

Subaru: "Beatrice is fine, right…? She just needs a little rest…"

Ferris: "…To be honest, I'm nyot too optimistic. Ferri-chan is a first-rate healer, but doesn't know much about Spirits. And this child is no ordinary Spirit either, right? So I don't really knyow any real solutions."

Subaru: "There… there has to be a way! I have to help Beatrice, I…"

Only a year had passed. He had told her he would free her from the Library, in order to bring her happiness. Beatrice was an existence that could not be allowed to end here.

Happiness, happiness, happiness, no one deserved happiness more than this child. She must be happier than anyone else.

Ricardo: "The problem's that she's run out of Mana, right? Can't she geddit from somewhere else? If bro's her Contractor, then she should be able to get some from him, right?"

Ferris: "…You idiot, Subaru-kyun. His Gate is fractured, so I can't deliver Mana from somewhere else. The quickest way to do that would be to send Mana through Subaru-kyun."

Subaru: "Right… Bokko fruits. What if we had bokko fruits? With those, I could restore my own Mana, and then I can give some to Beatrice…!"

Ferris: “You idiot!”

Ferris snapped angrily as he glared at the desperate Subaru, who looked up. He was surprised at that unexpectedly sharp reprimand, and Ferris immediately put on a fiddling, shy demeanor.

Ferris: “How many times have I said this? That’s really dangerous for Subaru-kyun’s body. In fact, it would be like poison. If you did that, we’d just end up with two casualties… So you can’t.”

Subaru: “…”

Ferris’s strict words were tinged with sadness. Reading that sincere thought, Subaru closed his mouth and swallowed his reckless judgment.

Ferris was an expert in healing, so he had of course considered a myriad of ways to help Beatrice. Subaru’s sudden thought must have already been considered.

Ferris: “I can understand Subaru’s worry about Beatrice-chan. And although I understand, there’s nyothing we can do for her right nyow. There are many other things that we have to worry about besides just that girl…”

Subaru: “Beatrice… Right, there’s Emilia too…”

Ferris’s words snapped Subaru back to reality.

He turned his attention to the field hospital—and found that something was off. There were people with wounded right legs, the same injury as Subaru, but there were also plenty of people with different injuries.

Subaru: “How’s the situation…? No, what else has happened? What’s with all the injuries?”

Ricardo: “The Sin Archbishops of the Witch Cult are here like you said, bro.”

Subaru: “But it can’t just be them, right? I only saw two Archbishops. This level of damage can’t be enacted by just two people. In other words, they’ve brought the fodder Cultists too.”

Two people with overwhelming power had been the first notice of a threat. So Subaru had simply assumed that the two Archbishops would be the only Cultists present—but it was only natural that, as Petelgeuse did, they had brought underlings to the city as well.

That was the only possible explanation for such damage.

Subaru: “The two Archbishops and the Cultists under them, are those the ones attacking the city right now?”

Ferris: “On this matter, there are a variety of…”

Ferris’s voice was bitter as he began to answer Subaru’s conclusion.

However, before he could confirm or deny it, from a direction he had never imagined came an unexpected interruption. That was,

???: “Yahoo, yahoo, yahoo!”

The space rang with the sound of a high-pitched voice.

The voice’s relaxed tone contrasted sharply with the somber atmosphere, as if someone had accidentally tuned into a television channel showing an entertainment program, during a serious conversation.

Subaru: “Wh-What…?”

Hearing the sound, Subaru looked around wildly, and, unable to find the owner, he immediately realized its source.

Subaru’s immediate impression of the sudden voice was that it sounded like it had come from a loudspeaker or radio—a thought that mirrored one he had this morning.

Subaru: “The city’s broadcasting magical device?”

???: “Hello, all you meat creatures! No matter how many times you’ve heard it, doesn’t my beautiful and lovely voice excite you? Gahahahaha!”

As if verifying Subaru's idea, the voice appeared again, being broadcasted by a magic speaker.

That voice rang with child-like cruelty, like a girl who scorned etiquette and trampled on conventional manners of speech. Her sharp laughter seemed able to pierce right into one's mind, causing both mental and physical aversion.

Subaru: "What, a stupid voice, this is…"

Ferris: "Hush, Subaru-kyun, quiet."

Ferris straightened his ear with one finger and put another over his mouth. Ferris was serious, seemingly completely absorbed, and Ricardo wore a vigilant expression. The bedridden injured all clapped their hands over their ears, sobbing.

Apparently, this did not seem to be the first time they had heard it.

???: "Alright, you meat creatures enthralled by a beautiful girl's enticing voice, I have news for you—we're all tired, so we're going home now. Just kidding! The true tossing and turning of day and night starts now! Gahahahaha!"

A harsh, squeaky voice, like a mirror next to the ear being scratched with sharp claws, filled with sadistic glee.

What, what, what was this voice, what was this woman?

Forehead dripping with cold sweat, Subaru was well-aware of his body's abnormal condition. As Subaru's mind struggled to catch up, his body had noticed something unusual.

???: "Setting aside my funny, laugh-inducing joke, let's continue with the news. As I said just now, the city has been occupied by us. You're all caged birds… No, you're all insects in a cage for insects."

Subaru: "—?!"

???: "Insects are just bugs, and the owner of that cage gets to decide just what to do with you. Wings and head, prepare to have them removed… Kahahaha, how ugly, how awful! What a merciless life.

You should be thankful for being left in my tender care. Gahahahaha!”

Repeated, malicious high-pitched laughter. One which belonged to an evil presence which despised others and found vicious delight in trampling upon their existence.

Subaru knew this kind of presence better than anybody.

???: “Wait, wait, wait. You idiots can’t understand the real meaning of my precious words. Poor incompetent fools, only thinking about slabs of meat and mating in their free time. My gentle, loving self will make this easier to understand. I’ll tell you with my spit, which you masochists love.”

Subaru: “…”

???: “Insects in a cage can’t do anything about their owner’s mood. The most you can do to please us is to lie fearfully in your cage. When we’re in a bad mood, you can only tremble in fear as we tear your wings or legs off. When I bring you honey, I’ll be like your mother, gently stroking your heads. That’s why, kahahahahaha!”

In the face of that constant viciousness, Subaru imitated Ferris and the others, and listened silently. A breath, a word, and muddy feelings in his chest accumulated, as Subaru sealed his will with iron.

And then, he noticed. He noticed it.

What was that?

???: “Later, we’ll have more to ask of you scum. You’ll wear desperately ugly expressions, cry that you don’twanttodiedon’twantodiedon’twanttodie and think of ways to emerge from the crowd and give us aggressors what we want. In that case, my continent-renowned kindness might make me consider setting down the cage in my hand. Gah—Isn’t that really easy to understand! Gahahaha!”

With excitement, the speaker clapped, stomping her feet from her seat.

Her speech, her attitude, her voice—Subaru found them all unbearably irritating, but that was not the problem at hand.

From the beginning, he could hear that sound. He had thought that it came the same room as that magical device being used in the broadcast. Faintly accompanying that woman's voice, was a sound that had reached Subaru.

However, he was unsure of what exactly that sound was. What was still worse was that he had almost, but not quite, reached the answer. Unknowing, unaware, unwitting.

He concentrated. He heard his noisy heartbeat, the noisy flow of his blood. Reject and understand, reject and understand.

—A very faint buzzing sound, like the flapping of a myriad insect wings.

He was very close, infinitely near the right solution. Although close, he was not quite there. A plume of flapping feathers, that was the noise that seemed to be mixed into the broadcast. Many magical phenomena were unclear to Subaru, so perhaps it was just his imagination. But Subaru's common sense felt that something was off. A sense of discomfort rose.

That sense of violation and the sound of those feathers were stuck in Subaru's mind, and did not leave.

???: "And that's the end for my precious words. Perverted meat creatures and insects should work their hardest. Like I've said earlier… us aggressors have taken control of the four towers that operate the waterways in this city. So I think it's best that you don't try anything weird, yeah? I can't bear to see a drowned human being's dead face, because it's unbearably ugly! Gahahahaha—"

That cruel high-pitched laughter was interrupted as the sound faded. The sound of wings was gone as well. Subaru could finally disengage his body, and he immediately flew over to Ferris and Ricardo.

Subaru: "What did you think of the broadcast just now?"

Ferris: “What I think of it… Our limbs were mercilessly taken, and we’ve been reduced to just a head, that’s how Ferri-chan sees this.”

A bitter Ferris bit down on his nails, replying to a Subaru, who frowned. Various places had become stages, for the purpose of being seized by the enemy.

Subaru: “So just now, that was the Witch Cult…”

Ferris: “The first broadcast came while Subaru-kyun was sleeping. This is the second one. During that first broadcast, they called themselves, the Sin Archbishop of the Witch Cult, representing Lust.”

Ferris paused, looking unsure of whether he should continue or not. Subaru, ignorant of the reason for his hesitation, tilted his head.

The common practice among Archbishops of the Witch Cult was to first announce their Sin. Only after that, their name would be conveyed. The Witch Cult’s Sin Archbishop of Lust—the third archbishop that Subaru had not imagined was present. Her name was,

Ferris: “Although this is disgusting, and Ferri-chan doesn’t believe it in the slightest, this is the name that was given.”

Ferris prefaced it, sharing his opinion that the credibility of the testimony he was about to repeat was very low.

Ferris: “Capella Emerada Lugunica—Although it couldn’t be true, as it’s the nyame of the Royal Family.”

Chapter 28:
A Strategy Meeting Covered in Wounds

Subaru: “Wait, let’s calm down. First, can we sort through what information we’ve got, is that okay?”

Ferris’s words had pushed the limit of what Subaru was able to handle at the moment. Ferris and Ricardo nodded at Subaru’s raised hand, as they considered the new information that had been broadcasted.

Subaru: “Moving anywhere… will be pretty difficult with so many injured people.”

Ferris: “Well, most people have already received first aid, and there shouldn’t be any myore people showing up, but still.”

With a sense of professionalism, Ferris gave his opinion on a change of location. Subaru took a moment to examine the conditions of the field hospital, his first concern.

Minimal lighting, and a ground made out of cold stone. From the unique feel of its air, Subaru judged the place to be underground—almost like the parking lot of a large department store.

Subaru: “Are we still in Priestella?”

Ferris: “It’s one of Priestella’s shelters. The broadcast this morning mentioned these, remember? In Priestella, they’re always concerned about flood damage in the case that an issue with the waterways ever occurred, so there are shelters all over the city. This is one of the shelters on First Street.”

Ricardo: “The square where I found ya’s nearby. After a rough start, we managed to bring bro and those other refugees to safety!”

Talking over Ferris, Ricardo gave his proclamation as he pounded loudly on his thick breastplate. Ferris glared intently sideways at Ricardo, who had not lowered his voice no matter how many times he was warned.

Ferris: “It’s lucky that Ferri-chan was also here, with so many people wounded. This dog-faced mister wouldn’t have been able to handle any of the treatment.”

Ricardo: “Yup! Now I don’t need to have any regrets! Gahaha!”

Ricardo’s usual attitude and his laugh were refreshing, even if they were out of place for this somber hospital. Even among so many injured people, if one person kept a positive attitude, everyone could maintain hope and feel saved.

Ferris: “So, what happened to Subaru-kyun…?”

Subaru: “Ah, right. There were two Sin Archbishops in the square, Greed and Wrath. The one who destroyed my leg was Greed, he was the one who abducted Emilia… However, he was not the one who injured the legs of everyone else around me. That would be Wrath.”

Ferris: “How did that happen?”

Subaru: “The Archbishop of Wrath… It’s a little difficult to explain, but her Authority is one that makes other people feel someone else’s wounds and feelings.”

He chose his words carefully, attempting to give a simple explanation of Sirius’s Authority. Ricardo had his head tilted, and Ferris’s complexion changed as he realized the implications of her ability. He looked to the wounded, and then looked towards the bandages wrapping Subaru’s right leg.

Ferris: “So… that’s the reason why Subaru-kyun and everyone else had such a similar injury. I had a bad feeling already, but…”

Subaru: “Ah…”

Absurd emotions often accompanied a distorted character. However, with Sirius, this absurdity was also physiological in nature, reflected in her Authority.

Subaru was so disgusted, and yet he had still more to say.

Subaru: “And Greed’s also very troublesome.”

Ferris: “Ahhhh~… Ferri-chan’s already tired as is, I don’t have the energy to hear about more troublesome things.”

Subaru: “Sorry, I don’t think that’s possible—That damned Greed, his ability can nullify any attack even though he has no idea what he’s doing. It’s also apparently applicable not only to himself, but also those he is touching.”

The unconscious Emilia, in Regulus’s arms, had been defenseless. She should have been exposed to Sirius’s flames and other attacks, but Regulus had flawlessly defended both himself and Emilia. Rather than saying that he had fought bravely, it would be more correct to say that he had made Emilia invincible with his inexplicable ability.

In that case, it would prove to be an incredibly tiresome situation.

Ferris: “A guy who can pass nyon injuries, and a guy who’s invincible… Ah, you’ve gotta be kidding me.”

Subaru: “That former Sin Archbishop… Petelgeuse’s ability to use multiple Unseen Hands was quite powerful, but this guy’s on a completely different level.”

That said, Petelgeuse’s ability had ended up not being effective on Subaru. Considering his ineffectiveness as a Sin Archbishop, Subaru had thought of him as a simple lunatic rather than a Sin Archbishop proper.

Thus, this would be his first formal battle with the Witch Cult.

Subaru: “And the Archbishop who just introduced herself the same way… I think it’s safe to assume that Lust’s abilities are probably just as troublesome.”

Ferris: “Worst of all… there could be five Sin Archbishops here.”

Subaru: “Five…?!”

Ferris uttered a hypothesis which was terrifying beyond Subaru’s wildest imagination. What had happened, to give him such an idea?

Ferris sighed and straightened his finger at Subaru's subdued eyes.

Ferris: "Listen. Think of that broadcast, what Lust said. She said they have secured the control towers of the waterways in this city, right?"

Subaru: "Ah, right, they said that, which means that they could be planning to sink the city… So, that's a very dangerous situation…"

Ferris: "And there's the possibility of an Archbishop occupying each… Already, there are three Sin Archbishops gathered in one place, which is completely unprecedented. So the worst of the worst possible situation comes to mind… because there are four control towers."

Subaru: "Four… Tch."

Speaking the number out loud, Subaru finally understood what Ferris meant. There were four control towers, placed north, south, east, and west, which controlled the watergates of the city of Priestella. Occupying all of them implied—

Subaru: "So it could be that each tower has an Archbishop guarding it? In that case, that should make four Sin Archbishops…"

Ferris: "Subaru-kyun, consider what just happened—The broadcast just now used a magical device that is only present in the City Hall, at the center of the city. The enemy is occupying five places that manage the city's functions, meaning that they've captured five strongholds."

Subaru: "—Hk."

The increasingly hopeless speculation left Subaru breathless.

Like Ferris said, the City Hall must have been taken to deliver that broadcast. In addition to the Sin Archbishop of Lust, who occupied it, there were at least two other Archbishops.

The only fathomable explanation for that would be a coordinated mass attack from the Witch Cult.

Subaru: “Aside from the square I was in, has there been any other commotion? Have there been any other attacks?”

Ferris: “…”

If this were a great offensive by the Witch Cult, it would be difficult to imagine that they would only target a single location. In the face of Ferris’s silence, Subaru could only pray that his worst fears of casualties would not become reality.

Absentmindedly, Ferris cast his gaze downward, falling silent. Ricardo gave a cough, a set of sharp teeth visible on the beastman’s dog-like face, and Subaru widened his eyes.

Ricardo: “Honestly, the only situation we know’s our own. We don’t even know where the other shelters are, nor their situation. However, it ain’t a good idea to go take a stroll outside.”

Subaru: “Why? Shouldn’t we look for allies so that we can collaborate? Aren’t you worried about them… That’s right!”

As he spoke, Ricardo gestured with his hands, and Subaru hurriedly looked up at Ferris.

In this shelter of wounded people, it was odd that Ferris and Ricardo were the only acquaintances of Subaru’s. Especially considering Ferris.

Subaru: “Where are Crusch-san and Wilhelm-san? It’s unusual for you three to be separated. Are they in another shelter?”

Ferris: “…You’re asking a difficult question, Subaru-kyun. The only ones you know here are Ferri-chan and this mister, and as you can see—”

???: “—Do not bother Subaru-sama too much, Ferris.”

Ferris replied with a sense of unease, and Subaru felt deep anxiety rise within himself.

Then, a gentle voice relieved that intense atmosphere. Suddenly hearing that voice, Subaru looked up and around. However, no matter where he looked, he was unable to locate its owner.

???: “I’m sorry. It seems like he is surprised. Ferris, please do not tease Subaru-sama too much.”

Ferris: “Yes. But Crusch-sama is such a meanie.”

Subaru: “What? Huh?”

Ferris, who was conversing with his invisible master, reached into his dress. Subaru’s already widened eyes became even wider, as Ferris pulled out a familiar object from his bosom.

The source of his little trick dawned on Subaru.

Subaru: “Wait, this is…”

Ferris: “That’s right. It’s part of the loot from a year ago. We used them too, remember?”

Ferris replied, revealing a hand mirror in his grip.

At first glance, the mirror lacked any defining characteristic, but rather than show a reflection, its face reflected a beautiful woman with green hair and a gentle face—without a doubt, that was Crusch.

This magical device, known as a Conversation Mirror, was more or less this alternate world’s version of a cell phone, which lets it owners speak through paired mirrors. A year ago, they had played a role in the battle with the Witch Cult, and they had been brought to this city as well.

Crusch, on the other side of the mirror, frowned slightly before the silent Subaru.

Crusch: “Ferris. Subaru-sama seems a little troubled. Did you hide this from him?”

Ferris: “Syorry about that. But, but, I didn’t think our next call would be so soon, so I didn't think it'd be important to tell him yet."

Subaru: "W-Wait. Give me a moment. Thanks to the Conversation Mirrors, you're in contact with Crusch and others, who are at another shelter, is that right?"

Crusch: "Indeed."

As Master and Knight talked, Subaru took a moment to sort through his confusion. The Conversation Mirror explained why the Crusch-fanatic Ferris was so calm, confirming her safety.

For the time being, it was fortunate that he was able to confirm that Crusch was safe. Then, Subaru looked at the mirror in Ferris's hands.

Subaru: "Thank goodness… it's difficult to say right now with what's happening, but we're lucky that we could get in touch. Crusch-san, are you hurt at all?"

Crusch: "No, thank you for your concern. Fortunately, I managed to find a shelter in time, without suffering any injury. I heard that Subaru-sama received a serious wound. How are you doing?"

Subaru: "I can't say that I'm completely fine, but it's good enough. I'll do something about it. I can't stay and rest, I have to do something as soon as the wound's bandaged… Ferris, don't glare at me like that."

As Subaru announced his intent, he felt Ferris's harsh glare stabbing into him for the betrayal of his prescription for complete rest. However, although he was being ungrateful, Subaru could not sit by in idleness. Breaking the deadlock they were in was of utmost urgency.

He could not lie around obediently, waiting for conditions to deteriorate.

Subaru: "We'll talk about this later… Crusch-san, how's the situation in your shelter? Who else is with Crusch-san?"

Crusch: “Yes. There are several others with me…”

???: “I’m also here, Subaru. Fortunately, everyone who remained at the inn made it here.”

From somewhere behind Crusch, an elegant voice joined the conversation, interrupting her.

The moment he heard it, Subaru froze briefly, before giving a sharp shake of his head. He did not want to be a fool who did not realize how encouraging that voice was.

Subaru: “Your presence there is kinda reassuring, Julius.”

Julius: “I was worried upon hearing that you ended up being carried into a shelter, unconscious. Since your usual liveliness has returned, it seems that my worries were baseless… Is it true that Emilia-sama was abducted?”

Subaru: “…It’s true. Sorry. I’m so useless.”

Julius: “You were facing two Sin Archbishops. I am not so heartless as to blame you for a lack of strength. Anastasia-sama and Crusch-sama are both here, as well as a few members of the Iron Fang. Ah, two of Felt-sama’s followers have joined us here as well.”

He quickly confirmed Emilia’s status, without holding Subaru accountable, and carried on with the conversation. Although the kindness from the other side of the mirror was touching, it amplified Subaru’s feelings of guilt. While listening to his words, Subaru looked around, and confirmed the presence of a certain face in the refuge.

Subaru: “Right, you should tell Felt’s people that their friend is here. He’s wounded, but away from mortal danger.”

Julius: “I see, that’s good to hear. I will be sure to pass it on. They are trying to act brave, but their worries are obvious—Well then, Subaru.”

After Ton and Kan had been informed of Rachins’s safety, Julius lowered his voice, changing the atmosphere of their conversation.

Julius: “What do we do?”

Subaru: “…I have no clue as to why you’re asking that of me.”

Julius: “Remember that time with Sloth. Dealing with the Witch Cult is likely to be your specialty. Maybe you could come up something unexpected and solve this dilemma?”

Subaru: “What sort of unreasonable expectations are those? Sorry to disappoint, but I’m not some kind of expert on the Witch Cult.”

Julius: “That is regrettable, but there’s also Emilia-sama. There is no doubt that your heart is most anxious. I sincerely want to know what you are planning to do.”

Subaru’s reply obviously had not answered Julius’s expectations, but he was not discouraged. He understood that thinking of Subaru as some miraculous Witch Cult slayer would be too much to look for.

Rather, the latter half of his sentence held his true question, the true topic.

Subaru: “…Emilia was taken by Greed. Even now, his own hair-raising, self-serving beliefs chill me to the bone. I don’t want to leave Emilia with that bastard for even a second.”

Julius: “That is to say, to rescue Emilia from Greed is your responsibility.”

Subaru: “Of course… Did you just say responsibility?”

Julius spoke in a subdued tone as adjusted his bangs behind the mirror. Then, the Knight spread his palm towards the mirror, showing his five fingers raised.

Julius: “Listen, Subaru. Ferris should have clarified that the Witch Cult has occupied five key locations in Priestella. Taking into account that there should be someone on the level of a Sin Archbishop at every place, it’s tantamount to a battalion. And so, allocation of battle forces is a very important issue.”

Subaru: "…You're saying that because the city will drown if the water gate is tampered with at just one location?"

Julius: "That's right. The condition for defeating the Witch Cult is to attack each of those five places at the same time. In the meantime, we must reestablish contact with our forces, who are scattered across the city… You understand how difficult that is, right?"

As long as they were unable to get in touch with their comrades at the various shelters, it would be difficult to string together all the combat forces in the city, as Julius said. Originally, the magic of the city was responsible for maintaining contact with those places.

However, when the City Hall had fallen, everyone had been separated and had sought refuge in different shelters. Each of the shelters needed to judge the situation and act accordingly, independently of each other.

Ferris: "By the way, this mister here has confirmed there are Witch Cultists roaming in the city. Also, there's seemingly a mob of people who have lost their minds wandering the city."

Subaru: "…Witch Cultists and that bastard Sirius's bullshit. This is looking more and more desperate by the second."

Hearing Ferris's unwelcome piece of information, Subaru scratched his face in agitation as more bad news came to light. At the very least, there had to be a way of getting in touch with all the existing combat forces—

Subaru: "Otto and Garfiel are missing, and Emilia's also missing in the sense she's been kidnapped by Greed. What a mess…"

Julius: "Joshua and the three Deputy Captains of the Iron Fang are all missing, as are Wilhelm-sama, Felt-sama, and Reinhard. Priscilla-sama, too…"

Subaru: "I don't know where that middle-aged garbage man Al's at, but Priscilla should have been in the city park before the commotion started. I don't know what happened to her after that… Damn it, Liliana should be with her too. I wonder if they're safe."

Priscilla was not normal in any sense of the word, and Liliana was also honestly very strange. Subaru did not want either of them getting hurt. Taking into account Priscilla's proclaimed luck and that Songstress's character, Subaru assumed that they would be fine.

Patrasche had also been in the Water Plumage Pavilion. Subaru thought her smart enough to avoid drawing attention, but he was worried about her nonetheless.

Constant sources of worry plagued Subaru, and he felt that launching simultaneous attacks at five different location was outside of the realm of possibility.

No matter how it was said, it would be impossible. There were not enough combatants to attack five locations, not to mention that they would be facing Sin Archbishops. The only thing most people could bring to such a fight was hope.

Subaru: "…Wait. Why do we have to go after all five places at the same time, in the first place?"

Julius: "What do you mean? It is as we have already said. The Witch Cult can do tremendous damage from any of the locations they currently occupy. Leaving one of those places in their hands…"

Subaru: "No. It's not like that though, right? I understand that we need to seize all four towers eventually. But why at the same time?"

Julius: "Once they discover that that one of the locations has been sabotaged, it would be only natural that the other Sin Archbishops would take action, no? That must be why they launched such a coordinated attack on the city."

Julius gave a coherent response to Subaru's train of thought.

While listening to his words, Subaru pondered their accuracy. Of course, Julius's logic was clear and sound. But the opponents they faced were not normal ones.

In that square, Regulus and Sirius had fought each other with intent to kill. Regulus had not been serious, and so the damage was minimal, but Sirius had definitely been intending to incinerate him. Regulus should have been able to rip her apart her in minutes without Subaru in the way.

Those guys, were they really working together to capture the city?

Subaru: "…Do they have any real sense of cooperation? Of course, they said that they could manipulate the watergates on those control towers, but can they stay organized and in touch with each other every step of the way? I don't think so."

Julius: "On what basis?"

Subaru: "In the square I was at, two of the Sin Archbishops were trying to kill each other. They only stopped because they were given new instructions from the Gospel. If that were not the case, one would probably have killed the other."

Julius: "So they can't coordinate properly…?"

Julius still appeared faintly uncertain at Subaru's wishful thinking. Subaru understood his concern, however.

Subaru: "Is there anyone with access to the outside?"

Julius: "A couple of the Iron Fang's members are scouting the towers… What are you thinking?"

Subaru: "Although this could just be conjecture, but if they wanna keep in touch regularly, wouldn't the simplest way to do that be launching magic into the sky? The control towers are far apart, and the city is complex, so verbal communications is troublesome. At the very least, it would take a long time without a Conversation Mirror."

Julius: "The likelihood that the Witch Cult brought any such mirrors is low. If many of those had been brought, the Spirits would react to the communications. My Quasi Spirits would doubtlessly have detected them already—Right, that's it."

They reached the same conclusions simultaneously. Subaru prefaced with an "Ah".

Subaru: “If they don’t have regular, clear communication, there’s a good chance they won’t act unless there’s a visible disturbance when one of their location is attacked. There’s no way that they will strike, if they’re unaware of it in the first place. And so, that reduces our need to disperse our combat forces.”

Julius: “…The only problem with this proposal is that one place is different from all the others.”

Subaru: “—The City Hall. That building can inform the other towers of the attack using that magical device. So we’d have to start with that one.”

First, they had to focus on capturing the City Hall at the center. They would have to go there and defeat the existing force there and make the Witch Cult there withdraw, then crush the forces at the other towers one-by-one.

Even then, it would be a test of speed, but the risk would be much lower than that of attacking all five locations at once. Subaru wished to believed so.

Julius: “…”

On the other side of the mirror, Julius fell into thoughtful silence. Subaru’s proposal was based on the poor relationship between Regulus and Sirius, optimistically assuming that the cooperation between members of the Witch Cult was a mess among messes.

Of course, if the Gospel had given a command like “Kill Everyone in Priestella”, that hope would be fundamentally subverted. If that were the case, he should have attempted to ask for the content of the Gospel back then—

???: “—My deepest apologies for being late, can everyone hear my voice?”

In the middle of a heavy silence, another voice suddenly joined the conversation. The weather-beaten, aged voice of a swordsman which Subaru looked up to was more reliable than anything else in the present situation.

The face of a grey-haired old man was reflected in the Conversation Mirror.

Subaru: “Wilhelm-san! You’re okay!”

Ferris: “Wil-jii! Thank goodness. You didn’t get in touch, it made people worry!”

Not only Subaru, but Ferris also heard a familiar voice. At their welcome, Wilhelm, reflected in the mirror, opened his eyes with a surprised face, and bowed gently.

Wilhelm: “My apologies, I was caught up in some trouble and could not find a calm place. Now, finally, some citizens and I have arrived at a shelter. Subaru-dono and Ferris, seeing your safety gives me peace. And Crusch-sama?”

Crusch: “I am fine. Wilhelm, I am so glad for your safety.”

Wilhelm: “Do not worry about me… it was due to my powerlessness that I was not at your side in this situation. Please allow me to trouble you to wait quietly. I will definitely come to pick you up.”

Subaru: “Amazing, this feeling of relief isn’t normal…”

As Crusch and Wilhelm spoke through the mirror, Subaru, finding that the dialogue between master and subordinate held an overwhelming sense of security, sighed with admiration for Wilhelm.

Then, while he was happy for his safety, Subaru ruminated on his prior conversation with Julius, as he attempted to organize a summary for Wilhelm. However,

???: “There are several things to be said, but this is the most urgent of those.”

At that moment, Wilhelm vanished from the mirror, the old swordsman replaced by a beastman—a kitten wearing a monocle. It was a Deputy Captain of the Iron Fang, Tivey, who seemed to have joined forces with Wilhelm. His expression was unusually anxious.

Ricardo: “Hey! If it ain’t Tivey! Your safety is better than anythin’ else.”

Tivey: “You too, Captain… But, we’re not safe right now. Is onee-chan with you right now?”

Ricardo: “Mimi? I haven’t seen her, did somethin’ happen?”

At Tivey’s feeble voice, Ricardo squinted into the mirror. From Tivey’s side, someone cut into the image, and—

Hetaro: “Captain! Onee-chan! Onee-chan …!”

Ricardo: “Hetaro? What’s the panic for?”

The one who had flown into view was Tivey’s identical brother, Hetaro. He was usually a mellow youth, but, right now, his face was distorted in pain. Tears filled his round eyes, and his voice shook as he gazed into the mirror.

Hetaro: “O-Our Divine Protection of Trisection activated, it’s coming from onee-chan! H-Her wound was so serious… The wound is being transferred into me and onii-chan… Hk!”

Tivey: “Onii-chan, calm down… It’s as he said, Captain. Onee-chan was wounded, and the injury is being transferred to me and onii-chan, so…”

Ricardo: “—Okay, both of ya, wait there. I’ll find Mimi immediately. Don’t cry, just wait.”

His voice lower than any Subaru had ever heard from him, Ricardo spoke into the mirror. In that smooth sound, Subaru felt a pressure unlike any he had felt ever before, and he stepped back, trembling.

The beastman’s eyes were full of anger, and his open mouth revealed a row of sharp canine teeth. He drew his blade, a large hatchet, his large muscles tense.

He almost appeared to be searching for the missing girl in that very moment.

Anastasia: "—Wait, Ricardo. I can't allow such a selfish action."

However, a voice from another mirror was the one that stopped Ricardo from charging out immediately. Ricardo turned back to face Anastasia, who had claimed the mirror.

He frowned, lifting his hatchet towards his employer.

Ricardo: "Don't stop me, lady. I'm not kiddin' around right now."

Anastasia: "Ricardo, our long bond and relationship'd show that I'm not kiddin' around. Don't make me say it again. Right now, random actions cannot be allowed. Even for Mimi's sake."

Ricardo: "Are you askin' me to abandon Mimi??!!"

Opening his mouth, the rage expelled from Ricardo's mouth shook the air of the shelter.

That intensity was no laughing matter. Subaru stumbled several steps backward, away from the beast who emanated shock waves of rage. Ricardo fixed his glare on Anastasia, the signs of a carnivore exuding from his body.

Through the mirror, Anastasia met it unflinchingly.

Anastasia: "You should understand, Ricardo. These are unforeseen circumstances. You are one of my most important weapons. I cannot let you leave without permission."

Ricardo: "You're sayin' this to me? Who do you think you're talkin' to, Ana-bo… Tch!"

Anastasia: "You, of course. Don't'cha forget, dog monster."

The two spoke names only old acquaintances would recognize. His skin tingling with electricity, Subaru searched for a place to interject. But there was none.

He wanted to support Ricardo's emotional decision. But he could also understand Anastasia's sound opinion. And he was an outsider. Anastasia, someone who was not, someone who held a close relationship with them, chose to prioritize the safety of the city over Mimi.

Subaru realized that there was nothing for him to interrupt. Ricardo, too, should understand her point.

Subaru: "…"

In this way, time trickled on.

If Ricardo forced his exit, Subaru, who was injured, and Felix, who was a non-combatant, could not hope to stop him. Anastasia, who looked coolly into his eyes from across the magic mirror—only she could do anything.

However, Ricardo suddenly turned his head away from the mirror's gaze.

Anastasia: "Wait, Ricardo!"

Ricardo: "—Stop, don't rush to make a conclusion."

Seeing Ricardo's movement, Anastasia spoke. Ricardo gave a quiet response. He turned back and sniffed at the entrance to the shelter.

Ricardo: "Somethin's close by. What's this… the scent of blood?"

Subaru: "The scent of blood…?"

Among so many wounds, he seemed to be able to detect a fresh scent of blood.

Alert, Ricardo pointed his hatchet to the entrance of the shelter, glaring. Subaru and Ferris swallowed, watching Ricardo's judgment.

???: "—!"

A shadow rushed into the refuge of the shelter with heavy footsteps.

In that moment, the patients in the shelter, intimidated by the insolence of the intruder, held their collective breath. It was none other that Subaru who broke that silence.

—Standing there was a familiar short, blond acquaintance.

Subaru: “Garfiel?!”

Garfiel was sweaty and out-of-breath. Suddenly noticing Subaru, he ran over with a strange wobble in his step.

Then, Subaru noticed. The reason behind Garfiel’s wobbly movements, was being held in his arms.

Garfiel: “…”

Everyone was lost for words as Garfiel reached Subaru. There, he bowed his head before Subaru and collapsed, kneeling.

Garfiel: “Sorry, captain… hk! My amazin’ self’s… worthless…! Incompetent… hk!”

After saying so, Garfiel raised a cry of sorrow.

—Embraced by his bloodied arms was the figure of a dying Mimi.

Chapter 29: Gorgeous Tiger

1

—Half a day before Garfiel had rushed into the shelter,

Mimi: “And then~ Hetaro was on the verge of tears, so Mimi had no choice but to hold his hand. And then Tivey looked lonely, so Mimi had no choice. So I ended up holding both of their hands~!”

Garfiel: “…Ah, is that so?”

Mimi: “Yep, that’s riiiiight. And then, after that, the lady looked reaaaaaaally happy!”

Even having been given that uninterested response, the petite girl walking beside him smiled, not discouraged in the least.

That girl, who was like the very picture of innocence, had orange hair and round eyes. Garfiel had no idea why she had entangled herself with someone from a hostile faction—this beastwoman, Mimi.

She had been like this since he’d arrived at the city of Priestella. No, looking back, she had been clinging to Garfiel ever since she’d gone to the Roswaal mansion as a messenger.

Initially, he had suspected that Mimi had been trying to get a read on Emilia’s strongest retainer, but that hypothesis had been soon dismissed due to Mimi’s behavior. Now, he was honestly thinking that she somehow liked him.

It was impossible to deduce the reason, and Garfiel could only tilt his head curiously to the side.

—Now, they were walking along Priestella’s streets side-by-side in the dusk.

Neither had invited the other, rather, Mimi had just followed

Garfiel as he skulked away from the inn.

Although he had hoped he could be alone to meditate, Garfiel was too embarrassed to give that excuse to shake her off. Overwhelmed by Mimi's eagerness and lack of understanding for such subtleties, he had started exchanging such empty conversations while trying to sort through his feelings.

Mimi: "Garf, your expression is weird. What happened? Was it something fun?"

Garfiel: "If somethin' fun'd happened, wouldn't my amazin' self look happy? My amazin' self doesn't wanna talk 'bout it, an' there's no obligation to talk 'bout it."

Mimi: "If you keep talking about complicated stuff like obligations, you'll end up like Joshua, yeah? Mimi thinks it's better to relax and have fun! It's better when Garfiel throws his head back laughing like an idiot~."

Garfiel: "You sayin' I look like an idiot?"

Mimi's exaggerated words really were too exaggerated, and Garfiel bared both his teeth and eyes wide open.

She squeaked an "Ahh~!", and dashed away. She stopped not much further ahead, giggling as she waited for him to catch up, seemingly having forgotten their previous interaction.

Garfiel found it incredulous that she, of all people, would accuse him of being the one who laughed like an idiot.

It had only been one hour or so since Garfiel had challenged the Sword Saint Reinhard to a battle before dinner. The strongest in the Kingdom—or, as some would say, the strongest existence in the whole world, was the Sword Saint of the current generation.

Before their actual meeting, Garfiel had heard of his strength from Subaru.

Reinhard was a friend, a benefactor, and an acquaintance with whom Subaru had awkwardly parted with on their previous meeting. Encountering him in this unexpected place had come as a surprise.

Through conversation, Subaru revealed that he had somewhat successfully resolved his previous embarrassment. Since that grievance had dissipated, Garfiel felt no particular obligation to hesitate any further.

To Garfiel, the title of “Strongest” held a very special meaning.

To be the Strongest. Aiming to become the Strongest. To strive to become the Strongest.

Garfiel believed that as soon as a man was born, his first cry would place that as his lofty goal.

Everyone, no matter who, had once longed and dreamed to be the Strongest as they walked the long road known as Life. Everyone would eventually forget that distant dream. Everyone except Garfiel.

That dream had taken root in his heart and had been a source of much of the persistence he had shown along the way. To Garfiel, the title of Strongest was both a combination of his natural goal, something he had held ever since he had been born a man, and an indispensable condition for him to be able to protect everything he wished to protect.

Therefore, in front of the man who famously stood at the apex of strength, Garfiel could not hold back his restless teeth and claws.

He had gone to Subaru and received permission to challenge Reinhard. The Sword Saint seemed a far cry from the Strongest—he gave off the impression of being a meek, kind man with no martial prowess. He looked like he could be broken like a twig, with just one hand.

However, Garfiel knew that the stronger someone was, the better they were at hiding their strength. Setting aside his own tendency to act up, the majority of powerful people did not look strong as they went through their daily activities. Roswaal and Subaru were like that.

And so, he judged Reinhard to be similar in that regard.

—The bout would take place at the gravel-covered courtyard of the hotel.

Refusing Garfiel's proposal to leave the hotel for the city's fields, for fear of damaging their surroundings, Reinhard insisted on fighting at the inn, adding the condition that the courtyard could not be damaged.

That could only be said to be humiliating. Even if he were the strongest man, he was underestimating Garfiel. Immediately, Garfiel dragged him outside, intending to make him regret that demeaning arrogance.

The confrontation took place in the courtyard, where Subaru issued a command marking the start of the match. Garfiel bared his teeth, thinking only of striking the crimson hero with the metal at his wrists.

Garfiel: "…"

Such an idea vanished almost instantaneously after the command was issued.

The atmosphere of the man before him had changed faster than one could blink. Until that very moment, his gentle atmosphere had not disappeared. But it dissipated, revealing a sharp blade, or a finely honed flame.

An ordinary person would not be able to feel how his natural state was razor sharp, as if he were a sword himself. The sense of oppression was such that to those who knew little about martial arts, it would manifest as a sensation like their lungs were being crushed.

But neither of those were Garfiel's case.

At the very least, Garfiel was a man with strength worthy of a match against the Sword Saint.

Noticing that natural posture, his internal organs trembling under the pressure, Garfiel howled away his hesitation as he flew at Reinhard.

Their match was not meant to be lethal, and they had agreed to cause no serious injuries—forgetting their agreement, he had aimed at Reinhard’s throat with his sharp claws, striving for a decisive blow. And in the moment before his blow landed, his body was elegantly caught in midair, and Garfiel truly understood the disparity in their strength.

Garfiel: “—I lost.”

After that, despite launching offensive attacks from various angles, all of those were casually evaded by Reinhard, and he had done so with casual parries. On top of that, Reinhard had done all that without even taking a step away from where he had first stood.

In other words, Garfiel had exhausted all his strength against only Reinhard’s upper body.

Having been tossed away, a fist was displayed in front of his face, and Garfiel declared his own defeat.

The Sword Saint had not even drawn a sword, his area of expertise. He had defeated Garfiel with only his bare fists.

As to what Reinhard and Subaru had said after that, Garfiel could not quite recall. To be so ungracious or foolhardy as to not accept his loss was not an impression that Garfiel had wanted to give. So he had left the hotel with only a few words.

He was unable to sort through his feelings as they were swept into a whirlpool.

Strangled by his unanswerable emotions, Garfiel had sought to find an answer as he walked the Watergate City alone as the sun was setting—That was how it was supposed to go.

Mimi: “Garf! Gaaarf! Look! Take a look~! The sunset’s completely reflected in the water! It’s supeeeer red! This is awesome~! Amazing! So beautifuuul~!”

The noisy girl led Garfiel around, pulling on his sleeve, yanking on his hair, settling on his shoulders, and he had been left with no choice but to follow her. Thanks to her, he had accomplished leaving the hotel, but at the cost of his time to feel depressed by himself.

Garfiel: “Oy, from the very start, you’ve been so noisy. Can’tcha settle down a bit, midget?”

Mimi: “Ahhh… nope~!”

Garfiel: “An immediate answer?!”

She grabbed Garfiel’s wrists, running and spinning. Wrists gripped with unexpected strength, Garfiel turned on the spot along with her.

The idea of pulling his wrist from that vice grip and fleeing at the speed of light had crossed his mind, but he didn’t know the limit of Mimi’s physical ability as a demi-human. Mimi might have been able to catch up with Garfiel’s escape with ease.

He also had to take into consideration how conspicuous he would look.

Before leaving for Priestella, both Frederica and Ram reminded him repeatedly that troubling Emilia or Subaru because of his own quirkiness would set a bad example. The only one he could trouble was Otto, who was like an older brother used to cleaning up messes.

Garfiel: “Haha.”

Mimi: “Oh, oh, what’s wrong, Gaaarf? Is there something voxing… vicing… vixing you?”

Garfiel: “Ya mean somethin’ vexin’?”

Mimi: “Yep, vixing! What happened~? Say it, say it~!”

He was unable to speak candidly to Mimi and so she hit him repeatedly in the side with an “Oi, ooiii~”. Feeling the poison being drummed out of his body by her petite, oddly sturdy form, Garfiel clicked his fangs.

He leaned into the waterway, appreciating the view.

Garfiel: “Ah… it’s really a movin’ scene.”

Mimi: “Right? This is awesome~! Amazing!”

Although Mimi should only be listened to half the time, the reflection of the setting sun in the water was indeed a bright, inspiring scene. The glittering water was stained with white and yellow light, and the sky was dyed by the orange sunset.

When he finally noticed, Garfiel was sitting on the edge of the waterway, spending his time vaguely watching the sluggish travels of people on foot and of sailboats on the waterway.

Mimi: “Hmm~ hmm~ hmm~”

Taking a seat beside him, Mimi shook her feet happily as she hummed a tune through her nose. Although her character was one which couldn’t be silenced, right now, she was behaving quietly. Grabbing Garfiel’s half-clothed shoulders, she bobbed her head from side to side.

Taking a sideways glance at her happy profile, he belatedly discovered that the color of Mimi’s hair matched the orange shade of the sunset exactly. He subconsciously reached out a hand to brush her head, and Mimi seemed to be pleased, leaning into his touch.

Mimi: “Fluffy? Fluffy? Mimi’s head is often touched by the lady too! She pets it and calls it something like a healing idol.”

Garfiel: “Ah, it really is kinda comfortable. That healing idol stuff or whatever, the Captain sometimes says stuff like… that.”

Mimi: “Gaaaaaarf, do you still feel annoyed?”

Garfiel: “It’s somethin’ else now!”

Mimi: “Huh?”

As Mimi tilted her head, her face the very picture of innocence, Garfiel laughed inadvertently.

It felt as if he was getting rid of the heavy things in his chest, washing away the feeling he was someone cheap. The sense of defeat and humiliation was replaced by straight-forward, rebellious spirit.

Garfiel: "…Bein' the Strongest so suddenly ain't possible. My amazin' self's still climbin'."

Mimi: "Ohh~, so you're climbing the ladder to being the bestest~!"

Garfiel: "Hey, ya understand pretty well. Yeah, it's the proper way to becomin' the strongest."

Mimi raised her fist, and Garfiel responded by tracing the white scar on his forehead with his fingers

Although her chattiness was annoying, she had also cheered him up. If he were alone, he would probably still be moping gloomily. He was glad that Mimi had accompanied him.

Garfiel: "I guess I should thank her. Oy, midget, while we're here, how 'bout we go to a stall 'n grab a bite? It'll be my amazin' self's treat…"

Mimi: "Gaaarf, look!"

Garfiel: "Ah?"

With that invitation to eat, Garfiel got to his feet, patting down his bottom.

Mimi was still seated by the waterway, pointing towards the other margin, and Garfiel's attention wandered towards that direction. Then, he narrowed his eyes.

On the other side of the waterway, the ropes of a sailboat had come undone, leaving the boat stranded as it began to drift along with the flow of the water. It was unmanned; however, the issue did not reside there.

Mimi: “Hey, kids!”

Mimi gave a loud warning cry in the direction the boat was heading —another boat, where five children were playing, the drifting vessel heading towards them. The children had not noticed the approach of the other boat. If they collided, their boat could end up capsized, throwing the children into the waterway.

At Mimi’s shout, other people around the waterway had taken notice. One of the boat owners flew toward the children in a panic, but he would not make it in time.

Hearing the shrill voices of the people around them, the children finally noticed their situation and panicked as the saw the sudden approach of the empty boat. Then—

Garfiel: “Yo, kids. Thank that midget cat nee-chan who first noticed ya.”

Mimi: “Garf!”

He had suddenly leapt onto the boat, astonishingly keeping the vessel’s balance as he landed. To the children, the silent arrival of Garfiel would have seemed like he had suddenly fallen from the heavens.

The children stiffened upon gazing a blond stranger with a mean look and a fanged and fierce smile. Taking advantage of the fact that none of them moved in protest, Garfiel scooped the five children into his arms, making another leap.

Escaping from the small boat, they landed on the sidewalk near the waterway. Immediately after he released the children, the two boats collided violently, capsizing the one that had been carrying the children.

Garfiel, by cleverly keeping hold of the ropes connecting the boats, had also prevented a chain reaction of collisions that would have sunk a series of boats. Restraining the movement of the overturned boat had prevented the detached boat from drifting further downstream, minimizing the damage it’d cause.

Garfiel: “Aight, that should do it!”

After tying the ropes firmly, Garfiel ended his struggle, with an uproar of cheers and applause from the witnesses. One of the shipowners, who should have been monitoring his boat, bowed his head to convey his gratitude, which Garfiel waved off, scratching his head and looking shy. Then,

Kid One: “O-Onii-chan. Thank you very much.”

Garfiel: “Ohh?”

All the rescued children gathered and poured grateful words upon Garfiel.

They had lost the timid expressions they had worn on the boat, merely gazing at Garfiel with glittering expressions. As Garfiel met their gazes, their hyperactive clapping hands began to move even faster.

Faced with that, Garfiel felt his mood lighten as he rubbed his nose.

Garfiel: “There’s no need for anythin’ like that. Happened by chance… Ah, yeah, by chance. My amazin’ self was guided here by a wind of fate. It’s the City of Water, surrounded by waterways… if anyone ended up sheddin’ tears, then the waterways’d end up overflowin’, yeah?”

The applause began to calm as Garfiel gave his complacent response. The cheers had also become intermittent, subtle voices starting to be heard. However, unlike the spectators around them, the children showed dramatic reactions.

Kid Two: “Wow, amazing!”

Kid Three: “So coooooool!”

Kid Four: “No tears, regardless of danger!”

Kid Five: “Never flinching! Never doubting! Never hesitating!”

Garfiel nodded with satisfaction at the excited children. Then, with an eager gaze, one of them voiced a question.

Kid One: “Onii-chan, what’s your name?”

Garfiel: “It ain’t anythin’ worth mentionin’. However, if pressed for it… My amazin’ self’s a tiger. Yeah, a golden tiger. Call me Gorgeous Tiger!!”

Kid Two: “Gorgeous!”

Kid One: “Tiger!!”

Garfiel struck a pose, leaning back with his hands stretched obliquely to the sky. Eyes shining, the children gave hushed whispers of excitement as they imitated him.

As Garfiel shared his heart with the children surrounding him, Mimi rushed over, her eyes shining as well.

Mimi: “—Garf, so coooool~!”

She ran over to join the ranks of the children crowding around Garfiel, making a pose.

The delighted laughter of the children, Mimi, and Garfiel rang through the waterways at twilight.

—The applause and cheers had long since dissipated, leaving only the solitary shipowner regarding them with a smile.

2

Garfiel bounced with energy as he ate one of the snacks he had bought to share with the children at a stall, walking victoriously.

Garfiel: “Them, my amazin’ self said, ‘Now, I won’t let ya take even one more step forward, ya scum! It’s the Captain’s territory, and you’ve already been trapped here!’. Hah!”

Mimi: “Amazing~! So cool~!”

Kid One: “Woah! That’s so cool~!”

As Priestella was infiltrated by the glow of sunset, Garfiel shared heroic stories of the past year with Mimi and a blonde kid.

What he had just described had been one of the most impressive events that had happened, the Earth Spider Hunt. A nearby village had an outbreak of a Witchbeast known as Earth Spiders, and the three-man force of Subaru, Garfiel, and Otto had been forced to subdue them. They had demonstrated a perfect combination of Otto and Subaru's scheming skills and Garfiel's strength.

Along with Mimi, one of the rescued children happily listened to Garfiel's recollections. He was a child with blond hair, who looked to be around six or seven years old. He had lovely features and a cute smiling face that would surely one day attract lovelorn sighs from women. But right now, he was just a child admiring Garfiel's way of life and heroic stories.

After buying the children snacks, Garfiel had taken it upon himself to escort the children safely to their homes, one-by-one. Out of the five, four had returned home unharmed, which meant that this boy was the last one.

Garfiel: "With just a small group, ya went out pretty far to play. Ain't that dangerous?"

As they undertook the considerate journey to the child's house, Garfiel frowned.

The children's boat adventure had taken them to the border between the First Street, where the inn was located, and the Second Street, where the Muse Headquarters was located. As they walked, Garfiel couldn't help but think he had wandered too far. In fact, they had come all the way from Third Street. Without any detours, the journey would take close to an hour to complete.

The child grinned in response to Garfiel's words.

Kid: "Occasionally, a Songstress goes to the park on First Street. We were looking for her!"

Garfiel: "Songstress, uh… Is that so? Captain said her singin's pretty amazin', too, but my amazin' self's kinda suspicious."

Rubbing his nose, Garfiel found it difficult to agree with the child's reply.

Garfiel had only met the Songstress Liliana once, at the Muse Headquarters. Even that brief interaction had been enough to leave a significant impact on him. Liliana was, beyond a doubt, a girl with a strong personality. However, that strength was rather incompatible with the impression of a pure, honest bard.

Mimi: "Gaaaaaarf, have you never heard the Songstress's singing? Iiiit really iiiiiis very powerful!"

Garfiel: "You have, midget?"

Mimi: "Yep~! I didn't fall asleep until the end~! Mimi's so strong~! Praise Mimiiiii~!"

Garfiel obediently stroked Mimi's stretched-out head. She yelled out "Success~!", and happily dashed away, before turning back around expectantly.

Mimi: "So, did you hear the Songstress sing?"

Kid: "Nope, we missed her. However, since we'd gone all the way to that faraway street…"

Garfiel: "So that's why ya were playin' in the river? Well, it's good that my amazin' self was there."

Kid: "Gorgeous Tiger!"

Garfiel: "Ha!"

As the boy stretched his hands toward the sky, and Garfiel mimicked his motion.

Gorgeous Tiger was here.

They posed together energetically, but the child soon dropped his arms with a melancholic sigh. Garfiel tilted his head to one side.

Garfiel: “Why do ya look so down? Don’t sigh, yer happiness will run away, y’know.”

Kid one: “Well… My sister will be mad when I get home.”

Garfiel: “Ah?”

As the boy revealed his fearful attitude towards his sister with a cry, Garfiel overreacted by grabbing his shoulders anxiously.

Garfiel: “C’mon, c’mon. But, why’s she goin’ to be so angry?”

Kid: “…Because, I snuck out.”

Garfiel: “Ah…”

The boy seemed to have neglected to inform his sister that he would be going out with his friends today. As a result, his family was probably frustrated and worried sick right now.

That feeling was not unfamiliar to Garfiel. As a brother, the presence of an older sister would, no matter for how long, continue to exist as a terrifying barrier. Even after ten years of separation, after he had grown up, the fear of losing to the sister he met face to face nearly every day had increased, rather than decreased.

Garfiel: “Gotcha. Leave it up to my amazin’ self.”

Kid: “…Eh?”

Garfiel patted his chest proudly as the little boy revealed his shock. As if trying to ease his downcast, Garfiel laughed, showing his sharp teeth.

Garfiel: “The scariness of an older sister’s somethin’ my amazin’ self’s familiar with. If yer scary sister comes rushin’ at ya, my amazin’ self’ll protect ya.”

Kid: “Onii-san!”

The emotional child hugged Garfiel tightly. Mimi joined the hug, grabbing Garfiel from behind.

In this way, being held front and back by the little ones, Garfiel renewed his determination and struggled along with them as they continued their journey towards the boy's house.

The sunset was approaching in earnest, and it was unlikely that they would make it back by dinner time, but that would be fine for today. No matter how he looked at it, he would not be able to dine in the same hall as Reinhard without some unease. However, after a night of cooling down, he would probably be able to manage it.

That was thanks to the children who admired the Gorgeous Tiger, as well as Mimi's inscrutably infectious cheerful attitude.

???: "—Fred!"

A deafeningly high-pitched voice soaked with emotion suddenly attacked Garfiel's ears.

He lifted his head in surprise, and caught sight of the sprinting figure of a girl. She had long, elegant blonde hair, and was glaring intently at the boy who clung to Garfiel.

The boy looked in her direction and opened his mouth. Then,

Fred: "Onee-chan…"

Sister: "You, just how worried are you going to make us before you're satisfied?!"

The girl leapt forward with both feet to deliver a dynamic flying kick to her brother, whose body gently bounced back. An optimal flying kick, without losing any momentum—Garfiel, witnessing that action, was frozen by shock. He was too slow to respond to the beautiful girl, who had landed beautifully.

The girl herself was likewise beautiful. She looked at Garfiel with a sharp gaze, and dug into his foot with her heel.

Sister: "You suspicious person, what do you want with my Fred?"

Garfiel: "Gah… First of all, move yer foot, midget."

As he faced the maelstrom of her attack and angry words, Garfiel replied in a steady voice. Seeing that her pre-emptive attacks had not caused any harm, the girl retreated backward with a frightened expression.

Although she had thought that Garfiel would be angry, Garfiel had yet to reach a state of anger. Rather, he was still surprised. He had never imagined that there would actually be a sister who would indiscriminately deliver fierce kicks to her younger brother.

Incidentally, the impact of the young boy who had been kicked had been impact softened. With a "Hey~!", Mimi had flown towards him gracefully, hugging him and landing gently.

Now, they had gotten to their feet, brushing each other off.

Seeing that through the corner of his eye, Garfiel issued a sigh. And at his reaction,

Sister: "What's with that attitude… If you have something to say, just say it, and don't do anything to me or Fred… I-I'm terrifying when I get mad…"

Garfiel: "First of all, you're misunderstandin' here. Also, don't fly at yer brother like that. Ya might accidentally cause a serious injury, got it?"

Sister: "Hah…"

Squatting down, Garfiel spoke quietly to the girl.

The boy's sister was also young—only around ten-years-old, the age of just before puberty, when kids would try a little too hard. Her initial sharpness had faded, and her expression morphed into a tearful one at Garfiel's calm and steady replies.

What she had said was surely a bluff, but she had gathered her courage to go up against Garfiel. In a sense, her courage had rendered her even more afraid, in an unfortunate turn of events.

Fred: "Ah, Gorgeous Tiger… Please don't get too angry with my onee-chan."

Then, unable to bear seeing his sister trembling, the boy patted his body clean of dust after recovering from the shock and stood at her back, pleading with Garfiel. The older sister's expression revealed that her self-esteem had been hurt because of his pleas, but she still had the dignity to try to protect her younger brother from Garfiel. Although he didn't know what had happened at first, they didn't seem to have a bad relationship.

Garfiel: "So my amazin' self looks like a bad guy. That's kinda displeasin' to hear."

Mimi: "A bad gai! Being a bad guy isn't good, Gaaarf, be Gorgeous Tiger instead!"

Mimi leapt up and gave Garfiel's head a poke. Although it didn't hurt, it was a rather puzzling blow.

The pointless stare-down between siblings and Garfiel continued. And just as he wondered how long this would last,

???: "Onee-chan, Fred, where are you two?"

The voice that broke the stalemate came from someone else.

Hearing that gentle voice of a woman, the siblings caught each other's gaze. Garfiel watched with eyes widened as the two ran in its direction. Sister and brother arrived at the corner of the road, where a woman emerged. They flew towards her without hesitation.

That blonde woman was more than likely their mother.

Fred: "Mom!"

Sister: "Mom, that suspicious person, something about 'gorgeous', and Fred…"

The younger brother held onto his mother with tears in his eyes, and the elder sister continued to weave her false accusations. After listening to the children's rambles, the person in question smiled.

Seeing the family in such a state, Garfiel shook his head in dismay.

It wouldn't have been convenient if the city guards were called upon at this point. Relieved that there was an adult with whom he could discuss the situation calmly, he stepped forward to explain, thinking of prefacing with a "Sorry".

Garfiel: "…"

But he stopped in his tracks upon gazing upon the other person, her children still clinging to her, as she turned her face towards him with a smile.

Mimi: "Gar∼f?"

Garfiel froze, and Mimi turned around, surveying him. However, Garfiel was unable to respond to Mimi's concern. His heart, in a state of chaos and confusion, had no such energy to spare. After all, the person who stood there was,

???: "Well, my children seem to have been taken care of, my apologies. If possible, could you tell me what happened?"

She spoke in soothing, gentle tones which held not even the slightest sign of malice or suspicion. With a few steps, she had arrived in front of him. Even as Garfiel trembled and shivered at her presence, she tilted her head in confusion.

That expression, that attitude, that voice, they all rocked Garfiel to the core.

Garfiel: "—Mother?"

A hoarse murmur escaped his throat.

Chapter 30:
Tiger and Cat under the Moon

1

???: “I’m so sorry, I wasn’t expecting guests, so the house isn’t very tidy.”

Mimi: “Hmm~! We don’t mind~! It looks clean~! Very clean~! Mimi’s room looks a lot more chaotiiiiic~!”

???: “Ah, ah, that’s no good.”

The woman casually stroked Mimi, who sat on the sofa, kicking her legs and looking very comfortable. Mimi made happy noises, completely relaxed around the woman.

Immersed in this scene, Garfiel looked silently at the woman. Her long blond hair flowed to her waist, her skin was fair like snow, her slim body retained a woman’s curves, and her soft face displayed a pair of clear, calm emerald-green eyes.

Her youthful appearance suited that of a woman in her mid-twenties, but Garfiel knew that she should be in her mid-thirties. The fact that it did not match up to Garfiel’s expectations was precisely the source of his confusion.

???: “Gorgeous Tiger-san, does tea not match your tastes? I’m sorry, I didn’t even think to ask what you’d like to drink…”

The woman—a woman who claimed to be Reala Thompson, frowned at the silent Garfiel. He was shaken back into awareness by her voice. He looked down at the cup of tea that had been served in front of him, and hurriedly grabbed it.

Garfiel: “No, no, my amazin’ self was just bein’ a bit silly… I’m just thinkin’ that this room’s unusually big, that’s all.”

Reala: “Is that so? My family’s very big, and so is our house… but that makes it hard to clean. It looks like I was careless again.”

Reala accepted Garfiel’s hurried excuse without a trace of doubt, laughing elegantly, putting her hand on her mouth. She was dressed in well-tailored clothing, suitable for living in a mansion that could only be described as large.

Her smile, her sweet tone, everything about her struck Garfiel with nostalgia. However, Reala spoke not a word of Garfiel’s gaze. This detail alone gripped Garfiel’s heart with pain.

The woman who claimed to be Reala Thompson looked exactly like the woman who had been imprinted clearly into his mind—Reshia Tinzel, Garfiel’s mother.

Garfiel’s separation from his mother had happened shortly after his birth, back when he had no self-awareness, so obviously his memories of his mother were scant. Even so, Garfiel knew every detail of her face, after seeing her in that detestable Tomb where the Trial had been hosted. There, he witnessed his separation from his mother.

Her face, her voice, her love, Garfiel knew them all from the Trial. And that same Trial had shown him the unfortunate death that reached her shortly after her departure. So, to Garfiel, seeing his mother again was an impossible dream.

But if that was so, then who was this woman in front of him?

Reala: “Mimi-san, your ears look so soft. Would it be possible for me to touch them?”

Mimi: “Please go ahead~!”

Reala happily reached out to Mimi, who tilted her head, and stroked Mimi’s ears with a look of contentment.

Mimi’s smile was one only a little girl could wear. They were an odd pair, a tiny beastman and a suspicious thug-like demi-human, but they had been invited in without a second thought. This woman had simply no sense of wariness.

Such attitudes were, to Garfiel, all associated with motherliness.

His mother Reshia had been quite the unfortunate woman. Her parents had lost everything to debt, and had sold her to a group of slave traders, who were in turn ambushed by demi-human bandits. They had made Reshia their plaything.

Somewhere along the way, she had become pregnant with Frederica, and as his mother's stomach swelled, the bandits simply abandoned her. After that, she was taken by a different band of thieves and spent a long time with them.

His older sister Frederica had grown up in that group of bandits, and remembered those times. Although she did not like to talk about it, the fact that Reshia had departed as soon as she became pregnant with Garfiel, indicated that it had been a rather poor environment.

Suffering misfortune after misfortune, Reshia wandered around with her daughter, while carrying a child. Fortunately, she soon was rescued by Roswaal, a pompous noble. He had made her a proposal—he would take them to Sanctuary, where they would be given food, safety and shelter. In Sanctuary, Garfiel was born, and Ryuzu became his guardian.

Life had treated his mother in a way that could only be summed up as "cruel".

However, his mother's personality was unknown to those who only heard her stories. Those who really knew his mother would never give her life such an unfortunate evaluation.

Ryuzu: "Ah, Reshia. That girl was always inexplicably, weirdly optimistic, always lookin' towards the future. Despite sufferin' through painful days where she could've died, she'd always say, "Maybe something nice'll happen tomorrow. Even if today's hard, tomorrow may be better." Like a lil' child, she always looked forward to the lil' happy things in life."

Frederica: "Our honored mother was… she may have been dismissed as a foolish woman by other… people. To be honest, I believe that she never really grasped lessons on how to best survive… But she was an incredibly wonderful person. That is one thing I can say for certain. I love our mom with all my heart, and I am happy to be her daughter.”

Roswaal: “Is this about your mother, Reshia-san? Riiiiiight, although I never had too many chaaaaances to chat with her face to face, but… she was a strange person. Or maybe it’s better to say incredible? She was muuuuch more sensitive to happiness than most people. She was always cheerful, finding happiness in eeeeven the worst of situations. Yeeeep, that’s not something I disliiiiiiked.”

Ryuzu, Frederica, and even Roswaal all spoke fondly of her. Within Sanctuary, anyone who had known his mother said the same thing. She was someone who was always relaxed and happy.

If that had not been the case, she would not have left to look for Garfiel’s father foolishly, who had more than likely encountered misfortune. And then she had immediately suffered another misfortune and died, and what happiness did she get?

—He had never found the answer as to where his mother’s happiness was.

Garfiel: “If I couldn’t find it, I should’ve just given up…”

Nails dug into the palm of his hand as he clenched his fist, to the point blood was about to gush. He should have given up. But he had never understood that. It had taken a long time, but he had finally grown to accept it.

This was plainly the case, but why, now, had she appeared again? As she had always been, with a carefree and cheerful attitude that told him that she did not know him?

Garfiel: “…”

In order to keep her from noticing, he had resigned himself to secretly observing her expressions and behaviors.

Nothing felt unnatural. It was strikingly clear that his mother treated him as a stranger, as if it were completely natural.

Was this her answer?

She had a new life. Unaware of Garfiel, she led her happy life. She had attained happiness like this, by driving away the promises that she had once made.

“I don’t care to know about your affairs”, was that his mother’s answer to—

Fred: “Motheeeeeeer.”

Sister: “Mom, I’m hungry.”

Garfiel had been silent as Mimi and Reala played around. Brother and sister joined them in the living room after going to their rooms to change.

The sister cast a stern look at Garfiel, and then immediately huddled close to her mother.

Sister: “Mom, tell the guests to go home, and then we can eat.”

Reala: “As an older sister, what are you saying? Gorgeous-san and Mimi took care of Fred when he nearly drowned. We are indebted to them.”

Sister: “About that, couldn’t it be that that Gorgeous person was the one who did it? So he could come to our house and take advantage of our generosity. Maybe he wants money.”

Reala: “Hey now, that’s going too far. But you’re right, we have to thank him for Fred… Should we give him money?”

Sister: “Mom?!”

The sister, who had realized that her words were about to become the reason for her family’s bankruptcy, flew into a panic. On the other hand, Reala, who failed to grasp the reason for her daughter’s rant, glanced around in confusion.

For Garfiel, that smiley interaction between parent and child made breathing harder than walking barefoot on thorns. Draining his tea in one gulp, Garfiel set his cup down with a clang.

Garfiel: “Since my amazin’ self doesn’t seem to be welcome here, we’ll be leavin’.”

Mimi: “Haauhh? Why~?”

Garfiel: “No particular reason.”

Although Garfiel wanted to leave, Mimi continued to resist. However, as if he had not heard her, Garfiel picked her up. As he stood to go, Reala looked distraught, while her daughter cast a smirk at him.

Well, Garfiel would respect her feelings—And, with that thought,

Fred: “Don’t go, Gorgeous Tiger…”

Seizing the hem of Garfiel’s pants, the little brother blocked his way. For a second, for reasons unknown to him, Garfiel hesitated to shake off his little hands. But,

Sister: “Fred, honestly, you’re…”

As the younger brother advocated for a suspicious criminal to stay, the older sister placed her hands on her waist in anger. Reala clapped her hands, capturing everyone’s attention before the sister jumped her brother.

Reala: “Everyone, look, it’s not good to not get along. You’re pushing our guests to leave, Fred seems to want them to stay, so don’t force them to do anything, onee-chan.”

Sister: “But, mom…”

Reala: “No buts. Gorgeous-san and Mimi, stay for a while, won’t you? I’d be delighted to share dinner with you, and tonight’s meal is my best dish.”

Fred: “Moooom, you call everything your best dish…”

Reala: “Mhm, shouldn’t that be obvious? Mom always tries her best on every dish for you.”

Everyone present wore a panicked expression towards Reala, who flexed her bicep. But Garfiel moreso than anyone else.

This harmonious atmosphere. It cut deeply into Garfiel’s heart.

Reala’s words cast upon him a unique sense of happiness and helplessness. Accepting her invitation would be the worst possible thing that Garfiel could do.

Garfiel: “Sorry ‘bout yer invitation, but a few of my companions are waitin’ for me. They’ll be worried if we’re late, so we should be headin’ out soon.”

Reala: “…”

Suppressing the pain in his chest, Garfiel prayed that his voice would not tremble.

At his answer, the sister’s face became stiff, and Reala frowned, her gaze cast down. And,

Reala: “I understand, there is no point in forcing you to stay if it bothers you. It’s like what they say, “Show your guests hospitality and sowaire.”“

Garfiel: “—Hk.”

That exchanged had been the one that had hurt Garfiel the most on this day. Losing to Reinhard in that duel, the initial impact of seeing Reala, looked so miniscule, so utterly trivial, compared to how he was feeling now.

Unconsciously, Garfiel placed a hand close to his chest, as if needing to confirm whether his body had been torn or not. And to that Garfiel’s state—

Mimi: “Garfiel, let’s go.”

Mimi, who had refused to leave until then, gently took Garfiel’s hand in hers and began leading him away. Facing her concern, Garfiel obeyed silently. So, with their hands on the handle of the living room door, ready to go outside,

???: “I’m home! Oh, do we have guests?”

On the other side of the door, appeared the figure of a gentleman sporting a magnificent beard.

He appeared to be a man wearing well-tailored clothing, and gave off an energetic atmosphere. From the tone of his voice, from his facial features, he seemed to be a man of accomplishments.

At that man’s appearance, the children scrambled to their feet with joy. Then, that man would be—

Dad: “Hmm… I haven’t seen this stranger’s face before.”

Fred: “Dad, this is Gorgeous Tiger.”

Sister: “He’s a suspicious person.”

Dad: “What?”

Faced with the sharply contrasting attitudes of his son and daughter, the father tilted his head in distress. He turned to Reala, who stood quietly in the living room.

Under the man’s loving gaze, Reala loosened her cheeks.

Garfiel had hit his limit.

Garfiel: “It ain’t a big deal, we were goin’ anyway.”

Leaving that sentence behind, Garfiel grabbed Mimi and hurriedly pushed his way of out the room, scrambling toward the front door as if running away.

Fred: “Gorgeous Tiger!”

From behind, a sad voice called to Garfiel. However, Garfiel had no response to that call.

Who was Gorgeous? What was Tiger? He was Garfiel, not Gorgeous

Tiger. Where was that golden tiger now? A tiger was a strong, powerful creature who could not be shaken by anything.

Where was the tiger now? A real tiger wouldn't be so affected by such things, would it?

Mimi: "Garf! My hand, it hurts!"

Garfiel: "—Hk."

Too focused on his thoughts, Garfiel did not notice that cry of pain.

He did not notice until Mimi had broken free of his vice grip, extracting her hand from his nails, which had been digging into her. Her small hand was now swollen and blue.

Garfiel: "S-Sorry… my amazin' self…"

Mimi: "Gar~f, you were weird at that house too. My hand really~ hurts."

Mimi mumbled quietly, and Garfiel smacked his forehead with his hand.

They fell into an awkward silence as the Watergate City's moist wind caressed their faces. The sun had fallen from the sky completely, the city shrouded by the light emitted by magic stones. The sunshine on the water's surface was replaced by light from the magical lamps, but he was in no mood to enjoy that scene's mysterious and quiet beauty.

???: "Hey, you two, over there!"

Someone approached Garfiel and Mimi with gasping breaths.

Looking up, the magic light revealed the man from before, who had shed his coat. Finally arriving in front of the two, he put his hands on his knees, panting violently.

Dad: "Ah, I finally caught up… This won't do… I used to be more energetic, but I'm completely out of shape now that I've gotten a desk job…"

Garfiel: “…Do ya need anythin’ from us?”

Garfiel indicated that he was not interested in the man’s words.

The existence of this man, although not to the degree of Reala’s children, also caused distress in Garfiel. His voice was full of harshness, but the man paid no mind to it, placing his hand on his head, displaying his embarrassment.

Dad: “No, I heard from my wife that you two were benefactors of my son. It’d be completely unjustifiable if I never displayed any gratitude.”

Garfiel: “…It’s no big deal, If ya talk so big like that, my amazin’ self’ll be embarrassed.”

Dad: “Everything involving my kids, no matter what, is incredibly important. Saving him from danger makes it even more important. Really, if you need anything at all… Ah, I’m really sorry. My name is Garek, Garek Thompson. Despite how I look, I work at Priestella’s City Hall, so if there’s anything I can do to help you…”

Garfiel: “Really, we’re…”

A man who had a way with words—Garfiel, who wished to leave as soon as possible, was suddenly at a loss for words when trying to get away from Garek. But if he were indeed Reala’s husband, if he really knew her, then—

Garfiel: “My amazin’ self’s got only one question… would it be okay for ya t’answer?”

Garek: “Yes, anything. No matter what, I’ll do my best to answer.”

Garek responded to Garfiel with a benevolent smile.

The same was true of Reala too, and their son Fred. This entire family was too kind for their own good. Only their daughter had any proper sense of suspicion.

With that in mind, Garfiel was very cautious in his choice of words.

Garfiel: “Yer wife, Reala… What’s her real name?”

Garek: “…”

As soon as Garfiel posed his question, the atmosphere shifted. The smile faded from Garek’s face. He pondered Garfiel’s question silently for a few moments, before replying in a level voice.

Garek: “What do you mean?”

Garfiel: “I mean it literally. It’s like “No matter what, Reid plays a straight game”, right? Playin’ with words ain’t my style. Tell me, yer wife, is her name Reshia instead of Reala?”

Garek: “—Guh.”

Garek’s expression had been unsettled by Garfiel’s straight-to-the-point statement. Garek took a moment to swallow before his voice escaped his mouth.

Garek: “You… Do you know anything about my wife?”

Garfiel: “My amazin’ self also wants to know that.”

Garek: “…”

Garfiel responded sincerely to Garek’s trembling voice.

At those words, Garek fell into silence, as if he were thinking. Waiting for his reply, Garfiel took Mimi’s good hand into his own.

Glancing up at him, she smiled as she usually did.

Garek: “…It seems that I should tell you the truth.”

As Garfiel looked sideways at Mimi’s smile, Garek spoke with a sigh.

His voice was weighed with fatigue and powerlessness. Garfiel frowned, waiting for his next sentence. Then,

Garek: “My wife, Reala… has no memories from before out meeting, fifteen years ago.”

2

Garek had met Reala before becoming an influential person in the city of Priestella, back when he was merely a merchant rooted in Priestella.

On that day, on his way back from negotiations that had taken place far from the city, Garek, who had been driving a dragon carriage, had found his path blocked by a landslide. The business deal had broken down, and Garek could not stand the frustration of having to face even more misfortune while on the road, as he struggled to repay a loan.

—Then, in that tragic landslide, he found a woman buried alive.

It had been a miracle. There was no other explanation.

Refusing to make a detour, Garek had desperately wondered if he could still follow his original route. Around that time, the heavy rain finally stopped, and Garek's full field of vision returned.

Garek had come across the landslide not long after it happened, meaning that the woman had been buried for a fairly short time.

As a result of the various miracles overlapping, Garek had found and rescued the woman, who was still breathing.

She had been covered in mud, and he had found no luggage near her. Taking the unconscious woman to his dragon carriage, Garek immediately rushed to a nearby town, where she was taken to a clinic, and awaited her rehabilitation.

Garek: "At the time, her condition was incredibly precarious. She had a high fever, and had various injuries and bone fractures from the landslide. Her heart even stopped at one point during treatment."

As the unlikely situation carried on, both the people at the clinic and Garek struggled to help her, hoping for her recovery. Why had Garek wanted so desperately to save her? There had indeed been a reason which explained his actions, yet it was unknown to him.

He was grateful to everyone's efforts, from the bottom of his heart.

Garek: "Hard work paid off and she survived. Although she was still heavily wounded, I remember being really relieved when it became clear her life was no longer threatened. She woke up shortly after. It took a week… I stayed in the city, waiting for her to wake up."

The failure of negotiations had made the future of Garek's company grim.

In that situation, wasting time equated wasting money. Garek did not understand why he had been restraining himself from his travels. But something unknown kept Garek rooted there.

Then, after a week, the woman woke up.

After her awakening, the people rejoiced. She spoke to the crowd gathered around her with a trembling, faint voice.

Garek: ""Who am I?", were her first words."

The woman had forgotten her name. No, not just her name. She had forgotten everything.

Who was she, where did she come from, and what was she trying to do? What had happened before that cliff had collapsed?

Everyone was at a loss regarding her treatment, as she could not remember her family members. All she had were the clothes she was wearing during the accident. Sewn on the fabric were the only discernible letters of her name, or perhaps even an acronym. "Re".

Garek: "Influenced by the name of a blossoming flower, I decided to call her Reala. Then, I planned to take care of her until her wounds had fully healed."

Her wounds healed little by little, and, soon enough, she was discharged from the clinic.

Reala, even having nowhere to go, remained a cheerful woman. She treated that terrible accident as if it had never happened, and she had the power to make all those she interacted with smile.

In her situation, it would be impossible not to feel uneasy. The loss of one's own memories was equivalent to losing one's own existence. But she still carried on smiling, because she felt it necessary to do so.

Or maybe she was concerned for the people around her.

But the most important reason was that she did not see herself as unfortunate.

Garek: "The nervousness from confessing to her, asking her to come with me, is still fresh in my memory. The time between my question and her reply is probably the most anxious I've ever been in my life. Even more so than when I proposed marriage to her."

So, accepting Garek's proposal, Reala went with him to Priestella.

The reason why he had refused to abandon her, the reason why he had waited so long for her to wake up, was incredibly simple.

At that moment, when he dragged her from that landslide, carried her to his dragon carriage, and cleaned the mud off her face, Garek fell in love with her instantly.

Garek: "My business, which had been unlucky until I took in Reala, improved quickly. The people around me said that it was all thanks to my talent. Ridiculous, it was all thanks to Reala. She brought me good luck, she blessed me, so now I can be a merchant like this, a city manager, and a father."

Garfiel: "…"

Garek: "I love my wife, and our children are both very cute. I used to care about her past, but, at this moment, no matter who she was before, I consider my wife my most important person."

Garek finished speaking about everything, from their first encounter to the present, and concluded thus with embarrassment.

Garfiel, who had been silent from beginning to end, listening intently, looked up at the sky.

In the darkness, stars were scattered everywhere. The glorious full moon and the glitter of the stars were probably looking down on his current thoughts.

Garek: “I am very sorry to ask this of you, but I cannot help but do so.”

Garfiel: “…”

Garek: “What is the relationship between you… and my wife, Reala?”

This—how cruel was this question.

His line of sight fell from the sky to Garek in front of him.

Garek’s gentle eyes held firm determination as he gazed at Garfiel. He would not be so insensitive as to misunderstand what Garfiel would say, or what emotions he held.

And so Garfiel knew exactly which answer would be correct.

Garfiel: “…”

Opening and closing his mouth.

Breathing, exhaling, inhaling, breathing repeatedly.

Heartbeat, fast. Eyes, dazed. A burst of pain in his head, the need to retch.

The swirl of mixed emotions tightened his chest, already on the verge of collapse.

—Mimi gripped his hand tightly.

Garfiel: “My amazin’ self, has…”

Garek: “…”

Garfiel: “Nothin’… to do with yer wife.”

There. He had said it, said it out loud.

With that sentence, the vortex swirling in Garfiel's heart swiftly vanished.

He was left with only a suffocating sense of loss. Garek, who stood in front of him, lowered his head as if he had made a mistake, not wanting to look Garfiel in the face, speaking with a trembling voice.

Garek: "I feel so sorry…"

With a look of unnatural pain, he bowed. However, Garfiel did not want to see Garek's reaction.

Enough. He had enough already, stop. He wanted to leave, wanted to stop being hurt.

What had gone wrong? Whose fault was it? Was it his own fault, or was it Garek's fault? Who should he blame? Who should he crush, who should he eat, who should he send flying?

What could he do, to end the pain in his heart, to make it vanish, disappear to parts unknown?

???: "Honey…! This is great, Gorgeous-san and Mimi are still here."

Garfiel: "—?!"

Those words echoed with immense volume. Grief and turmoil raised the noise, making it so intense it could kill.

To Garfiel, on this day, its appearance was immensely scarier than a knife.

Garek: "Reala, why…"

Reala: "You left in such a hurry, but I didn't want you to go home empty-handed, so…"

While Garek was surprised by his wife's appearance, Reala winked, walking by him.

Then, she approached the stunned, stiff Garfiel, stretching out her hand.

Reala: “These are some sweets soirée that I made. Although it’s not much of a sign of gratitude, I’m still proud of it. So I hope you’ll accept it.”

Garfiel: “…Ah.”

Her smile held not a trace of malice. Stubbornly, Garfiel refused to speak. His exchange with Garek had opened old wounds, preventing him from being able to speak to Reala.

Anyone able to read the mood would understand the meaning of his silence. And yet,

Mimi: “Oh! A dessert, that’s so much fun! Amazing, I’ll share it with the lady!”

Obviously, Mimi smiled at the bag of sweets presented by Reala, completely neglecting to notice the atmosphere. Garek looked shocked, and Garfiel was speechless. But. Only Reala laughed in joy at Mimi’s reaction.

Reala: “I’m so glad you like it, and please go share it with the one you call lady.”

Mimi: “Okay, onderstood! Unter… understood~!”

After saluting with the hand that was not being held by Garfiel, a hand still displaying a blueish hue, Mimi put that container in her pocket and clapped Garfiel on the back.

She had applied enough power that he couldn’t help but enter a coughing fit, and Mimi smiled.

Mimi: “Well, this time, we’re really leaving! Gorgeous Tiger and Gorgeous Mimi will see you later~!”

Reala: “Alright, safe travels. Take care not to fall in the water, Gorgeous-san.”

Mimi took Garfiel’s hand, and Reala waved as they left.

Smiling, Mimi turned back and waved, only for Reala to wave even more vigorously. Only the two men had been left with pained expressions after this smiling farewell.

Garfiel: “…”

Like this, Garfiel was led along the path to the side of the waterway by Mimi, his arm being pulled. Mimi did not speak to Garfiel, walking until Reala had long vanished from view.

Garfiel: “Hey, midget…”

Mimi: “Over here~!”

Garfiel: “—?!”

Garfiel wanted to stop Mimi, but was suddenly interrupted.

Mimi, still holding Garfiel’s hand, rapidly leapt onto a three-story building stone, ascending with the use of footholds. Garfiel was pulled along, of course, forced to take the same pace as her. With a few leaps, the two reached the top of the building.

Mimi: “Hmm! Feels so good~!”

Garfiel: “So good, my ass! What were ya pullin’, just now…”

As Mimi bathed in the breeze, Garfiel turned around to confirm her intention.

However, he saw that Mimi was staring at him, her face devoid of a smile. He saw himself reflected in her round eyes, and Garfiel did not understand the unease brewing in his heart.

Faced with Garfiel’s silence, Mimi’s expression suddenly broke.

Mimi: “Garf, do you want to cry?”

Garfiel: “Huh? What’re ya sayin’, why would my amazin’ self cry?”

Mimi: “I know that Garf is strong, but you shouldn’t put on that strong act. Reala, she’s Garf’s mother, right~?”

Garfiel: “…”

At Mimi's unexpected question, Garfiel held his breath.

She had accurately grasped the flow of the things. If she did indeed know of Garfiel's circumstances, then that conclusion would be easy to make. However, Mimi knew nothing about Garfiel's family. Her ability to discern the truth was really rather impressive.

The fact she had brought up that horrifying topic in such a straightforward manner shook Garfiel, and he hesitated.

Garfiel: "Why… would ya… think that…?"

Mimi: "Garf and Reala smell supeeeer similar, and both of Reala's children also smelled a bit like Garf. That's why~."

Her assumption was not based on logical reasoning, but on something innate, and thus she could see the truth clearly. If Mimi had inferred her conclusion from Garfiel's words, he could have made attempts to hide his past. But, like this, Garfiel was unable to deny it.

His legs giving out, Garfiel looked up at the sky, in a daze.

Both the stars and moon were unchanged, and just as before, they were looking down at Garfiel.

Mimi: "So, is that right? Is Reala Garf's mother?"

Garfiel: "…My amazin' self doesn't know. Is that woman still my amazin' self's mother?"

At Mimi's words, Garfiel covered his face with his hand.

He did not know. That truly, unmistakably was the feeling swirling in Garfiel's heart, right now.

Reala was unmistakably Reshia. Just as Garek had said, and as her actions up until this point had demonstrated, Reala had completely forgotten that she was Reshia.

Forgetting everything, Reshia had found a new start as Reala, raising her children, living happily.

Garfiel: “Ah, come to think of it, that’d make those two kids my amazin’ self’s lil’ brother ‘n sister…”

Although he had only realized it just now, those siblings, their father a different person from his own, were related to him the same way he was related to Frederica. In other words, those siblings were his own lovely younger siblings. It had been a relationship he had longed for ever since his childhood, being the youngest between himself and Frederica.

—Wouldn’t it be nice if he could enjoy that relationship without the circumstances that surrounded it?

Garfiel: “Even if my amazin’ self tells her ‘bout my heritage, nothin’d change…”

Reala had forgotten her time as Reshia.

Even if Garfiel spilled out everything he knew, the fifteen years she had spent as Reala would still remain unchanged, and the fifteen-or-so years she had spent as Reshia would remain lost.

Only, Reala would then be saddled with the burden of fifteen years of guilt, feeling like she had lost her life as Reshia. That was unnecessary. Garek would only be able to witness his wife’s depression, and their children would only watch their mother’s suffering, while being completely unaware of its cause.

Doing so would only be for Garfiel’s own sake.

Garfiel would be the only one gaining from having Reala accept that she used to be Reshia. Neither Frederica nor Ryuzu knew of Reshia’s survival. If Garfiel said nothing, the two of them would never know.

The members of Reala’s family would not know of her past without Garfiel’s testimony. If they learned of it, those happy times would most likely be lost rather than preserved.

All it would take for all of this to be successfully resolved, was to have Garfiel hide everything, hide all of his feelings accumulating in his chest, and let go.

Garfiel: “Why is my amazin’ self…”

Could he not even find the courage to throw it away, to forget it, to bury it deep within himself?

Tiger… Tiger, where did you go? Show me the right path.

Only he could bear everything, take on everything alone, and still have the strength to stand up.

Tell me, tiger… tiger. A true tiger was the strongest existence, second to none.

Garfiel: “…”

Holding his head, biting down on his molars, lamenting the feelings swirling back and forth mixing together, it was then Garfiel noticed.

Mimi: “It’s okay…”

In the next moment, he noticed that his head was being gently stroked, hugged by a small bosom.

Garfiel: “…”

Still collapsed on the ground, Garfiel was grabbed by Mimi from behind in a hug.

Resting her chin on his head, her small palm gently stroked Garfiel’s head. That tender touch on his back, moving back and forth, gradually eased the pain and agitation of his head.

Garfiel: “What, what’re ya doin’, this is…”

Mimi: “Hmm, if Garf needs to cryyy, I think there’s a specific place where boys are allowed to cry! Although I forgot where, I remember the lady telling me about it~!”

For a moment, she seemed to be giving an answer, but her train of thought drifted away.

In order to keep his heart from shaking, in order to keep his voice from trembling, Garfiel chose his words carefully.

Like this, holding Garfiel, Mimi giggled.

Mimi: “Well, although I’ve forgotten, is it the feeling of a woman’s chest? Is it like that? That’s it! It’s alright for a man to cry on the chest of a woman he’s interested in!”

Garfiel: “…Who’d be interested in a midget like ya.”

The one Garfiel was interested in was a woman who was never kind when he wanted her to be, but when he least expected, after which she would beat him with her fists. She was a woman who was incredibly difficult to deal with.

The girl in front of him did not resemble her at all. However, Mimi was still smiling despite Garfiel’s answer.

Mimi: “That’s fine! Even if Garfiel’s not in love with Mimi, Mimi already is! Hey, a girl who likes Garf! So! Mimi’s chest~! It’s okay to cry there~!”

Garfiel: “—Ah.”

What a foolish notion. What was this? Some kind of language game? It was only a child’s excuse, loaded with nothing but assertiveness.

There was obviously nothing, so stop kidding around.

Tiger… Tiger, where did you go?

Right now, come back to my heart. Howl your deep, ferocious roar, beat this slouched back, force me to wake up, do something to my feelings.

Otherwise, otherwise… Otherwise, it will be too late.

Garfiel: “Mother…”

Enough, enough, enough! Stop talking. Don’t make such a weak voice. Don’t cry with such a weak voice.

He was a tiger, a tiger. The most powerful, the strongest, studier than anyone. The Strongest of Shields. However,

Garfiel: “Mother… mama… mama…!!”

Mimi: “Good boy.”

Garfiel: “Why! Why did ya forget me?! I’ve met ya after all this time! Can’t my amazin’ self… even call ya mom?!”

Mimi: “It’s alright, Garfiel’s a good boy, a good boy.”

Garfiel: “Mama… mama… mama…!”

Tiger… Tiger, where did you go?

What do I look like now? Stars, moon, sky, tell me.

What do I look like now?

If I can’t be a roaring tiger, then what do I look like right now—?!

Chapter 31:
The Cost of a Mistake

1

Mimi: “I got it~!”

Garfiel: “Noisy, stop sayin’ that!”

The next morning, Garfiel, looking to be in a rather poor state, walked the streets with Mimi.

Giggling, Mimi touched the chest of her robe, which was stained with Garfiel’s tears and saliva. The stench was such that it caused physical pain to Garfiel’s nose. To Mimi, who had the same sharp sense of smell, that stench must have been unbearable, but upon hearing Garfiel’s advice to wash it, she’d replied—

Mimi: “Mmm, it’s fine! After returning to the hotel, I can get a change of clothes~. The lady’ll be really mad that I didn’t go back last night. Oh, and Hetaro and Tivey too~!”

Garfiel: “…My bad.”

Mimi: “Mimi isn’t worried about it~! Mimi will only say that Garf’s a very good boy when he’s sobbing and crying!”

Mimi replied with an innocent smile to Garfiel’s weak apology.

On the previous night, Garfiel had both reunited and shared a second farewell with his mother. After being branded by a series of wounds, he had shamefully ended up crying into Mimi’s chest on a rooftop. And, even more embarrassingly, the sobbing had sapped his strength so much that he had ended up falling asleep.

The next morning, while he was still sleeping on Mimi’s lap, he was woken up by a loud voice that could be heard all over the city.

Garfiel attempted to maintain his composure, but it was easily noticeable that he was embarrassed around Mimi, who in turn kept being her normal self.

Having been unable to come up with an excuse, he was chewed out by the owner of the building on top of which he had spent the night, and they went on their way home.

Mimi: “Do you feel better?”

Garfiel: “It’s, you could say, uh… Somethin’ like that.”

Mimi: “It’s like that, right?”

Garfiel: “…Yeah, like that.”

Unable to voice his true gratitude, Garfiel frowned. However, Mimi’s attitude did not change because of his lack of words.

He recalled last night, when Mimi had blurted out that she was interested in him.

Involuntarily, his eyes followed Mimi’s figure. Before, he had thought that Mimi was just tagging along with him, feeling a sense of kinship due to their shared non-human heritage. But she’d unexpectedly been following him with romantic intent.

And, even having given her confession, she acted the same as she always had.

Even though he’d done the same with Ram, as soon as the tables were flipped, he felt thrown off. Now as the recipient of those feelings, Garfiel caught a glimpse of yet another shameful weakness.

Mimi: “Well, what should we do this morning? Go to your mother and see her?”

His thoughts having been sidetracked, Garfiel jumped in surprise, both at the suddenness of Mimi’s words and their actual content.

Garfiel: “Wait, what? Why’d we go see her?”

Mimi: “Hmm? Because Reala is Garf’s mother, right? So you should talk properly, right?”

Garfiel: “This midget really can’t read between the lines…”

Mimi seemed to be unaware of the subtleties of their relationship, despite having spotted the most important part of their relationship with pure instinct.

He was put in a difficult position, unable to answer questions about whether they were family or not. Garfiel immediately realized that it was useless to try to explain, and then gave up. And he realized that that was yet another problem.

Garfiel: “‘Tis fine… there’s no need… to let her know that my amazin’ self’s her son.”

Mimi: “Is that really okay?”

Garfiel: “Yeah… Ah, gotta think about whether I should tell sis…”

Frederica was clever. After the initial shock and confusion passed, she would certainly come to the same conclusion as Garfiel, even faster than he had.

And even if she didn’t reach the same conclusion as he did, she still had the right to know of their mother’s survival. But would it be right to have her experience the same suffering as he did?

Garfiel: “There’s still time before makin’ a decision.”

Mimi: “That’s right∼. That’s really hard∼, Mimi∼ doesn’t know her mom either, so Mimi gets it∼.”

Garfiel: “Stuff ‘bout moms… ya understand?”

His ears trembling at Mimi’s unexpected statement, Garfiel replied back with a question. Mimi only nodded with a relaxed attitude, prefacing with “Yep∼”.

Mimi: “Mimi, Hetaro, and Tivey never knew mom and dad. They probably thought “triplets, raising a super big family’s too hard”, so they left us somewhere∼. Then, we were picked up by the Captain, so he’s family, and lady’s family too!”

Garfiel: "—So… ya really do have a big family."

Without knowing the reason, he suddenly felt that the atmosphere had relaxed as he stroked Mimi's head. At that moment,

Mimi: "—Waah!"

Mimi quickly brushed aside his hand and leapt away.

Garfiel stared eyes wide open at her reddened face, as she turned her back to him, emitting a "Uh, uhh" while rubbing her head.

Mimi: "For some reason, ever since yesterday, getting too close to Garf feels weird."

Garfiel: "Right, sorry… Do ya want my amazin' self to leave?"

Mimi: "I don't want that either, something not too close and not too far feels the best~."

She scrambled next to him with small steps, stopping in a place outside of his reach.

Garfiel frowned, completely puzzled, as Mimi gave her usual smile. Just now, his own face seemed to tinge with a faint redness.

Mimi: "Hey, oh oh, sowarie! There's the sowarie! Let's eat the sowarie!"

Garfiel: "Y-Yeah, sure…"

As if in a hurry to change the topic, Mimi withdrew the candy bag from her pocket. That was what Reala had given Mimi last night, before they'd parted ways.

Momentarily, a pain like numbness flowed through his chest as Mimi put candy on his open palm. He snorted at the aroma wafting gently towards his nose. That "sowarie" was a baked sweet, made by baking bread dough with sweet condiments in it, stuffed with cream and red bean paste inside.

There were two large, round sowaries in the box, one each for Mimi and Garfiel, which would serve as their breakfast.

Mimi: “Yay! It’s sweet~! Good! Delicious, super delicious~!”

Garfiel: “Ah, it’s delicious!”

Garfiel voiced his agreement to Mimi’s loud applause.

It was slightly sweet, but not overwhelmingly sugary, and the dough was fluffy and soft. If consumed shortly after being baked, it would’ve been even more delicious. Or was that his mother’s specialty?

In that case, Garfiel could have had more chances to taste it.

Mimi: “Garf~?”

Garfiel: “This really isn’t like my amazin’ self, yeah?”

At Mimi’s concern, Garfiel shoved those wishful thoughts away and walked away. Turning back his back to the place where his mother lived, he returned his thoughts to his friends, who should be waiting for him. Like Mimi, Garfiel had stayed out without permission.

Because of that, he would certainly be severely scolded—

???: “—Hello, hello? Is this okay? Can everyone hear? Meat creatures who can hear, good for you! Worthless meat who can’t, go fester and die, that’d be a huge help for me. Gahahahaha—”

Garfiel: “Ah?”

Mimi: “Hmm~?”

Just having taken a short step forward, a voice suddenly assaulted Garfiel’s and Mimi’s eardrums. The two glanced at each other and looked up to the sky at the same time.

The voice seemed to have boomed from the heavens.

Garfiel: “That voice sounds like…”

???: “Well, well, well, was there any idiot who died from shock right now? If not, well, it doesn’t really matter, but if there’s anyone brave enough to dare to ignore this lovely lady, then, my mood will be ruined!”

Ignoring Garfiel’s emotions, the voice kept speaking at that annoying volume.

The other people walking on that matinal cityscape all looked up at the sky, dumbfounded like Garfiel. It felt like a shockingly loud voice—but that conclusion would be wrong.

Garfiel, possessing a sense of hearing different from a regular human’s, could tell that this voice was not a loud one coming from one source. Rather, it permeated the entire city, spreading the way an echo would.

However, knowing that would not yield any answers to his questions. All he knew was that—

???: “You boring creatures do nothing but ruin my mood. There’s no value here at all—You’re all just garbagegarbagegarbage! If all you’re thinking of doing is having that disgusting breath, thinking those disgusting thoughts, and drooling your way through life, it’d be much better if you just plunged your head into a ditch and drowned! Please go die soon, please, I beg you! Gahahaha!”

—The owner of this voice had the vilest of souls.

Garfiel: “What kind of joke’s this? Stop fuckin’ around!”

Mimi: “Garf… I keep feeling like this is super, super unpleasant…”

As Garfiel cursed in irritation, Mimi showed an anxious expression. Faced with her attitude, Garfiel traced the scar on his forehead, clicking his fangs.

That expression did not suit her. That expression, he did not want to see it from her.

???: “Well, well, then, since the big, dull, rotten meat creatures can’t seem to figure it out, I’ll explain it. I have control of the radio!

Meaning, meaning, meaning—!”

Garfiel: “Get on with it, what’s the meanin’?”

???: “That—I, no, WE have control of this City Hall, right? Ah, by the way, do you know those control towers, at the edge of the city? Those are also ours now!”

Garfiel: “Control tower… Are those the ones Ottobro talked about?”

Regardless of whether the owner of that voice was telling the truth, Garfiel felt that threat, holding his breath.

Before and after arriving at the city, he had heard about Priestella’s structure from Otto. As the Watergate City, Priestella had water running all around it, and once had a role as a trap meant for a very powerful fiend, and that function was still operable.

And the control towers located north, south, east and west of the city allowed control of the operation of the waterway—If those were now in control of this host, who possessed the most vile character possible, it meant that the population of the entire city had been taken hostage.

Reaching the same conclusion as Garfiel, panic and anxiety began to spread though the civilians. Everyone screamed in dread, and in the city echoed loud, toxic, joyful laughter.

???: “Kahahahaha—! By now! At this moment! Only now are you realizing that you’re all going to be decimated! It’s shocking how brainless you all are! It’s too much for me! Ah, garbagegarbagegarbage! Gahahaha—”

Garfiel: “…”

???: “Oh, this won’t do, I’m sorry. If I go on any longer without giving my name, you’re all going to try running away from reality, right? Why don’t you allow this gentle and benevolent lady teach you what’s real in a very simple way?”

In a city of panic, Garfiel held Mimi’s hand tightly, then listened carefully to what the voice was saying.

???: “I am a Sin Archbishop of the Witch Cult, representing Lust—”

Garfiel: “Witch Cult—!”

Capella: “Capella Emerada Lugunica-sama! Gahahaha! Respect me! Worship me! Then cry and beg and die tragically like worms! You rotten slabs of meat! Kahahahaha—!”

2

Upon hearing the broadcast, Garfiel was forced to make a choice.

Although the broadcast of the self-proclaimed Witch Cultist had induced panic, the actions of the citizens of Priestella were very orderly. Even in that turmoil, they had kept emergency procedures in mind and fled into the nearest shelter.

People passing by had attempted to guide Garfiel and Mimi into a shelter. However, they had refused to take their lead and instead chose to go elsewhere immediately.

However, that had led Garfiel to make yet another choice.

And the result of that choice—

Reala: “Ah, Gorgeous-san!”

Garfiel: “…”

In the shelter he had arrived at, Reala had run towards Garfiel upon seeing him, relieved to find an acquaintance.

Garfiel endured the pain in his heart, and managed to turn his face to her.

—That was the result of his choice.

From the very moment Garfiel had refused to be led to a nearby shelter, he was forced into a decision. He had to opt between going back to where he should be, alongside Emilia and Subaru, or going out of his way to make sure that his mother was safe, even after having decided to part with her for good.

Rationally, Garfiel knew he should have immediately returned to Emilia and the others. Even so, he had told himself that since this shelter was relatively near where he was right after hearing the broadcast, he could afford to check on her safety.

Reala: “I’m glad that Mimi-san is fine as well. That broadcast had me worried.”

Mimi: “Ah, nothing’s happened to us~! The sowarie was delicious, thanks for the feast!”

Reala: “Ah, that’s good, I’m glad it was to your taste.”

And Mimi had not objected to any of Garfiel’s choices, and followed along.

Of course, she had wanted to return to Anastasia and her younger brothers. To her, Reala was a stranger, and she had no real obligation to go and check on her safety.

Garfiel: “…”

While listening to his own excuse, Garfiel, having finally confirmed Reala’s safety, was free to leave. He needed to return to Emilia’s side immediately, and come up with a plan.

If the name of the Witch Cult were to appear, Garfiel would protect Emilia. That was the manly promise he had made with Subaru, one which he would absolutely never break.

Even if he could not protect himself as a tiger, he could never forget that he was a man.

Garfiel: “It looks like everythin’s good, so my amazin’ self will…”

Reala: “Wait… Gorgeous-san, have you…”

As Garfiel prepared to leave, Reala’s timid murmurs caught his ears. Upon seeing Garfiel frown at this unusual attitude, she quietly continued.

Reala: “Have you seen my children yet…? They left early this morning… and they're not in this shelter…"

Garfiel: "—?!"

Hurriedly looking up, Garfiel scanned his surroundings. However, the figures he sought were nowhere in sight. The visages of his siblings were not in this place.

Reala: "Even my husband… No, nevermind, I said something superfluous…"

Garfiel: "What's up? My amazin' self'll be bothered if ya try to hide anythin' now."

Reala: "—The broadcast came from the City Hall. My husband should be going to his job at the City Hall… So, if something happened there…"

Garfiel: "…"

The City Hall was a tall building at the center of Priestella.

During the broadcast, the Sin Archbishop had announced that they had seized the City Hall, a place that supposedly maintained the operation of the city. Most likely, Garek was there.

Garfiel: "Haaa… haa…"

Garfiel's heart quickened, and he felt like he was going to collapse from how strongly it pounded.

Garek, who was at the most dangerous place, and his missing brother and sister. Confirming Reala's safety had led him to learn that her family was in danger.

Garfiel: "Captain, Emilia-sama…"

Their faces, as well as Otto's and Beatrice's, flashed through Garfiel's mind. He must return to those people and become their strength.

But, as if tailgating that idea, the faces of his siblings and Garek also flashed through his mind.

Reala: “I’m sorry to have disturbed you, Gorgeous-san. Please forget what I said.”

Garfiel: “…”

Reala: “Just now, I was a little bit too frightened. My children and my husband are well-aware of this city’s emergency procedures.”

Reala showed a strong smile, but her hands were clasped, as if in trembling prayer.

There was no doubt that her gesture was reluctant, and she was only desperately putting on an act to keep Garfiel from worrying.

Garfiel: “…”

Silence, silence, silence.

In silence, gritting his teeth, Garfiel’s mind blazed. Mimi faced him, also silent, waiting for his decision. In silence, she only held his hand.

Garfiel: “…Don’t worry, leave yer children and husband to us.”

Reala: “—Gorgeous-san?!”

That unexpected answer left Reala speechless with surprise. With conviction, Garfiel nodded, then looking down at Mimi.

Garfiel: “It’s my issue from now on, so ya should go back.”

Mimi: “Hiiiiiiiii-ya!”

Garfiel: “Owww!”

At being told to return, Mimi brought her foot down on Garfiel’s, who cried out loudly in pain. Mimi took the moment to stand tall.

Mimi: “Garf said something so cool, so how could Mimi not match him~? I’m definitely going with you~!”

Garfiel: “Bast… No, it’s fine. Sorry.”

Mimi: “You should be offering your grititude!”

Garfiel: “—Thanks.”

Mimi: “You’re welcome!”

Mimi giggled sweetly, and Garfiel began laughing as well, feeling like he’d been saved.

Then, turning back to the stunned Reala, Garfiel spoke.

Garfiel: “My amazin’s self’s goin’ to look for yer family, so stay here with everyone else, and wait for us.”

Reala: “But… why would you do so much for us?”

Garfiel: “…”

Why was he doing this?

Reala’s wavering gaze questioned Garfiel as to his true intentions.

And Garfiel grinned at her, showing his teeth.

Garfiel: “Because my amazin’ self’s a golden tiger! Gorgeous! Tiger!”

Mimi: “Then Mimi, is also Gorgeous Mimi~!”

Shouting their stupid lines, their levity shocked the people gathered in the shelter. Garfiel and Mimi put on a pose much to Reala’s shock, and then, with a valiant spin, the two rushed out from the bunker.

Mimi: “Garfiel, what do we do?”

Garfiel: “Use the smell to track’em. Those two and Garek, ya still remember their smell clearly, right?”

The problem was that the city was very large, and water flowed everywhere.

The environmental conditions were not optimal to accurately find their scents. In a city this populated, a powerful sense of smell could only do so much. Nevertheless, the olfactory sense of the two demi-humans would be able to yield some results.

First, they returned to Reala's house, following her scent. Getting a whiff of them there, they would look for his siblings by following their scent.

Meanwhile, the evacuation of the city's citizens had proceeded smoothly. The city, unpleasantly enough, appeared to be a ghost city. Finding instances of looting was to be expected in situations like this, but the absence of that kind of immoral behavior was very likely due to the reputation of the Witch Cult.

Mimi: "Hmm, is it this one? Gaaarf, I smell them!"

Garfiel: "…Right, we're headin' towards this smell."

Garfiel also picked up the scent Mimi did, and tracked where the siblings had gone. Those two seemed to have traced yesterday's route, starting at their house at Third Street, and moved in the direction of the First Street.

And upon thinking of First Street as their destination, a thought flashed through Garfiel's mind.

Garfiel: "Those two went to the park to see that Songstress…"

On the previous day, the boy had said that he'd left too late and failed his objective. Having learned his lesson, he had left early this morning, determined not to miss the music of the Songstress again.

This time, his sister must have accompanied him.

Garfiel: "In that case, if we go to First Street…"

If they went there, then they could hurry and join Subaru and the others.

Garfiel brightened slightly, thinking that the situation had turned in his favor in a surprise twist—And then he smelled it.

Garfiel: “…”

Mimi: “Is this their father…?”

Mimi noticed the same thing Garfiel had, simultaneously.

A scent that split from the siblings, mid-way towards the First Street. The scent of Garek, who had headed in a different direction —to the City Hall in the middle of the city.

Again, the time to make a decision descended on Garfiel.

If he went straight to the First Street, he would probably find the siblings. If they had arrived in time for the Songstress’s performance, they would certainly have found safety.

But, what about the City Hall?

As time passed, the people in the City Hall, where the Witch Cult had already made their attack, were in increasingly greater danger. Garek was in a place where, at any second, the likelihood of his death increased.

Mimi: “Garf… what do we do?”

Garfiel: “…”

Garfiel was once again forced to choose.

He could choose to confirm the survival of the siblings, and then reunite with Subaru. In that case, he would be abandoning Garek, in the City Hall.

How could Garfiel’s relationship to Garek be described?

Unlike Reala, or Reshia, and the children she had given birth to, there was no direct relationship between Garfiel and Garek. If blood connection were used as a criteria for rescue, Garfiel had no obligation to rescue Garek.

However, what would become of Reala, if she lost him?

She would spend years mourning with her children, a possibility borne because Garfiel had forsaken the City Hall here. That family would shed endless tears.

Garfiel: “…The City Hall’s where that Sin Archbishop’s at, right?”

Mimi: “Yep~!”

Garfiel: “Those control towers are very dangerous, but if we can just get that Archbishop and kill her, then…”

Mimi: “Everyone will be saved~? Awesome~! Too awesome~!”

Bouncing on the spot, Mimi applauded Garfiel’s opinion. However, she immediately stopped jumping on the spot,

Mimi: “Although, it’s not a big problem, but… I feel kind of oneasy…”

Garfiel: “Uneasy?”

Mimi: “It’s very dangerous. That kinda feeling. It’s not clear, but it’s that feeling.”

What she meant was that she had no basis for feeling those nasty sensations.

Garfiel felt thrown off by her timid attitude, at a time when the stakes were high.

Up until then, Mimi had constantly supported him from behind, agreeing to his every judgement. And he thought that, once again, she would give her backing.

Garfiel: “How shameless… Expectin’ others to just do nothin’ but support me.”

Mimi: “Garfiel, what can I do?”

Garfiel: “It’d be dumb to not pay attention to yer unease, and the Captain ‘n the others are gonna gimme hell for that, but…”

It would be shameful for the strongest of the Emilia Camp to turn tail and run away in fear because of that. And, no matter how much he struggled, in order to save the city, they would need to attack the City Hall eventually.

Garfiel: “First of all, we gotta confirm the situation of the City Hall. Like if there’s someone guardin’ the place. And then we’re gonna rip off that Archbishop’s neck, that’s what.”

Mimi: “You mean scooting? Hmm… Hmm! Okay, we’re going scuuting~!”

Although Mimi was still a bit reluctant, she agreed with Garfiel’s safety measure.

Seeing her draw her beloved wand from her robe, Garfiel also drew his twin shields from his waist and attached them to his wrists. As his arms were covered in silver armor, he declared himself ready.

Garfiel: “Let’s go.”

Mimi: “Alright~!”

With that response to Garfiel’s brief words, the two headed toward the City Hall.

According to information from Subaru, Sloth of the Witch Cult had had several minions fighting alongside him. Although they could not match up to Garfiel himself, the Witch Cultists that were experienced in combat were capable of posing a threat, especially in sufficient numbers.

On the road, alert of any guards who may have been assigned there, the two traveled cautiously and carefully towards the City Hall.

Garfiel: “This is… odd, what’s goin’ on?”

Far from an overwhelming number of Cultists, they found no one standing guard.

Maybe they had missed them—No, they would not be able to cheat Garfiel and Mimi’s noses. In that case, Garfiel: “It’s like they’re thinkin’ guards ain’t necessary!”

Mimi: “…”

As he recalled the voice from the broadcast, Garfiel’s anger at the Sin Archbishop peaked.

They had never thought that anyone would attack them. Perhaps they were assuming that their control of the control towers was absolute, and that their victory had already been achieved.

The sheer arrogance. He was going to tear them apart with his claws and crunch them with his fangs.

Mimi: “Hmm, hmm~”

As Garfiel gnashed his teeth, Mimi let out a soft groan. She rubbed the back of her neck restlessly, looking disturbed, her nose twitching over and over again.

Garfiel: “What’s up?”

Mimi: “I don’t know~, but I think that something’s wrong. Garf, something’s off.”

Garfiel: “Don’t kid around!”

Seizing the hem of Garfiel’s pants, Mimi suddenly spoke discouraging words. Garfiel snapped at Mimi, who wanted to retreat after coming all the way here.

The Witch Cult had neglected to even establish an outpost. Retreating just because the atmosphere seemed off was not something they could do. If they left right now, the possibility of tragedy befalling Reala’s family would only increase.

Garfiel: “Ya can stay here if ya don’t wanna go. My amazin’ self’ll bite off that Archbishop’s head without a problem!”

Mimi: “Garf!”

Shaking off Mimi’s fingers clutching the hem of his pants, Garfiel leapt out of their hiding place.

Following the path of the waterway coming from the square, he immediately dashed towards the building, the City Hall, right in front of him.

The distance was narrowing. The atmosphere remained stagnant. Their arrogance was real, what a joke. Nothing happened. Ten steps left. Nine steps. Eight steps. Seven steps. He scaled a wall, finding an easier route to first attack the top floor. Six steps. Five ste—

Mimi: “Garf—!”

Garfiel: “—?!”

And when he put strength on his foot for his next step, Garfiel leapt not forward, but sideways.

Immediately after, the sharp light of the edge of a terrifyingly sharp blade flashed by his gaze, and the cobblestone at his feet was slashed.

That destructive energy had been completely silent. The stone steps that were cut obliquely remained still in their previous location, as if unaware they had been cut. Fluttering, choppy white smoke was the remnant of the friction created by that sharp slice.

Garfiel: “…”

Were it not for Mimi’s warning cry, Garfiel would have been struck by that sword. A most beautiful and exquisite slash had barely missed Garfiel’s head. If that artistic cut had hit, Garfiel’s head would end up being put on a pike for display in the square.

Cold sweat.

At that moment, Garfiel turned back, and something landed.

Giant: “…”

Woman: “…”

Before his eyes, two figures had suddenly appeared from above.

One of them was a giant man, so large Garfiel had to tilt his head back to gaze upon his head, leisurely holding a large sword in each hand. The other was a slender, delicate woman, holding a long sword with a single blade in her grip.

Both were wearing black robes, covering their faces, so their identity could not be discerned.

Garfiel: "…That ain't a nice greetin', y'know?"

Scratching the back of his neck, which was covered in cold sweat from shock, Garfiel spoke, trying to divert their attention from determining his own combat strength.

However, neither shadow returned any words to Garfiel's own.

Mimi: "Garf, these two…"

Going around them, Mimi rushed to Garfiel's side. Garfiel did not dare to even look at Mimi, instead keeping his eyes on the two figures.

Garfiel: "Yeah, they're strong."

Mimi's voice was tense, and Garfiel silently answered by placing his hand on her shoulders, supporting her.

The two shadows they were facing gave off the feeling of dreary, ominous demons. The preternatural levels of danger the two exuded were impossible to measure accurately. The unfamiliar atmosphere pricking at Garfiel's skin robbed his mouth of saliva, and he felt his throat rapidly drying up.

It was plain to see that the enemy's strength far transcended the human realm. They were clearly superior to that female murder machine with whom Garfiel had once fought.

Garfiel: "Only two people…?"

No other shadows lurked around.

The only guards were the two before him. They had masked their existence from Garfiel up until now, so there were no other potential presences. Those with strength had already chosen to stop hiding themselves.

In other words, the two in front of them were the barriers they needed to break through to recapture the City Hall. As soon as he understood that, Garfiel shuddered, the corners of his mouth raising.

Garfiel: “Heh, interestin’…!”

Mimi: “Garf?”

Garfiel: “If we win, we can break through…!”

His heart stirred with vigor as Garfiel refused to let fear dominate it, bashing his shields together in front on his chest. High-pitched sounds and sparks scattered, igniting his soul just as it began to cool down.

However, grasping Garfiel’s pants, Mimi shouted—

Mimi: “No, no! Garf, no! Those two, we can’t! They’re super~ strong! Mimi and Garfiel absolutely can’t win alone! We can’t!”

Garfiel: “Hmm. We won’t know ‘til we try. I’ll never admit defeat like that. Besides—”

Mimi attempted to discourage him, but, to Garfiel, the content of her statement seemed to imply his own weakness. Garfiel however clicked his tongue, jerking his chin towards the two hostile shadows.

Garfiel: “—Even if we run away with tails tucked between our legs, they’ll catch up to us.”

Mimi: “Then, then, once! We’ll hit them once, dodge, and then run away. If it’s just us, we have to leave! Without the Captain or Julius —!”

Garfiel: “…”

At Mimi's frantic words, Garfiel bit his lip and pondered.

Indeed, Garfiel also understood that Mimi was correct. Those two held fighting ability that might exceed that of Elsa. Facing two such enemies at once, could only be called a suicidal act.

As there was no other way, was withdrawing the right course of action?

The two figures before their eyes were a barrier. Overwhelmingly might stood in their path, a barrier that had to be surpassed.

Garfiel, having been defeated by Reinhard, had realized how far from the strongest he was.

With consciousness that he must become the shield of those most important to him, he had to walk down the path to become the strongest. A journey necessary so he could become a golden tiger.

He had unexpectedly reunited with his mother, and met her new family, albeit not how he had once hoped. And if he withdrew here, Garek would—

Mimi: "…"

Again grabbing the hem of Garfiel's pants, dominated by tumultuous thoughts, was Mimi, who kept her uneasy expression. Suddenly, Garfiel recalled their gentle night. She had been his kind guardian.

Just then, his stubborn feelings began to gradually melt away.

Garfiel: "…Aight, we'll be doin' what you said. We'll hit 'em 'n run, and find others to come help us—Is that okay?"

Mimi: "Yeah! Yeah! That's it—Let's do it~!"

Mimi gasped with delight, after Garfiel withdrew his reckless ideas.

Having unified their views, they turned to face the figures before them. The shadows had waited in silence ever since they had intercepted the two. Garfiel and Mimi's brief quarrel had provided the perfect opportunity to launch an offensive. Had they held back because of honor? Compassion? Caution?

Garfiel: "—Let's go!"

Mimi: "Hah!"

—If they were merely cautious, then they would be crushed.

Not needing a signal, Garfiel and Mimi leapt into the fray in tandem. Garfiel flew toward the woman, and Mimi attacked the giant.

As Garfiel approached her as fast as a bullet, the woman gently shifted her upper body, and, in the next moment, was swinging her blade downward at an alarming speed. The beauty of the sharp flash of her sword as it split the air was such that it fascinated Garfiel and caused him to momentarily lose himself.

Garfiel: "—Gah!"

However, he was not so foolish as to fully lose himself and allow the blade to reach him.

It bounced into the shield on his right wrist, and he took the opportunity to kick the woman's torso. She swiftly avoided his blow with terrifying nimbleness, rotated her blade, and fired off another strike. His neck as the aim of the slash, Garfiel blocked with the shield on his left arm. Immediately after, he lashed out a kick at her form right in front of him, her light body flying away easily.

Garfiel: "Haa!"

Looking at the form of the woman, who had been easily routed, Garfiel felt exhilaration.

Upon glancing back, he saw Mimi, adept in maneuvering herself against large enemies, successfully ducking under the strike of one of the large swords and firing back magic—She was about to exit the square.

Mimi seemed like she was going to be able to escape safely. The giant did not have the speed to match Mimi as she ran away, and the woman did have the ability to fight Garfiel. In that case,

Garfiel: “If we can win one—!”

If he could take her out, it would be easier to launch another attack later. After defeating the woman, the giant would be much easier to tear to pieces.

Garfiel kicked off the ground, moving towards the woman, who was still collapsed. Her sword was still far from reaching his left shield, and her torso was full of openings. If he slammed his right fist into her, the woman’s body would be completely torn to pieces. There was no way that the woman had an immortal body like Elsa.

Garfiel: “Gotcha!”

He would be able to take out the woman.

At the moment Garfiel became convinced of this and raised his voice, death arrived from behind.

—The giant, who should have been faraway, had approached Garfiel, bringing with him the stench of death. Garfiel’s body reacted instinctively like a loaded spring.

Immediately interrupting his attack, he brought his left wrist to his back, leaping away from the spot.

However, a blow from behind smashed through the defense posed by Garfiel’s left arm altogether, slamming Garfiel into the ground with a yelp, bones creaking.

Garfiel: “Ahhh?!”

Giant: “…”

Garfiel was swallowed by shock and groaned violently at the weight of that unimaginable blow.

Having bounced up from the ground, an outrageous attack from the side again assaulted his body in midair. With the help of his twin shields, his arms barely moving, he defended against the impact—but his body was sent flying with terrifying momentum.

Targeting Garfiel, still gliding through the air, his trajectory parallel to the ground, the giant and the woman dove forward in pursuit at the same time.

Woman: "…"

Giant: "…"

Garfiel: "Haahhahhh!"

Garfiel was sandwiched between the two parallel attacks.

He met the longsword approaching him from the front with a shield, and managed to just barely block the fierce blow of the giant sword at his back by kicking its midsection. The longsword once again emerged from the fray, being met with a shield, the dancing sparks scorching Garfiel's cheeks. Immediately after, the large sword struck Garfiel's body as it descended upon him.

Garfiel: "Hah!"

His bones and sternum creaked, the power of the blow painting Garfiel's vision blood-red. He had been subjected to the strikes of two of those large swords, but their blunt blades had spared Garfiel's life.

A cry of agony followed the blood spilling from his mouth, as he somehow managed to escape from his predicament by using his whole body as a spring. However, the two difficult enemies would not allow his survival.

Woman: "…"

Silently, a quiet slash approached Garfiel's neck.

Although the intensity of this strike could not be compared with that of the previous one, the sharpness of the woman's sword was beautiful in that it was laced with the breath of death, ignoring the need for raw power. Even the tip of that calm, elegant blade would split him in twain, just as if he had been slashed by its midsection.

Giant: "…"

Also wordless, the giant's battling style was brutal and crude.

However, that kind of brutality was not one that left everything to chance and relied on recklessness, it was the brutality of someone who could harness and optimize their destructive power. Most people would barely be able to hold even one of his heavy swords, but he easily swung two of them, each in one of his giant arms.

Garfiel: "Ah, ah, hah, ah, haaah!"

A slash like the flow of water. A slash like a raging cyclone.

Although their styles were different, the effectiveness of their dynamic was commensurate with their overwhelming skill, and they attacked in perfect tandem; Garfiel had no choice but to stand his ground and fight to the death.

Desperately bouncing backwards on the stone steps, dodging a heavy slash, feeling a sharp wind whistle just over his head, relying on his instinct to withstand attacks with his shields, dodging, bouncing, defending.

—But, if they kept at it, sooner or later, he would be overwhelmed by their momentum and be beheaded.

Woman: "…"

Giant: "…"

The two figures pressed Garfiel without respite, giving him nary a chance to breathe. Like that, his oxygen-deprived head could not be dedicated to finding a ray of hope. His every effort was directed on avoiding a fatal injury.

His attention would surely fail to keep up as his exhaustion mounted. He would suffer a fatal blow.

Masterful combat, transcendental swings. They could easily and simply reap Garfiel's life, despite his confidence in his physical strength. The more time passed, the more escape routes closed to him.

—Decision. A decision was pressing.

The only way out of this dilemma was to reveal his true fangs. Only in that moment would Garfiel be able to say who was clearly and overwhelmingly superior, him or the enemy.

And that thought briefly revived him. He sought an opportunity to breathe.

Garfiel: "—Huh…"

The woman's blade weaved deadly slashes. He cast both wrists forward to capture her, twisting his body the least he could to avoid the full impact of the giant's attack.

As expected, the giant's blow smashed Garfiel's left shoulder, and his right kneecap was shattered. But, in exchange for a breath of fresh air, that damage was nothing.

Garfiel: "Kah, haaaaaaaaaaaaaaAAAAAAAAAAAA…"

Woman: "…"

Giant: "…"

With a raging roar, he released the heat boiling in his body.

The same feeling of boiling blood expanded to his field of vision, which became nothing but pure white, a cracking sound echoing from beneath his face as his bones shifted. His face was twisted, his teeth elongated into fangs, and he exercised his arms as their muscles expanded rapidly, his body becoming covered with golden hair.

Only his upper body had changed, leaving him in a half-beast state.

The smell of blood chased his rationality away momentarily, but, in this state, he was not completely devoid of thought. Seeing the person in front of them turn into a beast, it was impossible for any hostile party to remain calm.

Woman and Giant: "…"

Facing those two speechless figures, Garfiel growled, with the intention of shattering their eardrums. As the enemies' footsteps froze as if blasted with a gust of wind, confirming that his nails had grown into thick, double-edged weapons, he decided to gouge their bodies.

The tips of the nails of his front paw descended toward the woman —Just before that, the form of giant man squeezed in front of her.

No matter. Even those thick muscles were nothing worth mentioning, they were but paper shields to his claws. And shielding was just what the giant intended to do—he stretched out his arm, the blade of his large sword facing down, making a gesture of neither defending nor attacking, but choosing to protect the woman.

Cute. But it was over.

—His paws would tear through the giant's body, followed by the slender form of the woman.

Garfiel: "—?!"

That process had already been set in motion but had been paused in the first motion.

Garfiel's tiger paw connected with the giant, but had failed to tear through the man's body. Before that happened, he had caught Garfiel's paw in his own hands.

He had uncovered the front part of his robe to reveal six additional arms.

With Garfiel's thick arm suppressed, the large sword he gripped firmly blocked the tip of Garfiel's claws, meeting the violent attack from head-on.

—That was the Absolute Defense of the Eight-Arms.

Garfiel: “…”

Too stunned to react, Garfiel hesitated. He could not believe that the giant had withstood his crushing blow without faltering.

Which meant that, in that moment, Garfiel had left himself exposed and completely unprepared.

Woman: “…”

Reappearing from behind the giant’s back, the woman launched herself at the unprepared half-beast. Garfiel’s back, now wide and covered by tiger’s fur, was much like a practice doll for the woman sweeping her longsword. As the tip of the sword approached, Garfiel felt the invisible breath of death on his neck.

However, his paws captured by the giant’s hands and his body unable to move, all he could do was wait for death—

Mimi: “Hold on a second!”

Garfiel: “…”

Just before Garfiel was split in half, the woman’s cut was stopped by an unfolding blue magic barrier, together with a shout. Her strike bounced into the barrier, and the irritating noise of a blade scraping on ice pealed, the barrier disappearing as the woman landed back on the ground.

The orange-haired kitten had saved Garfiel in the nick of time.

Mimi: “Garf, you said we’d run away!”

For the first time, something like reproach colored Mimi’s voice.

In his half-beast status, hearing the voice coming from behind, Garfiel’s rationality returned as he began to recognize his own stupidity. By ignoring anxieties, being far too careless, and being too dismissive of his opponent, he had put himself in a dangerous situation. In his moment of despair, Mimi had rescued him.

Garfiel swallowed as he appreciated the sturdiness of Mimi's barrier.

The violence in the woman's blade really did not match her appearance, and Mimi's defensive capabilities were also quite considerable. Garfiel was incredibly fortunate that she was there.

Garfiel: "Oh, aaaaaaaaaaaaaah!"

Woman: "…"

Immediately after the relief spread to his chest, Garfiel forcibly broke free of the giant's grip. Kicking at the body, and spotting his blow being blocked by an arm, Garfiel picked Mimi up by the waist and disengaged from the battle.

In this way, he would flee from this place with Mimi. As they had originally planned, they would gather reinforcements and return to this place to fight anew.

Woman: "…"

While they fled, the woman bounced again in pursuit. But once again, Mimi deployed a barrier, this one larger than the previous one. The woman's slash was once again repelled, and Garfiel gathered all his energy into his legs to escape as fast as he could.

—A breath. The figure of the woman stopped, gently casting a hand in front of the barrier. With a leap, she approached.

Garfiel: "—Ah."

Woman: "…"

Garfiel: "Eh?"

A quiet sound accompanied a light impact.

His jaw dropped as he witnessed the events unfolding. Garfiel had finished making another jumping motion, pulverizing the stone pavement, But as the half-beast sailed through the air, fresh blood followed him, a line of red being drawn in the air.

That blood, where was it pouring from?

Garfiel: “Midget?”

Having his thoughts of maintaining his half-beast form interrupted, Garfiel rapidly changed back to human form. However, the sensation of losing his tiger fur was buried under a wave of chills crawling down his back.

In his arms was the weak, loose body of Mimi. He turned his gaze down. Looking up at his flying figure, was a woman whose blade whipped through the air.

More than half of that longsword was coated with red, viscous blood.

A warm liquid dripped onto Garfiel’s lower abdomen. Mimi remained limp and motionless in his arms, and he could see the wand she loved falling from her hands.

Garfiel: “…”

Landing, jumping again. Repeatedly leaping onto nearby buildings, he fled without glancing behind. Fortunately, their adversaries were not following them.

Were they uninterested in anything other than guarding the square, or was this a show of humanity? It did not matter. After four, five lengthy leaps away from the square, Garfiel crushed the roof of a building as he landed, lowering Mimi’s body still in his arms, and checked Mimi’s condition.

Mimi’s eyes were closed, a large amount of blood spilling from the wound in her chest.

Garfiel yanked her clothes open to check on her wounds. Her vitals had not been struck. Of course, that did not allow for any optimism. Due to her blood loss, she was in need of immediate healing magic. He needed to calm himself.

Garfiel: “…”

Placing his hand on her wound, Garfiel willed healing magic into Mimi's body.

Garfiel was one of the best users of healing magic in Sanctuary. He had always felt that it was slightly useless, but, in the event of any emergency, he'd hoped to accomplish something. Therefore, Garfiel had poured all of his magical efforts into healing magic, and he had a rough but complete grasp of the art of healing. As long as the injury was not fatal, he was fairly confident that he could heal it, even if it were a deep one.

The wounds on Mimi's body would soon close with the waves of healing Mana. Sweat beaded his forehead as he put his hand on the wound, directing it to suppress the overflow of blood. He continued to dedicate his power to mend the cut skin, muscle, injured internal organs, desperately willing them to be fixed, giving her Mana continuously. Continuously. Continuously.

—The wound did not close.

Garfiel: "What… What…?"

Who was whispering in such a soft voice?

Any who could make that kind of soft sound in this situation deserved nothing but Garfiel's wrath. He glanced around wildly, looking for the source. There was no one there. Finally, he realized. That voice was his own. He was aware of it.

So that soft voice had been him? Had he made that sound? Such a sound was, was, was—

Garfiel: "Close, close, close, healhealheal…!"

Exhausted, with all his might he ordered all of the Mana in his body into her treatment. The wave of healing magic flowed into Mimi's form, filling her with a gentle current of Mana.

In spite of this, the unsealable wound refused to close.

Garfiel: "—You're jokin' me, right?"

Unable to accept the reality facing him, Garfiel again muttered with a weak voice.

Immediately afterward, he hit himself in the face and bit down hard on his lip to keep himself grounded. Now was not the time to make such a soft voice. There had to be a way.

What could he do, what could he do, what could he do, what could he do? He had no idea. But he could not give up here. Not knowing was not a reason to give up. He had to do whatever he could to save this girl.

Because she was the one who had let Garfiel cry. Such a child, who had been hurt trying to save him, could not die like this.

Garfiel: "…"

Gritting his teeth, Garfiel began to run. One of his hands rested on the girl's wound, trying again to staunch her bleeding with his ineffective healing magic.

The smell of blood, the smell of death. In these deserted streets, even any thoughts about what had happened had vacated Garfiel's mind.

Someone, anyone! Please, save this kid! Someone, anyone, bring a miracle! Tell me what to do! If there's anything I can do… what can I do to save her?!

Garfiel: "…"

Feeling himself at wits' end, Garfiel sharpened his sense of smell. The smell of water. The smell of blood permeating his surroundings. Strong emotions, charred meat. Amid those foul scents, Garfiel found a very familiar odor brushing past, and immediately followed it, running, running, continually, endlessly, running.

He flew into a shelter, evoking an immediate uproar at his bloodied appearance. But he had no time to care at the moment. Opening his eyes, he searched for that figure. Searching, searching, searching…

???: "Garfiel?!"

He found him on the other side of the shelter. At the back of that deep, dark, cold underground facility, he discovered the one he had been desperately searching out.

Subaru. Natsuki Subaru.

To Garfiel, that existence was miraculous, and, in the worst case possible, he would be able to find a glimpse of light in the worst of situations.

His legs were staggering. His head was shaking. Due to the light weight in his hands and his clogged throat, Garfiel swayed back and forth.

As he approached, Subaru glanced around him and gasped, becoming aware of the unconscious Mimi in his arms. Under Subaru's gaze, Garfiel bowed his head, holding Mimi out, earnestly cursing his own stupidity.

Garfiel: "Sorry, captain… hk! My amazin' self's… worthless…! Incompetent… hk!"

He had been unable to protect that family, his vow to become a shield for them had not been fulfilled, he had challenged those hostile forces of his own volition, and had failed to get any results.

Subaru: "Garfiel, what… No, it's not the time for that. Ferris!"

Ferris: "I know! Hurry up, hand over that child!"

Mimi was taken from Garfiel's outstretched arms, and placed in a bed near Subaru, a thin figure standing next to her.

In the next moment, overwhelming healing energy flowed, permeating the space. Garfiel's own could not even compare to that. If Garfiel's healing prowess were likened to a drop of rain, that person's ability would be akin to a waterfall.

Witnessing magical power that could resurrect even a lost life, Garfiel witnessed the treatment as if his soul had been drawn out of his body. Subaru gently placed a hand on Garfiel's slackened shoulder. With a glance, he could see that Subaru had endured an appalling injury to his leg.

Subaru: “Although I can’t say that this went well, you did a great job bringing her to Ferris. Thanks to you, the girl can be saved.”

Garfiel: “Thanks to me…?”

What was Subaru saying?

Thanks to Garfiel, Mimi had been saved? Ridiculous! Mimi had been hurt so severely, and it was all Garfiel’s fault. Mimi’s life should never have been in danger in the first place. All of this had happened because of Garfiel’s poor judgement.

Hollow and twisted thinking, unresolved thoughts of remorse, and self-conscious stupidity. And the world would never forgive Garfiel’s foolishness.

Mistakes would always have their consequences. And so, an horrifying outcome arrived.

Subaru: “Ferris, what happened…?”

Subaru’s expression grew worried upon feeling something unusual.

Subaru dragged his leg, heading over to the bed where the treatment was being performed, calling the name of the person casting his potent healing spells.

In that terrifying torrent of magic, the healer shook his head.

Ferris: “Why…? These wounds, they will nyot heal…! If it goes on like this, I don’t know if I can save her!”

His anguished cry echoed across the room, and Garfiel turned his face towards the heavens. But he was underground. So, the underground sky had nothing to tell Garfiel.

—The cost of his mistake could be paid in nothing but blood.

Chapter 32:
The City Hall Raiders' Conference

Ferris: "Ah, really! Healing magic has nyo effect, so we can only use such a primitive treatment!"

Ferris, with blood staining his cheeks, clenched his teeth in irritation while waving a hand.

Lying in front of him in a cot, blood still flowing from her chest, was Mimi's unconscious and faintly-breathing form.

Wholeheartedly wanting to stop the bleeding, he had been forced to bind her wound with a cloth imbued with magic and several layers of bandages. In the case of arm or leg injuries, the bleeding could be suppressed by lifting the injury higher than the heart. Only, Mimi's wound was on her chest, just above her heart.

The amount of time she had left could only depend upon her own vitality.

Subaru leaned against the wall, worried about Garfiel as the latter watched that desperate treatment, collapsed on the ground. He saw that instead of looking at Mimi, Garfiel had plunged his bloody hands into his short, blond hair, casting his gaze downwards, a far cry from his usual optimistic self.

The blood covering his body was not only Mimi's. It was plain to see that he had his own severe wounds. Blood stained the corners of his mouth, and his left shoulder and right knee looked particularly painful. His pants were torn near his knees, where flesh was missing,and white bone could be glimpsed.

Subaru: "Garfiel. Mimi can be entrusted to Ferris, for the time being. You also need treatment for your wounds. Can you administer healing spells yourself?"

Garfiel: "…Ah, yeah."

Nodding, Garfiel slowly pressed his palms to his wounds and began to deliver healing Mana into his own body. As he watched the wounds slowly healing, Subaru looked down at the Conversation Mirror in his hand.

Reflected in the surface of the mirror was a silent old swordsman, his wrinkled face bearing a complex expression. In the depths of his own heart, what kind of conflict had risen? Undoubtedly, Wilhelm must have reached the same conclusion as Subaru.

Subaru: “The wound cannot be closed, which is to say…”

Wilhelm: “In all likelihood, it is a wound caused by the Divine Protection of the Death God.”

Finishing Subaru’s words, Wilhelm came to the expected conclusion.

The Divine Protection of the Death God. A terrifying power that rendered any wounds caused by its owner uncurable. That Mimi’s wound could not be healed by magic was probably due to such a Divine Protection.

Then, as far as Subaru knew, only one person had possessed it. Of course, while it could not be asserted that no other person had the same Divine Protection,

Subaru: “Wilhelm-san. Although this is something I fear hearing … How is your arm injury?”

Wilhelm: “…”

Wilhelm briefly closed his eyes in meditation, then removed his coat and presented his left shoulder to Subaru. The bandage wrapped tightly against it had no traces of blood. Then there was no bleeding—so his attacker could not be nearby.

Wilhelm: “Even assuming that the injury was given by someone with the same Divine Protection as my wife, as long as my wounds have not opened, she cannot be near. Although, that should be a matter of course.”

Subaru: “Wilhelm-san…”

Was he frustrated, or was he relieved? Subaru did not know.

Wilhelm believed to have lost his wife fifteen years ago. The events of one year ago might have made him doubt her death, but he had refrained from raising his hopes.

It was a common weakness of human beings to hold a small modicum of hope, even if it was difficult be unconditionally hopeful. However, even if Wilhelm succumbed to that weakness, Subaru found no shame in it whatsoever.

Therefore, at this moment, Subaru found no words he could say to Wilhelm. Of course, the latter desired neither casual comfort nor encouragement.

Behind Subaru, a change in the situation had occurred. That was—

Ricardo: “Bro. Sorry to take yer time while you’re treatin’ a wound.”

Saying that, Ricardo sat on the ground near Ferris, who was desperately conducting his treatment. The beastman sat in front of Garfiel, whose hair was still moist with fresh blood, eyeing him sharply.

To meet that gaze, Garfiel slowly raised his head.

Ricardo: “I dunno what happened to ya. But I know that if ya hadn’t brought her here, Mimi’d not have made it. So,”

Garfiel: “…”

Ricardo: “Really, thank ya very much. I’m deeply grateful.”

With two fists on the ground, Ricardo kneeled and bowed his head.

As Ricardo’s forehead hit the ground, thanking Garfiel for bringing someone who was much like family to him to this place, Garfiel appeared dismayed.

Mimi's prognosis was still far from optimistic. It was understandable that Garfiel held some guilt for not being able to successfully protect Mimi. However, that did not mean that Garfiel was to blame. What good would it do to blame him?

In his heart of hearts, Ricardo had, of course, hoped for Mimi's safe return. There was no way that he felt calm about Mimi's situation, considering she had been brought back in that state.

Even so, Subaru could clearly see that Ricardo's vaulted posture reflected his complete sincerity. At the same time, he also felt unforgiving anger at those who left Mimi in that state. Therefore,

Subaru: "Garfiel. Although it's probably hard to talk about it, tell me exactly what happened. It's hard to believe that you're in such a state. Not to mention…"

As he asked Garfiel to explain the situation, an idea took root in Subaru's mind.

Earlier, as he sorted through their information with Julius and Wilhelm, contemplating the siege of Priestella, the idea had briefly crossed his mind.

Seizing five key locations around the city, the Witch Cult had taken the lives of everyone in the city hostage. According to their speculation, each location must be occupied by a mighty force. Assuming that was right—they were most likely guarded by Wrath, Greed, Lust. Then, the likelihood that Gluttony was also present was high.

—That Gluttony was precisely Subaru's target. He could not let that go.

Greed, who had kidnapped Emilia, and Wrath, who had regarded Subaru as Petelgeuse. Lust, whose ugly nature he had heard earlier, and Gluttony, the target he had been hunting.

Although the situation was indeed the worst of the worst, at the same time, there had never been an opportunity better than this. Now that he was trapped in a spider web, it was the right time to exterminate all the spiders.

Subaru: “Anyway, we have to defeat all of these guys somehow. After all, if we don’t, we’ll never be able to return safe and sound.”

Garfiel: “…”

With that declaration, Garfiel stared at him in surprise. Subaru nodded with encouragement, urging him to speak.

Garfiel: “…After hearin’ that broadcast, my amazin’ self and the midget went to the center of the city. Both of us hated the annoyin’ voice of the person talkin’.”

Ricardo: “We were also discussin’ a way to do that. Looks like ya got the first chance.”

Garfiel: “On the way to the City Hall, there were no sentries, there was nothin’ gettin’ in our way. So my amazin’ self rushed straight towards the City Hall, where…”

Garfiel’s words stopped, as he clenched his teeth, his fists trembling.

This was not fear, but anger. However, Subaru believed that that anger was directed not at his opponent, but at Garfiel himself.

Issuing a fiery, angry breath, Garfiel continued,

Garfiel: “Two enemies appeared. One of ‘em was this huge bastard that lugged around two giant swords. Th’other was a thin woman with a long sword. Either one of ‘em’d probably gimme a run for my money in a one-on-one fight. No… they’d prolly be stronger than my amazin’ self.”

Subaru: “Even stronger than you…? Was one of them the broadcaster?”

Garfiel: “…Prolly not.”

Subaru almost wondered whether if his hearing had gone wrong.

Garfiel was not only the strongest in Emilia’s faction, and among all of the people assembled to counter the Witch Cult's offensive, the most capable one. That very same Garfiel had just judged two people to be individually stronger than himself. And if his assumption was right, those people were not Sin Archbishops, but just run-of-the-mill Witch Cultists.

Garfiel: "Those two didn't give me the feelin' of malice like the broadcast did. Even though my amazin' self left openin's while escapin', we still got away… that seemed like some kind of swordsman's etiquette or whatever."

Garfiel regarded his opponents' strength with something like awe. Unlike his usual lively self, he seemed to be atrophied, clearly still affected by Mimi's state.

Ricardo, who had been listening to Garfiel, slapped his knees with a dull sound and stood. Then he grabbed Garfiel's shoulder,

Ricardo: "Strong or not, I don't give a damn. What I want to know is, who of the two left ya in such a state? Who did that to Mimi? Who should I seek revenge on? Tell me."

Garfiel: "…The woman was the one who cut the midget. That's why, that woman, I gotta—"

Wilhelm: "—That woman, could you please leave her to me?"

Ricardo's thirst for vengeance for Mimi had been ignited, and Garfiel swore that same goal, with shame. The one who had interjected, however, was Wilhelm, who had been listening silently through the mirror.

To him, too, that was, by no means, something he would leave as is. But it was cruel to the two who did not know about Wilhelm's circumstances.

Ricardo: "Why? This has nothin' to do wit'cha, Wilhelm-san. Ya can't take my right to get revenge on those who harmed my adorable family."

Wilhelm: "I… cannot say for certain without having confirmation. However, if what I suspect is true, then that woman is a very important one to me. I must insist.”

Ricardo: “That’s… if ya make me angry, I ain’t gonna spare ya.”

Although Ricardo snarled in agitation, Wilhelm stubbornly refused.

Precisely because he understood the situation of both sides, Subaru could not determine who was in the right. Therefore, it was not Subaru who drew an end to that quarrel, but,

Crusch: “—Wilhelm. And Ricardo-sama. Now is not the time for strife between allies. Not when so many civilian lives are exposed to danger.”

Wilhelm: “Crusch-sama…”

With a cool voice, filled with fortitude, Crusch scolded the two.

At the reproof of his master, Wilhelm bowed in shame, while Ricardo scratched his head bloody, folding his arms. In the meantime, considering options that would avoid internal strife,

Anastasia: “Okay, okay. Let’s make a decision.”

Clapping gently, Anastasia took the mirror and pointed at Subaru. Smiling at Subaru becoming timid, Anastasia fiddled with her fox scarf.

Anastasia: “First of all, I wanna bring up the raid on the City Hall proposed by Natsuki-kun. Me and Crusch-san’s faction support that. If we take the City Hall, we’ll also rescue people familiar with the city’s workings. And even if it isn’t retaken, the situation of the waterways could be improved a little bit, yeah? Although that might be just me and my wishful thinkin’.”

Subaru: “No, I’m thinking the same thing. Moreover, if the other side launches an attack first, our choices will be reduced. If we want to act, the sooner the better.”

Anastasia: “…What’s this, ya really became reliable in this past year, no? In any case, it’s just as Natsuki-kun said. Thanks to the Conversation Mirror, we can have people cooperatin’ in three different places, and, fortunately, about seventy-percent of our total combat power can be dispatched right now. It'd be reasonable to say that an attack on the City Hall'd fare well, yeah?"

With Anastasia's opinion, Subaru glanced at Garfiel and Ricardo.

In order to conquer the City Hall in one fell swoop, it would become necessary to send out a beefy number of powerful forces. A raid on the City Hall would entail deploying forces from this shelter—Garfiel and Ricardo. Then, from other the shelter, Julius and Wilhelm would also join. If the members of the Iron Fang, as well as both Ton and Kan, and the numerous other adventurers staying in the city were added to their ranks, their combat effectiveness would be improved.

Subaru: "Honestly, if Reinhard were here, everything'd be just perfect… Could we get Ton and Kan to summon him?"

Julius: "It's strange that we haven't located him, is that what you're thinking?"

Julius, in response to Subaru's attempt to maximize their combat power, shifted his gaze towards the two thugs in the same shelter as him.

Julius: "Before entering the shelter, the two seemed to have fired magic into the sky as a signal. However, Reinhard, who should have appeared instantly, did not appear. And, this is not quite the pleasant thought, but…"

Subaru: "But what? Really, please stop doing this hesitation thing, I can't take it anymore."

Julius: "Then, I welcome you to feel the same trepidation that I do—Felt-sama's followers were separated from her and Reinhard just before all this happened. It seems that they were last seen speaking to a red-haired man."

Subaru: "Red-haired man… you can't mean that fucking bastard, right?"

Julius: "I can neither confirm nor deny this."

Subaru gritted his teeth indignantly while listening Julius's elegant answer.

If Subaru's speculation were right, Felt and Reinhard had met Reinhard's father, Heinkel—what would the two have to talk about with that man?

And why were they still not taking action even now?

Subaru: "However, he showed up at Sirius's speech in that previous loop… What's the difference? Is it because of the broadcast? Has he taken action already?"

Subaru did not fully understand what the conditions were before and after that event. In any case, knowing that they could not count on Reinhard to show up was a cause for alarm.

Subaru's shoulders dropped in contemplation. Meanwhile, Ferris had returned from the back of the shelter, his feminine costume stained with black blood and his face drenched in sweat.

Ferris: "Huu~. That took quite a while."

Ricardo: "So, how's Mimi's condition? Is she fine? Did you save her?"

As Ferris wiped his forehead of sweat, Ricardo questioned breathlessly. And Garfiel, from behind him, also cast him a panicked gaze without standing up.

However, at the appeal in their eyes, Ferris shook his head ruthlessly.

Ferris: "I can't say that I've saved her, but the wound isn't getting worse. That's all thanks to her brothers right nyow. By strengthening their link, she's barely managing to hold on."

Ricardo: "That's their Divine Protection of Trisection, right? In that case, what'll happen to the brothers?"

Ferris: "Their Divine Protection is mean to have three children share the burden of fatigue and injury. They've strengthened their bond, allowing the brothers to hold the burden of their seriously injured sister. In that case, although her life can be prolonged…”

Tivey: “—When nee-chan’s life is exhausted, we’ll die too, right?”

From the mirror, a pained high-pitched voice echoed forth.

Ricardo frowned and took the Conversation Mirror, which reflected Hetaro and Tivey, sitting side-by-side. The two brothers were also clutching their chests in pain.

Ricardo: “You guys are idiots. Really, just a group of hopeless idiots.”

Hetaro: “…However, when I think that this is nee-chan’s pain, knowing that we are feeling the same pain together makes me a little happier.”

Tivey: “I’m not as strong as my brother. So, Captain. I believe that you’ll be able to do something for us soon. Because if I die, I’ll become a ghost and haunt you.”

Being assigned to aid with the injury their sister had sustained, the two brothers experienced the same serious injury. Seeing Hetaro and Tivey lying side-by-side in their shelter, Ricardo let out a deep breath and took his machete in hand. Then,

Ricardo: “…In other words, we gotta move quickly, then. If we don’t, there’s no point.”

Ricardo whispered in a deep voice that emanated with his passionate feelings.

No one could stop him. No one could not comprehend his emotions.

Anastasia: “Send the Iron Fang out and have them clear the road ‘til the City Hall. Then we’ll have our best break into the buildin’ itself, and try to seize it in one fell swoop. The enemies are a huge man and a slender woman. And it’s correct to think that Lust’s gonna be there too.”

Subaru: “The elites here are Garfiel and Ricardo, and Wilhelm-san and Julius.”

Crusch: “—I’m going too.”

Those words came from Crusch, who had tied her hair into a ponytail.

She stood with sword in hand, having shed her dress, replacing it with clothes suited for battle.

Subaru: “Crusch-san, by saying you’ll go, you mean that you can fight?”

Crusch: “Although I am not as strong as I was before, I have had Wilhelm as a teacher. In addition, I can use Wind to augment my strikes. I am not intending to be a burden.”

Before losing her memory, Crusch’s power was enough that her presence had made a difference in the battle of the White Whale. However, the strength of the currently amnesiac Crusch was unknown to Subaru.

Honestly speaking, Subaru had thought that her newfound femininity meant that she had mostly lost her aptitude for battle.

Wilhelm: “Crusch-sama’s talent with the sword has not declined. That, I can guarantee.”

Wilhelm’s words wiped away the last of Subaru’s discomfort. The old swordsman nodded, gazing through the mirror towards his master’s side.

Wilhelm: “However, please be careful. I implore you, please place your safety first.”

Crusch: “It is the obligation of the nobility to bear the burden of war and to shed blood before the common person does. If innocent people weep, then I will shield them under my wing. I will fight, Wilhelm.”

Wilhelm: “…Honestly. But it is because of that that I offer you my sword.”

Crusch spoke resolutely toward Wilhelm's allegiance. Ferris raised his hand as he watched Wilhelm nod, the latter's face full of admiration.

Ferris: "Yes! Yes! Ferri-chan too! If Crusch-sama will fight, then please let Ferri-chan accompany you! Please!"

Crusch: "Ferris has travelled between shelters to cast healing spells on those in need of treatment. I am glad that you feel that way, but do not mistake which battlefield you should be fighting on."

Ferris: "Gah…"

Silenced in that manner, Ferris bowed his head, agonizing while searching for any retaliation. Unable to find one, he raised a white flag with a tearful expression.

Ferris: "Wil-jii. Definitely do a good job protecting Crusch-sama, okay? Absolutely absolutely."

Wilhelm: "Mhm, I understand. Even if my own life is in danger, even if it burns out—I will do so."

That was Wilhelm's answer to that trust, full of tragic determination.

Ricardo waved his sword gently, and Garfiel finished his own treatment and stood with his back leaning against the wall. Through the mirror, Wilhelm stood gallantly with sword at his waist, and Julius stood next to Crusch who had changed her clothes.

A total of five people, with the strength to strike at the City Hall. At Anastasia's direction, the Iron Fang would restrain the Witch Cultists and pave the way.

The dawn of the decisive battle—which would also include Natsuki Subaru.

Subaru: "Gah, ugh, ahh…!"

Ferris: "S-Su-Subaru-kyun! What are you doing?!"

Biting his molars to endure the pain in his right leg, Subaru finally climbed to his feet.

Ferris, flushed in fury, slapped Subaru upside the head, glaring at his leg, which was still missing skin and muscle.

Subaru: “Ferris, that hurt!”

Ferris: “Of course it did! I’ve obviously said that you absolutely need rest, but you keep being unreasonable! Subaru-kyun, have you been cursed to go against Ferri-chan’s diagnoses? Do you want your feet to rot off?”

Subaru: “Even if it rots and drops from my body, there are still things that I have to do. Ferris, you should understand my feelings. Do you think I can really stay here obediently and wait for results?”

Ferris: “…Muu.”

Ferris raised a hand to his mouth as Subaru pressed on. Sending his companions to a place where survival was unlikely, then waiting for results—Subaru could never endure such a thing. If he could come up with some clever idea and help someone by just standing by, how could he lie here?

Subaru: “You can fight like this, treating people. Well, I must fight too. Beatrice protected me, and Emilia’s still in danger because of Greed. In this state, you want me to retreat?”

Ferris: “…Is that to say that you won’t regret losing your foot?”

Subaru: “Of course I’m bound to regret it. But I’d regret not fighting more.”

Ferris: “Heh… Then, Subaru-kyun also wants to play a cool role.”

With an exhausted expression and a sigh, Ferris held a hand to his forehead. After that, he violently flicked his finger on Subaru’s forehead, causing him to lean back, and Ferris pressed his hand to the wound on Subaru’s right leg.

Ferris: “What I’ll be doing now is giving you a bit of solace!”

Subaru: “Solace is… Ah, wait a minute, Ferris-san. The injury kinda hurts, so rubbing back and forth like that… It doesn’t hurt…?”

His hands on the wound, Ferris ravaged Subaru’s leg—was what should have happened, but, instead, a faint light shone from the injury, ending the pain which had been piercing through it like a sharp blade.

Subaru, shocked at the effects of that magic, looked Ferris in the face. Then,

Ferris: “You look murderous?!”

Subaru: “No, no! Although, if you have such convenient magic, don’t be so reluctant to give it sooner! This is great, I can move!”

In front of Ferris, Subaru jumped lightly with his right leg as Ferris’s sharp tongue took a jab at him. While enjoying the joy of his new freedom of motion, he began to dance in place. Pain was no longer a problem.

His palm hit the wound with a smack as he celebrated the amazing change. Then, Subaru looked down, feeling something sticky and wet. His hand were covered in bright red. The wound on his right foot had ruptured.

Subaru: “Hey, hey, hey?! Didn’t you heal it?!”

Ferris: “I nyever said I healed it. I just asked if you’d regret it if you lost your leg. Ferri-chan just removed the touch sensation of your right leg. As long as you’re careful running around, you can keep your leg.”

Subaru’s bleeding legs shook as Ferris re-bandaged the wound and cast fresh spells. The blood stopped; however, Subaru felt even more uncomfortable, realizing that he couldn’t feel anything from his leg. It was similar to anesthesia, but he did not feel quite as sluggish. Aside from not being able to feel touch, his right leg’s actions were almost normal.

However, pain itself was also a limiter to avoid destroying one’s own body. For the sake of convenience, those sensations had been revoked.

Ferris: “Of course, I’m doing this reluctantly. When we meet back up, there’ll definitely be some residual effects. If you wanna keep them at a minimum, be careful!”

Subaru: “…Understood. You’ve been a great help, I’m grateful.”

Ferris: “…Subaru-kyun is absolutely, certainly planning to ignore Ferri-chan’s words.”

Ferris sighed and turned away from Subaru, who nodded and reexamined his leg. Although he would like to say something like “I’d never do such a thing”, if the situation arose, he could not promise that he would comply with Ferris. Unable to make any promises, Subaru could only thank him once more before rushed to Garfiel and Ricardo.

Subaru: “Right, I’m coming too. It’s useless to try to stop me. I don’t think I’ll be too much help in combat, but there must be something I can do…”

Ricardo: “Why’d I stop you? You’ll bring wit’cha the strength of a hundred men. I’ll be counting on ya.”

Subaru: “I can do things like—huh?”

Although he had been waiting for a rejection, he had been eagerly welcomed into the party. Subaru wondered what in the world was happening as the beastman Ricardo opened his mouth.

Ricardo: “The White Whale, and Sloth too. Both times, I saw yer courage for myself, bro. You’d be wrong if ya think only Wilhelm sees yer value. I also see someone worthy of praise.”

Subaru: “Really, truly? Feels weird…”

Inspired by Ricardo’s words, Subaru’s self-invitation was gone without any problem.

Before leaving the shelter, Subaru approached Beatrice’s bedside and gently touched the forehead of the girl who slept quietly.

Subaru: “Beatrice, I’ll be going out. I messed up and left you like this, so now it’s my turn to work hard. I’ll take care of those guys and get Emilia back. You just stay here and rest well.”

Beatrice: “…”

Silence. Comforted by her peaceful breathing, Subaru stood up.

Meanwhile, Garfiel and Ricardo spoke to Mimi, who looked miserable as she lay unconscious. Although she also gave no response, the two men showed an opposite expression, showing strong determination.

Subaru: “We’ll leave the shelter and join up at the large waterway leading to the City Hall—So, everyone, be careful.”

Before their departure, everyone exchanged glances, determination fueled by their respective oaths, fierce momentum propelling them onward.

The war to regain Priestella would commence with a raid on the City Hall.

The two swordsmen in their way, and the Sin Archbishop of Lust. Inscribing those targets in their minds, the soldiers marched toward the battlefield.

Chapter 33:
Stratagem on the City Hall

1

—The silent Priestella's siege had, up until now, seemed to be naught but a fanciful story. Walking atop of the stone slab, Subaru glimpsed the flowing waterway.

The water running within was clear and pollution-free. Even now, it flowed along its constant, well-established path. The mysterious mechanism which split the flow between left and right was still up and running. As long as the floodgates resumed their function, anyone would believe that the peril the city was under was little more than a nightmare.

Garfiel: "Captain, ya can't drag yer feet, y'know."

Subaru: "I know, I know. Every second that passes, the danger of this City Hall Capture mission increases by ten percent."

Ricardo: "In that case, if eleven seconds pass, then we're screwed, yeah? Well, that prolly ain't far from the truth, actually."

Garfiel, who had taken the lead, narrowed his eyes in displeasure as Ricardo's loud voice rang out through the air. However, the beastman's expression was not discouraged in the least. Carrying his sharp machete, he strode forward with vigorous steps, but not even his cavalier attitude was enough to relieve Garfiel's tension and guilt.

Ricardo looked no different from usual, while Garfiel had clearly discarded his usual demeanor.

Even so, three people who Ricardo considered family were hurt, and maintaining a calm state of mind right now was difficult. This had been made clear back in the shelter.

On the other hand, that typical unfounded self-confidence and recklessness of Garfiel's had vanished, and what remained was a cautious and more timid attitude, a change that emitted an ominous message.

Subaru: "…Well, I can't say that I'm any better off, either."

Those two were not the only ones unable to maintain their usual state of mind.

Subaru had suffered an injury to his right leg, Beatrice was unconscious, and, most importantly, Emilia's safety was unconfirmed. All of those weighed heavily on his mind. The only reason he had been so quick to try and change the situation is that his experience told him that not seizing the initiative would hasten a terrible result.

Three groups to capture the City Hall building, each of them with their own problems.

Having encountered neither Witch Cultists nor mobs along the way, they successfully arrived at the rendezvous point. And there,

Wilhelm: "Subaru-dono."

Crusch: "It is great to see that you are all safe."

Wilhelm and Crusch seemed enthusiastic about Subaru's arrival. Of course, Julius had also come along with them, who elegantly stroked his hair.

Julius: "I am sure that you are worried out of your mind for Emilia-sama, are you sure it is okay for you to be here instead?"

Subaru: "I am not stupid enough to lose sight of what's truly the priority here, for the good of everyone. And as irritating as it sounds, Emilia was why that bastard was there in the first place. I feel that I don't know to think about him harming Emilia, right now."

Julius: "I feel for you. If Anastasia-sama were placed in the same situation, I doubt I would be able to keep my composure."

After nodding in response to his concerned words, Subaru turned to Wilhelm. The old swordsman closed his eyes as he crossed his arms, his whole body irradiating the quiet energy of a swordsman. Subaru could not tell what he was picturing in his mind, nor what thoughts were swirling behind his eyelids.

However, as if sensing Subaru's gaze, Wilhelm opened his eyes, and reached into his coat. He withdrew a mirror and handed it to Subaru.

Wilhelm: "Subaru-dono, this is a Conversation Mirror. In the heat of battle, I doubt I shall have any leeway to operate it, so I shall leave this to you."

Subaru: "Understood. Let's move as planned."

Placing the mirror carefully in his pocket, Subaru nodded. As discussed earlier, the Conversation Mirror would be distributed among the members of the three shelters, so that there would be one person in charge of communication. Subaru, the least useful in fighting affairs, held one mirror, while the other was held by Ferris, who was been travelling between shelters. The last one was held by Anastasia, who served as their source of intelligence.

Ideally, they would have these three places cooperating for the best results.

Crusch: "Then, to confirm again. We are moving to the battlefield identified by Garfiel-sama, where two Witch Cultists are guarding the City Hall. One is a giant who handles two broadswords, and the other is a woman with a slender longsword. Is that right?"

Garfiel: "Yep, that's right. Neither of 'em are yer common swordsmen. If ya don't do like I did, you'd prolly end up sliced in two by either of 'em in no time."

Going over all their information once again, Crusch was the first to speak again. Nodding at Garfiel's response, she turned back to Julius and Wilhelm.

Crusch: "In addition to those two, we believe that the Sin

Archbishop of Lust is also occupying the City Hall. I imagine that other Witch Cultists will make an appearance there as well. Have either of you heard much about Lust?"

Julius: "My apologies. As far as knowledge from the Royal Guards goes, no one has ever heard of Lust. Sloth and Greed are much more famous, and Subaru should be better suited to talk about Greed."

Halfway through speaking, Julius had turned to Subaru. Subaru nodded—

Subaru: "Having seen Greed for myself, I don't believe that the stories about him are a lie. But… that Empire. He took out their strongest Knight? I'm a bit skeptical about that. He's strong, but, in terms of combat prowess, he's such an amateur. I could match him. Although, he can negate any attack…"

Ricardo: "And that wasn't due to yer own strength?"

Subaru: "Not this time. The Sin Archbishop had a quarrel between them, and although Wrath engulfed Greed in flames, it didn't hurt him in the slightest. Even his clothing was untouched. He didn't even break a sweat."

Regulus's Authority could easily be dubbed as invincibility. How convenient. If that were true, then the City Hall Raiders would eventually be forced to face the worst of enemies. Although he wanted to believe that it was not such an unreasonable and straight-forward ability.

Subaru: "If only we also had our strongest, we wouldn't have to worry about it…"

Julius: "Reinhard would never be absent when innocent civilians are in such danger. I think that he may be facing a problem that leaves him unable to move. It is possible that, much like us, he has been caught in an encounter with other Witch Cultists."

Only Julius seemed to understand what was passing through Subaru's mind at the moment.

Prior to the start of all this, Felt and Reinhard had come into contact with Heinkel. He could only hope that the obnoxious idea which had taken root in his mind upon hearing about their meeting was wrong.

Subaru: “Other than that, there’s something that I want to confirm. The name Lust called herself, Capella Emerada Lugunica. Why would she possibly call herself part of the Lugunican Royal Family?”

Ricardo: “She’s gotta be jokin’. Everyone knows that the whole Royal Family has died.”

Crusch: “It might not be misinformation. It seems too premature to dismiss it as just a prank.”

Ricardo and Crusch gave Subaru differing opinions.

The Witch Cult being what it was, either possibility was worth considering. The poor character of this Lust could be clearly heard in her voice. A prank, as Ricardo had said, was likely indeed, but she could also prove to be an enigma.

However, in the face of those different proposals, Wilhelm raised a hand.

Wilhelm: “I do recall one thing.”

Subaru: “What is it?”

Wilhelm: “Although I do not know of any Capella, I have heard a little about the reputation of Emerada Lugunica. That does not necessarily mean that there is any direct connection… but there was indeed someone named Emerada in the history of the Royal Family of Lugunica.”

Subaru: “—!”

Surprised by this, everyone’s eyes grew wide as Wilhelm pondered with his hand to his chin.

Wilhelm: “Her name traces back to before the Demi-Human War, before I joined the army. So around fifty years ago. At the time, the Lugunica Royal Family had someone very beautiful and very clever by the name of Emerada-sama.”

Subaru: “And Lust called herself Emerada? For what purpose?”

Wilhelm: “As for her intentions, I do not know either. Only, I believe that Emerada-sama became ill at a young age. But… a state funeral was never held in her honor.”

Neglecting to hold a funeral for the death of a member of the Royal Family was somewhat strange. Subaru tilted his head, and Wilhelm attempted to explain.

Wilhelm: “The reason given was that the times were rough. However, the real reason was that public sentiment was against it.”

Subaru: “The people didn’t…?”

Wilhelm: “Although Emerada was beautiful and very intelligent, she… her nature was extremely cruel, and an immeasurable amount of darkness laid within her. Therefore, even the Royal Family of Lugunica regarded her as… a heretic. Even the news of her death was in fact hidden from the public for a while.”

With only an unconfirmed testimony, saying such dubious words about the Kingdom he had once served probably left a bitter taste on Wilhelm’s tongue. His words had begun to waver in the second half of his explanation.

And everyone had seen for themselves Lust’s terrible character.

Subaru: “I’m sure it’s not her… but Lust called herself Emerada…”

Wilhelm: “An attempt to slander the Royal Family of Lugunica, and some harassment in poor taste of those who know Emerada-sama’s name. I think it is a rather roundabout way to induce suspicion.”

The result of Wilhelm’s conclusion was a sigh of relief. Unlike those with little loyalty to the Kingdom such as Subaru, Garfiel, and Ricardo, the feelings of Crusch, Wilhelm, and Julius were unfathomable.

Such ungrateful, vicious ridicule toward the Royal Family was certainly not permissible.

Subaru: “In spite of that… Capella, Capella…”

Julius: “Any thoughts on that name?”

Julius turned his attention sharply as he spoke, noticing Subaru’s bitter expression.

Subaru: “Nothing, it’s just…”

After a brief pause, Subaru scratched his head as he continued.

Subaru: “It’s not just Capella. Regulus, and Sirius too. And come to think of it, even Petelgeuse… But it’s hard for me to believe it makes sense. It can’t be it.”

Garfiel: “Cut the crap, Captain. Tell us already. What’s so special ‘bout their names?”

Subaru: “It’s no big deal, but… It’s just, you could kinda say that they have the same names as the stars in my hometown, or something like that.”

Crusch: “Name of the stars, is it?”

In response to Subaru, Crusch widened her eyes, looking deeply interested. Seeing that everyone else shared her reaction, Subaru scratched his head.

Subaru: “Don’t give me strange looks, okay? In my hometown, all the stars were given names, and the Sin Archbishops just happen to share their names. I quite enjoy learning about the stars and their stories, so I know some extra details.”

Crusch: “Really, you have quite the unusual hobby. Stars, huh.”

Subaru: “Just so you know, my name, Subaru, also comes from the stars. But that’s not important right now. That’s all I have to say. Sorry if it’s boring.”

Feeling embarrassed, Subaru attempted to shake the inquisitive eyes of the ones staring at him. However, Crusch rejected Subaru's attempts to end the conversation.

Crusch: "Please wait, Subaru-sama. Is that all there is to those star names? It just so happens that their names are coincidentally the names of your stars, is that all?"

Subaru: "You think that's not all?"

Crusch: "For example, could the roots of their names be the names of the stars that Subaru-sama knows about? From the reason of their founding to the activities they carry out, everything about the Witch Cult is shrouded in many layers of mystery. We cannot easily discard something that they may share a connection with."

Subaru: "…"

Subaru, although surprised at Crusch's unexpected questioning, was still lost in his own thoughts. Really, Subaru had always believed that the star-related names had been mere coincidence. Why? This was, after all, a different world. There would be no reason for the names of the stars Subaru knew to have disseminated here.

But could he say so with absolute certainty?

In this very place, Priestella, Subaru had witnessed Japanese house architecture being replicated under the guise of Wafuu architecture. In Kararagi, the okonomiyaki, and perhaps even the Kansai dialect, were cultural landmarks established by Hoshin's own hand.

Perhaps the founding of the Witch Cult had some root in modern knowledge known to Subaru. To name the Sin Archbishops after stars was a tasteless endeavor, in practice.

Subaru: "Petelgeuse. Regulus. Sirius. Capella…"

Julius: "Correct. Subaru, you said there were anecdotes related to the names of the stars. What kind of stories are those? Maybe there is a connection somewhere."

Subaru: "Anecdotes, anecdotes…"

He dug through the thinning memories of his original world, recalling his fading knowledge about the stars.

He had once deeply loved celestial illustrations. Knowing that his name's origin laid in the stars, Subaru had greedily immersed himself in drawings of constellations and had engraved a great number of stars into his mind.

And among them, there was a star with the same name as the widely-detested Sin Archbishops.

Subaru: "The underarm of Orion, or the hand of Orion…"

Crusch: "Eh?"

Hearing the word "underarm" in a place she never would have imagined, Crusch tilted her head to the side. However, Subaru did not register her reaction, approaching her, and gripping and shaking her slender shoulders.

Subaru: "Hand of Orion! That's right! It's called the hand of Orion!"

Crusch: "Su-Subaru-sama? What… Orion's hand?"

Subaru: "Petelgeuse… the origin of his name is a star. His Authority was the Unseen Hand, and the star he was named after has another name, the hand of Orion!"

It was almost laughably far-fetched.

But were they only related by chance? Was it merely an amusing coincidence of symbolism?

Not Petelgeuse, but a star named Betelgeuse—that was a familiar name to Subaru. The small mismatch had been the reason he had yet to notice it.

Subaru: "Sirius is "the one who burns" and "the one who shines", and she can use Fire Magic, that's not subtle at all. At most it's literal… Regulus is the "little king". Isn't that exactly like that bastard's self-centered values?! And Capella is…!"

Crusch: “Capella is…?”

Subaru: “Female goat! A female goat! Capella’s a female goat!”

Digging through his memory, Subaru searched for some meaning relationship between the mythos of the stars and the Sin Archbishops. A smirk emerged on Subaru’s face, showing off his excitement in finding a meaning to the connections.

Instead, listening to Subaru’s answer, Crusch kept her brow pressed down while holding his shoulder. Then she looked to the other four people, who also wore complex expressions.

Julius: “Orion’s underarm?”

Wilhelm: “Something that shines?”

Ricardo: “Small king?”

Garfiel: “The hell’s a “female goat”?”

Subaru: “—Ah?”

At the reaction of the four people who tilted their heads, Subaru belatedly realized that his discovery was far more useless than he had first thought.

Crusch: “Subaru-sama, I apologize. It seems that my thoughts have led us astray.”

Yes, even Crusch looked sorry.

2

The attempt to relate the name of the stars, as well as their origin, and the names of the Sin Archbishops had failed spectacularly.

However, they had no time to spend lamenting that failure. No more time could be wasted before launching a blitzkrieg operation, in which time was of the essence. As a result, they attacked after their abilities and combat styles were shared and discussed between them.

To be on the safe side, the members of the Iron Fang, who had accompanied Julius and Crusch, had gone ahead as a scouting force, ensuring that the way to the City Hall was clear. The six of them would arrive safely.

Garfiel: “Yep, it’s just like last time, nothin’s changed…”

Nose twitching, Garfiel confirmed the lack of any new enemy presences. According to what he had said, he had been ambushed after crossing the road straight ahead, as he was about to enter the City Hall. But neither Garfiel’s nose nor Subaru’s eyes found the silhouettes he had mentioned.

If those were not present, they could just take the City Hall and move on. Just as Subaru wanted to celebrate a lack of enemies,

Garfiel: “…”

Garfiel equipped his shields in both hands, and Ricardo held his machete in a battle-ready stance. Wilhelm, on the other hand, eyed the whole of the plaza with the calmness of a tranquil lake. What would it mean, for those three, that there was no enemy in sight? In particular, Wilhelm surely had much he needed to confirm.

Julius: “This area is completely open. Although my Quasi Spirits have been sent to patrol it, they found no path we could sneak along. It seems that our only option is to approach directly.”

Julius had six Quasi Spirits following him. He had sent those to scout out their surroundings, then report back to the group. The location was especially unpleasant, as it was difficult to launch an offensive. And, likewise, was difficult to defend.

Subaru: “Can’t you send your Spirits inside to scout? Just knowing how many enemies there are and the building’s general layout would make our job that much easier.”

Julius: “Apologies, but my buds are still unable to perform an order that complicated. And it is possible that the enemy is not unable to detect the presence of Spirits, so that would be difficult.”

Subaru: “That wouldn’t be your fault. Still, that’s a shame, it would have been really helpful.”

Not knowing the circumstances inside the City Hall itself would mean that their turmoil would possibly escalate. That said, waiting would only cause the situation to worsen. Although the Witch Cult had claimed they were going to make a request during the next broadcast, there was no way they could negotiate with them.

Subaru: “Then, just as we planned. Although the enemy has combat effectiveness on their side, we’ll take one person at a time. We’ll handle this quickly, and then get rid of the guy who’s occupying this place!”

Julius: “Although that is optimistic thinking, I look forward to our success.”

Julius gave an ironic response to Subaru’s speech, and the party took off. Without needing a signal, they ran up the straight road, towards the plaza in front of the City Hall.

There was no sign of an enemy appearing from anywhere.

Garfiel ran in the lead, followed by Wilhelm and Julius. Ricardo followed them, and Crusch and Subaru held the rear. His right leg felt, for all intents and purposes, fine. Although it was in a strange state of feeling no sensations, he could run without hindrance.

Crusch: “—They’re here!”

Two figures fell upon Garfiel, who stood in the lead.

As the group witnessed the large blades and a slender longsword flutter in the air that composed the surprise attack, Crusch gave a courageous shout and drew her own weapon, at the rear.

—One Blow, One-Hundred Felled was unleashed.

The strike that was unleashed, cutting diagonally towards the enemy, was a special attack by Crusch, one that was augmented by her Divine Protection of Wind Reading. Anything within her field of vision, even at great distance, could be struck by one of her blades of wind. That was Crusch’s long range swordplay, which had even made a dent in the White Whale's magically enhanced defenses.

The sound of steel on steel rang out, and the giant and woman whirled away.

Subaru: "Did you get them?"

Crusch: "No, they deflected it! No hit!"

Her surprise attack to counter the surprise attack had failed to make contact.

Two black-garbed figures landed on the stone pavement, having dealt with the wind blade using their own steel blades, and turned around. Two giant blades, and a single-edged longsword. From top to bottom, they were indeed both clad in the despicable black garb of the Witch Cult.

The two figures did not show any side-effects from the previous attack. They tilted their bodies forward slightly, about to kick off from the ground. However, before that,

Julius: "Although you blocked Crusch-sama's blow, can you take this?"

Three different colors glowed from above, the light emitted by the Spirits pouring down upon the Witch Cultists. Julius's six Quasi Spirits, working in groups of three, cast a magic attack on the giant and woman both. That magical light, which Subaru had never seen before, applied an appalling pressure to the two opponent, the tremendous pressure forcing them to kneel.

As the enemy was unable to withstand that force, Garfiel and Wilhelm rushed the woman, while Ricardo swung his blade over his head as he leapt towards the giant.

Garfiel: "Take this!"
Wilhelm: "Haa—!"
Ricardo: "It's over!"

In a flash of silver, emanating an overwhelming pressure, the Sword Demon took off, aiming to run his blade across the opponent's body.

Ricardo's machete, driven by that uncanny physical strength held by the beastman, slashed down in a straight line, not to cut, but to smash the unprotected head. If they could strike a kill at this interval—

Woman: "…"

The kneeling woman turned her sword in her grip and slashed at Garfiel and Wilhelm's legs. They immediately dodged by leaping, but the woman followed with the same trajectory, twisting to stretch a leg around Garfiel's neck, moving him into the range of Julius's magic.

Garfiel: "Wha—"

Entering Garfiel's blind spot, the woman protected herself from any magical effects using Garfiel as a shield. Then, her knee shattered Garfiel's nose as she grabbed his left arm with her free hand and used his shield to block Wilhelm's slash.

At this profound display of skill, Garfiel cried out in pain, while Wilhelm cursed.

Breaking their stalemate, she delivered a roundhouse kick to the old swordsman, releasing Garfiel in the process. Although her movements should have been constrained, her blow was powerful enough to send Wilhelm flying. Just as he regained his balance, she had already made another half-turn on the spot, delivering a swift follow-up kick.

Giant: "…"

Meanwhile, Ricardo's attack had been stopped just short of the giant's head.

Still kneeling due to the magical effects cast by Julius, the giant had readily discarded the big swords he held in both hands to block the hatchet block that approached his skull. Then, he lifted his unguarded hands and brought them between his head and the hatchet.

Ricardo: "Idiot, it's over!"

As the obvious result of his flawed judgement, his arms would be severed.

Even though Ricardo's machete was blunt, it contained incredible momentum and power. The giant's thick arms were amputated by the impact of the blow and his upper arms flew through the air as black blood spewed forth.

Giant: "…"

Ricardo stepped back and swept his machete up, aiming to bring it upon the giant who had lost both of his arms. A slash powerful enough to knock down a gigantic tree would vaporize the giant's neck.

However, the giant simply used his extra arms to retrieve his broadswords from the stone pavement, deflecting the fatal blow with merely one of the swords.

Ricardo: "What?!"

A curtain of blood sprayed forth from the stumps of the giant's amputated arms, nullifying the effect of the magic that Julius had cast. Now freed, the giant was again capable of the agile action that betrayed his enormous form. Even though he had lost his arms in a split-second decision, he had the determination needed to discover the effects and the weaknesses of the magic spell, and act accordingly.

Ricardo gradually became unable to withstand the flurry of blades that followed. The giant was far too skilled with those titanic cleavers, and far too battle-hardened. Even though he had managed to knock away the pair of broadswords, Ricardo had one of the giant's other hands thrusted into his torso.

He groaned at the power of that blow, and another fist collided with his face, sending the beastman's burly body flying backward.

Woman: "…"

Giant: "…"

Against the three opponents who were now on the defensive, the woman and giant raised their weapons, weapons of special kind, with clear intent to kill.

The back line finally having caught up with those other three—

Julius: “Combination Magic, Fall Goa!”

Crusch: “Hit!”

Subaru: “Come on, please!”

Julius’s incantation ushered wind, and a shade of vermilion mixed with the vortex of air. The resulting tornado of flame swiftly met with the woman trying to chase Garfiel, the latter jumping back to safety.

Then, with overlapping voice almost resembling a prayer, Crusch’s wind blade and Subaru’s whip whistled through the air, striking the giant’s body. His huge form shook due to the diagonal slash, and a painful wound appeared on the giant’s chest, courtesy of the source of that shrill sound.

However, neither injury was a serious matter for him. Even so, they had succeeded in stopping the giant’s assault, and the fallen Ricardo kicked up at the giant’s jaw.

Ricardo: “Ha, ya were askin’ for it!”

Subaru: “Is this really the time to say that? Fall back, Ricardo!”

Carried by the momentum of the kick’s release, Ricardo spun backward, retrieving his hatchet and wiping his face of blood, before retreating to join with Crusch and Subaru, ready to confront the giant again.

Glancing to the side, and seeing that the woman had been enclosed in a tornado flame, Subaru’s eyes involuntarily widened.

Subaru: “What’s that?! You, you can actually use such spectacular magic?!”

Julius: “It is merely a bluff. I am not proficient enough to make it lethal just yet. And in fact…”

Julius replied bitterly, and the spectacle before their eyes confirmed his words. As the woman bathed in that tornado of flame, the sword in her hand flashed—and the heart of that wind was pierced by her slight movement. Unbalanced, the tornado collapsed and faded.

That woman’s elegant, peerless swordplay. And the giant’s own special physiology.

Subaru: “You’re kidding…”

The front of his black robe was opened, and the giant’s many arms were revealed. He nonchalantly picked his severed arms up from the ground and pressed them against his stumps, as blood and flesh knit with a sickening sound. A mere moment later, the giant’s formerly missing arms were reattached, with only scant traces of the injury remaining. As if confirming that healing, he took his large blades in them again, waving them around as if to test the feeling.

Both looked undefeatable.

Subaru: “By contrast, it’s clear that our blitzkrieg failed.”

Looking sideways, Garfiel and Wilhelm, who had escaped using Julius’s magic support, were receiving first-aid to their injuries, by way of Garfiel’s healing magic.

However, the reality set in that Garfiel and Wilhelm, working together, had been soundly defeated. That sense of despair could not easily be erased.

But it would be a mistake to say that their situation was completely hopeless.

Subaru: “Although close combat is unreliable… long-ranged attacks could still be effective.”

Julius’s magic, Crusch’s blade of wind, and even Subaru’s whip had connected. The last one would not be all that helpful, even if it had indeed worked, but the other two attacks certainly had a chance to turn the tide.

Subaru: "…"

At Subaru's comment and expectant gaze, both Julius and Crusch nodded.

Garfiel and Wilhelm also understood the power of their opponents in close combat. From the start, Ricardo had not held any designs to face either of them alone.

The melee fighters would interfere with their enemies' movement, and any gaps would be filled with magical attacks. This was likely the best way to minimize injuries and achieve victory.

The unity of the entire party would start the pace of the battle again. Then, at that moment,

???: "Chaotically, grudgingly, a mad triple-time! What kind of garbage pieces of meat like you can so foolishly, ugly, superficially dare to live? In the words of this elegant, patient lady—Kahahahaha!"

Abruptly piercing the battlefield was an inconspicuously sharp laugh.

However, upon hearing that voice, everyone understood that the appearance of its owner meant the situation had taken a turn for the worst. Therefore, Subaru shuddered and shifted his gaze around, searching for that figure.

Where was she? Where was that laughter coming from?

???: "Where are you looking, you dull, dimwitted pieces of shit? It's because of this foolishness~ that you can't be saved. Come one, open your filthy eyes wide, and think hard with your empty heads. Then maybe this gentle lady will show mercy to your filthy souls!"

Crusch: "—No way."

Next to Subaru, whose gaze swerved around, Crusch had drawn a hoarse breath. Her amber eyes were fixed overhead. With a sinking feeling of understanding, Subaru followed her gaze expecting to see Lust at the end of it.

Her line of sight pointed to the roof of the City Hall, far away. That place was the origin of the loud ridicule poured down upon them, as if the owner of that voice was looking down upon ants from a great height.

In fact, that was more or less the situation. That was because,

Capella: “Gahhahahahaha! Really, that face! That stupid face! Did you save it just for me? If so, it is such a wonderful imitation of a foolish ape that this kind lady would like to give you praise! Or would you prefer saliva? You’d be very happy with my precious saliva, right? For you pieces of rubbish, it must be a coveted treasure, right~?!”

Raucous laughter echoed through the air as Subaru glanced upward. The giant and swordswoman did not have the slightest reaction as an ally joined them against their fellow opponents.

On the battlefield, Lust appeared, and—

Capella: “Once more! This lovely lady is the Sin Archbishop of the Witch Cult, representing Lust—!”

—As the name of Lust was announced, a black dragon looked down upon them with a smile.

Capella: “—I am Capella Emerada Lugunica-sama! Die! You rotten slabs of meat!”

Chapter 34:
Chaotic Duel

—Standing on the rooftop of the City Hall, a black dragon flaunted its wings at Subaru's group below.

Opening its mouth to reveal rows of sharp teeth and a long, snaking red tongue, the black dragon narrowed its golden eyes, continuing to issue a laugh so high-pitched it caused physical pain.

That black dragon's appearance was more or less exactly how Subaru had imagined the dragon species. Patrasche's sharp and awe-inspiring face was very much dragon-like, but her mane and physique were not. Ground dragons were, on average, comparable in size to a horse, while the dragon overhead was closer to an elephant.

With that figure, the black dragon could not possibly be capable of flight. Perhaps its strong wings merely served as a bluff.

Yes, flight should've been impossible.

Capella: "Being ravished by your heated gazes isn't exciting at all, you meat creatures in heat! Ahhhhh, this is awful, being seen by people like you who can only think of sexual gratification! So I won't approach you!"

Fanning its wings towards the ground, a gust of wind enough to make one's body tremble whipped forth. A long tongue flitting outward as if licking its lips, the black dragon—Capella gave a twisted smile.

That dragon's expression was incredibly chilling. Because of the language barrier, communication was heavily dependent on interpretation. Patrasche was a good example of that. She came off as quite likable, because of her gracious attitude to not let emotions show on her face.

On the other hand, one could not help but be disgusted by the dragon in front of them, for how human-like it behaved.

Subaru: “…I haven’t heard any mentions of this before, but can dragons speak?”

Julius: “As they have lived for a long time, dragons are extremely intelligent and can understand human language. As a matter of course, it seems that the Divine Dragon Volcanica, who forged a Covenant with the Kingdom, can of course communicate with us through language. Even though… I do not know if it would reveal this much emotion.”

Julius, from a distance, gave a detailed answer to Subaru’s question. The Finest of Knights had his blade raised at shoulder-height, eyes never leaving the black dragon. Of course, Subaru and the other four were in the same state.

In front of them were two swordsmen of outstanding strength, and above, there was the black dragon who had named herself the Archbishop of Lust. Their original unease had compounded into a wall of tension.

Subaru: “At the least, we have a chance of dealing with the swordsmen…”

The woman, wielding her longsword with nary a flaw in posture, and the giant, who waved his swords around, as if refamiliarizing himself with the blades. Although the extent of the swordswoman’s strength was still unknown, the giant had chosen to directly take Ricardo’s attack. Needless to say, it was not because of any clumsiness, but because he had a strategy in mind, knowing that any damage would be regenerated. Long-range attacks, their earlier plan, would still be incredibly effective.

However, that would only work if all six people tried their best to have the attack connect.

Subaru: “Is there anyone here who’s fought a dragon…?”

Wilhelm: “—Yes.”

Subaru: “Wilhelm-san, seriously?”

Although Subaru had thought his question hopeless, Wilhelm had responded with a low voice. The old swordsman turned to face the surprised Subaru.

Wilhelm: “Nearly forty years ago, I was sent to subjugate a Blight Dragon named Valgren who appeared to Lugunica’s south. The concentration of forces caused much diplomatic tension because of the proximity to Vollachia.”

Subaru: “Setting the diplomatic ramifications aside, how was the experience of fighting a dragon?”

Wilhelm: “Ten-percent of the Knights’ Order, which totaled five-hundred, were sent to the battle against Valgren, and, although the crusade succeeded, forty-percent of those Knights died. The crusade succeeded, but the result was a disaster. Its fiery breath, its endless stamina, and the vulnerability of a swordsman in midair are all things that we should have taken into better consideration.”

Subaru: “It would seem that our situation is even more desperate…!”

Seeing Subaru’s despair, Wilhelm prefaced with an “Although,”

Wilhelm: “Valgren was one of the most difficult beings to fight, truly worthy of being called a Dragon. Compared to it, this one is too small to be called a Dragon. It should die upon beheading.”

Subaru: “And Valgren did not?”

Wilhelm: “Valgren had a total of three heads which all needed to be removed.”

Having finished speaking of that distant tango of death, Wilhelm tightened his grip on his sword.

So a beheading would certainly kill it. That was reassuring.

Seeing Wilhelm’s well-prepared stance, Subaru also took up a battle pose, whip in hand. Seeing their refusal to yield, the black dragon Capella seemed rather surprised.

Capella: “My, my, my, you’re all so disgusting. You’re beaten and miserable, and, aside from my reinforcements, you’re facing a Sin Archbishop! You rotten creatures should hang your heads and channel the meekness of insects, and yet you’re acting all normal? Was putting you with all the other insects wrong? Gahahahaha!”

Garfiel: “Stop fuckin’ around! What can ya do’gainst our numbers? My amazin’ self’ll go up there ‘n crush ya!”

Capella: “Kahhahahaha, the barking of this rabid dog is hurting my graceful ears. Or, rather, I made a mistake. You’re no rabid hound, you’re only a puny kitten! Meow~ meow~ meow~ meow~, don’t be angry just because the kitty you were with died!”

Garfiel: “Wh-Wha—Hk?!”

Faced with those cruel jabs, Garfiel shouted, but choked on his own response.

The dragon was clearly referring to Garfiel’s earlier defeat, where he had almost been beaten to death. This, added to the details of what had happened to Mimi, meant that Capella had been watching the fight. And, what surprised Garfiel even more,

Garfiel: “Bastard, how did y’know my amazin’ self’s a demi-human…”

Capella: “Haa? How do I know that? Don’t think so highly of yourself, not even a single one of your hairs interests me. I could tell that you were a filthy half-breed the moment I saw you! If you’re not making a mockery out of me, then you’re a fool! Too stupid to die!”

Spitting out unspeakably cruel curses, Capella turned toward the rest of their party, snorting,

Capella: “Such stench! Such stench! You slabs of meat all smell rotten! Wrinkled old meat! Meat that feigns cleverness! Hairy beast meat! Ah, disgusting! Oops, but—”

Capella, constantly giving her toxic comments, turned her gaze slightly—in Crusch’s direction.

A sticky, feverish light entered her squinted eyes as she poured all her attention upon Crusch, who subconsciously hugged herself tightly. When Capella spoke again, her voice was almost pleasant.

Capella: “But mixed with all that refuse is quite the piece of meat! So beautiful, so cute, such a nice scent, perfectly in line with my tastes! It looks immoral! What beauty! That body! That appeal! Ah, I reallyreallyreally want to break it with my own two hands!”

Julius: “—That’s enough.”

Capella: “Ahh?”

Had she become completely fascinated? Her expression trance-like, the black dragon stared towards Crusch, as if wanting to lick her from top to bottom.

At this moment, the rising pressure of anger interjected to interrupt her.

Capella: “…”

Her attention still fixed on Crusch, the black dragon looked up impatiently.

And before her wide-open eyes, Julius entered the scene, waving the tip of his sword much like an orchestra’s conductor.

Julius: “Be burned by my sixfold light, El Prailium!”

Julius’s six Quasi Spirits formed a circle overhead, each gleaming with a different color as they fired a multi-color beam of light downwardward. The rainbow beam turned white at the point of impact—Capella, and she began to scream because of the direct hit.

Capella: “—Gaaaaaaaaah!!”

Julius: “This is the price of your chatter. If you had any real skill, you wouldn’t spout such nonsense.”

Obeying Julius’s command, the Quasi Spirits continually fired that scorching light.

With Capella's piercing scream serving as background music, the two swordsmen who had been silent and still, suddenly kicked off the slate ground, flying towards Subaru's group.

Wilhelm: "Stop there!"

Garfiel: "Like hell ya won't!"

Here, Garfiel and Wilhelm both spoke up.

Wilhelm flew straight for the swordswoman, while Garfiel faced the giant' twin blades with his own twin shields.

Woman: "…"

Wilhelm: "Don't leave, show me your swordplay!"

As she began to retreat after meeting his first blow, Wilhelm cut her off with a sudden strike.

The old swordsman's breakthrough struck up and down with the violence of a storm. The length of her longsword was not proper to quick action, which served her defense poorly as Wilhelm lashed out rapid strike after strike.

Even so, the woman also proved fearsome. She cleverly shied away from any swing that she was unable to parry with precise foot placement, and smoothly, with practiced ease, she regained her balance.

Each time her whirling sword stabbed forth it became more apparent that the female swordsman's body was molded to hold the sword she was using.

Wilhelm's skill had been enough for him to challenge the White Whale, and even now he still stood at that level, but the woman's outstanding talent and skill was enough to press Wilhelm back.

Wilhelm: "Gooooooh!"

Woman: "…"

Issuing a roar, with momentum smooth as silk, Wilhelm's rotation of cuts and swings increased in speed.

Who would laugh at the old man now? His swordplay was the pinnacle of swordsmanship, his sword would captivate the eyes of many younglings, who would be inspired to pick up the blade and follow his example. His blade a mere flash, it killed the air itself, it killed the ground itself, aiming to embed the tip of the blade into the woman's body.

Still silent, the woman was prepared to withstand each strike of the old man's blade, which had been sharpened for years. Without words, without righteousness, the woman was like a doll whose only purpose was battle. A doll that swung its sword according to the rotation of its gears, according to the fighting genes engraved in her body. She killed the air, she killed the sky, she killed the ground itself, and mercilessly parried away the blades approaching her.

A quiet swordfight, that did not seem to be purely a battle of steel against steel.

Her sword must have been light. Much lighter than the old man's. However, each side's swordplay was clean and pure, and aside from strikes on their respective targets, no unnecessary destruction happened.

That was the beautiful realm of the sword, a most honorable one to reach, for the beings who lived the life of a swordsman and of using the blade.

Wilhelm: "Haaaa!"

Woman: "…"

The two waged their silent battle with repeated collisions, their swords only being seen as flashes.

—This was the sacred realm of the sword itself, and intruders could not be tolerated.

Not far away, another battle unfolded.

Garfiel: “Oooooooooooh!”

Giant: “…”

Roaring, muscles flexing, earth being trodden, and—a hit on flesh echoed.

Struck with dizziness, ignoring the hit he had suffered, roaring at the feeling of hitting back his opponent, spitting out bloody vomit due to the feeling of having his internal organs crushed, rebelling against his opponent’s power to pulverize his very bones.

Unlike the elegant duel taking place next to them, the battle between Garfiel and the giant was one marked by chaos.

Although the giant could be called a swordsman, his fighting style was different from what that would imply. Not sophisticated at all, it was irrational as a barbarian’s or a mindless beast’s.

Garfiel: “Hah, kuu, ah!!”

Correspondingly, Garfiel also fought without a sense of etiquette.

Garfiel’s fighting style was wild and animalistic. Due to Subaru’s influence, he had named it Garfiel Battle Shield Style. It was an absurd sort of violence that only Garfiel, who relied on instinct, could perform—it could not be imitated by anyone.

In fact, Garfiel’s violence and the giant’s barbarianism really meshed well with one another. This savage, straight-forward duel was one of stamina—the battler who reached their limit first would lose. Therefore, the victor and the defeated would become apparent for all to see.

Giant: “…”

The giant’s swords were so incredibly heavy that receiving them with only one arm would surely shatter Garfiel’s elbow, so he needed to use both his arms to deal with them. However, if both arms were used, nothing could be done about the other giant sword, which meant a direct hit.

Therefore, Garfiel needed to decisively use his shields to parry those swings. Holding them obliquely, his arm blocked the massive sword, but allowed it to slide along the shield with its momentum, thus deflecting it.

Frighteningly, the giant was not merely wielding its swords wildly and blindly. That barbarian style of battling was savage, but his strikes were shockingly direct and powerful.

That could not be achieved with talent alone. That was skill that could only be acquired after the giant had clearly practiced tens of thousands, tens of millions of swings. Taking those straight swords with a half-baked block would surely be impossible. With the slightest of wrong moves, the giant sword would cleave the silver shield in half despite its bluntness, and Garfiel's body would resemble that broken shield.

Garfiel: "Don't… kid 'round… no more—!"

Therefore, Garfiel had to do everything possible to combat the violence of those large swords.

As they slashed from above, he parried. As they swept from the sides, he parried. As they swung up from below, he parried. Then, from a gap, his arm took a punch, forcing Garfiel to retreat.

The problem was that, in addition to two powerful hands waving large swords, the giant had another six arms. Garfiel's defense could be punctured with a third attack, and the giant had started using not two, but three hands to grasp those swords.

Garfiel had the advantage in speed, but that giant's strength and versatility was far superior.

As his chin was struck, he parried a massive sword, and his knees were kicked, sending his face plummeting toward the ground. Four more blows followed this, but Garfiel caught himself as he fell, and finally managed to block the incoming overhead slash by planting his feet firmly on the ground.

Blood, broken bones, and bitter cries, those were what this savage battlefield was filled with.

The blood of the people watching boiled, and they could not help but shout. The sound emitted by the clashing of shields and swords was akin to various percussion instruments being struck, and the sparks flying around akin to the fireworks of a live concert.

Subaru: "…"

On one side was Wilhelm's quiet duel, and on the other was Garfiel's roaring war.

Subaru and Crusch held their breaths, unable to join either battle. That was not due to any inability—rather, they were too shocked by the fighting spirit from both sides to react.

However, unlike Subaru, who was submerged in such emotions,

Ricardo: "This is bad, we have to act soon."

Ricardo, who had been surveying Julius's magic overhead, took a step forward. Seeing Ricardo's movement, Subaru issued a "Right" and also began to move, but—

Crusch: "Subaru-sama!"

Ricardo: "Get down!"

Feeling a sudden yank on his collar, Subaru found himself being dragged to the ground by Crusch. Ricardo stood in front of the two, shielding them, releasing a ferocious roar.

Ricardo: "WAAA, HAAAA—!!"

The roar created fierce sound waves which shook the atmosphere, creating an invisible force of destruction.

This roaring wave was an attack of the same quality as the one Mimi and her younger brothers had used against the White Whale. This was an incredibly powerful skill that had noticeably injured it, and Ricardo had just now unleashed it completely on his own.

But, beaten back by the roar was—a glowing black flame that had broken through the white light, and swept the ground. The jet-black flames rippled frighteningly, causing the hearts of those who witnessed them to tremble from its horrifying nature, rather than its heat, as everything they touched crumbled to dust. The black flames that were intercepted by the roar's soundwaves were dispersed with ease, being scattered all over the square.

However, the real horror of those flames was only discovered after they hit the ground.

Subaru: "That fire… isn't going out…?"

Black ash fell to the slate ground, still burning, without any sustenance. Despite this, the flames continued to burn, spreading to the surroundings. Even more scary was the fact that any fire that had fallen on the surface of the water also continued to burn. Like dripping burning oil into the water, the fire continued to assert its existence.

Ricardo: "Bro, how long're ya plannin' to stay like that? Really, doesn't this kinda thing usually happen in reverse?"

Julius: "Subaru, no matter how you look at it, being protected by a woman is…"

Ricardo and Julius both offered discouraging words to Subaru, who was still recovering from the terror of the scattered black fire. Following their line of sight, Subaru discovered he was laying on the ground, with Crusch on top of him, shielding him from any damage.

Subaru: "Waaah!"

Crusch: "I am glad that you are unhurt. Please rest assured, I shall refrain from telling Ferris and Emilia about this."

Subaru: "I feel even more ashamed for feeling relieved!"

Crusch pulled him to his feet, decreasing Subaru's coolness factor by another ten-percent.

Patting the dust off his bottom, Subaru looked up towards the source of the black flame—obviously, the black dragon, and he frowned. He could sense nothing from her but a sense of disgust.

Capella: “Disgusting, disgusting, don’t look at me with such an aroused gaze! Stop looking, don’t violate me with your dirty eyes! Kahahahaha! It’s like they say, you’re forbidden from stroking any dancers who perform for you, so stop ravishing this charming lady! Gahahaha!”

Subaru: “What the hell…”

Despite taking Julius’s magic head-on, Capella acted as if nothing had happened.

However, that was not to say that she had not suffered any harm. In fact, she had suffered considerable visible damage from his attack. The proud dragon’s right wing had been scorched until it was no more than a hanging, bloodied piece of flesh. Perhaps she had wanted to use the wing to protect her body, but the damage meant that even that had failed.

The power of that spell had burned through the black dragon’s wings, reaching her body. Her abdomen had been scorched and melted, and her innards seemed to have been boiled until they looked like jerky. The right side of the dragon’s head had been blown off, and the tongue that enjoyed ridiculing others had been severed. Her eye dangled freely, no longer resting in its socket.

Half-dead would not suffice to describe it. It was nothing but a corpse.

Subaru audibly swallowed, Julius and Ricardo frowned, and Crusch could not help but give a feminine gasp. However, that was not because of the dragon’s horrific state.

—Instead, it was due to that injured flesh regenerating.

Blood vessels wriggled, flesh swelled, bones squeaked, torn fibers sewed themselves together, and Capella’s destroyed body regenerated at an alarming rate.

In a bizarre scene, the impossible heat given off by her regeneration evaporated any remaining traces of blood, creating red steam.

Capella: “Now, having seen even my beautiful internal organs, are you satisfied? You perverts are so full of carnal desire that you even want to see the asshole of your favorite piece of meat, aren’t you? Gahahaha! Satisfied? Hey, were you so satisfied you started leaking?”

Subaru: “How… what happened?”

Capella: “Shouldn’t you be able to tell on sight? Do you actually have to ask? How foolish are you? But this benevolent lady shall answer you. As you can see, I’m obviously immortal!”

Immortal—the simplest, most absolute description of her power.

Subaru could not help but gulp at Capella’s description of her own power. The thought that she was bluffing crossed his mind. He did not want to believe her words, so it would be comforting to think that she was bluffing.

Subaru: “It’s nothing but a quick regeneration ability…”

Capella: “Call it whatever you want. I’m amazing, and those who call it “invincibility” are idiots. I don’t think that they’re far from the truth, though.”

Subaru: “…”

Capella: “My my my, you’re unable to even talk anymore! You disgusting rotten pieces of shit! You putrid filthy meat! Go die! Everyone except me should go die—Wait! Wait! Wait!”

Suddenly, Capella interrupted her own hateful words. She unfurled her healed wings and fluttered them, slowly bringing her bulky form toward the roof of the City Hall.

Thinking that she was preparing to swoop upon them, Subaru braced himself for her attack. However—

Capella: “Time’s up, I have to go make the next broadcast, so I’ll go back inside. Talking to you is just a waste of time, and I'm in a hurry! You all just stay here and die, along with that rather lovely piece of meat! Go rot in hell!"

Subaru: "H-Huh?"

Suddenly losing interest, Capella yawned, dropping the tension. Then she—albeit it wasn't really certain if you could call the dragon a "she"—Capella turned around and strode into the depths of the City Hall with heavy footsteps, where Subaru lost sight of her.

He could not help but consider whether that was meant to lure her enemies deeper in or not—

Julius: "She might be trying to lure us in, don't you think…? But we cannot allow her to make that broadcast."

Subaru: "If we let her go, people in the city are gonna start panicking. Shit, do we have to go inside and chase her like this?!"

He had a bad feeling about it.

In the first place, with that size, how did Capella enter the inside of the City Hall? Although he did not know how large the broadcast room was, it seemed that Capella would destroy the room with the slightest of movements. Or perhaps she had the Witch Cultists set the Magical device up so all she needed to do was to speak. But he did not have the time to consider that right now.

Ricardo: "Aight, leave the guys on the outside to those two and me. Ya rush inside with Julius-niichan and Crusch-jouchan."

Ricardo gave instructions to Subaru and the others. Subaru replied with a quizzical gaze, hoping that there was some rationale for that decision.

Ricardo: "Don't be like that. These swordsmen are a tad too much for you and Crusch-jouchan, and I ain't suited for indoor action. Julius-niichan shouldn't have a single problem with that. Don't'cha think?"

Julius: "A very apt judgment. I would have made a similar decision.

To be honest, I would be rather worried leaving only Wilhelm and Garfiel here, so I shall leave that up to you, Ricardo.”

Ricardo: “Leave it to me, kiddo!”

Julius and Ricardo nodded to each other, with no time for Subaru and Crusch to interject. Being from the same faction, perhaps they could communicate their intent with only a glance. Subaru was unable to protest, so, scratching his head,

Subaru: “Garfiel! You’re absolutely not allowed to lose! After you send that guy flying and we defeat Lust, we’re going to go save Emilia, you hear me?!”

Garfiel: “Captain, I ain’t got time to deal wit’cha right now!”

Subaru spoke to Garfiel, who was still engaged in his chaotic war, and nodded to Julius. Next to him, Crusch lifted a hand towards her mouth, aiming her voice in Wilhelm’s direction.

Crusch: “Wilhelm, I shall leave it to you!”

Wilhelm: “As you command!”

Wilhelm gave a brief response to his master’s brief words.

A true master and vassal exchange only required those brief words. Having shown her intent to go along with the plan, Crusch joined Subaru, and, led by Julius, they charged towards the City Hall.

Leaving the central square, the three ran towards the interior of the City Hall. The two figures guarding the tower responded to their movement, forgoing their current opponents for Subaru’s group.

Ricardo: “Standing in a line like this makes things easier for me, HAA—!”

His ferocious laugh created destructive sound waves which swept up the stones of the pavement, and the giant and woman faltered at the attack. Although the power of the roaring waves had begun to diminish, they were still effective enough to halt the two. Behind them, their respective dance partners caught up, speaking words of discontent.

Wilhelm: “How discourteous, ignoring me when I only have eyes for you!”

Garfiel: “Don’t turn yer ass to yer opponent unless ya want it gone, ORAAAAA!”

Woman: “…”

Giant: “…”

Slashing and slicing, striking and stabbing, the chaotic duels in the square continued, fierce battles which allowed for no outside intervention.

While hearing the sounds of those ferocious battles, Subaru and his group rushed towards the front entrance of the City Hall, waltzing inside without even slowing down.

Subaru: “Where would the broadcasting room be?”

Crusch: “I do not know for certain, but I assume it would be at the uppermost level, for the voice to reach as far as possible.”

Julius: “There may be ambushes along the way, be careful!”

Past the main entrance, they arrived at the reception lobby of the City Hall.

In times of peace, that place should have been crowded, with a pretty lady providing a reception service and bright lights coloring the scene. But now, it appeared to have been ransacked, the lights of the place dimmed to create an ominous atmosphere.

Fortunately, there were no other Witch Cultists occupying this level, nor were there corpses strewn across the room, so—

Subaru: “Come on, let’s go. There should be some kind of floor map telling us where the room is!”

Julius: “If we can, I would also like to confirm the safety of the City Hall’s staff, although that does appear to be too greedy right now…”

Subaru: “What’s…”

He checked the help desk and confirmed that no one was hiding there, then pointed to the stairs. Julius responded without a word, glaring at the back of the lobby, and gently shook his head. Crusch followed him with a frown, and, upon tracing his gaze, her expression was filled with horror. Seeing her reaction, Subaru went around the reception and joined the two—and placing his gaze upon the same thing, held his breath.

???: “…”

With dragging, pitter-pattering steps, a figure appeared. Peeking around the stairs, a child wearing a mischievous smile emerged.

At first glance, he only looked like a child. A petite physique, a childlike face, evoking an image of youthfulness. However, those ideas were only present until taking notice of the boy's eyes.

His dark-brown hair hung loose, and his body was wrapped with a single cloth, giving him a rather grim appearance. With a devilish smile on his little face, his eyes looked as if they contained all the poisons in the world, with decaying glows and toxic liquids—they were, of course, not the eyes of a decent human being.

And, in the present circumstances, it was evident what was wrong with him.

Kid: "So happy, very happy, so very happy, so very very happy, because of this happiness, such happiness, incredible happiness, such incredible happiness, such incredibly incredible happiness, deserves! Drinking! Gluttony-! The longer you wait for something, the hungrier you get! So the first bite must be delicious to make up for it!"

Pleased, happy from the bottom of his heart, the barefoot boy marched as if dancing to a beat.

As he spoke, he revealed a snaggletooth, a canine too long that was peeping from his mouth. Seeing that image, that attitude, that exaggerated speech, Subaru's mind began to boil.

If this was not just his imagination, if this boiling rage did indeed exist, then this was—

Subaru: "You, kid. If you're just some naughty kid who was left behind while playing hide-and-seek, then confess that right away. If that's really the case, we'll forgive you and let you go. Otherwise, hurry up and give your name."

Kid: "Hahaha, what do you mean, onii-chan? You look mad. Are you someone with a grudge against us or something, by any chance? If we could remember, we would, but we're stupid and have bad memory…”

Speaking in a low voice, Subaru deliberately endured the desire to raise his voice. And, as if deliberately provoking Subaru, the kid twisted his juvenile face into a mocking smile.

Kid: “Are you sure that attitude is really meant for us? Or is it for someone that isn’t us?”

Subaru: “That’s enough. I can see that you are—my enemy!”

Kid: “We are a Sin Archbishop of the Witch Cult, representing Gluttony, Roy Alphard.”

Subaru: “GLUTTONY—!!”

As soon as the child claimed to be Gluttony, Subaru struck with his whip. Slashing through the air, his whip mercilessly cut through the wind on its journey towards his enemy’s face. However—

Roy: “Well, it’s not uncommon to face people who want a bite of us.”

—His teeth biting the end of the whip, Gluttony spoke brazenly.

Chapter 35:
Ambushes and Surprises

1

Subaru’s first merciless strike had been blocked by teeth.

Subaru: “…”

Biting the front end of the whip, dancing as if deliberately intending to infuriate, was Roy Alphard of Gluttony.

Alphard, too, was a sound Subaru was familiar with.

Subaru: “This bastard also shares the name of a star—Hk!”

Crusch: “Subaru-sama, that topic is over! Allow me to engage him!”

As Subaru raised his arm for another brutal blow of his whip, Alphard drew his own weapon. At the same time, Crusch unleashed her Hundred Man Strike. A frenzied blade of wind instantly swept through the lobby of the City Hall, bisecting chairs and the reception desk.

Of course, the cut should also have ruthlessly sliced up Alphard, but —

Roy: “Wow, awesome! But although this one looks tough…”

Crusch: “—Eh?!”

The boy, as if seeing the invisible blade of wind, bent over backward to avoid it. Like a bridge, his head rested on the floor briefly, before he flipped backward.

With that action, he assumed a battle-ready pose, crouching with his face raised.

Roy: “As an attack, since allies’d be caught up in it, that was a rather third-rate tactic. It doesn’t seem all that delicious!”

With that, Alphard kicked the ground, his body flying forward like a bullet.

His mouth opened to expose rows of sharp teeth resembling a hound's. Coupled with his appearance, people would mistakenly think he was a straggly wild dog. Only, a wild dog's danger level could never compare.

Crusch brought her sword up to meet him, attempting to behead him with a downward slash, but—

Roy: "Good muscles, but not polished enough! To us, you're not even a beginner!"

Crusch: "—Ah!"

As he waved his right hand, Crusch's sword bounced away with a sharp sound. At a closer look, there was a cloth wrapped around Alphard's wrists, and tangled up in those were twin daggers, one in each hand. Weapons that took advantage of the speed and flexibility of his thin, small body to fight.

The one dagger that had parried away her sword, the left one, swept towards Crusch's throat. Although she immediately twisted her body to avoid it, Alphard flipped through the air around her shoulder, and kicked her in midair to blow her away.

Crusch: "Wha—!"

Subaru: "Crusch-san!"

Roy: "It's not the time for you to be looking over your shoulder. In fact, you're the easiest target!"

Alphard stomped on the ground, flying at Subaru, who was still distracted by the sight of Crusch sliding on the floor. In the dim lighting, the thin figure of Gluttony, wrapped in rags, disappeared in the darkness, and Subaru lost sight of his figure—

Subaru: "Not good…"

Julius: "The perfect decoy, as evidenced by his track record with Sloth.”

Roy: “Wha—?!”

Aiming at Subaru, who was full of openings, Alphard had revealed an opening of his own.

Subaru, keenly aware of his own powerlessness, had once sworn to himself that no matter the situation, he would not let his blood rush to his head and act hastily. Biting his lip, he grounded himself with the pain, giving their most powerful party member an opportunity to strike.

And Julius’s piercing strike silently approached that small body.

Alphard immediately managed to twist in midair to evade, but his body was still cut down by the Finest of Knights, red blood spraying out, Gluttony’s body rolling onto the floor.

Roy: “Ugh! Woah, surprising—”

Julius: “Then, how about another surprise. Bloom, my buds!”

As Julius spoke, his Quasi Spirits began another barrage of attacks as Alphard bounced back to his feet, then darted away. At that moment, rainbow iridescence filled the dim hall, an aurora blossoming forth from Julius’s back, aiming at Gluttony.

Roy: “A Spiritual Arts User!”

Julius: “I hope one such as you, who appreciates gourmet, will enjoy. No matter which bud, I am proud to enjoy the bloom of these child flowers.”

Roy: “Awful, they’re pretentious, we don’t like them!”

Seeing the world burning in the aurora, Alphard spoke as he escaped high. Julius’s thin sword followed his back, hunting down Alphard with a flurry of sword strikes from all directions, who attempted to escape with a sideways jump.

Julius: “—Lolimancer!”

Subaru: “Don’t call me by that name! Juli!”

Julius: “Take Valkyrie with you to the top floor! Stop the broadcast!”

Hiding away each other’s names, Julius declared that he would hold off Alphard.

While supporting a wheezing Crusch, Subaru judged this as the most reasonable course of action, but he could not quite agree with it.

That boy, mocking them as he darted around was, after all, Gluttony. The enemy who Subaru had pursued for over a year. Saying that defeating him was one of Subaru’s top priorities would be no exaggeration.

And even though he was right there—

Crusch: “I-I understand. Juli-sama, I will pray for your blade to be swift and true.”

Subaru: “—Hk.”

However, before Subaru could protest, Crusch climbed to her feet and gave her response to Julius. Subaru suddenly raised his face, seeing hers full of resolve.

Crusch was another victim of Gluttony, having been robbed of her memories. Of course, she had also wanted to seize this chance to retrieve her memories. Even so, she assumed her own responsibility and entrusted the fight against Gluttony to others.

Even setting aside those feelings, she was also well-aware of her own lack of strength. Ironically enough, both Subaru and Crusch were being pressed for choice at the same time as they stood up.

Roy: “So what’s going to happen? How are we doing it? Are we all going together? Even the disappointing woman and scummy man can be served as appetizer. Then, Juli-sama, we’ll eat him, swallow him, nibble him, lick him, taste him, swallow him, bite him, bite him into pieces, into pieces, and devour! Gluttony-!”

Julius: “Don’t say anything unnecessary. I didn’t become Juli in vain!”

Alphard still wore a smile and a relaxed attitude, in the narrow space limited by that aurora. Julius pursued victory, the dancing strikes of their swords producing steel sounds.

But during all of that, Julius’s and Subaru’s eyes caught for a moment. That gaze did not convey anything to Subaru by itself, but —

Subaru: “Ah, fuck it! Listen! Bastard, you absolutely can’t lose!”

Julius: “That is what I should say. Losing is not acceptable, and neither is dying. No, you absolutely cannot die here.”

Crusch: “Let’s go, Lolimancer-sama!”

Scratching his head, Subaru set aside his feelings for the time being and started running. Although he should have at least sprinted in front of Crusch, in truth, and much to his own shame, she could react to any surprise attack much faster than he could.

Subaru chased behind the still-wounded Crusch, and they both sprinted up the next flight of stairs. Before leaving, he took one last look at Julius’s and Alphard’s fight in the lobby. Julius seemed to have the advantage, but he could not let his guard down.

Julius: “Go!”

Subaru: “—Crap!”

Aware of Subaru’s gaze, Julius did not permit him to worry about his own status.

Although he was incredibly annoying, the idea of something happening to him was troublesome. Subaru turned to follow Crusch, bounding up the stairs in one breath.

Knowing that something might be lying in ambush, they immediately took another flight of stairs, heading towards the topmost room. And on the way there, Crusch: “Subaru-sama, I must apologize. If I am not mistaken, your priority should be Gluttony…”

Subaru: “Stop it, Crusch-san. Nobody thinks it’s your fault.”

While keeping watch on the situation upstairs, Crusch softly let out an apology. However, Crusch should have also been frustrated. Being apologized to would not heal the wounds either of them had. And he did not want to blame himself, if he were apologized to.

Subaru: “…I’m sorry, Rem. Please wait a little longer.”

Voicing the name of the girl who was still sleeping in the mansion, Subaru let out a heartfelt expression of regret.

In fact, he would like to run back right now and tear that sneering, malicious Sin Archbishop limb from limb. If that brought her back, what would be wrong with it?

The turmoil that would ensue would shake up the lives and deaths of many people. The consequences would be much easier to take in if he were a simple-minded person, unable to think ahead about these issues.

Although, he knew that if he did that, Rem would probably be angry with him upon waking up.

Crusch: “…”

Crusch said nothing to Subaru, who held his breath and repressed the emotions building up inside him. He just closed his eyes, expressing regret for his own apology, and they resumed their march with her at the forefront.

The City Hall was a five-story building, and Subaru and Crusch were already on the fourth floor. There were conference rooms and archive rooms for paperwork on the middle floors, and from a quick check on the information displayed at each landing, it was safe to assume that the broadcasting room was located on the top floor. In other words—

Subaru: “Lust is also gonna be there…”

Crusch: “Yes, that is true. But, considering the size of this corridor, would she really…?”

Peeking into the corridor on the fourth floor, Crusch raised her eyebrows in suspicion. Her question was natural, and Subaru held the same question.

The corridor of the fourth floor was only wide enough for four people to walk side-by-side, at most. Albeit a guess taken at a distance, the black dragon looking down at the square seemed to be as large as an elephant. It was very hard to imagine that it would be able to fit into the corridors in the building.

Of course, there was the possibility that, instead of ascending through the corridors, it had just destroyed the wall and forced its body into the room.

Crusch: “What do you think?”

Subaru: “At least, I don’t think there’s gonna be an ambush in the corridors. Crusch-san, do you agree with this? I think the real problem is an ambush at the broadcasting room, but… it’s been so long since they went inside. I’m sure that they’re setting something up.”

Crusch: “…Yes, I agree with you. I am certain that they are preparing an ambush in the broadcasting room.”

Subaru: “There’s no doubt that’s where they’ll be. However, the people who were supposed to be in the City Hall have not been found so far. If we’re not careful, then this hostage situation will…”

The more he thought about it, the number of bad situations coming to his mind increased.

It was not the kind of problem that would be solved with just martial prowess. Crusch’s fighting power was, as stated by herself, average, and she could not be relied upon to use magic. Subaru’s ability was also decreased because of Beatrice’s departure from the frontlines. And, upon closer inspection, it was clear that a lot of blood was pouring from his right leg, to boot.

Subaru: “You can’t call yourself brave until you plunge into the tiger’s den. Once the battle taking place outside finishes, we should be able to join them down there and the situation will change quickly…”

Crusch: “In that case, there is no reason for Lust to postpone the broadcast any further. In the end, Subaru-sama and I have no option other than acting to prevent it.”

Subaru: “The best way to deal with an ambush…”

Crusch asserted, and stared at Subaru. Feeling himself overpowered by that passionate gaze, Subaru gulped.

Subaru: “Uh, Crusch-san?”

Crusch: “I have heard from Wilhelm, that Subaru-sama is the one able to come up with the optimal solution to these situations. And so, I believe it as well.”

Subaru: “That’s some heavy trust!”

Wilhelm’s overestimation of Subaru’s performance was compounded even further by Crusch’s own expectations, who had forgotten the times when Subaru had been underrated by everyone.

Feeling as if he were about to be crushed by the weight of the expectations being placed on him, Subaru mused about it as much as he could in the short time he had left. And, even although he was not completely sure of it, he came to a decision.

Subaru: “What can we do to deal with an ambush…”

Crusch: “Yes?”

Subaru: “If someone’s going to wait for us as a matter of course… Let’s break that course.”

2

—There were several important factors in an ambush.

First of all, the location. Ambushes were a tactic that consisted of a person waiting for the opportunity to attack their enemy from a dominant location. That was the most essential element.

Secondly, it was necessary to be certain that the enemy would indeed appear at the set location. If the key opponent were missing, it would render the ambush completely pointless.

Moreover, it was also necessary to correctly estimate the time of arrival of the enemy at the location of the ambush. Spending too much time lying in wait would make the one setting the ambush lose their focus, and the ambush would not have the maximum effect.

So, assuming that Lust was setting an ambush, all three of these conditions had been fulfilled.

No matter what, they needed to break into the broadcast room within a set amount of time. From their enemy's perspective, there was no easier situation to hunt their prey than this.

Subaru: "Therefore, we must first destroy this situation."

Crusch: "Got it… No, I am of nobility. I decided once to believe in Subaru-sama, so I will never change that. I will leave it to you."

The broadcasting room located on the top floor—No, one floor above that.

Earlier, Capella had appeared on the rooftop through the top floor, and that was exactly where Subaru and Crusch were preparing to execute their plan to defeat their opponent's strategy. Crusch, who had been initially puzzled by Subaru's proposal, seemed determined. This way of doing things was her invariable merit, both before and after losing her memory.

Crusch: "Honestly, I wish to see how the battle in the square is faring…"

Subaru: "But if we go check on them, then our actions will be meaningless."

Even at this height, they could hear swords clashing, as well as Garfiel's cursing. In other words, that fight was still ongoing, so no aid from that front could be expected.

Subaru: "Anyway…"

Looking around, Subaru examined the roof. Claw marks had been left here and there on the ground, probably traces of the black dragon walking around. The railings and fences that looked over the square had disappeared due to the magic damage caused by Julius.

Subaru thought of that tremendous power as he went around the rooftop, heading to the side opposite to the square. Assuming that the floor layout was correct, they were indeed just above the broadcasting room.

Naturally, Capella would be lying in ambush there, waiting for Subaru and Crusch.

Crusch: "…Subaru-sama."

Subaru: "What happened? Please take a moment if you're unprepared."

Crusch: "I am sorry, but just now, I noticed something."

Subaru: "…?"

Crusch spoke rather weakly as Subaru busied himself with an iron fence. Subaru looked at her with surprise, and she looked back at him with a stiff expression.

Crusch: "I seem to have a certain fear of heights, so let us hurry."

Subaru: "An unexpected weakness… Got it. Ready!"

Confirming that the fence was firmly fixed, Subaru nodded to Crusch. She returned a stiff nod of her own, and stepped meekly into Subaru's chest with arms outstretched.

Crusch: "—Please do not let go."

Subaru: “Crusch-san, there are many men who would misunderstand, so it’s better if you don’t say those kinds of words often.”

Crusch: “—?”

Subaru turned his head towards Crusch, a wry smile plastered all over his face. Then, with Crusch nestled in his arms, clinging to him, he swung loose from the iron fence with great force.

Naturally, their bodies were drawn downwards by gravity, heading straight towards the ground, the wall of the building at their side—and as they fell, they reached the lowest point the whip wrapped around Subaru’s wrist would allow them to.

Subaru: “—Hk!”

Supporting the weight of two people at the same time, Subaru’s shoulders were in enough pain that it seemed his arms were about to come off. Twisting sideways, the two swung in an upward arc, reaching the outer wall of the City Hall. Seeing the window of the broadcasting room approaching, Subaru stretched out his feet and shattered it.

Crusch: “Gah—Hk!”

Subaru: “Wha—?!”

As shards of glass fell onto the floor, Subaru and Crusch rolled into the broadcast room. For a moment, Crusch seemed like she had released a small cry, but Subaru pretended not to hear it as he released her from his arms.

Both climbed to their feet, immediately looked around, and found that inside the room.

???: “—Hk.”

Staring blankly at the two who had just jumped in, with eyes wide open, was a black dragon sitting in a stiff posture.

The same massive body they had seen on the roof had been stuffed into that room. The black dragon had folded its wings and twisted its neck, apparently facing the door that led to the corridor. Presumably, it had originally intended to turn Subaru and Crusch to ash the moment they tried to enter, but that idea had been seen through.

Obstructed by that huge body, it was in a room that confined her movement greatly. Although the black dragon attempted to attack both of them, starting to spread its wings,

Subaru: “Crusch-san!”

Crusch: “Right!”

Released of her fear of heights, Crusch nodded a response, before shooting a slash. Her blade of wind sliced into the black dragon, damaging a wing, and rushing towards it, she slashed one of its front legs with a direct blow. Lust screamed loudly as dark blood began to spray.

Dragon: “AAAAAHHHHHHHH!!”

Subaru: “Watch out! Get down… Woah?!”

Capella writhed in pain as she flapped her wings and swung her neck wildly, destroying the room.

Although the room was rather larger than usual, its durability was not enough to withstand the rampage of an elephant-sized creature. In order to escape from this destruction, Subaru turned to run, but at that moment he noticed something.

—At the foot of the black dragon, a young girl trembled in desperation, bound in chains.

Girl: “—!”

Subaru met eyes with that tearful girl. Realizing that Lust had adopted a very effective hostage strategy should the initial ambush fail, he was filled with rage.

Focusing, Subaru’s body instinctively chose to move forward rather than escape.

Managing to dodge the tail that zipped over his head, he slid toward the little girl that was laying down next to the feet of the black dragon. Picking up that shuddering petite body, he flicked his whip fiercely at the back of the black dragon's head. It did not seem to inflict too much damage, but it allowed Subaru to express his rage.

But Crusch's strikes were not so powerless.

Dragon: "Wait! Wait! You've got the wrong… Hk!"

Crusch: "Nothing was asked to you! This is retribution for the chaos and turmoil you have wrought upon the city!"

Crusch's blade did not forgive the black dragon, who held its head in a rather human-like manner.

With almost disappointing fragility, Capella bore no defense to that steel blade. Crusch cut the remaining wing, her slender legs kicking the dragon's screaming body. How different it was from Subaru's leg strength, as that huge body was shaken violently by the kick's power, and Capella stumbled backwards to the opposite direction of the window Subaru had broken.

Both of the black dragon's wings had yet to begin to regenerate. Although she had called her body immortal, if this was her rate of regeneration, then it could not be called a threat.

Crusch: "—It is over!"

Dragon: "Wai—"

Not allowing it to finish, Crusch ran as she let loose several successive attacks on the black dragon's body, head, and wings. Its huge body slammed through the wall, smashing through the window frame and falling outside.

The black dragon, having been thrown off the building and began its descent immediately spread its wings—Not. One of the wings had been torn away at its root, and the wing from the other side had been torn, now resembling a hook, so the dragon was unable to support flight.

Dragon: "—Hk."

The black dragon, without a chance to regenerate, had no time to say anything, simply falling to the ground. A few seconds later, the noise of Lust hitting the ground arrived. It was the sound of meat slamming against a wall, or a wet towel being dropped on the floor.

Crusch: "I shall go and confirm the situation. Subaru-sama, can you take care of this child?"

Subaru: "R-Right, I got it."

Crusch walked up to the window from which the black dragon had fallen, ever vigilant. With heartfelt trust in her, Subaru gently released the girl who had been caught up in the current turmoil. She was still in a state of fear, confusion in her quivering gaze as she looked at Subaru. It was inevitable. It was natural that anyone experiencing being glared at by a dragon would be scared beyond their wits.

Subaru: "It's okay, that bad dragon has been killed by the superheroine onee-chan over there just now, though not easily… Where's everyone else?"

Girl: "Ah, eh…"

Subaru: "Although it's hard to believe, we're on your side. We're to save you. We need to do some things before the bad guy comes back. Can you help me?"

He bent his knees, keeping their lines of sight level, and spoke with a gentle tone. This was the subconscious behavior he would use whenever speaking to someone younger, due to his fondness for children. She seemed to calm down slightly, taking deep breaths as if steeling herself before replying.

Girl: "There's a room over there… Everyone's, in there."

Subaru: "Are they trapped there? That room…"

The girl pointed to a little room at the back of the broadcasting room.

Rather, this room was not the broadcast room. Although it was a large division, there was no broadcast equipment at all. Even if the radio were a magical device, Subaru could not find anything resembling one such thing in the room. Perhaps it was some kind of preparation room. So that meant that room that the girl was indicating was most likely the real broadcasting room.

As he turned his gaze over, Subaru hesitated. He wanted to inquire about the life or death of the people inside. However, asking the girl such a thing was far too cruel and inconsiderate.

Subaru pat the still shaking girl's head, slowly making his way toward the room.

Girl: "…"

Heart beating hard and fast, Subaru felt sweat break out on his neck.

Suddenly, his throat felt parched and dry as well. Not even his voluntary Tarzan Jump had made him so nervous. This was the sense of a nasty premonition, a terror which preoccupied his mind.

Crusch: "Subaru-sama?"

Subaru: "Everything's fine. I'm gonna check it right away. What happened to Lust?"

Crusch: "…Everything is fine here as well. I do not know why she's staying put, though."

Crusch replied while still being wary of Lust under her gaze. Upon hearing that answer, Subaru took a deep breath and headed for the room, reaching out to brush the doorknob.

In the broadcasting room, there was a possibility that there were other Witch Cultists hiding. With that in mind, entering through the door to inspect what laid inside was not the better option for Subaru.

But, for some reason, that kind of worry seemed superfluous. In fact, this idea was right. Because, in reality, no Cultists occupied that room. Occupying it, was—

???: “…”

“…”

With speechless gazes, they looked at Subaru with amazement.

No, maybe he just wanted to assume they were looking. Subaru had no way of understanding how they observed the world, and he did not particularly want to understand.

He simply felt dismay. His voice would not work. This was what it meant to be truly speechless. His thoughts froze, and he thought of nothing. However, there was something he finally did understand.

—The true nature of that irritating sound accompanying the jarring voice in the broadcast he had heard in the shelter.

Subaru: “—What, is this?”

In response to Subaru, that sound spoke. That sound was one which welcomed Subaru, a fearsome sound, a defiant sound, a joyful sound, a meaningless sound—

The sound of numerous beating wings echoed throughout the broadcasting room.

In the darkened room, countless blinking red compound eyes moved, as if staring at Subaru.

There were many, many flies crammed into one room. And all the flies were the same size as people, this one, that one too, all of them.

???: “—AAAHH!!”

Subaru: “—Eh?!”

Amidst the blank haze of his consciousness, Subaru registered a sudden pained cry.

Shocked into a sudden response, Subaru slammed the doors to that room, closing along with it the sound of a hundred beating wings. And Looking back, he found—

???: “Gahahahaha! Stupid, stupid! You dregs, the meat in your heads simply isn’t enough. You actually tried to match me in a battle of the wits? Who put sugar into your brain and made it into soup?! Kahahahaha!”

Under the heel of the girl who issued that sharp raucous laughter was Crusch, in agony.

There was no doubt that the familiar poisonous laughter—

Capella: “It’s me, Capella-chan! Gaahahahaha!”

As Capella winked and stuck out her tongue, Crusch vomited a large amount of blood, the whites of her eyes barely showing.

Chapter 36:
The Beginning and Conclusion of Love

Behind him was a room full of gigantic flies. Subaru and Crusch had defeated the black dragon, and it now lay motionless on the ground outside.

And yet, in front of Subaru was a girl, laughing as she repeatedly dug her foot into Crusch.

Sinister laughter, a sardonic tone. The person in front of him was undoubtedly Capella Emerada Lugunica, the Witch Cult's Sin Archbishop of Lust.

—His entire body started going haywire.

Subaru: "What, what is this…?"

Capella: "Do you actually have to take the time to think about it? You scum shouldn't worry about such things—the best choice for you is to recognize the reality before you! You saw a beautiful maiden shaking with fear! But in reality, it was a Sin Archbishop of the Witch Cult, tadaaaaa~!"

As Subaru's mind raced, Capella danced around, sticking her mocking tongue out at Subaru. Under her feet, Crusch's eyes rolled back, vomiting profuse amounts of blood.

Although no trauma was visible, it was plain to see that she had suffered a life-threatening injury. With the only person in their group able to use healing magic, Garfiel, far from them, the current situation was the worst of scenarios.

Capella: "Didn't you find it strange at all? Here, at the City Hall, where the city is managed, why would there be a child meat? But your first reaction was doubtlessly "Ah, this kid is in danger, I have to save her…", no? What a disappointingly stupid train of thought!"

Subaru: "Sh-Shut up, already. There's plenty I'd like to say but first, move your damn foot.”

Capella: “Hmm? Are you so captivated by my beautiful legs that you’re dripping already~? Or are you thinking of this female meat that’s desperately licking my feet? Indeed, she has a lovely body, are you trying so hard that you can’t restrain yourself right now? Gahahahaha!”

Subaru: “—! You bitch! Bastard, we’re not just creatures for you to tread on!”

Capella wore an ecstatic expression as her heel was driven into Crusch’s sternum again and again. In response to her atrocious actions and ridicule, Subaru’s veins boiled with rage.

His lower body tensed, ready to move forward. Capella, who had provoked Subaru, seemed to welcome an attack. However, Subaru was not so foolish as to blindly rush forward.

Even without her memory, Crusch was a fearsome warrior. Wilhelm had vouched for her strength, allowing her to partake in this battle. And yet, in the span of just a few seconds without Subaru’s sight focused on her, she had lost without posing any resistance.

There was no doubt that Lust’s strength was undoubtedly far above Subaru’s. Therefore, Subaru needed to solve the situation without engaging her in combat.

Subaru: “…”

Crusch, whose very life was in danger, needed to be saved immediately and taken to Julius and the others.

It was up to him to engineer an escape, abandoning their mission in the process. That was of the utmost priority. Even though they would fail to stop the broadcast, that mission was not as important as their lives. And they also had not found the people who they should be rescuing, at least not on this floor.

His only conclusion was that they did not possess enough martial strength to retake the city in secrecy.

Therefore, Subaru could not hesitate.

Capella: “Huh?”

Subaru: “Haa!”

Capella exhaled, slightly surprised by Subaru’s sudden action.

The target of Subaru’s whip was not Capella, but a shelf running along the wall to the side. He found a metal bust, large enough to be embraced by two arms, and wrapped in it his whip, deftly flicking his wrist and throwing it towards Capella.

Subaru now wielded a high-speed metal whirlwind as weapon. And he now held much more power, enough to open a hole in the wall. Whether to block or evade, she would need to remove her foot from Crusch.

Subaru would take advantage of that moment to retrieve her.

Subaru: “Take that!”

Capella: “I will~.”

Subaru: “Huh?!”

In contrast to the Subaru’s spirited shout, Capella responded with casual words.

Immediately after, the sound of a hard object encountering bones and flesh was accompanied by blood spurting forth from Capella’s forehead, which had been torn almost completely apart. She had not even bothered to protect herself. The inside of her scalp was visible, and blood stained her cheeks.

Subaru could no longer bear to look at what had originally been such a cute face. Her left eye had been half-destroyed, and its light had vanished, but it nonetheless remained fixed on him. This unexpected situation left Subaru’s mind momentarily blank.

His action had been intended to distract his enemy, but he had been caught off guard instead—and a Sin Archbishop certainly would not let that moment go.

Capella: “Why do you people feel like playing into the palm of my hands so adorably? I wuuuuv~ that kind of hopeless stupidity. Gahahahaha!”

Capella’s ridicule slipped into Subaru’s frozen thoughts. The girl turned to face the still rigid Subaru and, in the next moment, a gust of a black whirlwind hit him, abruptly sending him flying.

Subaru: “Gah!”

As if he had been smacked by a giant, his right half took a heavy blow, and Subaru was knocked into a table, before rolling to the ground. His entire body was shook, and he dizzily climbed to his feet, supporting himself against the wall. What he saw next was—

Capella: “What’s wrong? Are you so stunned by my beauty that you can’t even move?”

Subaru: “—What… the fuck is that?”

Capella: “You actually have to ask? Just use your eyes for once~!”

Capella happily shook her hips in a dance, and Subaru was unable to even articulate a cry of anguish.

The girl’s short skirt swayed, and protruding from its hem—was a dragon’s tail, thick and black, which had just been used to attack Subaru. The disconcerting appearance of a petite girl spliced with the mighty tail of a dragon imprinted itself upon Subaru’s consciousness.

What would a person even have to say about that?

Subaru: “Could you be… a human that can transform into a dragon?”

Capella: “Correct! Your hopeless brain couldn’t even realize the truth upon impact! Even after this gentle lady had given you so many hints here and there, you still couldn’t reach it, you helpless scummy meat.”

Subaru: “—!”

Capella waved her tail lightly as Subaru took in her physiology and identity. Her long tail slammed from overhead, and the ground cracked as Subaru barely threw himself aside in time. But—

Capella: “Being relieved is quite naïve of you~.”

Subaru: “Ugh! Waaaaaaah!”

However, as he prepared to pull himself to his feet, Subaru was hit by her gigantic left fist. As he bounced away, he took another hit from the dragon tail awaiting him, and after a violent impact with the ceiling, was slashed by razor-sharp feathers, finally coming to a stop on the ground.

Coughing violently as the impact sent him rolling across the floor, he witnessed the true face of the terror that had assaulted him.

Where before there had only been a black tail, now there was a fist covered in bestial hair. Then came the black tail from before, and finally, a pair of bird wings, with feathers sharp enough to slash across Subaru’s body—And these all belonged to that young girl’s form.

Capella: “You should have just about figured the answer out, right~?”

“Alien” was the only word that came to mind.

A dragon’s tail, a beast’s arm, the wings of a great bird, all perfectly fused to a human girl’s body. He could not think of any other suitable words to describe her. Other than words, a sense of physical aversion rose upon gazing at this creature that should not exist.

He could feel nothing but a sense of disgust toward the monster in front of him.

Subaru: “Variation, transformation…”

Capella: “I’m the Sin Archbishop of Lust, Capella Emerada

Lugunica. All the love and respect in this world exists to be monopolized by myself alone. If someone loves me, no matter how abnormal their desire is, I'll respond. In short, I'm the ultimate embodiment of all kinds of virtue and beauty in the world. Any girl matching your preferences, I can become. Hey, I'm a woman who does her best, aren't I? Kahahahaha!"

While wantonly speaking nonsense, Capella turned to face Subaru and began to freely change her form.

She shifted from her abnormal shape back to the tiny girl, but her hands and feet and then immediately extended to become the curvy body of a grown woman. Just as Subaru realized this, she changed into a simple village girl, but, in the next moment has become a maiden with an innocent face and a lewd smile.

Capella: "Now, how do you like me?"

Subaru: "…"

Speechless. He was unable to say anything. One glance, and he realized that it was the worst possible situation.

She was a desecration of human values. Despite being so simple, straight-forward even, the Authority of Lust desecrated and trampled on all values, so that the holder would be the only loved thing in the world.

Looking at her, Subaru saw that the wound marring her face had been long healed, without any trace of the injury. Her terrible ability to regenerate—or rather, her ability to transform, had long cured her old injuries.

In any case, the mystery of how the dragon had become a girl was solved. He had originally thought she was like Petelgeuse, able to possess the bodies of others, but, if that were not the case—

Subaru: "—Huh?"

If that were not the case, then what had happened with the dragon from earlier, and the flies inside the broadcast room?

Capella: “Have you finally realized it?”

Subaru: “Wait… Wait, wait, wait, wait, wait, wait a second.”

As if she had read his innermost thoughts from his facial expression, Capella broke into raucous, mocking laughter.

She had become a graceful lady with long hair, and even the sound of her laughter changed as well. In this situation, where he was uncertain of even who he was speaking to, Subaru shook his head.

No way. It was impossible. It could not be true.

However, were he right, everything that had happened could now be explained.

Capella’s Authority of Lust allowed her to change and transform her own body. And if this ability of hers were effective on objects other than her physical body…

Capella: “Has your waterlogged brain finally realized the identity of those disgusting flies~?”

Subaru: “They… they’re…”

Capella: “Hmm, hmm, hurry and give your answer, and I’ll hear you out~. Gahahahahaha!”

Capella covered her mouth with her hand and laughed, loudly and proudly.

His heart of hearts unable to endure the horror, Subaru said in a trembling voice—

Subaru: “—They’re… the people in this building, who you have transformed.”

Capella: “Correct~! But you were pretty slow, so no prizes~. I won’t complement you. Ah, pointless scum, what’s your defective brain even for~?”

Subaru: “That’s my line!”

Capella did not look remorseful about this brutal atrocity in the least.

Needless to say, she had just stuffed those people into a dark room. When their red compound eyes had fixed themselves on Subaru, their wings, which were not capable of flight, had been flapping desperately, issued a loud buzzing flutter.

—They must have been asking for his help then.

Subaru: “There’s something wrong with your head! Why… How could you do such a thing! Why would you do it? Turning people into flies… Why?!”

Capella: “It’s horrifying, right~?”

Subaru: “It’s beyond twisted! You… You, you…”

Capella: “Maybe it’s just because I can’t help but create disgusting creatures~?”

Again, Subaru could not find words to respond. With harsh breaths and clenched teeth, Subaru fixated on her with a fiery, intense gaze of hatred, his eyes blood-red from pure murderousness.

She would toy with the lives of others, even turning them into flies. Those atrocities were even worse than murder. Much worse.

In the past few hours, Subaru had successively encountered four Sin Archbishops who he had never met before.

Sirius of Wrath, a madwoman who manipulated the emotions of others and imposed selfish love.

Regulus of Greed, a villain who self-righteously and forcefully imposed his own values upon others.

Alphard of Gluttony, a blasphemer who stole people’s Memories and Names, a poison that eroded the natural course of human life.

And Capella of Lust, a monster who stripped away both human dignity and identity.

They were all hopeless, cursed with madness.

Capella: "…"

In contrast to Subaru, so enraged the blood vessel in his head were about to burst, Capella had settled into a bored silence. In the next second, she took on a mocking tone.

Washed over by Subaru's anger, Capella spoke,

Capella: "—Indeed, it's annoying and disgusting. That's exactly why."

Facing Subaru's unbridled fury, Capella wore a more pleasant smile than before. She clapped her hands together, pointing to the room packed with flies.

Capella: "When you look at a room full of stupid giant flies, you get a horrible sense of physiological disgust, isn't that right? Of course, that's only natural. No matter who looks at those ugly creatures, they can't help but want to run. They can't stand it. That's right."

Subaru: "What… does that…"

Capella: "No matter who, everyone feels disgusted with that ugliness. And those scummy pieces of meat have become dreadful pieces of shit, looking beyond horrible. It's a matter of course that no one would love them. That's also natural."

Subaru: "What?! What are you trying to say?"

Capella: "Human beings, however, are creatures that can't live without loving or being loved. But when their loved ones have become such creatures, no matter how much they want to, they just can't bring themselves to love them. In that case, they redirect their love to others. No matter how reluctant they are, they just can't love anything dirty."

His mind went blank.

Tilting her head slightly, she spoke her incomprehensible, monstrous words.

Listening to her clapping, Subaru was overtaken by a desire to escape. Now, immediately, without hesitating for even a second, he wanted to disappear to a place without this monster.

His body did not wish for those eyes to be fixed on him, his ears did not wish to hear that voice directed at him, his mind did not wish to remember that existence in his presence, all in a sense of physical disgust.

Was she not the embodiment of aversion—of physiological, biological repulsiveness?

Something which he was genuinely unable to stand, was that not the definition of the horror that stood before him?

Capella: "So gentle and merciful, I really am the perfect woman. Since it was decided that I'd monopolize all the world's love and respect, then I absolutely can't slack on my duty. In order to be loved better, I'll work hard to be loved, and change myself to suit your tastes. In order to capture your attention, I'll take away everything you're interested in. Everything but me. It doesn't matter who you loved originally, you'll choose me in the end. I'll work hard to make that happen. I'll improve improve increase perfect improve improve improve improve improve my own charm! And reduce reduce reduce reduce reduce reduce reduce the charm of the meats who aren't me! Anyone, no matter who, would fall for this world's most beautiful and charming me!"

Subaru: "…Just, kill me already!"

Capella: "Why? I'm a philanthropist, how could I be so brutal as to kill you? Even if you're worthless scum… if there's a chance that you'll love me, even if there's a tiny, slight chance, for every single person, I'll let them live even one more second if they'll give me my due praise! Only those who are not able to do so will be killed! After all, Capella-sama is a commendable, most praiseworthy woman!"

Subaru: "…"

Subaru: "…"

Subaru: "…"

Subaru: "I see now."

Capella: "Do you really? Well, now that you understand, quickly give your words of appreciation to Capella-sama. Let yourself be melted by Capella-sama's love and become my favorite piece of meat…"

Subaru: "Fucking die."

He could not think. But there was no need to think.

The enemy in front of him was truly the most vicious enemy. Everything other than that piece of knowledge was entirely unnecessary.

Subaru's whip suddenly flew forward. The monster jerked backwards as her face was suddenly attacked, removing her foot from Crusch. Taking advantage of that opening, Subaru immediately moved, picking up Crusch.

Capella: "See, after all, male meat long for female meat, your fluids won't stop leaking. Didn't you deny it earlier? Didn't you weave so many beautiful words? Don't you like beautiful things? Don't you like cute things? Don't you like soft and comfortable things? Don't bullshit me!"

Subaru: "—!"

Chasing Subaru, Capella spread her arms apart, while spitting spoken venom.

One hand turned into the head of a snake, while the other became the head of a lion—those distorted heads chased Subaru, showing their canines as they prowled up and down the floor of the room.

Although his right foot had begun to bleed again, he still felt no pain. It did not matter anyway. Feeling the warmth and weight of the person in his arms, making every effort to protect the woman he carried, Subaru focused every last bit of his athletic ability on dodging Capella's pursuit.

Capella: “Don’t you care so much for that scummy female meat? Then, for the rest of your short life, hold tightly and don’t let go! That tempting body! Those alluring eyes! Those sweet lips and the adorable voice that escapes them! That pleasant meat meat meat! Because she’s stimulating, you’re clinging so desperately to her, unable to let go? Die! Die! Go die! Go die right now!”

Subaru: “Don’t talk nonsense, bastard! I’m not that kind of person!”

Capella: “Shut the fuck up! Male scum should just obediently stay put and emanate the stench of rubbish! Female sows should obediently stay put and emanate the stench of an animal! Have you never thought of it? Can you honestly say that you’ve never thought of anything perverted for even a second? Doesn’t that one second mean it’s that kind of relationship between a male and a female meat? What’s the difference? What’s the difference?! Tell me what the difference is!”

The snake and lion writhed as if reflecting Capella’s excitement, twisting across the room. The sound rang out of teeth crunching and chewing on a wooden desk, disassembling its body, and finally sending its legs flying. That same force sought Subaru, trying again and again to reach him.

Caught in the center of that destructive storm, issuing a pained cry, Subaru guarded Crusch’s body as he desperately avoided those continuous attacks. Capella stood at the exit of the room. Even if he wanted to take the opportunity to escape, Capella’s body expanded and contracted, changing back and forth between women, girl, and child, in an anomaly that looked to be taboo.

Capella: “Don’t you want to stroke her hair? Don’t you want to brush her lips? Don’t you want to hold her body? Those cheap thoughts are always justified with beautiful words, with love as an excuse! Love is beautiful, isn’t that just a self-righteous justification? Aren’t you using beautiful words to cover up your desires?!”

Subaru: “—You!”

Capella: “Admit your Lust directly! Don’t try to hide it behind love!

Or are you refusing to say it? Refuting what's already been determined… Say it! I love her! I love her because of her own nature! Her nobility, her gentleness, her compassion, her temperance, her eyes that reflect the sky, her way of life that makes her willing to live for the sake of others, her strength to endure injustice, her vulnerability that she shows only to me, I don't want to leave her alone. Her reassuring voice, her loving gaze, her compassionate eyes, her lips that call my name so gently, her warmth that grips both of my hands, her touch that rouses my heart, her beautiful hair swaying in the wind. Because fate brought us together, because I believe that only she would accept me, because she was always by my side when my heart was pained, because she has taught me so many important lessons, because we have been together for all, all, all of this time, I want to see and feel the same things that she does from now until forever. Because we promised, I swore to never forget that vow, because I find her different from all others, and only she knows who I truly am, because I can't pretend to be something I am not in front of her. Because I was so lonely, I always wanted someone to understand me. Because you reminded me of those first feelings and taught me what it means to truly love someone. You were the one who wiped the tears from my face, you were the one who emerged from the boundless sea of people to find me, you were the one who hugged me tightly when I was about to break, you were the one who scolded me for my naivety for the first time, you were the one to scold me like no one had scolded me before, you were the one to speak to me in a way that did not patronize me, you were the one who took me to see so many sights I'd never seen before, you were the one who took my hand and led me out of my birdcage. No matter when, you support me, no matter what, you understand me. We're meant to be together, always, I can't live without you, you're my everything, you love me because I love you too, because your chest is so warm, because with you, all of the colors of the world shine so brilliantly, I can't feel happiness without you, I can't live without you. In this world so filled with lies, only this is truth."

With a still expression, Capella spit those words out as if they were curses.

As she spoke this long, touching confession, Capella's face was intertwined with beauty, adoration, obscenity. And with an even more complex and strange expression—

Capella: "—All of them, all of them, all of them! Aren't they just sweet nothings!"

Subaru: "…"

Capella: "Those are words only meant for comforting others, what's the harm in removing them? Do they have any sincerity? Any character? They're merely nauseating nonsense, how annoying! Acts! They're nothing but acts! In truth, you've only been attracted by the appearance of that meat! If you really love those towards whom you speak affectionate words and share affectionate touches and pillow talk with, see what happens when they become a fly! Could you love them? Are you not afraid of them? Are you not disgusted? Of course you are! You'd feel nothing but disgust oozing from your every pore! Well? Think about what you've said!"

Insane verbal abuse, a delusion of victimization, jealousy, hate, self-obsession.

Spit splashing across the room, Capella lost control of herself as she hysterically destroyed the room.

The snake's hiss, the lion's roar, Capella's cries, Subaru could not stand to listen to them any longer. The noise became like a storm, and the room began to collapse. No matter what he did, he could not see anything past the smoke.

Did he still have his feet on the ground? Was the right leg safe? The only thing he was certain of was the heartbeat of the woman in his arms, which continued to infuse Subaru with determination.

—But even such a fight would come to an end here.

Capella: "Hey, meat. I can see you!"

Subaru: "—Huh?!"

Breaking through the smoke, the lion's head suddenly rushed in. Then the fangs snapped at Subaru's right leg, which had already lost half of its flesh. And so, what was left of his leg below the thigh was torn off completely, blood spurting forth fiercely.

The injury had already directly exceeded the limits of Ferris's healing ability, and Subaru's mind began to boil as he struggled through the pain of losing his right leg. He issued a mute violent cry of agony, his throat unable to bear it.

Of course, he could not support his own body anymore.

As he collapsed, Crusch rolled onto the ground in front of him. And his blood began to overflow. That was no exaggeration. It looked as if a bucket of blood had been suddenly overturned. It was clear that Subaru's life force was dwindling rapidly.

Capella: "Ah, what a headache. It seems that I couldn't help but get excited—how impolite of me. Kahahahaha!"

Subaru: "…"

Maintaining his position on the ground, Subaru stuck one convulsing hand to his wound.

Although the palm of his hand was blocking the wound, the momentum of the bleeding had not diminished. In fact, another feeling began to well up in Subaru's body.

Soon, everything would end. This was the familiar feeling of death, which gradually approached Subaru.

In just a few hours, he had felt the pain of losing his right leg twice. His complexion transcended paleness to take on a yellow pallor, and his breathing sped up and up as his eyes grew bloodshot.

Capella: "Oh my, my, aren't you about to die~? Watching the agony this piece of meat is in is particularly distressing for my compassionate self who feels for others."

Subaru: "—Ah… Ah…"

Capella: "The piece of meat that you've been protecting is also going to die soon. It's such a shame that I indulged in my hobby a little bit… and decided to see if she'll lose to my blood… Oh, that's right~."

Capella squatted down, glancing at Subaru's twisted, agonized face. Then the monster smiled and stretched a hand to the wound on his leg.

Capella: "I wonder what kind of unsightly meat you'll become~?"

Subaru: "…"

As she spoke, Capella turned her other hand into a blade, cutting into the hand that had been caressing Subaru's wound until now. And, bit by bit, her blood dripped onto Subaru's stump of a right leg. Black blood blended together with red blood, forming a rather indecent scene. And right after,

Subaru: "—?! Hah, ah ah ah ah ah?!"

Capella: "My blood is different from other people's blood. After all, mine is mixed with dragon's blood, which contains a great curse~. I wonder if you will last longer than that female meat~?"

Capella hummed happily, but Subaru could not form any kind of reply.

His entire being was already half-dead, and even his pain had become sluggish. Just a second before he died, the blood that had invaded his body via his right leg's wound ravaged and eroded him.

As if a foreign body with self-awareness had entered his body, a fear of a much higher degree than that of a regional pain overtook Natsuki Subaru, as if attempting to completely rewrite his existence while merging with him.

Unable to understand, he was not allowed even the mercy of death.

And as that monster had said, Crusch was the same. She was suffering identical pain. If she had to endure such a pain, wouldn't she be better off dead! Let us die! Let us die! Let me die! Let me die! Let me die! I don't want to die!

Capella: “Gahahahaha! Well then, the invaders have been well taken care of. Well, it’s about time that I…”

After looking back and forth at Subaru and Crusch, collapsed in agony, Capella stood, satisfied. She reverted to the petite girl’s form, her tail vanishing as she headed toward the broadcast room, swaying her hips. Suddenly, she paused, as if noticing something.

Her gaze fell on the wall that had been destroyed by the black dragon which had served as a decoy.

Capella: “My, my, they were pretty decent after all∼.”

???: “—!”

And, after having fallen from the building only a short while ago, the black dragon had crawled up from the side of the building. Seeing its enemy, it gave a deafening roar, before breathing a mouthful of black flames towards Capella.

—At that moment, the upper floor of the City Hall was engulfed by jet-black flames.

Bonus Short Stories

Otto Suwen's Internal Affairs Struggle
Line 1

1

“Mr. Otto, I find it unfair that you're always traveling together with Master Subaru.”

With such rather violent comment, Otto was stopped by the call of a maid girl.

The mansion's novice, was no longer an appropriate expression to describe her skill. The girl, who during this year had gained enough skill to call herself by the title of a maid, was named Petra.

There was Petra, her face charming, her cute cheeks reddened, making a cute a statement, to which Otto bitterly smiled.

The place was the Roswaal estate's hall, the time was early morning.

Although he had been walking around the site for the purpose of relaxing his body, which had hardened after finishing the paperwork that had taken him the whole night, his sleepy head ended up receiving one unthinkable accusation.

“No, I think it is absurd for me to be told that, or rather, that is just vis major.”

“Is it really so? So you haven't been secretly asking the Master to please let you go out together with Subaru when he goes out?”

“That means I'm being treated like a pretty creepy guy here, doesn't it?!”

When he saw Petra's doubtful eyes, Otto made an exclamation loaded with a denial of extraordinary strength.

—The focus of Petra's suspicions was in the plan to visit the Watergate City, which was abruptly decided yesterday.

Regarding this topic, jumping into a well-prepared opponent's pocket was one of the few things that Otto himself was truly interested in. But even so, it seemed to be an object of envy for Petra.

Because, after all, in the list of those destined for the Watergate City 'Priestella,' Petra's name was not.

"I think it cannot be helped, though. Petra, you have had plans to attend the meeting directed by the Margrave for a long time already, after all."

"That's… I understand. I mean, that's a thing I myself suggested."

Leaving a childish tone at the end of her sentence, Petra vexedly pinched her uniform's apron with her fingers.

Petra, who would not be accompanying them to Priestella, would be playing the role of standing next to her master, Roswaal. This was, in fact, something she herself had proposed, and a challenge too. Therefore—

"Shall I go and speak with the Margrave, then?"

"—It's fine. I'm not a kid anymore, I can't be causing others trouble for this kind of things."

When Otto made a light diversion, Petra clearly and promptly replied with her own determination. When Otto heard her doubt-lacking decision and burst into laughter, "Aaah!" Petra's eyes were opened wide,

"Mr. Otto, you're evil! You were just testing me!"

"Haha, forgive me. But your answer was prompt, wasn't it? That made me feel at ease."

While Petra expressed her anger with swollen cheeks, Otto apologized to her.

But, in the depths of his apology, the relief he felt at Petra's decision was genuine. Although he felt bad for Petra, he wanted her to excellently fulfill her role as Roswaal's guard at the meeting.

Roswaal's behavior had had no questionable points to be seen during this year. Ever since the disclosure of his plans at the 'Sanctuary,' Roswaal had been vigorous, actually doing his business as a supporter.

This meeting was the result of that year. Since Otto would not be able to accompany him to that place, when it came to the topic of who to put in his place, it was Petra.

Subaru, Emilia, obviously Ram, and even Garfiel and Frederica who had been affected by his plan, showed Roswaal tolerance. That was a virtue of them.

Not forgiving him was way easier than forgiving him. For Subaru and the rest, those who were able to do it naturally and without anguish, Otto felt appreciation.

Therefore, he and Petra, those with the ability of not forgiving Roswaal, were necessary.

"I kindly ask you to act as the Margrave's babysitter. Petra, you are the only one who can do this."

"Good. I was going to do well even if I wasn't told to, …and you, Mr. Otto, make sure to watch over Subaru and Emilia-Sister for me. Beatrice too, you take your eyes off her for a second and she disappears, you know. And Garf… well, he's pretty burly, so maybe there's nothing to worry about."

"Hmmm, that is an incredibly precise evaluation. By the way, are you worried about me?"

"—? Mr. Otto, you'll be alright, won't you? Why should I be worried?"

"I really don't get why I'm being looked at with such a confused face, you know?!"

With a face, that looked more incredulous than he had imagined, being directed at him when he was just asking for the sake of testing her once more, Otto's laments echoed high inside the Roswaal estate in the morning.

2

"Mr. Otto, is now a good time?"

Along with a graceful knock, spoke and showed her face the beautiful leader maid who owned long golden hair.

The one who arrived, her green eyes cast down, acting somehow apologetic was the person who managed the tasks of the maids working for the Roswaal estate, it was Frederica.

Seeing her visit his workplace, "Oh," Otto rose his eyebrows.

"Ms. Frederica, how unusual for you to come at this time. Wasn't the break after the end of Fire time going to start soon?"

"That is right, today I will be laying tea and baked sweets out in the dining room. Petra will also be making very fluffy souglés… Excuse me. I have strayed away from the topic."

While she walked forward to the center of the room, Frederica looked a little embarrassed as she put her hand on her own lips.

It was a gesture she could be seen doing whenever she smiled or looked straight ahead at someone. It was probably something she did in order to hide her fangs, which were just a tiny little bit pointier than a human's, and it seemed to have ended up becoming a habit.

Although Otto did not mind it in particular, maybe it was something a mature woman would pay attention to. Because, whenever she went loose and gave a broad smile, she and Garfiel looked very similar, like the siblings they were.

"Mr. Otto, as it appears Petra was impolite early this morning, I offer an apology from my side too. I have already made sure to firmly warn that girl."

While Otto pondered such matter, Frederica bent herself deeply at the waist and spoke. Hearing what she said, “No, no,” Otto shook his neck sideways,

“How exaggerated. There was nothing bad enough to be called impoliteness. Petra and I were just talking like we usually do… although, in that case, I am not sure if it is completely fine for me to say it.”

“Come on, Mr. Otto, even you think of it that way after all, am I not right? It is simply not correct. If she goes on taking advantage in that way of the kindliness that the people who look after her have, that child’s growth will stop.”

“You know, I somehow get the feeling that what you are showing is, rather than consideration towards me, concern for Petra’s future.”

“That is… not something I can entirely deny.”

Before Otto’s reproachful glare, Frederica awkwardly smiled as if she had given in.

Although it was brave of her to conceal nothing, it was a well-known fact that Frederica doted on Petra and was trying to bring her up to be a splendid maid. Since Petra, with her own ambition to improve, also idolized the woman who was not only loving towards her, but also skilled at her work, it was evident, even from an outsider’s eyes, that they had a good relationship.

“So, would her conduct at the next meeting be like some sort of culmination for that growth?”

“Indeed. That child is a fast learner when it comes to work, too… I just cannot take my eyes off her.”

With a nod, Frederica proudly affirmed the way her favorite apprentice had grown. Otto closed one eye at her calm expression, “Well then,” and so he broached,

“Could it be that it is your younger brother who you are actually worrying for?”

"…Nothing can be hidden from Mr. Otto, it seems. That is correct, indeed. As you know, Petra is within my eyes' reach, whereas Garf is where my hands cannot reach him."

Her worries unending, Frederica put her hand over her ample chest and breathed out a sigh. Even Otto understood Frederica's misgiving and the unending fears she had about his younger brother.

In Garfiel's case, what caused that anxiety was his surroundings rather than the person in question. During this year, Otto too had been made to endeavor to do several things, by his quick-tempered younger brother figure, who possessed strength superior to that of an ordinary person.

Although, fortunately, Garfiel idolized Otto as an older brother and did respect his opinions.

"Whether that child's behavior will cause trouble for Lady Emilia is what I am worried about. Up until now, that child has had no actual involvement with those related to the Royal Election, but…"

"This time, he shall do so. Certainly, that makes me anxious too…"

Nevertheless, Otto did not harbor an anxiety towards Garfiel as strong as the one Frederica harbored.

Despite appearances, Garfiel had the prudence necessary to keep his mouth shut when matters out of his own area of expertise came up. Where he to choose between the two, that kind of anxiety was way bigger when it was Subaru.

Stirring up trouble at the scene through unnecessary remarks was his specialty. Incredibly, things often went well because of it, but that did not stop the griping pain in Otto's stomach.

"Lady Emilia is no exception in that respect, though."

"…How troubled is Mr. Otto. However, Mr. Otto, I must apologize for making you deal even with these worries of mine, though."

"What, troubled… that kind of gives me the feeling my neck is being wrung.”

“Fufu. We do rely on you, though. No matter what anyone says, a camp where Mr. Otto is missing just does not function. I kindly beg, please, take care of everyone… especially my foolish brother.”

While Otto scratched his cheek with a finger, Frederica bowed politely before him, with a smile.

As he admired that posture, beautiful enough to be fascinating, Otto felt very deeply moved by her words.

“Oh, Mr. Otto, is something wrong?”

“I don’t know, being treated this decently has moved my heart much more than I though it would… I swear to do my best.”

Firmly, in front of the surprised Frederica, Otto raised his fist to show his newfound enthusiasm.

And then, with his fist clenched, Otto tilted his head,

“By the way, Ms. Frederica, are you worried about me?”

“About you? Uh, what does that mean…?”

“Even Ms. Frederica does this to me?!”

And so, being her perplexity so genuine and lacking in any malice, Otto ended up wounded.

3

“Otto, I’ll be entering whenever I want. I just brewed you tea, so thank me.”

When Otto returned to his workplace after taking a bath, he was greeted by such insolent voice and attitude.

Inside the room, sitting on Otto’s desk and elegantly tilting a cup of tea, was a pink-haired maid girl who possessed a sharp sweetness, Ram.

To her imposing attitude and nonexistent respect for those around her, Otto bitterly smiled and shrugged his shoulders.

“At this point it is no longer surprising, but why now? I would think you would be in the middle of treatment with the Margrave at this time if it were a normal day, or am I wrong?”

“Yes, that’s right. So I took a moment from my work hours and decided to drop by. And even during this break, my time with Master Roswaal is being chopped to bits. I hope you’re conscious of it.”

“That’s an awful way to phrase it.”

Nevertheless, aware that such things were just typical of Ram, Otto took the cup that had been put on the desk for him, and carried it to his mouth. An exquisite scent and flavor passed through his nose and tongue, making him inadvertently fall into a trance.

“Seriously, Ms. Ram, your skill as a tea server is so first-class.”

“Of course it’d be. Besides, the other merits Ram has are like stars. However, since the time when they can peek from a sky clear of clouds is short, they must chose whose head should they float above.”

“I know that much, though.”

“…That’s no good. As expected of Otto.”

“Excuse me, could you stop scorning everything with my name?!”

“Hah!”

Snorting, Ram brushed Otto’s appeal aside in a way that admitted not of a reply. Although, in his current state of mind, even that was something he had already accepted as part of his daily life, Otto’s lips broke into a smile immediately after that.

“What? If you feel joy at being scolded, then you’re hopeless.”

“So you are aware that you are scolding me… No, I’m thinking, there has been an awful lot of people coming to me with tasks today. Ms. Ram, you, too, have come for something about Priestella, have you not?"

"…"

Narrowing her light pink eyes, Ram kept her silence at Otto's words. But the very fact that she did not deny it was enough as a backup for Otto's conjecture.

She, too, realized her silence was just an affirmation, and let out a sigh,

"…Who we're dealing with is a proper Royal Election candidate. On the contrary, here we have the not-proper Lady Emilia going out to meet her personally. You understand your duty as her adviser is an important one, right?"

"Shouldn't you say it in a little softer way?"

"Glossing over the facts isn't going to make them change. Besides, Lady Emilia's course of action will affect Master Roswaal's greatest desire too. —And I don't wanna see that face of discouragement when things fail either."

"…"

"What?"

"No, I just wonder, whose face is it that you do not want to see, the Margrave's or Lady Emilia's?"

Seeing Otto tilt his head, "Tch," Ram mercilessly, strongly clicked her tongue. Ram's sentiments were hard to understand and difficult to see, but she was genuine and loving.

In fact, Subaru, Garfiel, and even Beatrice were on the range of people she was considerate to.

"Anyway, you've been warned. Looks like you've done drinking the tea Ram herself brewed. Think of this as your reward being already paid in advance, and then go give it all you've got out there."

“What, so this was a bribe? At least, I want one more cup when I come back.”

“—That settles it, then.”

As she lightly descended with grace from the desk, Ram loosened her lips. Before that smile, Otto sighed with the feeling of someone who had been just thoroughly finished.

So, since they were already talking about agreements, Otto looked back at Ram’s smile,

“By the way, this will also be the first time I have actual involvement with the Royal Election, aren’t you worried?”

“Stop asking when you already know the answer. How nasty.”

4

“Could it be that they trust me, after all?”

Remembering his exchanges with Petra, Frederica, and then Ram, Otto tilted his head in puzzlement.

Since he had stayed up during the whole previous night, today he planned to rest a little, before morning came. Before doing so, Otto washed his teeth in the bathroom, and went back to his bedroom.

“Ah, Otto.”

And, during the way back to the room, who he happened upon was Emilia dressed in her nightgown.

With her long, silver hair damply wet, Emilia was unexaggeratedly beautiful as she smiled. It was not unreasonable at all for Subaru to lose his mind, thought Otto from an objective point of view as he bitterly smiled.

“Lady Emilia, will you be going to sleep soon?”

“Yes, I will. I gotta rest well and prepare for Priestella. I know I might end up causing a lot of trouble for others, but I will definitely be doing my very best.”

Clenching her fist in front of her chest, Emilia eagerly spoke with a look full of motivation. Then, “But,” she continued,

“If you’re there, I’m sure it’ll be alright, Otto. Because we rely on you a looot.”

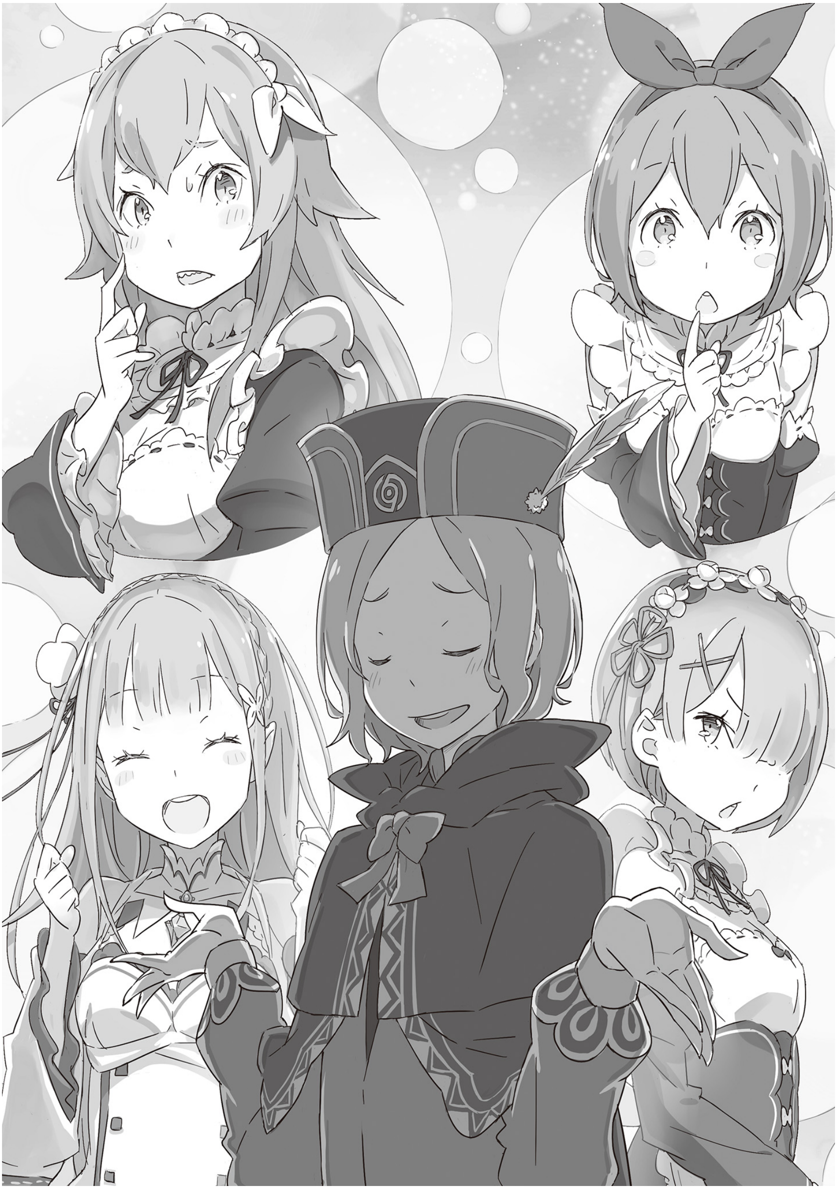
“…”

“Well then, good night. Otto, have sweet dreams.”

Waving her hand, Emilia left a smile behind for Otto, turned her back to him, and took her leave like that. While he saw her off from behind, Otto slowly shook his head sideways,

“…Looks like they trust me, after all.”

And so, letting out a slightly uplifted voice, he breathed a deep, long sigh as he looked forward.



Petra's Emilia Camp Struggle:
Page 2
(Edited Machine Translation)

1

She is someone with guts, Petra Leyte had such pride.

Otherwise, she will not be able to devote herself to her new surroundings, nor will she have the courage to catch up with the people ahead of her.

Therefore, Petra has been desperately using her small body to move forward with all her might.

Some may say that the time and effort she spent is nothing remarkable, but that has nothing to do with Petra.

As long as that person and those people don't laugh at her, that's enough.

Therefore, she won't be bothered by it.

???: "That's the maid over there, isn't it? The one who is rumored to have caused the fire at the residence of the Margrave."

The topic was unfolding softly on the scene.

The speaker was not deliberately attacking Petra personally. Petra, who was just a maid and had no personal influence, was not worthy of being put in their eyes.

And Petra herself understands this. Therefore, she will not feel depressed by this.

Obviously, that should've been the case, but as she was about to confront the bearded man who stated this fact, suddenly the tall cloaked man next to her said…

Rosawaal: "…Unfooortunately, the cause of the fire was duuue to my own negligence, Viscount Aluz.”

These words, as if they were protecting Petra, made Petra feel ashamed.

2

…After seeing off Subaru and the others who were setting off for the Watergate City, Mathers and his party, including Petra, also set off for the western border for a meeting according to the scheduled plan.

???: “Remember not to get in the way of Roswaal-sama. In addition, the people in the meeting are a group of people who are even more dubious than you could possibly imagine. Remember to not show them any weakness. Keep your eyes and ears open at all times.”

This is the advice from a solitary person. No, although she is not alone, Ram stayed behind in the mansion.

In order to take care of Rem, who’s asleep, and Meili, who was imprisoned in an underground confinement room, Ram did not accompany them on this trip. To be honest, even if Ram came with them, she wouldn’t have been of much use as a maid, but her presence can bring an aura of peace that the others can’t replace.

She doesn’t know if these kinds of thoughts were showing up on her face, or if Ram’s gaze was like a torch blazing with wisdom. Before leaving, Ram gently patted Petra on the shoulder and gave her warning.

Petra: “Always keep your eyes open…”

Repeating this sentence subconsciously, Petra remembered it in her heart. Although these words weren’t repeated constantly to her, since then it has been engraved deeply into Petra’s heart.

Keeping your eyes open at all times. Keeping your head up at all times. …It’s a very good feeling.

???: “Petra, are you nervous?”

Seeing Petra putting her hands on her flat chest, Frederica, who was sitting next to her on the dragon carriage, spoke aloud. Facing this ideal woman with long flowing blonde hair who squinted her emerald eyes, Petra gently shook her head.

Petra: “No, just thinking about something. Something that Ram-neesama told me before we left.”

Frederica: “Is that so? That’s great. If you’re getting nervous now… it would spell trouble for us during critical moments. But, it seems like that child has also said something to you.”

Petra: “Emm, there is nothing to worry about nee-sama. However, it’s something that makes me feel really good.”

Frederica: “Hmm… ahahah, hearing that makes me a little bit jealous.”

Pursing her lips lightly, Frederica gently stroked Petra’s little head. The gentle touch made Petra’s cheeks tighten. Petra enjoyed it for a moment, then shyly laid her head on Frederica’s chest.

Frederica felt a little awkward due to Petra’s words, and this discovery couldn’t help but make Petra feel happy. Even if she is not worried, Petra’s most respected and beloved woman is Frederica. Although Ram was a little lonely as she did not come with them, Petra was happy to be able to be with Frederica.

However…

Roswaal: “…Really, I can’t staaaand it. Even I would feel sad to be so blaaatantly isolated by my compaaanions. Even if I don’t want to, these next few days are a triiip with the three of us. Let’s get alooong. 」

Petra couldn’t help but feel tired of the man who showed such a frivolous smile and possessed a cheeky manner of speech.

As soon as she laid her eyes on someone with such a nasty face, Petra’s face flushed red with anger.

Frederica: “Master, please seriously consider the matter of the meeting!”

Roswaal: “Don’t be so unfrieeendly. This time, you took the initiative to come alooong, so I was looking forward to the opportunity for our relaationshiip to get cloooser. “

Frederica: “Master, please stop saying such baseless things. Truly.”

Upon hearing his fake words, Frederica also came to the support of Petra. The man who became the target of the crowd, could only raise his hands and reluctantly surrender, then he sat down deeply into his seat in the dragon carriage.

However, his lips marked with violet lipstick were still muttering softly, and he had a slightly resentful expression on his face.

And this person is the Margrave, Roswaal L Mathers. Not only is he the owner of the mansion that employs Petra, he is also the core figure of this meeting, and at the same time, the person that Petra hates the most in the entire world.

3

…The talks on the western border are literally just a gathering of people.

Originally, the title of Margrave only referred to the possession of lands within his territory. In other words, his title has attracted so much attention as a key role in national defence, that the territory owned by Roswaal is referred to as "Margrave’s Western Territory". The participants in this meeting are powerful people who assist this powerful man in ruling the western borders.

The attendees ranged from noblemen with titles to high officials holding mayoral positions. There were farmers who owned huge farms and wealthy merchants in the territory.

And since it is Roswaal who gathered these numerous and disorderly people together, he is in a position where he must correctly guide the direction of the talk.

Petra: “…”

After the dragon carriage arrived at the destination, as soon as he entered the mansion's magnificent hall, the attendees who knew of Roswaal's arrival all cast their gaze upon them.

The emotion contained in their gaze was so complicated and strange that Petra couldn't understand it.

However, one thing can be inferenced, that is, all the participants have hidden motives and are evaluating the things that they're interested in, in an unobtrusive manner.

Roswaal: "Ohohoh, everyone has arriiiived. Truly gathered up neeeatly."

???: "…What are you talking about? Margrave Roswaal is the one who came here so soon, I am really flattered."

To Roswaal, who greeted the people standing in the magnificent hall from a distance, a man with a beautiful beard immediately responded.

Seeing the man walking over the carpet and approaching this way, Roswaal's smile deepened silently.

Roswaal: "Viscount Aluz, thank you veeery much for preparing your mansion for the meeting on such short notice."

Aluz: "I am honored. I understand that the Mathers's consideration is a very important matter. I am very grateful to have the opportunity to speak to you."

Hearing such fake polite remarks, Petra couldn't help but sneer inwardly at the social interactions between the nobles.

About half of the participants have gathered in the hall. Originally the meeting was scheduled to start tonight, but it seemed that a lot of people had arrived before noon.

It is said that by coming early to such meetings, one becomes able to grasp the direction that the topic will head in advance, to some extent. This also applies to the ill-intentioned Roswaal, who arrived at his destination half a day early.

As it is now, he's like an opera performer who is watched by people with a sense of enjoyment, maybe this is his bad karma.

Aluz: "That's the maid over there, isn't it? The one who is rumored to have caused the fire at the residence of the Margrave."

Inadvertently, Petra was also put onto the stage. At this moment, even though she was dumbfounded by the accusation, she just showed a firm expression and couldn't help but want to boast.

But that's the end of the performance that she could receive praise for.

This is the moment of the greatest humiliation in Petra's life.

4

Petra: "I… I feel so horrible."

Reflecting deeply, mutters spilled out of her mouth, and Petra drooped her shoulders in a manner not unlike that of a child.

This is Petra not long after she was caught in the middle of the crossfires between the nobles and drowned in humiliation. In order to prepare for the evening meeting, Roswaal was resting in the guest room of the mansion at this time. Similarly, Petra and Frederica, were also assigned a personal room. They were also ordered to take a break due to their work preparations at night, but…

Petra: "Mu… I can't relax at all…"

Although she knew that her manners were not proper, Petra couldn't help but pace back and forth in the mansion of Viscount Aluz. As soon as she walked out of her room, she looked for a way to dispel her sense of humiliation.

…In the eyes of the people around her, Petra has never made any mistakes thus far.

After all, this is just a question of the goals set by Petra.

Petra has harsh standards set for those close to her, so harsh that they would be in shock from hearing their scores. This behavior is no exception for Petra herself.

In addition to her own appearance, Petra's evaluation of herself is also extremely strict.

Petra: "This is all the Master's fault…Eh?"

Petra, who was groaning and cursing Roswaal's being, suddenly raised her eyebrows. A group of servants of the mansion who seemed to be hurriedly running around for some reason, came into her sights.

Petra: "Excuse me, did something happen?"

Petra stepped forward and asked her question.

Servant: "Yes, we can't find the chef in charge of tonight's meal… Although it's said that they have a strange personality, if this continues, they will definitely miss their meals."

After listening to the explanations of the brainstorming and chattering servants, Petra offered to help.

Having said that, she just heard the report, and can't help much.

Petra: "Seeing other people having trouble makes me feel a little relieved… I really am a bad child…"

Although this is rarely seen, for Petra now, everything will be linked to self-loathing. At least for now, she hopes to make some contribution to finding the chef through hard work, as a way to untie the knot in her heart.

Petra: "If I asked for Frederica-neesama's help, maybe she could find that person with her sense of smell, but…"

Frederica, who has the blood of a beast human, should be very good at finding things. Petra often asks Garfiel to help find missing items, and then secretly gives him some raw meat as a reward.

It’s just that Petra is reluctant to treat Frederica in the same manner as Garfiel.

???: “…Hey, little girl, the little girl over there, can you hear me?”

At this time, a voice flicked past Petra’s ears, who was walking through the mansion deep in her thoughts and worries. She turned her head in confusion and saw a slender white arm stretching out from a hedge.

Petra’s eyes widened at the hand that was repeating the call of "little girl".

???: “You came at just the right time. Come over and grab my hand. I accidentally fell in!”

Petra: “Fell in… how did you fall in… Uh-huh, let’s ignore that for now. Uh-huh, hay!”

Putting aside her doubts, Petra grabbed the hand which had a prideful tone and pulled on it with all her might. Petra’s small size doesn’t have much strength, but fortunately, the other person’s body is very light. Soon, there was a sound of someone’s lower body getting plucked from the soil, and a whole-body leapt out of the hedge.

It was a young girl wearing a white hood. She is petite in stature and is about the same age as Petra. And such a girl was just buried in the hedges of the aristocratic mansion just now.

Petra: “How so very strange… Mmmph.”

???: “Stop, stop, I can understand your feelings, but please don’t yell, little girl.”

Just as she was about to yell, the girl covered Petra’s mouth quickly. Staring at Petra who was struggling, the girl asked seriously…

???: “Will you stop shouting?”

Petra nodded heavily.

???: “Moi am not a suspicious person. Okay, now continuing the conversation. Moi am…”

Petra: “Ahhhhhhhhhh! Someone h… Mmmph!”

???: “You really are a girl who people can’t put their guard down around. Although that’s quite likeable, it is quite troublesome right now.”

Once again, Petra tried to pull a clever stunt, and the girl quickly put her hand in front of her mouth. The girl looked as if she had lost to her. When she saw Petra’s wide-eyed expression, she sighed in frustration.

???: “What? This time, you won’t scream anymore, so let go of your mouth? Even if you say that to Moi……”

Petra: “Fuha, didn’t you just let go? Ack, what are you doing?”

???: “Humu, yeah. Let’s say that I escaped from an uninteresting situation, I guess.”

What an exaggerated person.

Her voice was cute and clear, but for some reason, she felt an incredible majesty that did not correspond with it.

However, it was precisely because such words came out of this person’s mouth, it made Petra clench her fists unconsciously.

Petra: “It’s impossible to run away because you are not interested. If you always run away, you will develop a habit.”

???: “Huh? How courageous, you dare to lecture Moi. But! Moi has always ignored unpleasant situations and lived as she pleased. This meeting will continue to be. So, what’s wrong?”

Petra: “If this goes on, won’t you one day be abandoned by people important to you?”

???: “Isn’t this the thinking of the weak who shifts their own way of living onto others?”

She doesn't know if it was Petra's words that ignited her fuse, but the girl suddenly lowered her head. On the side of the hood, golden bangs were reflected in her blue eyes underneath a faint glow.

The young girl's words are unusually firm and strong, containing an unshakeable will. However…

Petra: "It is not a matter of being strong or weak! Nor does it have anything to do with the idea of being annoying or troublesome! What's so strange about wanting to be gentle with people?"

???: "…"

Petra: "It's difficult to be gentle with others. But if you keep insisting on not doing it, you'll develop the habit of running away, you really won't be able to do it ever. So…"

Beyond those words, Petra felt a vortex of emotions swell inside her heart.

Yes, it is difficult to be gentle with others. In the past, back when she thought she was the centre of the world, Petra didn't discover it as a matter of course until the end. Something that a gentle person taught her.

She has been living blissfully in the gentleness of gentle people.

…So, Roswaal must've protected Petra as well.

???: "…Umm"

It seemed that she had said something that was not very pleasant, and she seemed to have lowered her head unconsciously, but Petra immediately raised her head.

In her mind, that voice echoed. …Keep your eyes open all the time.

???: "Well, what a wonderful encounter. What a heart-wrenching expression."

In front of Petra like this, the girl crossed her arms and murmured softly in an inexplicably happy mood. The smile at the corner of her mouth made Petra feel a sense of deja vu.

That’s right, this is the ill-smile that Roswaal often showed to Petra.

???: “Moi likes you very much, little girl. In respect to your frank and awe-inspiring opinions, Moi shall step back this time. Since you are in this mansion, surely you must also be attending the dinner party? Moi shall bring you heavenly pleasure.”

Pointing to Petra’s chin, the girl spoke with confidence. Petra looked confused

Petra: “Uh. Speaking of which, who are you?”

???: “Fufu, don’t be scared when you hear it. Moi am Dias Lepunzo Elemanso Oplane Fatsbalm VI! Little girl, be proud! It’s really amazing for a temperament master like Moi-self to be taken aback! As for this reward, you shall receive it tonight!”

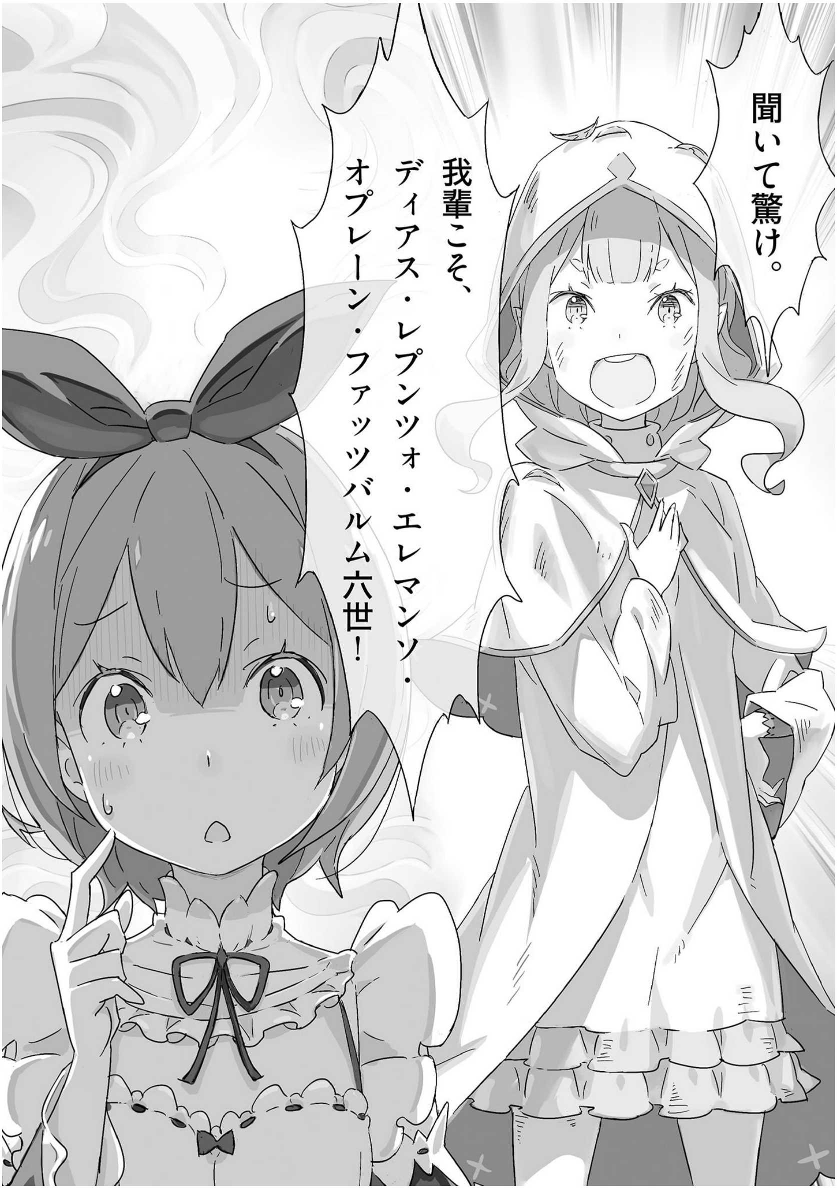
With such a declaration, the girl, Dias walked out of the atrium with a big laugh. Then she was quickly seen by the servants of the mansion and was carried away on their shoulders and taken away.

Petra half flinched and furrowed her eyebrows

Petra: “What a strange name…”

She can’t help but whisper the feeling that any ordinary person would feel when they hear it.

END



聞いて驚け。
我輩こそ、ディアス・レプンツォ・エレマンソ・オプレーン・ファッツバルム六世！

Joshua Juukulius's Careful Encyclopedia

1

There was something Joshua Juukulius had found odd during the past year and few months.

Whenever he picked up any food, Mimi and her brothers would enter his room without fail.

“Does the light turn on or something whenever I touch food or what?” he wondered.

“—? What happened all aba sudden, Joshua? Didu hit your head?” Mimi tilted her head, standing in the middle of the room with countless crumbs from her snacks stuck around her mouth.

Joshua pinched between his eyebrows and ridiculed himself for asking such a dumb question as he watched Hetaro heroically wipe the crumbs off his sister's mouth.

“Joshua, you okay?” Tivey asked. “Wouldn't it be better for you to tell the Lady and ask to have a rest?”

“—. It's fine, thank you for caring for me, Tivey. But I'm okay.”

“…Don't overwork yourself,” Tivey reminded him, adjusting the position of his monocle. He was the youngest of the three.

Joshua got along with him most, perhaps because they both had older brothers. He even copied wearing a monocle, which he had started doing after becoming friends with him and developing a slight admiration for him.

Joshua sighed loudly as he touched the “copycat” monocle.

The reason for his fatigue was not just incessant work and the frequent moving of his base for missions. The mental aspect was probably a big part of it. Anyway—

"—So, a messenger for a royal selection candidate, huh? Lady Anastasia is indeed ill-natured," Joshua mumbled with a pale face, rubbing his aching stomach.

2

The Kingdom of Lugunica, facing the peril of having no king, was in the midst of selecting the new ruler of the next generation. Five candidates were gathered to participate in a three-year-long selection where one of them was to be chosen as worthy to sit on the throne. House Juukulius showed its support for a foreign country's major merchant, Anastasia Hoshin.

She was recommended by a major merchant who was not only foreign but who also uncommonly established himself in just one generation. At first, the opinions split evenly within House Juukulius. People who strongly supported Anastasia were criticized.

What managed to persuade those opposing opinions and gained House Juukulius's support was Anastasia's talent and personal virtue. Above all, it was the achievements of Julius Juukulius, the "Most Excellent" knight.

As Julius's younger brother, Joshua had always been doing his best to live up to his expectations. It was hard to say that it all bore fruit, but one thing he never failed to do was putting in hard work.

He had pride in cooperating generously as one of the Anastasia Camp.

Despite that, he was not very blessed with big roles this past year, and he had to endure times of misery, but—his time had finally come. In that moment, he felt shameful for the cowardice that was giving him stomach pain.

Of course, my cowardice is my own problem, and it's wrong to hate Anastasia for that, but—

"Shall I say I wanted to do things properly taking one step at a time? …No, that would just be an excuse. I can't face my brother or Lady Anastasia like this…"

"Huuuuuh, Joshua's going round and round again! Donchu get tired of thinking about that stuff all the time? Mimi thinks dat is weird!"

"Ugh, Mimi is supposed to have the same role as me, but what is this difference in our perception…"

Joshua slumped his shoulders as Mimi gave him harsh pats on the back.

—On this occasion, Anastasia chose Joshua for the big role of a messenger to a royal selection candidate.

Anastasia definitely had enough chances to do research on all of the candidates, holding a solid and broad information network. And the result was—using all that information, and deciding to invite them to the Water Gate City of Priestella, the current hub where everyone had been brought together.

Three groups were invited: Crusch Kartsen, a duchess who was considered to be the leading candidate; Felt, who came from the slums and possessed the Sword Saint; and Emilia, a half-elf with silver hair.

Messengers would be sent to each of these groups, and the one Joshua was responsible for was—

"—The half-elf Emilia out of all the people…" he lamented.

"Looks like you have something against half-elves?" asked Hetaro.

"No, um…It's not like I hate them. It's just…aren't they scary? She belongs to the same race as that Witch of Envy. I've heard that they even share similar appearances?"

Joshua explained the prevalent sentiment in response to Hetaro's innocent question.

The legend of the Witch of Envy was a fundamental fear for all humans living in this world. Just imagining a girl with an origin that embodied that made one's blood run cold.

"If it were Duchess Kartsen, I've met her before, although it was long ago. Even if it were Lady Felt, I've interacted with her first knight, Sir Reinhard. Why, despite all of this…"

"Mmmmm, you're such a scaredy-cat! But Mimi thinks da lady is not scary! More like…kind? Or dangerous?"

"Oh, that's right," commented Joshua, "Mimi and the others have met her before, true."

Unlike the troubled Joshua, Mimi and her siblings had contact with the Emilia Camp.

The battle with the Witch Cult and subjugation of the White Whale that took place a year ago was a shocking incident that almost made Joshua foam at the mouth, and they had even cooperated with the camp.

"Then, could I ask what your impression of them is, Tivey and Hetaro?" Joshua inquired.

"Huh? Why did you skip over Mimi?" Mimi wondered.

Joshua gently patted Mimi's tilted head.

Mimi happily climbed onto Joshua's lap with a "Don't wowwy!"

Joshua tickled Mimi's throat, signaling Tivey and Hetaro before it was too late.

"We didn't interact much with Lady Emilia based on our strategy," said Tivey. "We just saw her during the conferral of honors… But we didn't feel like she was scary."

"The lady was cute…" Hetaro admitted. "Ah, I withdrew after the fight with the White Whale, so I don't know much about Lady Emilia. But it's a different story when it comes down to her knight…"

Joshua furrowed his brows at Hetaro, who had a point. "Ah yeah, there are many weird rumors about him…"

To tell the truth, one of the reasons why Joshua was so alert about the Emilia Camp, apart from that it was where the half-elf Emilia came from, was the existence of that suspicious knight.

Rumors whispered that he was an outsider who got mixed up in this grand royal selection, who neither came from a family of honorable knights, nor had any sort of extraordinary abilities.

However, if one tried to get information about the Emilia Camp, that black-haired knight of an unknown origin would most definitely come up in the conversation.

“I’ve heard he was involved in the subjugation of the White Whale and defeating the Sin Archbishop of the Witch Cult…” Joshua began. “It’s not like I am trying to doubt the fact that my brother contributed to the defeat of the Sin Archbishop…”

The fact that some unknown fellow might share the credit with my brother is infuriating. Moreover, my brother was the one who actually managed to do it. Without question, the top honors should go to him.

“To begin with,” he continued, “he joined the subjugation of the White Whale and Sloth. While not confirmed, he might have subjugated the Great Rabbit, and even though his origin is unknown, he became a royal selection candidate’s knight. And a person who brings along a fearless little girl? I have no idea who I am supposed to imagine!”

Lady Emilia is equally inscrutable and frightening for choosing that kind of mysterious person to be her knight. Even apart from that, there are an endless amount of terrifying rumors about the Emilia Camp.

In the first place, the person who recommended Emilia to join the royal selection was Margrave Mathers, an infamous hypocrite.

He was also known as the “Demi-human Lover,” a well-known lecherous man who was rumored to force the demi-human maids in his mansion to wear indecent outfits.

He had a beast-human with a ferocious face and a bloodthirsty internal affairs officer as his two distinct subordinates. Those two were also quite tricky—the record on the former one could not be found even after full use of Anastasia's information network. And the latter one was notorious for being wanted in his hometown.

On top of all that, there were even terrible ghost stories, like dozens of girls with the same face coming in and out of his main residence at the same time, or that there was smoke rising from the kitchen daily from steaming potatoes.

—Indeed, it seems like a dark and sinister and demonic place.

"The more I think about it, the less I understand why Lady Anastasia chose me to be a messenger for them… Maybe I unconsciously did something rude and she just wants to quietly get rid of me?"

"That's a bit too pessimistic…" thought Hetaro.

"But! Can you think of any other logical explanation for this? Ah… Ah… What shall I do… I guess I should ask Lady Anastasia about her true intentions, right?!"

If there's a chance that all this was some sort of mistake, perhaps clinging onto said possibility will be better.

"If it isn't a mistake and right to the point," said Tivey, "I feel like the Lady will think of a way to keep your mouth shut."

"—Hic!!"

"Even Tivey…" murmured Hetaro.

Joshua, frozen with a pale face, naturally blocked out the conversation happening in front of him.

He just felt like he was caught up in a grand conspiracy, standing up in a daze.

"Oh? What happen, Joshua? Pee? You wanna go pee?" asked Mimi after falling from Joshua's lap, looking up at him while lying on the floor.

Joshua loosely shook his head in response to her question. “I-I can’t accept this kind of big role like this. I’m scared… I’m scared but! I need to go and straightforwardly ask Lady Anastasia her true intent…” Joshua headed towards the door, leaving those words behind. He then left the room, looking for Anastasia.

The three siblings left in the room glanced at each other.

“Tivey, you shouldn’t make fun of him too much,” admonished Hetaro. “Joshua is a serious guy.”

“I’m sorry,” Tivey replied. “But I kind of get the young lady’s thoughts.”

Tivey slightly lowered his eyebrows at Hetaro, who had given him a bit of a hard time, just like an elder brother would do. Mimi hugged them both as hard as she could from behind.

“Really,” she said, “He and m’lady be having a hard time. Julius too, huh.”

3

“So, Lady Anastasia, I would like to ask you what your true intentions are. Depending on your answer, I may have to suggest that I am not fit to complete this mission…”

“What the heck, Joshua, ya so serious,” Anastasia replied.

Keeping in mind the talk he had with Mimi and the others prior to this, Joshua simply went to Anastasia’s room and was greeted with her soft wry smile.

This was after he shared all of his thoughts, as he could not bear to keep them bottled up anymore. Of course, he adjusted his words so as to not feel ashamed in front of his elder brother, Julius Juukulius.

Nevertheless, there was no denying that what he was asking itself was pathetic, so his complexion was poor.

“Ya don’t have to worry, Emillia’s place ain’t that scary. Emilia or even Natsuki ain't gonna bite."

"But what about the margrave… Or the two subordinates? Or the smoke from the kitchen…"

Anastasia put her hand on her cheek and squinted her pale blue-green eyes in thought.

"Hmm, I was making Joshua help thinkin' it'd be all good, but guess it just made things scarier. T'was my bad."

The reflection she voiced was about the fact that Joshua was helping her organize the information collected from the network. That sort of putting complex content together was one of Joshua's specialties, so he felt confident about having been a help.

However, it was also true that he was all swept up by what he had seen and heard—what a dilemma.

"Hm, I get your worries, Joshua. If you're gettin' that worried, shall we rethink 'bout ya bein' a messenger?"

"…I apologize."

"Nah, all good, all good. —But lemme try one thing?"

"Hm?"

Anastasia closed one eye and mischievously smiled at Joshua's dark face. Startled and unable to understand her words, someone knocked on the door behind him.

The person whose face peeked out of the doorway was…

"Did you call me, Lady Anastasia? I got the notice from La…"

"B-Brother?!"

It was no one but Julius himself who entered the room after a respectful bow.

While Joshua was completely astonished by Julius's appearance, Julius just squinted his eyes with a short “Ah, Joshua,” before continuing. “What were you talking about with Lady Anastasia? Is there something you want to ask me?”

“Ah, um-m-m, no, to you, um…”

“Ya, that’s the deal. He’ll be needin’ you, Julius, to keep goin’.”

Joshua fell into disorientation. He did not want his brother to know about his shameful cowardice. Anastasia waved her hand to call Julius over. “Remember how we said we were gonna send Joshua as a messenger ta Emilia’s place? He wants ta learn more about those folks so that he doesn’t come across as rude.”

“I see. That’s why you called me.” Julius approved while nodding, easily taking in Anastasia’s concise explanation. He then looked at Joshua with his clear yellow eyes. “You are right to be mindful like that. Lady Emilia is completely different from what you heard from rumors or her reputation before the start of the royal selection. If you keep that kind of false impression, it indeed might be rude towards her.”

“Brother… Th-Thank you. This is very helpful and motivating to me.”

Hearing the words of Julius who valued his thoughts with a smile, Joshua’s dark clouds of thoughts cleared up. He could feel his anxiety vanishing.

Anastasia was nodding repeatedly in satisfaction with her arms crossed.

—Indeed, her insights are genuine. I must work hard for her from now on, too.

“Ah, and if you go to Lady Emilia, you should be careful of her knight,” Julius continued. “He is…well, you do not know what to expect from him at first sight. However, he has a strong sense of loyalty towards Lady Emilia, and remarkable mental fortitude and determination.”

“…Brother?”

“He is also a spirit arts user. He was officially awarded and earned the title of knight. In other words, he is a spirit knight just like myself. Not because of that, but watch out alright… Joshua?”

While Julius was eloquently throwing out all of those precautions, his younger brother did not show any reaction. Julius raised his eyebrows.

Yet Joshua just responded with a short “It’s nothing,” shaking his head. “Brother, thank you for your detailed explanation. Thanks to you, I’ve realized he is an opponent I must be very careful of. — Lady Anastasia, I will perfectly fulfill my role as a messenger.”

“Ya,” she replied, “lookin’ forward to it, good luck.”

“Yes, leave it to me! I will definitely bring back good news!”

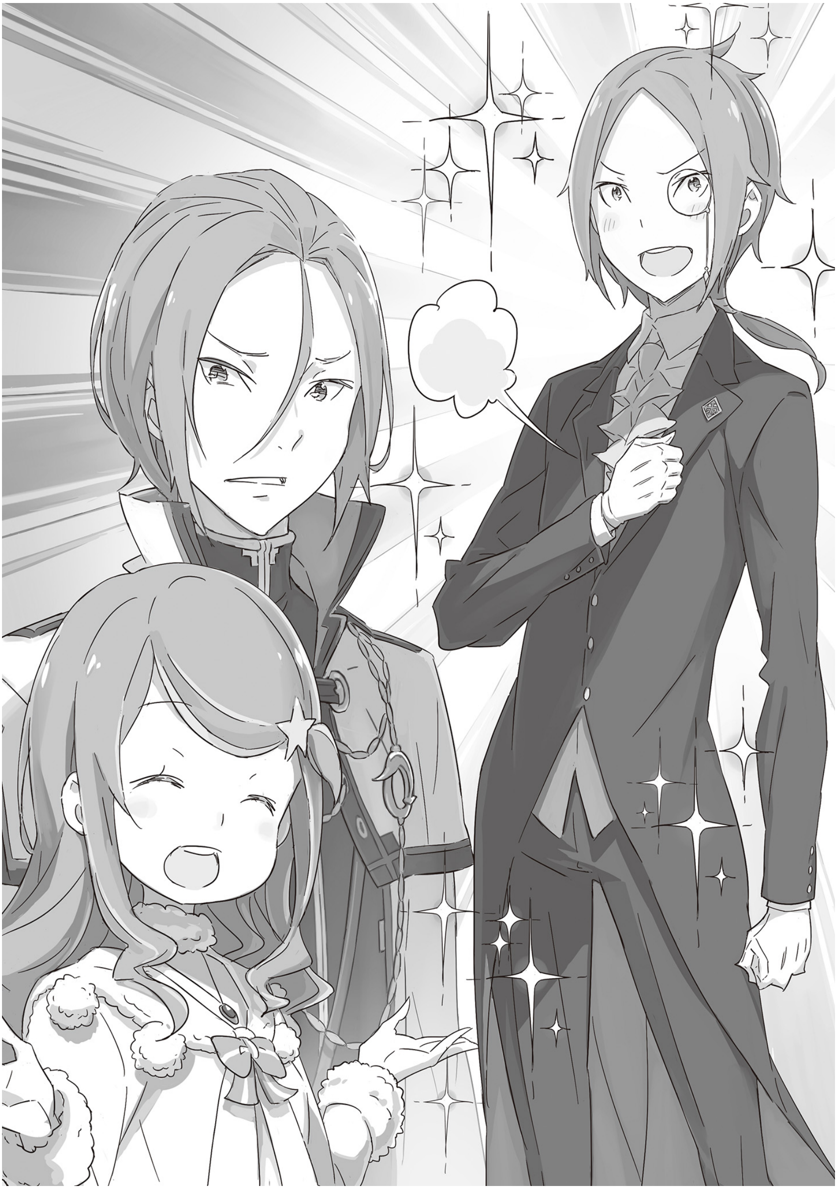
With glowing eyes, Joshua proudly ran out of the room, short of breath with a hand on his chest.

Julius watched him leave, and turned to his mistress, still raising his eyebrows in faint surprise. “…My little brother… Did he act rudely?”

“He-He, nah, all good… I think Joshua was suspectin’ I was up to somethin’ though.”

Julius let out a sigh as he observed how Anastasia smiled—thinking how his younger brother’s behavior itself was likely a sign that Anastasia’s plan had been fulfilled.

END



Volume 18

Chapters 37-48

Chapter 37: Regroup

1

Distant, fierce voices.

Voices, their owners unknown. Voices, their sources unknown.

Were they masculine? Feminine? Did they come from above or below? Everything regarding that was unknown.

???: “…”

An angry voice. And a mourning voice. And also, something like an accusing voice. And was that a crying voice?

Voices. They poured down like a waterfall of sound, its rough waves an ensnaring whirlpool. As if he had finally spoken out loud something deeply rooted in his heart, to someone he had finally met.

His turbid identity was swept away, lost to those muddy tides.

Hands and feet, head, bottom, chest, back. Melting, mixing, blending together.

Even his own existence, incomprehensible as it was, was swallowed up by the waterfall of sound, flowing away as if lost forever. His body, scattered.

All he knew was the black stagnation which swallowed the world he could perceive. It was thus that he realized that the dark stagnation was invading his body, allowing it no form of resistance, progressively bringing along an end.

But, at this very moment, a knot, so tangled that it could never be unraveled, was resisting that erosion. That knot refused to shrink back. It would never be dismantled, never be shriveled, never be denied.

By no means had his entire being succumbed to the stagnation in his body, by no means had his entire being surrendered to the darkness, in the battlefield that could be called his body.

And finally, finally—

2

???: “—!!”

The first noise that flooded into his ears was someone’s enraged roar.

After hearing that sharp voice, he opened his eyes to be greeted by a white ceiling. At the same time, he realized that he was lying spread-eagle on a hard surface.

???: “—Useless!!”

His newly-regained consciousness came along with the clear sound of an insult. The voice was rife with unbearable anger, accompanied by actions befitting an emotional outburst. He heard the distinct sound of a hand slapping against skin.

???: “Stop it! You should understand that the responsibility for that blame does not lie with a single person here.”

???: “Shut up! I don’t want to hear those stupid wordplays! An outsider shouldn’t interrupt!”

Accusatory voices and unquenchable anger. A sign of conflict.

From what he could hear, allies seemed to be arguing in a spacious room. He stretched out his left hand, trying to support himself with the wall as he got up.

But, halfway through, his brain was overwhelmed by shock and pain, and his breathing suddenly hitched. His eyes felt as if they were sticks of combusting dynamite, and his field of vision was suddenly stained by vivid blood-red.

As the impact of the pain ravaged him, he finally pulled his upper body upright, taking in the scene of the quarrel.

—Three men and women quarreled in the middle of a room… No, rather, all three of them were men.

A tearful Ferris was attempting to hit Wilhelm with his fists, while Julius stopped him in desperation. The sound that he had heard earlier had been that of Wilhelm being struck on the side of his face. And following Ferris's line of sight, he could see that the old man, his cheeks slightly dyed in red, was bowing his head in shame.

Wilhelm: "From the bottom of my heart, I apologize."

Ferris: "At least give me an excuse! Give me a reason that I can accept, that you were powerless to stop it, something to convince me! Just apologizing doesn't mean anything!"

Julius: "Ferris, you're creating a pointless commotion. Can't you see that Wilhelm-sama is incredibly remorseful?"

Ferris: "Remorse…?! What's remorse going to do? Useless! Pointless! Everybody, everybody… Why…? Why did no one think to rescue Crusch-sama…?!"

Ferris's gaze pierced both Wilhelm and Julius in another fit of rage, but almost immediately after, he sank to the floor, defeated and weak.

And as the crying Ferris issued a condemnation, the two men could say nothing. While being looked by Wilhelm and Julius, Ferris slammed his gloved hands on the ground contemptuously.

Ferris: "Am I supposed to be Blue…? I can't even do anything right now…! Useless, useless, useless, useless, useless…"

Ferris sobbed, as he continued to curse angrily. This time, however, those insults were directed at himself. That was another option he could take. After all, no one could interfere with him after realizing that he was most angry at himself.

Julius: "…"

Julius's sigh came intertwined with Ferris's sobs. Wilhelm remained silent, and a crushing atmosphere shrouded the room around those three people. Then,

???: "Yo, Captain. Ya finally awake?"

Garfiel appeared in the doorless doorway, noticing Subaru's state, which had gone unnoticed by the other three people. In response to his voice, Julius followed Garfiel's gaze and gazed upon Subaru's stirring, wearing an expression of relief.

Julius: "I am glad. Ferris, Subaru seems to have finally awakened."

Ferris: "…Right."

At Julius's call, Ferris wiped his face with his sleeve as he stood. His disgraceful attitude vanished as he walked towards Subaru, examining his body before firmly fixing his eyes on Subaru's.

Ferris: "Well, you seem to be fine. Your mind is clear, right? Do you know your name and place of birth?"

Subaru: "I'm Natsuki Subaru, from Japan."

Ferris: "A country I've never heard of… I was born in Crusch-sama's territories."

Ferris's expression revealed that he believed Subaru's answer to be a pointless joke. He stood and immediately turned to leave. No one was willing to throw accusatory words at him, and so everyone watched in silence. Only Wilhelm followed after Ferris. Before he left, however, the elderly man turned to give Subaru a ceremonious bow.

After the two left, the tense atmosphere in the room finally thinned. But, at the same time, they became aware of an increasingly somber atmosphere instead.

Garfiel: "Captain, even if ya can get up, ya shouldn't be forcin' yerself to do anythin' right now."

Subaru: "…You look the worst out of all of us."

Leaning against the wall, Garfiel called out Subaru, who responded to the haggard-looking teenager with his own greeting.

His cheeks and blond hair were saturated with blood, and his clothing was torn in far too many places to count. His pallor was just as awful as when he had first arrived at the shelter with an injured Mimi.

As he considered this, Subaru's own sluggish thoughts finally caught up.

Subaru: "We're alive, huh."

Garfiel: "Right. My amazin' self and Captain survived, so that's all good 'n well, but we can't even celebrate it. Fuck it all."

Affirming Subaru's mutter, Garfiel grinded his teeth down bitterly.

As he watched Garfiel, Subaru once again confirmed his own survival—that is, he understood that Return by Death had not been triggered, and that the operation to capture the City Hall had ended.

Of course, since he was still alive, he had to have been rescued by someone, but—

Subaru: "What happened to the City Hall…? How did I get here?"

Julius: "We are still in the City Hall right now. The Witch Cult abandoned it, and we captured the building we targeted. Looking just at the results, we could call the operation a success, but…"

Julius knelt next to Subaru as he began to answer his choppy questions.

Upon closer inspection, the Finest of Knights looked awful. His hair was uncharacteristically messy, and his face and neck were covered with wounds. His Knight's uniform was also dirtied with blood. Considering all this, it was hard to say he was safe and sound.

But, most importantly, his normally graceful features were currently twisted with remorse and humiliation.

Julius: “First and foremost, it is good to see you up again. If anything had happened to you, we would have lost our source of morale.”

Subaru: “…Don’t say useless stuff like that. What happened? I don’t care about morale or anything like that. The Witch Cult chose to abandon the building… What the hell?”

Julius: “You heard right. As said previously, the Witch Cult abandoned the building, and we took back the City Hall. But the hostages were turned into inhuman things, and the Cultists who caused all this managed to escape after achieving their goals. This can hardly be called a good result.”

Julius stated the situation in mellow tones. A stark contrast to Subaru’s anxiety.

However, that stiff tone and those drooping eyes… It was obvious that the circumstances Julius was explaining were so serious that he could not hold his indignation from showing in his voice.

And, Subaru could not ignore what he was just told.

Subaru: “Inhuman things, meaning…”

Julius: “You must have seen it too, on the upper floor of the City Hall. That unending, nightmarish sight.”

Shaking his head, Julius affirmed that cruel reality.

Subaru vividly remembered the shiny red compound eyes and the sound of the wings desperately beating in a cry for help. His nausea was held in check by the knowledge that they had been expecting salvation from him, another human.

His heart seemed to tighten with feelings that were neither truly sympathy nor fear.

The Witch Cult’s Sin Archbishop of Lust, Capella, was a truly despicable monster who trampled freely on human dignity and values, all while spitting her brand of ridicule. What that monster played with was neither the human spirit nor the human heart, but something even more sacred.

Julius: “The square, as well as the City Hall’s interior and upper floor… Everything, our division of labor included, was all a ploy to gain time. We were dancing on the Witch Cult’s palm the entire time… They could have easily, little-by-little, killed us all. The reason why that did not happen was your keen judgment and the efforts of the human who was turned into a black dragon.”

Subaru: “My… judgment?”

Julius: “You activated the Conversation Mirror, made a move on the top floor, and, as a result, the status of the City Hall was successfully communicated to Anastasia and Ferris. The prompt arrival of our reinforcements, the Iron Fang and Ferris, was solely due to your actions.”

Subaru: “Did you think those words will comfort me?”

Julius: “…That was not my intent. I was merely stating the truth as it is. It is up to your own heart to decide how to take those words.”

Subaru was irritated by Julius’s poised answer. However, Julius’s cold reply was also evidence that he himself was not calm either.

Confirming that neither’s mental state was great, Subaru took a deep breath.

Subaru: “One more thing about what you said just now, what happened to the black dragon?”

Julius: “This happened on the top floor, so I may not know any more than you do… There was a person who was transformed by the Authority of Lust. As disgusting as that Authority is, what is much more surprising is how well it replicates things. The man who was been turned into a black dragon made his way to the top of the building, even as he was on the verge of death, and breathed fire to make Lust back off. It was probably thanks to that heavenly intervention that we were able to save your life.”

The one who Julius spoke of was the black dragon that had been slashed and thrown out of that room by Crusch. Since Capella’s power was to mutate and transform, that black dragon was very likely one of the hostages in the City Hall. Subaru and Crusch had disregarded his call for help, and relentlessly attacked him.

And despite those circumstances, that person still fought with all his might.

Subaru: "The one who was turned into a black dragon, is he…"

Garfiel: "He can't die."

As Subaru fretted about the dragon's safety, Garfiel suddenly interrupted with a calm voice. He would not meet Subaru's gaze, instead staring directly up at the ceiling.

Garfiel: "My amazin' self won't let him die. We can't let him die. We have to save him… He must be saved… otherwise…"

Julius: "He has been like that for a while now. Apparently, it appears to be someone he knows. Although his scent has changed, Garfiel seemed to recognize him from his actions. In any case, his healing is now complete. He is fine, although a little anxious. He is resting at the back."

Subaru: "An acquaintance? Garfiel, is this someone you know from the city?"

Garfiel: "…"

Garfiel's choice to remain silent came as a surprise to Subaru. Garfiel did not look back either.

In any case, he was grateful that the life of their savior, the black dragon, had not been extinguished. But the others, the flies, they—

Julius: "We cannot say that they are okay, but at least their safety has been assured. Ferris has made his diagnosis, but…"

Subaru: "That is to say, it's not a wound or illness that Ferris can fix… Damnit!"

Unable to help hitting the floor with his hand, Subaru pondered the feelings of those who had lost their bodies. Exactly how strong was the sense of loss they were feeling? They had been turned into something inhuman, horror and cruelty wholly different from the loss of life.

Loss of life simply meant that one had only lived up to that point. But the loss of human form meant only the loss of identity… while existence had yet to come to an end.

Those who were tortured by that incurable curse were also gathered in the City Hall. Were they above him? Or below? Regretting that he could not even remember how many were suffering that fate, Subaru could only think of other things that needed to be confirmed.

Since he knew he was still alive, the next question that emerged was a natural one.

Subaru: "Are you and Garfiel both uninjured?"

Julius: "As you can see, both Garfiel and myself were not significantly injured, and neither was Ricardo. Although, we can certainly say we were humiliated… but that is an afterthought."

Subaru: "…"

Even as he said so, Julius's teeth clenched down on his lip, his voice laced with shame. Seeing his anger, Subaru was consumed by a similar sense of frustration, thinking on the opponent Julius had faced.

Julius had fought against the detestable Gluttony, Alphard.

In all honesty, Subaru wanted nothing more than to rip that Sin Archbishop apart with his own hands. But even supposing that Subaru had stayed to fight him, his escape would have been completely inevitable.

But he could not remain calm, knowing that his sworn enemy had escaped.

Julius: "…I apologize for not fulfilling the role you assigned to me."

Subaru: “If you say so, but I don’t have any problem with it… They’ve broadcasted something, right? That’d mean they have achieved their goal.”

Julius: “Correct. Same as before, the voice was that of Lust. Just… No, it was inevitable. Moving on, their requests were made. We have to discuss that as well.”

From Julius’s expression, Subaru could tell that Lust’s request had not been anything proper. Although he did not wish to hear it, covering his ears would be pointless. He would have to learn it sooner or later. But, before that—

Subaru: “Broadcast aside… What happened to Crusch-san?”

Julius: “…”

Subaru: “Crusch-san also went to the top floor with me… And she ended up in a worse position than me, suffering at the hands of Lust for much longer…”

The image of Crusch spitting up blood, with only the white of her eyes showing, flashed through Subaru’s mind. She had suffered such injury without suffering any visible trauma. Presumably, something life- threatening must have happened.

And Ferris’s anguished cries. Although he did not want to believe the worst, the most obvious conclusion was—

Subaru: “Ferris… said something that did not sound good, so…”

Julius: “Crusch-sama is still alive. There is no doubt about that.”

Subaru: “Don’t phrase it with those implications!”

In that brief moment, Subaru saw a vague ray of hope. However, it vanished as soon as he saw Julius’s expression. That was the expression of a person with something unbearable on their mind, devoid of the relief of having saved a life. On the contrary, it seemed that something more terrifying was happening—

Julius: “Ferris has been doing his very best, but the current situation is far from good.”

Subaru: “Far from good… What the hell is going on? What’s wrong with Crusch-san… If Ferris can’t do anything, why aren’t we putting our heads together and trying to help?!”

Julius: “Calm down. No matter how worked up you get, the situation will not change. So calm down already.”

Julius snapped sharply at Subaru’s disgraceful outburst. But his calmness only served to fuel the present Subaru’s rage.

Subaru: “Bastard, how the hell can you be so calm?! We lost so soundly to that lot! How can you not be angry?!”

Julius: “—Of course I’m also boiling with rage!”

Julius sharply swatted aside the arm that Subaru had stretched forward to grab him. Subaru fell silent as he saw Julius’s gaze waver after his roar.

Julius: “…Apologies for my unbecoming violence. It seems that I am yet to be mature enough to control myself.”

Julius reached out a hand to Subaru, who had fallen after his arm had been forcefully blocked. Although he clearly understood Julius’s feelings, Subaru had deliberately attacked his attitude, and he felt great shame upon hearing Julius’s apology.

Subaru: “Crusch-san, she…”

Julius: “…was attacked by Lust, right? A foreign agent has contaminated her body. And it is currently wreaking havoc inside her. Ferris’s distraught reaction is quite appropriate.”

As Julius spoke, a clear image of Crusch’s incredible pain, in his last memories of that assault, came to Subaru’s recollections

That ultimate pain, her body infiltrated by a devilish monster, which siphoned away her own flesh, blood, bones and even soul. That pain was one which that no human should ever have to endure.

The fact that he could not do anything about it was probably the reason for Ferris's attitude from before.

Before and after Subaru's awakening, Ferris seemed to have blamed Wilhelm. Presumably, he held the old swordsman accountable for being unable to protect their master on the battlefield. In fact, he was only searching for someone to carry the blame. Both the accusing Ferris and the accused Wilhelm understood this.

And so Wilhelm had remained silent after Ferris had struck him, while Ferris had cried over his own hateful weakness.

The two men who had just left the room were attending to their miserable master now.

Thinking about that trio, the sense of failure in Subaru's heart only grew stronger and stronger. However, Julius interrupted Subaru's emotional torrent.

Julius: "—Subaru, there is something that I must confirm."

Subaru: "What is it?"

Julius: "Although it is rather difficult for me to point this out… it seems that you have yet to notice."

Subaru felt a wave of doubt surge at Julius's roundabout question.

Narrowing his eyes at Subaru, Julius brought a gentle hand to Subaru's collapsed body. The latter adjusted to see what Julius was doing, his hand gradually moving from his foot to his right thigh.

Unsure of what Julius was doing, he looked down carefully to where Julius's hand traced a line from Subaru's thigh to his right foot.

Subaru had treated his injury casually. Subaru had only recalled his memories of Crusch being defeated by Capella at the top floor of the City Hall and had conveniently forgotten about his own injuries.

What had happened before he lost consciousness?

He had unconsciously understood and accepted the feeling of Returning by Death—but the feeling of death had not arrived. He should have been relieved, but—

Subaru: “What? This is—?!”

His breath suddenly catching in his frozen throat, Subaru could not help but doubt his own eyes. His right leg was right in front of his eyes, but there——Was a seam of black, ugly, charred-looking skin. His right leg was currently being eroded by that wriggling something.

Julius: “It was not Ferris who fixed it, nor was it any type of healing magic. Your leg… the one which had been torn apart… fixed itself. And it does not even look as if it hurts.”

Subaru: “…”

It was as Julius had said.

His ugly right leg felt neither pain nor a sense of violation. His first instinct was to wonder if it only maintained the illusion of being connected, but he could bend his knees and move his toes as intended.

However, the wounded areas had turned black, connecting the shredded parts of his leg. The erosion extended both up and down his right leg, visibly running in his blood vessels.

Julius: “Subaru, I must have to confirm it with you again.”

Subaru: “…”

After seeing the dramatic changes to his own leg, Subaru could not even speak. To Julius’s question, Subaru could only slowly lift his head, and then—

Julius: “Are you… truly fine?”

The most terrifying thing about his right leg being healed was that it did not prevent him from standing and walking as he pleased.

Garfiel: “That onee-san named Ferris said that Captain’s leg was neither injured nor sick, so even if my amazin’ self tried to use healin’ magic, nothin’d happen. All I’ll be getting’ is the feelin’ that I’m healin’ somethin’.”

Rolling up the leg of his pants, Subaru could see that his right leg was laced with black blood vessels. The embroidered patterns appeared to be elastic when touched, and the texture was close to that of skin. If the color were ignored, he would be able to say that everything was normal.

Julius: “Did you reattach it yourself…? That would be the only thing that would reassure me right now.”

Needless to say, however, Subaru possessed no regenerative powers that allowed him to reattach his own limbs. This was the second time losing that leg, and his own memory told him that the first time around, his leg had shown no signs of repairing itself.

Of course, the consequent line of thought was to figure out what could have caused this, but Subaru could think of only one thing.

Subaru: “Is this because that bitch Capella dripped blood onto my leg…?”

He had descended into a realm of confusion after his leg had been ripped off and his blood oozed out.

For that reason, his memories were blurred, and he could not say with absolute certainty that it was indeed the case. However, Subaru had no doubt that he had seen Capella cut into her own wrist and poured droplets of blood on Subaru.

At that time, she had also mentioned something incredibly concerning. Yes, it was—

Subaru: “Crusch-san… She suffered the same thing that I did.”

Julius: “That being… having blood dripped into her wounds? What an unpleasant act. Maybe it has some significance as a ritual… Leaving behind an immediate impact? Or perhaps it is a curse. I have heard those operate differently from the laws of regular magic.”

Subaru: “Curse… Yes, curse sounds right. It was cursed blood… No, it was something different… something like… Blood from a dragon? Right, it was blood from a dragon. That’s what she said!”

As Subaru gazed at Julius’s puzzled face, he sifted through his foggy memories, and could not help but clap his hands together at his success.

Capella had indeed mentioned, while witnessing Subaru’s suffering brought about by her blood, that her own blood was mixed with dragon’s blood. That had not seemed to be a jest, a bluff, or a lie. And it provided several clues.

Julius: “Blood from a dragon… Does that mean the Dragon’s Blood bestowed to the Royal Family?”

Subaru: “I don’t know any details, but is there really such a thing in the Castle?”

Julius: “It was one of the treasures granted by the Divine Dragon Volcanica, as per the Covenant. The Dragon’s Blood is famous for being potent enough to even turn barren soils fertile again.”

Subaru: “It’s pretty powerful, that Dragon’s Blood… I don’t know if it’s really related, or what that’d imply.”

Considering that Capella had called herself a Lugunica, the name of the Royal Family, this was an object of concern. Especially, as Wilhelm had said, due to Emerada Lugunica being a real historical figure.

Albeit unbelievable, was she really part of the Royal Family? But having the Dragon’s Blood mixed with her own blood stirred questions.

Julius: “In any case, with the information that it might be related to blood, then Ferris might be able to help her.”

Subaru: “Ah, that’s right. Let’s hurry…”

Garfiel: “Wait, Captain. Wait a sec.”

Finally, information that might lead to a turnaround.

Subaru wanted to rush to share that information, but Garfiel, arms crossed as he leaned on the wall, poured a metaphorical bucket of ice-cold water over his head. In response to Subaru’s glare, Garfiel dropped his gaze.

Garfiel: “Captain, ya haven’t seen it yet, ‘n the fewer people see, the better.”

Subaru: “…What does that mean?”

Garfiel: “It means what ya think it means. That pretty onee-san won’t like it if ya see her.”

Garfiel looked down, avoiding Subaru’s probing gaze. Growing increasingly uneasy, Subaru instead turned to Julius, who, like Garfiel, shook his head with eyes similar to Garfiel’s.

Julius: “In fact, I am afraid that Crusch-sama very much hopes to avoid the gaze of others right now. She is a noble person, so she does not wish that anyone sees her in such a weakened state.”

Subaru: “Is it… really just because she’s weak right now?”

Julius: “…”

Julius said nothing. He merely quietly turned his gaze from Subaru.

And just that one small action answered everything.

Subaru: “…It’s all my fault.”

Julius: “Subaru, that’s—”

Subaru: “It’s all my fault! I… Obviously, I should have known better than anyone else how underhanded they can be! I should have foreseen and prepared as much as I could before we challenged them!”

The more he tried to imagine what was happening to Crusch, the more horrified he became.

And the intense self-reproach those thoughts brought to Subaru… A product of his anger at his own incompetence, as well as of their own anger, as well as courage and regret for his reckless challenge.

Subaru knew of the awful natures of the Witch Cult’s Sin Archbishops, right down to his bone marrow. And not just Petelgeuse. Before the attack on the City Hall, Subaru had met Sirius and Regulus himself, in rapid succession. After those encounters, how could he have underestimated Capella?

Was his pride to blame for the decision to fight back against such overwhelming strength at a disadvantage? This had all happened because of his misjudgement.

Subaru: “Everything, it’s my…”

???: “—That’s enough. Whether you’re cryin’ or complainin’ it’s really becomin’ quite bothersome, so would ya mind stoppin’?”

Subaru, bearing all the blame, was about to sink deeply into a sea of self-loathing.

What reached Subaru’s ears, however, was not a gentle voice lifting him from that ocean of dark thoughts. It was a cold, apathetic one, accompanied by a frigid gaze and a bored exhale.

Subaru: “…”

He turned to the entrance of the large room.

Standing there with her hands clasped together, under the gaze of everyone in the room, was a purple-haired businesswoman with a gentle face. However, the lethal glare she fixed on Subaru was completely out of character for her usually gentle features.

Subaru: “Anastasia…”

Anastasia: “I understand that ya feel disappointed after a defeat on the battlefield, but if all ya do is mope and complain, those around ya will feel bothered. And even if ya mope on and on, yer losses ain’t gonna disappear.”

Anastasia’s reprimands were directed toward Subaru, who had been crushed by defeat.

For a second, Subaru was too stunned to understand. The very next moment, however, his mind was overtaken by rage, but before he begun to speak—

Julius: “Anastasia-sama, please retract your statement. Subaru was the one who had the most direct contact with the sinners of the Witch Cult. Even if he’s moping or sighing…”

Anastasia: “How unlike ya, Julius. Ya usually focus on the issue at hand, but right now you’re being so emotional… If ya came here just to play with yer friends, ya might find that Joshua suits you a lil’ better.”

Julius: “…”

Julius, who had attempted to defend Subaru, was silenced by the frosty sight of his master. Subaru’s white-hot rage was bathed in ice-cold water, but he still felt incredibly confused about Anastasia’s attitude.

Then, looking at Subaru, who was utterly speechless, Anastasia fiddled with the fox scarf around her neck and spoke to the other two occupants of the room.

Anastasia: “…Yeah, thought so. Julius, things with Crusch-san seem kinda busy right now, don’t they? Why don’t’cha see if ya can go and help? And the blond child over there, would you mind accompanying him for a bit?”

Urging Julius and Garfiel to leave from the room, Anastasia fixed her eyes on Subaru. If two of the four people in the room left, a confrontation between only Subaru and Anastasia would occur.

Anastasia: “Don’t worry, I won’t do anythin’ bad.”

Anastasia promised so, with a decidedly not-so-cute smile.

Julius bowed and left, Garfiel trailing behind him, a cautious light in his eyes. Until the very end, he kept his concerned gaze trained on Subaru, before giving him a nod and leaving.

Anastasia: “Garfiel-kun’s quite the adorable boy. Until the very end, his worried gaze was fixed on Natsuki-kun. Looks like he takes good care of people.”

Subaru: “…I’m sure you didn’t get me alone just to gossip.”

Subaru gave a thorny reply as Anastasia began idly chattering about Garfiel after his departure. A similar exchange had happened in a previous interaction, in which she had been intending to catch Subaru off guard.

Subaru turned to see Anastasia stroking her hair as she surveyed the half-destroyed room, before lifting a chair and seating herself.

Anastasia: “My, havin’ a relaxin’ chat like this with Natsuki-kun really takes me back… all the way to the night before the battle with the White Whale.”

Subaru: “Back then, we were scheming a plan for success. This time, nothing like that is in sight… Even though we recaptured the City Hall, the situation hasn’t improved at all…”

Anastasia: “Yes, nothin’s changed. Rather, everythin’s gotten worse, and we got no optimal course of action to follow…”

Subaru realized that her carefree voice had, for a second, honed itself into the razor-sharp blade of a knife. He could not help but straighten his back, while Anastasia glanced at his leg.

Anastasia: “Everythin’ okay with yer leg? Last I heard, it’d been shredded.”

Subaru: “Fortunately, I can run and jump just fine, although this looks kind of gross.”

Anastasia: “Well, bein’ able to run and jump right now’s what matters most. There's still a lotta things to do, but until then…"

Anastasia let the conversation drift lightly toward Subaru's injury, before inhaling sharply.

Subaru realized that she was finally arriving at the main topic and frowned. She pointed her hand at the ceiling—no, she was pointed somewhere beyond the ceiling.

Anastasia: "Did ya ever end up hearin' the third broadcast after yer operation?"

Subaru: "No, I didn't, what did they say…? It was some kind of request, but I don't know what exactly those were."

Anastasia: "Natsuki-kun missed two of the three broadcasts, how careless."

Anastasia giggled softly, holding a hand to her mouth, and Subaru put on an unhappy pout. Even so, she kept her hand over her mouth, and narrowed her eyes, fixing them on Subaru.

Anastasia: "One of the demands—I'm sure that only Natsuki-kun and I can understand it."

Subaru: "Only me… and Anastasia-san?"

What exactly did that mean? Subaru's mind swam with questions. He had never felt that he and Anastasia held anything in common. After all, this was their first time engaging in a proper conversation.

With such a shallow relationship, what exactly did they have in common?

???: "—My my, Ana, sometimes your manner of speech ends up only serving to annoy others, you know. I think this is exactly one such case."

Subaru: "—?!"

The voice of a third person suddenly echoed in Subaru's ears. This voice belonged to neither Subaru nor Anastasia. Instead, it felt lighter and more neutral.

Subaru hurriedly toured the room with confused eyes, but not a single unknown figure was to be found in their surroundings. Julius and Garfiel had left, and there was no sign that a person had approached the entrance of the room.

Where in the world had that voice come from?

Anastasia: “Ya say that, but don’t’cha do the same thing I do? Look at poor Natsuki-kun. He’s in such a state of confusion right now.”

???: “Oh, that will not do at all.”

Subaru: “That, who is…?!”

Anastasia spoke to the third voice as if all were natural. Rather than relieving Subaru’s frenzy, he verged on hyperventilating as attempted to discern what exactly had brought on this turmoil.

???: “You do seem quite frightened, my apologies.”

Subaru: “…”

His eyes fell upon it. The third party that had spoken up. The owner of that voice that had so suddenly intruded the scene.

No, that third voice had not intruded. It had been in this room since the very beginning.

In fact, it had entered the room with Anastasia.

Echidna: “My name is Echidna. Well, I say that… But what I really am is an Artificial Spirit.”

Subaru: “Echi—?!”

“It” smiled deftly at Subaru, who was swept away by pure shock.

Lips curling up on both sides, eyes narrowing slightly. That should… probably, be something like the imitation of a smile.

—Wrapped around Anastasia’s neck, a scarf of what appeared to be faux fox fur was smiling.

All the while naming itself after a Witch whose name Subaru would not forget, and revealing its identity as a Spirit.

Chapter 38:
The Witch Cult's Proposals

As Subaru gazed at that thing, eyes wide in shock, he momentarily forgot how to breathe.

Echidna: "Although I had been anticipating this kind of reaction, it is still somewhat overwhelming. Even though I may look like this, I am, by gender, a woman… Well, no, I am a Spirit, so it is difficult to determine whether I have a gender. I am not sure if there is a distinction between male and female Spirits, for starters. Maybe I should just say that I identify as female?"

Snow white hair and sharp black eyes. A neutral voice that cleverly weaved roundabout words. Those characteristics brought to mind that figure consisting of only two colors, black and white—the Witch in Subaru's memories.

Subaru: "What a… terrible joke. You're saying you're Echidna?"

His first encounter with the Witch of Greed had been before taking the Trial in the Tomb of Sanctuary. She had lured him to one of her Tea Parties. She had enticed her guest with sweet words in an attempt to make him turn into a puppet out of his own will, dancing as she pulled its strings. And, on top of that, she wanted to borrow him to seek all the answers that she herself could not witness. She could be said to be curiosity incarnate.

Subaru did not wish to see her ever again.

Subaru: "You… actually turned into a fox? Stop screwing around. And appearing during this moment of crisis, what are you scheming this time?"

Anastasia: "Wait a moment. Stop jumpin' to conclusions and listen."

Subaru had recovered slightly from his initial shock, ready to bring retribution upon the white fox in front of him who was claiming to be Echidna. However, he was cut off by Anastasia, the person wearing the white fox around her neck.

Subaru's hostility towards the white fox was then directed to Anastasia.

Subaru: "Don't tell me not to be upset! Don't bullshit me! What are you doing with her and what… have you been deceived by that? In the first place, she shouldn't be out of the Sanctuary."

Anastasia: "I don't know what you're going on about, but it's been over a decade since I first met Echidna… And since then, we've barely ever been separated. Ain't that just a little different from what you're sayin'?"

Subaru: "Over a decade…?"

Anger bubbled deep within him again, at the thought that she had been doing whatever she wanted, free to interact with greater society all along. Echidna's own testimony was the only source of information regarding the fact that she could not exit her castle of dreams. So, had she been pulling the wool over his eyes about that as well?

Subaru: "You're always like this… Do you get a kick out of watching people flail around in the dark while you laugh at their ignorance?"

Echidna: "…My, my, it seems that I am detested through and through. Although this is a misunderstanding that seems quite difficult to resolve, it has cleared up some things."

Anastasia: "Yep, it's just as Echidna's said."

In contrast to Subaru's fierce anger towards Echidna, Anastasia and the white fox exchanged a calm, understanding glance.

Seeing Subaru frown to that, the arctic fox shook her head in an unexpectedly human manner.

Echidna: "Although I have no clue whatsoever as to where your distrust of this other Echidna stems from, I would say that those issues are completely unrelated to me."

Subaru: “What do you mean?”

Echidna: “It is a simple affair. I do not know anything about any Echidna outside of myself. I was born knowing nothing outside of the fact that I am an artificially-created Spirit, as well as my own name. Other than that, I have no other clues regarding my origin.”

Subaru: “—Huh?”

He had been expecting some sort of explanation, but the arctic fox spoke words unsuited to what Subaru knew of Echidna. Or, rather, if she really were Echidna, then anything she said could very possibly be misleading words meant to trick Subaru.

Claiming to be an Artificial Spirit and calling herself Echidna, despite the fact she had stated that she possessed no previous recollection of Subaru, he could not just carelessly believe her.

Anastasia: “Well, Natsuki-kun’s expression’s full of nothin’ but suspicion.”

Subaru: “Of course. For me, who knows Echidna’s true nature, this reaction is only natural. You too should… Right, my bad. Echidna’s saying she doesn’t remember anything, right?”

Anastasia: “It seems ya got absolutely zero intention to believe it… Ah, we’re operatin’ on a time limit, so that’s a real headache to have in this situation.”

Contrasting with Subaru’s clear vigilance, Anastasia spoke in her usual casual tone.

Echidna was working with her—just that alone was enough for Subaru to become wary of Anastasia. And although both Julius and Ricardo were people of trust, the degree of said trust would perhaps need adjustments. Subaru could not allow himself to hope that the master and the subordinate were not unified in their opinions.

Subaru: “Why would you tell me your name, if you don’t have any memories? There should be no reason to do that… unless you’re sure I know Echidna.”

She had given him her name and disclosed her origins. Was that not proof that she was “Echidna of the Tea Party”? Which meant that she was not the “Echidna in the Coffin”, the one Roswaal was seeking. And so, there was no doubt that she was the one Subaru had met. In that case, there were a mountain of questions he had for her.

That said, he understood that this was not the time for those questions. However, facing Subaru’s visible impatience, Anastasia sighed tiredly.

Anastasia: “It seems things only got so rowdy ‘cause Natsuki-kun missed the broadcast.”

Subaru: “The broadcast? How is the Witch Cult’s message related to this?”

Echidna: “—Because one of their requests was “Surrender your Artificial Spirits.”“

The white fox answered the question curtly.

The content of that request left Subaru’s mind blank as he struggled to comprehend the ramifications. The broadcast, the Witch Cult’s demands, the Artificial Spirits. That was to say—

Subaru: “No way…”

Echidna: “Although it is something I would rather not believe, they are demanding Artificial Spirits—That is, those with the same physiology as me and the girl that accompanies you. Because of this, is it not natural that we should approach you for a chat?”

Subaru: “How do you know that Beatrice is an Artificial Spirit?”

Echidna: “The only thing I can say is that I noticed the moment I gazed upon her, but I am not quite sure how. But I think that she, too, would be able to recognize me on sight. Maybe it is some kind of Spirit detection?”

With a more cautious attitude, the white fox answered Subaru’s questions one-by-one.

At the very least, Beatrice had not mentioned anything about the fox scarf upon first encountering Anastasia at the hotel. However, it was very possible that Beatrice had detected something, but, unsure of how accurate her sense had been, had not voiced her concerns out loud.

Why did she have to carry all those burdens alone? Subaru turned as if to ask her, and immediately felt a sharp pain, as if someone had stabbed him in the heart.

Echidna: “I believe it is unavoidable that the child by your side could not detect me properly. I have many defects as a Spirit. I cannot mimic those so-called Contracts, and I cannot even use magic to defend myself. Although, to compensate for this, I am confident in my ability to hide my presence. This time, though, I am presently starting to doubt that confidence.”

Subaru: “You can’t form a Contract… Then, what is Anastasia…”

Anastasia: “This child and I don’t share the relationship of Spirit and Contractor. Our relationship’s different to the kinda relationship Spirits and Contractors have… If I hafta call it anythin’, I’d say that we’re accomplices.”

Echidna: “I want to witness this child’s future, so that is why I am following her around like this. Having been with her for a few years now, we have become something like conversation partners. From time to time, she even discusses her business matters with me.”

The arctic fox spoke with a fleeting grin, and Anastasia lightly scratched her neck. Their relationship seemed harmonious and friendly, and Subaru presumed that they shared a certain degree of trust.

Subaru: “Why… would you disclose such a thing to me? It’s not like you have the ability to fight, or something like that.”

Echidna: “Is it not natural that we would disclose some of our own affairs if we wish to gain your trust? Furthermore, with the lives of the population of this entire city hanging in the balance… At this critical juncture, it falls to us to take action. Falling into internal strife because a small, relatively insignificant detail is something to be avoided."

Anastasia: "I also really wanted to stop her, but… This child doesn't pay attention to others' advice at all after havin' made up her mind, so… I'd like for you to at least hear her out, for the time being."

The white fox was unusually frank and genuine for someone called Echidna, and Anastasia's words supplemented her accomplice's words. Belatedly, Subaru realized the reason for Anastasia's earlier coldness—she had taken on that demeanor to create an environment for a one-on-one conversation with Subaru.

Along with that, in order to successfully persuade Subaru, she had deliberately ushered Julius and Garfiel from the room.

Anastasia: "Of course, I won't comply with the Witch Cult's requests. But if both us and Natsuki-kun don't mention anythin', no one'll know what an Artificial Spirit even is. We need to know what's goin' on before convincin' anyone to reject the demand."

Subaru: "I have no intention whatsoever to listen to anything that bunch has to say, so I strongly agree… but that doesn't mean that all my skepticism about that fox calling itself Echidna is gone."

Anastasia: "Don't worry much 'bout the name. Does this Echidna you know really have such a poor character, Natsuki-kun? If so, it's rather troublesome to see you treat this child in such a way."

Subaru: "I'll apologize if it's someone else entirely, but the timing is awful, and their attitude and speech patterns are almost identical. And…"

Anastasia: "And?"

Subaru wondered if he should tell Anastasia, who tilted her head.

To Subaru, it was unclear just what kind of existence were Artificial Spirits. All he did know however, was that Beatrice and Puck both were Artificial Spirits, and they had been created by the Witch Echidna.

Of course, if the white fox in front of him were truly an Artificial Spirit, it was safe to assume that she had likewise been created by Echidna's hands.

In her search for eternal life, Echidna had devised a mechanism to create replicas. There was some doubt as to how much of that claim was valid. But if it were assumed to be true, then it was reasonable to reach the conclusion that she had become a Spirit.

Casting away her flesh, freed from the notion of lifespan as a Spirit—if she could extend her existence in this manner, it would certainly fit with the Witch of Greed who longed for omniscience.

Therefore, there was no question that the white fox was the "Artificial Spirit that Calls Itself Echidna". However, her claim that she possessed no other memories—was that true or false?

Anastasia said they had been together for more than a decade. However, that alone was no reason to believe her. It would come as no surprise if she had been plotting something for a decade.

If someone were to say that she had been planning all that for this exact moment, Subaru would not have a hard time believing them.

Anastasia: "Hey, hey, ya look like ya had a terrible experience."

Echidna: "Such intense hatred makes me actually curious about this other Echidna, but I suppose we should set that topic aside for now… Whether he believes us or not is irrelevant. By the way, Ana, should you not tell him what is going on already?"

The arctic fox spoke with a defeated tone, accepting Subaru's grudge towards that suspicious Witch, and Anastasia, at her urging, shrugged and clapped her hands together, picking the conversation back up.

Anastasia: "Well, your suspicion's somethin' to be discussed later. The most pressin' matter is the Witch Cult's demands. The Witch Cult made three other requests."

Subaru: "Three other… So, a total of four?"

Anastasia: “We’ve taken the City Hall back, so… it’s really the number of control towers still in their hands. Since most of their requests were rather mockin’ in content… try not to be offended.”

Mocking demands—once again, they had gone too far. Subaru, who believed that his impression of the Witch Cult could not grow any worse, had his notions shattered.

Anastasia caressed the tail of the white fox with her hands, as Subaru silently urged her to speak. Then, licking her lips, she said—

Anastasia: “The first one was to surrender one of our Artificial Spirits. This demand came from Gluttony.”

Subaru: “Gluttony…”

Anastasia: “Although I’ve got much to say on that, I’ll save my comments for later. Next is Wrath—She wants the Book of Wisdom brought to this city.”

Subaru: “—Hk?!”

At yet another unexpected shock, Subaru involuntarily widened his eyes. And seeing that, Anastasia narrowed her pale-green eyes.

Anastasia: “Judgin’ from that reaction, I’d say that Natsuki-kun knows somethin’ ‘bout it?”

Subaru: “…”

Anastasia: “No worries, that’s excellent. It’s been troublin’ me quite a bit. Echidna doesn’t know anythin’, and neither does Julius nor any of the others.”

Subaru: “…That fox really said she doesn’t know anything? Even though it’s the Book of Wisdom, huh…”

Anastasia flashed a slight smile. After all, before this breakthrough, she had been puzzling over something without even a clue on how to reach the answer. But now, she had found a glimmer of hope. Of course, that smile carried nary a hint of cuteness either.

And it was also factual that her apprehension was visible after Subaru's question.

Echidna: "No, I am afraid I do not know anything… Then, if you allow me to speculate… the Echidna you know is connected to this Book of Wisdom, correct?"

Subaru: "Yes, that's right."

Anastasia: "In that case, I gotta ask even if I don't wanna know… What kind of person was this Echidna that Natsuki-kun's acquainted with? Is she related to the Witch Cult?"

The perception shown by both Anastasia and the white fox was outstanding. At the same time, they were closely related to one of the parties, so Subaru was tempted to think they were feigning ignorance.

Of course, it was inevitable that they would think this way.

If he were to believe what the white fox had said, Echidna was merely her name. Only Subaru knew that the Artificial Spirit's creator was Echidna. And, most importantly, this proved that among the Witches, only the name of the Witch of Envy had been recorded into history. Not a trace of the others was left.

Only those of the Emilia Camp, who were faintly aware of Echidna's existence and nature, would get a feeling of crisis because of her name.

Subaru: "—Echidna… is the name of a Witch from a long time ago. In addition to the Witch of Envy, other wicked Witches existed. She was one of those. Although she's long dead, her soul remained anchored to this world. Having met her before, I'm now very wary of her."

Anastasia: "Hey, Natsuki-kun, do ya have a fever? You're speakin' some rather outrageous words here."

Subaru: "There's nothing wrong with my head. Those Witches are incomprehensible, twisted existences. They can even create Artificial Spirits, so just accept this much."

Echidna: “In that case… then this Echidna could be said to be my parent, huh.”

Subaru’s answer was sprinkled with implications, and the white fox drew meaning from words that surely sounded frustrated. Although he was not really trying to hide anything, Subaru felt a twinge of regret at not being upfront with her from the get-go.

Echidna: “Discovering the secret behind my birth at an unexpected time is one of the many joys of life. If you have the opportunity, I would like to listen to more details.”

Subaru: “…Although you’re a Spirit yourself, you’re so obviously clueless about everything. Even our Beatrice seems to know much more than that… No, come to think of it, Beatrice has never mentioned anything about you. Where did you come from, and what were you meant to do?”

Echidna: “Regretfully, whether you are talking about the circumstances of my birth or the purpose I was made to fulfill, both of those are wholly unknown to me. Right now, I am merely following the path of this rather interesting child.”

At Subaru’s accusation, the white fox cast a meaningful sideways glance to Anastasia, who slowly moved her gaze to Subaru.

Anastasia: “I’m also quite curious ‘bout the connection between Echidna and this Witch. And she… cannot be unrelated to the Witch Cult. So, let’s return to the topic of the Book of Wisdom…”

Subaru: “The Book of Wisdom is the prototype of the Witch Cult’s Gospels… That is, it’s the original, complete version. It holds prophecies that describe the future and follows principles similar to the Dragon History Stone.”

Anastasia: “The same as the Dragon History Stone… Then, they’d be highly credible. Is it possible the Witch made the book herself?”

Subaru: “That’s what she implied, but the two existing copies should have been incinerated. If more copies were ever made, then I don’t know of them.”

Echidna had given copies of her Book of Wisdom to both Beatrice and Roswaal. And it had been confirmed that both of their copies had been destroyed by fire during an incident a year ago.

Beatrice's Book of Wisdom had crumbled to ash along with the Forbidden Library. And Ram had burned Roswaal's Book of Wisdom, rejecting the future recorded within it. Since both had been destroyed, there should be no Book of Wisdom in existence.

Anastasia: "But that's just what you've heard from the Witch Echidna. Do ya think her words'd be truthful regardin' that?"

Subaru: "There's that…"

Although unhappy that Anastasia had simply denied his assertion, Subaru himself also understood that the credibility of that statement was not very high. However, he did not think that Echidna had lied.

Presumably, only Subaru, who had spoken to the Witch face-to-face, would have such a feeling.

Subaru: "…"

Anastasia: "Not trustin' the person, but trustin' her words. What a troublesome person for Natsuki-kun."

Subaru: "I myself think so, too… I obviously didn't intend to trust her, but I trusted her words concerning this, how contradictory."

All of Echidna's actions had been cleverly scripted, meant to coax Subaru into becoming her puppet.

However, that did not mean that everything had been a lie. Did Subaru believe that because he wanted to? Or was he still dancing along to that Witch's tune unknowingly?

Anastasia: "For the moment, regardless of Natsuki-kun's personal feelings, there are three possibilities for this Book of Wisdom. First, the Witch was lyin', and other copies were made."

Subaru: "And the second is that the Witch Cult doesn't know that the Book of Wisdom no longer exists, and are causing an uproar for nothing… But the third one is?”

Anastasia: “There’s a possibility that a Book of Wisdom remains, even if her words weren’t lies. One single reason—that is, one of the copies wasn’t completely destroyed by fire, and unburnt remains still exist.”

Subaru: “—Wha?”

That the Book of Wisdom might have left remains was something that Subaru had not considered at all.

With Subaru dumbfounded, Anastasia shook a finger.

Anastasia: “Although it’s not somethin’ that’s clear-cut, the book was made by a Witch, wasn’t it? Couldn’t we say that it’d probably be difficult to destroy, or that it’s possible to restore it to its original state?”

Subaru: “Indeed, I really can’t say it’s impossible… But the real question is, who would have found and kept a restored one?”

Anastasia: “If you didn’t see the book bein’ burnt with yer own eyes, and it was last seen somewhere easily accessible… Maybe I’m overthinkin’, and the second hypothesis is far more likely, but, in either case, we won’t accept their proposal.”

Anastasia faced Subaru with a dainty hand placed over her mouth, citing various possibilities.

Who could have access to the remains of a Book of Wisdom? The remains of the one in the Forbidden Library were certainly impossible to reach. The mansion itself had burnt down, and the Book was consumed along with the Forbidden Library itself.

But what about Roswaal’s book? Although he had heard that Ram had burned it with magic, after that, Emilia’s magic must have scattered the ashes in that snow-covered Sanctuary.

What if it had survived the fire? And what if the book could really be restored? It would not be surprising if someone had picked it up.

It was not totally uncanny.

Subaru: “If anyone could bring it here, it would be someone from my faction, and they all would have told me about picking it up. Therefore, I’m confident that the Book of Wisdom isn’t in this city.”

Anastasia: “In any case, it doesn’t matter. I don’t need to concern myself so much with a book I know nothin’ about.”

Confident—although he had said so, his feelings were perhaps closer to wanting to believe.

However, Anastasia did not dwell on this point, nor did she intend to dig deeper into the details of the Book of Wisdom. Rather,

Anastasia: “Then, the next demands came from Greed and Lust. They’re plain and simple, and there’s absolutely nothin’ worth discussin’ ‘bout their words.”

Subaru: “Those two… No. Gluttony and Wrath are no different. So, what’s going on? What did they request?”

Both Capella of Lust and Regulus of Greed were undoubtedly the worst of the bunch.

And before he had even met Capella, Regulus had injured his right leg and kidnapped Emilia, so Subaru bore a number of negative emotions for him. The fact that he had yet to hear any news about Emilia worried Subaru.

Anastasia: “Here’s to hopin’ you won’t get too angry ‘bout it.”

Subaru: “Depends on what’s the content.”

Subaru’s response to Anastasia’s uneasy opening remark was immediate. With an expression of “if you put it that way”, Anastasia sighed.

Anastasia: “Lust’s proposal is the same as the others, and it’s just mockery… “Send twenty pairs of men and women who love each other to the control tower—they absolutely won’t be harmed”, somethin’ like that.”

Subaru: “That lying bitch! The hell does she mean, they won’t be harmed?! Did she forget that she’s the one who’s turning people into flies and dragons for fun?!”

As always, Subaru grew furious when confronted with Capella’s evil demands.

Twenty pairs of men and women who love each other—it was horrifying to even imagine what that terrifying monster who sung about love would to do those men and women.

Anastasia: “From what I could tell, that Sin Archbishop doesn’t consider changin’ someone’s form to be harm. “I won’t hurt anyone~” is more along the lines of her exact words… I almost felt like I could see her speak. Well, next’d be Greed’s demand…”

Subaru: “…”

Subaru choose to remain silent, angrily waiting for Anastasia’s next sentence.

However, seeing that attitude, Anastasia seemed to find it difficult to continue, hesitating for an exaggerated amount of time. Then—

Echidna: “The request of the man calling himself Greed was, “I want to hold a wedding with my silver-haired bride. So don’t interfere with anything regarding this marriage!”“

Anastasia: “Echidna…”

Echidna: “Ana, you seemed to have a hard time saying it, so I do hope it was alright for me to move things along.”

In Anastasia’s stead, who was far too hesitant, the white fox guarding her neck spoke first. However, the exchange between the two did not reach Subaru’s consciousness.

—Hold a wedding with a silver haired bride.

And who would be the bride of Regulus of Greed? The question did not merit any consideration at all.

Subaru: "—STOP FUCKING AROUND!! YOU FUCKING BASTARD!!"

Therefore, Subaru's volcanic eruption of anger was entirely reasonable. Anastasia could not help but frown, and the white fox's hair stood up on end. That was how direct and pure Subaru's rage was.

In his mind, the image of a white-haired man took form. An ignorant villain, holding transcendental power, had captured Emilia, and insisted that her only value lay in her face.

But that powerful man was nothing more than sick in the head. What nonsense was he spouting this time?

Subaru: "Beatrice! And the Book of Wisdom! And Emilia! They say they want them? Hah! The Witch Cult isn't getting their hands on a single one of them! I'll show them for messing around with that bullshit proposal!"

Anastasia: "…I anticipated that reaction, but hearing ya say it so crisply like that really is reassurin'."

Seeing Subaru's passionate appearance, Anastasia smiled along as well.

Not due to a happy mood, but because that same passion was rising in her as well.

Anastasia: "Our Artificial Spirits… Well, I got no intention of turnin' Echidna over to them. In addition, I refuse to be intimidated by the Witch Cult. I brought both Crusch-san and Emilia into this city, and the Witch Cult has made them suffer, so… I won't be able to face either of them again if I don't get us out of this."

Echidna: "Oh, Ana, you are so militant."

Anastasia: "That's precisely 'cause I know how to level the playin' field so we can claim victory. We absolutely can't escape right now. Because we're sure to crush that Witch Cult and force them to pay reparations."

Calculating misfortunes, reputation, victories, and losses.

Her clever words glossed over it slightly, but Anastasia's fighting spirit showed not the slightest intent of retreating from the battle. Unlike Julius, Garfiel, Wilhelm, or even Ferris, she was only able to speak with such recklessness due to her lack of personal experience with the horrors posed by the Sin Archbishops.

However, Subaru did no such thing.

In this case, there was absolutely no need to say anything that would needlessly damage their morale. And even more importantly, her presence, as vengeful as it seemed, was undoubtedly trustworthy.

Anastasia: "Everyone's got to agree with that sentiment, even slightly. Havin' said that, they're still a few steps ahead, but who can accept this ending?! We can make excuses for failure in the next world."

Subaru: "…"

Anastasia: "As long as we're still alive, there's still a chance. And we absolutely can't throw away our lives, that'd be far too tragic."

A ferocious smile rose on Anastasia's usually gentle face.

The pressure emanating from her petite form could have anyone forget that she was no warrior, experienced with the battlefield… No, that was wrong. She was, with her own profession as a battlefield, a warrior with the experience of a hundred battles under her belt.

Having chosen wits as her battlefield, she was a battle-hardened warrior.

Anastasia: "Whether it's Crusch-san, or the people who have lost their human form, if we can get our hands on Lust, she'd probably be able to heal them up. And Natsuki-kun, your beloved princess was stolen away. This ain't a pill you can swallow, right?"

Subaru: "Like you need to ask! Emilia will be my wife, damnit! I'll get rid of that bastard Gluttony, and take Rem's memories back! I'll find that long-winded Sirius and knock her teeth out! And I'll drag Capella here and force her to apologize and change everyone back before beating her senseless!"

Echidna: "My, Ana and this Natsuki boy are both treating the impossible like it is easy. But, truly, that is the thing I find most endearing about you."

Subaru echoed Anastasia's forceful declaration, and, seeing their spirited state, the white fox nodded with satisfaction.

The first and second battles had ended in failure.

But the next battle was ahead of them. No one would die, and they would let no one die. In the end, they would survive, victorious. That would be Subaru's triumph.

Anastasia: "Ricardo is standin' guard, lookin' for Joshua and other lost children. He should be back shortly. And then, again, we'll hold a full-fledged strategy meetin'."

Subaru: "We also need to reconfirm the situation throughout the shelters and near the control towers."

Anastasia: "That won't slip my mind. Hey, it looks like my mind is finally startin' to work."

Since they had decided to do what they needed to, their hearts would be steeled with determination. That was the natural way.

While nodding at Anastasia's words, Subaru turned his gaze to the outside of the City Hall. From beyond the window, only one side of the city could be seen. But, he could see the towers that controlled the watergates standing tall.

There was no way to distinguish which tower was east, west, north, or south. So, each one could hold Emilia, Rem's memory, a sworn enemy, or a loathsome monster.

—In this city, the battle to save those precious loved ones continued.

Chapter 39:
Knightliness and the Tardy Man

After reaffirming their determination, Subaru and Anastasia made their way downstairs, toward the reception hall.

Subaru had been lying down on the third floor of the City Hall—the middle one out of all five floors, which seemed to normally function as a conference room.

Anastasia: “Since the fifth floor was completely destroyed by the dragon’s breath, the fourth floor is technically the top floor now. All of Lust’s victims are gathered and restin’ there.”

Subaru: “…What happened to the broadcasting magical device? The top floor burned down…”

Anastasia: “No worries, it’s been removed and put in safekeepin’. The magical device itself’s shaped like a large metal box, so it’s easy to carry around. It seems that the sound’s picked up by the box, and then transmitted by sound-detecting magical devices installed throughout the city.”

An antenna… and perhaps something akin to a loudspeaker?

The metal box and loudspeakers functioned as a pair of magical devices. Whatever the case, the magical device had been recovered safely, along with the hostages. Those were perhaps the only good news Subaru had heard upon waking.

Except for the fact that there were pros and cons in using magical devices, and the fact he did not feel comfortable saying that the hostages were safe.

Subaru: “Did you say that Capella’s victims are gathered on the fourth floor?”

Anastasia: “Even though they’ve been turned into flies and, in one case, a dragon, their minds are still human, so they understand what we're sayin' and follow directions… Although I can't really say if that's actually a good thing."

Subaru: "…"

Subaru also could not decide whether it was fortunate that the transformed people had retained their human consciousness. To be aware of having become a creature wholly different from a human, and an insect no less, must have come with a saddening, disorienting sense of loss.

However, could it be said that despite having lost their flesh, they had survived, just in another state? Was this also called a loss of self? The answer to this, presumably, would only be known by those who had experienced it.

Anastasia: "They can also move normally. Thankfully, there haven't been any suicide attempts yet. Things happened too abruptly, and most of 'em haven't really had a chance to react yet… In short, if we can fix everythin' before the dust settles, things should turn out just fine."

Subaru: "Suicide…?"

Anastasia: "Don't'cha think it's a concern?"

Subaru: "…"

That was a question Subaru could not afford to answer rashly. However, this question also meant that, compared to Subaru, Anastasia seemed to be taking this twisted situation calmly.

Anastasia: "As long as there's life, there's hope, but without a will to live, that hope's gonna be destroyed. Just havin' a breathin' body ain't enough, it's the will to live that we can't afford to lose."

Although he could not see Anastasia's face, facing forward and away from him, he heard the conviction in her voice.

However, Subaru wholeheartedly agreed with her perseverance in regard to life and death.

Living was necessary. And as long as there was life, there was a chance to resist. To that end…

Julius: “Anastasia-sama.”

As Subaru and Anastasia made their way downstairs, the first to notice their reappearance was Julius, who called the name of his master.

Originally, Subaru had barely given the first floor’s reception hall a passing glance. Even so, upon sight, the lobby was so deeply engraved with the traces of a valiant struggle that it was obvious what had passed. Overturned tables and chairs, walls scored with sword slashes and scorched with magic, splatters of blood that had been hurriedly wiped away but were nonetheless present here and there.

Although Julius had been so regretful of Gluttony’s escape, he had evidently not wavered for even a second during their battle.

Julius: “How was your discussion with Subaru?”

Anastasia: “It was a lil’ bit lengthy, but it came to a smooth conclusion. Just like us, Natsuki-kun is very determined not to remain defeated. And so…”

Anastasia nodded in response to Julius’s inquiry. After a brief moment of lightheartedness, she cast her gaze in another direction.

Opposite the stairs Subaru had just descended, Ricardo’s burly form appeared in front of the lobby’s entrance. He recalled that Anastasia had mentioned that Ricardo was outside, looking for survivors.

Anastasia: “Ricardo, welcome back. How’s the situation outside?”

Ricardo: “Does this look like a happy face, miss? It’s pretty bad. It’s prolly worsening with time. Those bastards are experienced at makin’ trouble.”

Ricardo frowned with an annoyed sigh at the results of his inspection.

While rubbing his dog head, he gave a series of instructions to various members of the Iron Fang. A few of them left to stand guard, while others went to rest further down the hall.

Subaru: “What do you mean, the Witch Cult’s making trouble? I mean, I know the current situation’s already as troublesome as it can be, but… is there anything else?”

???: “The broadcast, Captain. It was that goddamn broadcast.”

Garfiel, coming down the stairs, answered Subaru’s puzzled question. As he crunched down with his fangs in frustration, Subaru prompted someone to elaborate.

Subaru: “Broadcast… You mean the one where they stated their requests? Did they say anything else?”

Julius: “It was nothing too exaggerated, they just boasted that they had crushed the force trying to retake the City Hall. But the way that Archbishop of Lust phrased it was poisonous indeed.”

Ricardo: “Thanks to her, the people at the shelters I went to had their fighting spirit broken. It’s difficult to cheer ‘em up with the recapture of the city.”

Julius closed his eyes, and Ricardo wrinkled his nose. After hearing their answer, Subaru immediately understood what they had meant by the Witch Cult causing trouble.

Earlier, Capella had made a broadcast with a list of demands, alongside the information of Subaru’s defeat during the operation to retake the City Hall.

The ordinary citizens, who had no capacity for combat, were completely discouraged by what was thought to be the defeat of those with the capability to stand up and fight. And those who could fight would understand the harsher implications. They would understand what Subaru and the others were thinking by attempting to retake the City Hall so early.

They would realize that a powerful force was needed to achieve that. But the raid operation had failed, despite having said powerful force.

In other words, Capella's broadcast was an attempt to defang those inside the shelters, stopping them from mounting resistance regardless of their combat ability.

Ricardo: "Thanks to the records in the City Hall, I found the location of all the shelters in the city, and visited the nearby ones one-by-one, but… You can guess how that went."

Ricardo reaffirmed Subaru's fears. The problem resided in the hearts of the people. Rather than being a failure to motivate them on Ricardo's part, the blame could only be placed on the Witch Cult. Those people had bad personalities to the point of being impressive.

Anastasia: "Without determination, we won't have courage. The next fight'll be dangerous indeed…"

In contrast to Subaru's fury, Anastasia was quietly contemplative, drawing her hand to her chin. Hearing her soft voice, Subaru raised his head, and she started with an "Isn't that right?"

Anastasia: "Even if we fight, we have no chance of winnin'—puttin' that thought into everyone's mind encourages them to give up without a fight. What do ya think'll happen next?"

Subaru: "They'll give up to despair and become depressed… is that the answer you want from me?"

Anastasia: "If they just wanna hug their knees and cry, that'd be almost childishly endearin', don't'cha think? But that won't be the case. If ya lose the option to fight, but the will to live doesn't vanish, what's left?"

Subaru: "…So you're saying that—"

Subaru understood the essence of what Anastasia wished to convey. Horror struck him. However, the notion that the Witch Cult had deliberately attempted to create this situation meant that an unspeakable amount of disgust accompanied his realization.

As if to encourage the tremor growing within Subaru, Anastasia clapped her hands together. And continued—

Anastasia: “The answer to their salvation’s already been given, in the form of a request, no less. Thus, it makes sense that people would show up, who’d be tryin’ to fulfill those demands out of desperation. That goes for the owners of the Artificial Spirits and the Book of Wisdom. And it wouldn’t be odd if even those “lovers and married couples” started poppin’ up.”

Subaru: “But not everyone would go to those extremes, right?!”

Anastasia: “Certainly not. There are some who would refuse to trade their survival for the lives of others. Those’d instead seek a way to flee the city. No matter what, there’ll be plenty of panic, and we won’t be able to get anythin’ done in the confusion.”

Once the contagion of panic spread, with a single misstep, the already-precarious balance would collapse entirely. It hurt to imagine the city in that state, where the Witch Cult had taken full control through fear. Each of them had been given the ultimate power to destroy everything.

A literal dictatorial switch, able to cast everything into the water.

Subaru: “Before that happens… could we somehow visit everyone and motivate them?”

Anastasia: “That’s not very realistic, is it?”

Subaru: “Then the actual problem is that this situation’s too damn pessimistic!”

Panic was a natural consequence of the anxiety in everyone’s hearts. And the only way to fight this inevitable panic was to provide hope.

Subaru: “We are preparing to mount a counteroffensive—Saying even that much would give the little bit of hope needed to stave off much of the panic, wouldn’t it?”

Anastasia: “I think that we should be prepared for some damage as a result, at least. I don't think it's worth the effort, and they'll get carried away with their antics again."

Subaru: "Wait, wait, Anastasia-san. That doesn't sound like what I have in mind."

Subaru scowled, feeling uncomfortable with the way Anastasia was talking. His attitude prompted a tired sigh from her.

Anastasia: "Natsuki-kun's ideal of refusin' to sacrifice anyone—although admirable, it's not realistic in the slightest. Our forces took too much damage in the first stage of the battle, and we won't be able to pull through without takin' some losses. Isn't that obvious?"

Subaru: "The first and the second time… Yes, that was indeed the case. But that's not the same as accepting any future sacrifices… In fact, that's exactly what we're trying to avoid!"

Anastasia: "If we were about to launch one final, victorious strike, I'd agree withcha. But that's not the case. The only people who should be put on the boat are those who still have the will to swim, even if it sinks. Puttin' those who will drown on board ain't a winnin' strategy. They'll just be deadweight."

Subaru: "—! Winning or losing—!"

Anastasia: "And if we lose, all of us will drown! If you don't care about winnin' or losin', then let's talk about livin' or dyin'! Natsuki-kun, your philosophy of taking no losses is really too naïve!"

Anastasia's building anger only served to fan the flames of Subaru's own rage.

Raising a warning arm, Julius stopped Subaru from approaching Anastasia. However, his careful gaze was trained not on Subaru, but on Anastasia, almost as if he were standing on Subaru's side. He sighed lightly and closed his eyes.

Julius: "Anastasia-sama, I understand your feelings, but I must agree with Subaru. Even if preventing Anastasia-sama's worries is indeed impossible, I would prefer dealing with them nonetheless. And damaging our morale… that is exactly the Witch Cult's plan."

Subaru: “J-Julius!”

Julius’s support of Subaru, even at the expense of defying his own master, tempered Subaru’s anger with surprise, and he even felt a surge of renewed confidence. If Julius, paragon of righteousness, the renowned Finest of Knights, shared Subaru’s opinion, then Subaru himself was not wrong in the least.

However, Anastasia only turned to Julius, caressing her scarf.

Anastasia: “Do you think I enjoy talkin’ so loosely about takin’ losses? I don’t even know for a fact that the other shelters will fall to chaos! Ultimately, it’s just a possibility. Even so, there’s no way we can deal with every troublesome possibility one-by-one!”

Julius: “But…”

Anastasia: “Y’ain’t a lil’ kid anymore, so ya understand, don’t’cha? With how limited our resources are, the only way to handle the Witch Cult effectively’s to put everythin’ into offense. And even then, there’s only so much we can do. If we spread ourselves too thin, there’s no way we can actually do everythin’ we want.”

Anastasia’s words must have sounded cold and relentless to Julius, who bit into his lip resentfully, like a scolded child. At the same time, those words also addressed Subaru’s own reckless idea.

Of course, it was not that Subaru did not understand Anastasia’s perspective perfectly.

The weight of saving even one life was such a heavy burden. To save even one person was endlessly difficult. And the more people sought salvation, the more difficult it would become to save them all. The likelihood of something going wrong would increase. So saving as many people as Subaru wanted to was nigh-impossible.

Of course, even children could draw this conclusion.

The more appas a person had, the more likely they were to slip out of one’s hold. Or, alternatively, the more likely it would be for someone to stumble and fall because they could not see their feet, or for their arm strength to give out.

Anastasia: “We’re talkin’ ‘bout winnin’. We need to compromise as adults, instead of railin’ on like spoiled children. A Knight’s reputation shouldn’t be so cheap as to make ya unable to see the difference, right?”

Julius: “…”

Julius closed his eyes after hearing Anastasia’s statement. As he lowered his head, Subaru could see that his fists were clenched behind his back. It was clear that Julius was unwilling to object further. However—

Subaru: “Giving up here means that the pride of a Knight will be sullied.”

Anastasia: “…Hey, Natsuki-kun, have ya been listening at all? Aren’tcha actin’ like ya did at that first meetin’ at the Royal Castle? Through whatever twists and turns, you’ve become a Knight too, ya know.”

Subaru: “Yes, I’m also a Knight now. And because I’m a Knight, I’ll never give in!”

The more appas you held, the more likely they were to topple to the floor.

But Subaru and Julius were Knights, and, rather than holding appas, they were holding something far more precious. Rather than holding fruits that could be dropped without consequence, in their hands were human lives.

Lives which screamed and sobbed and were cared for.

Subaru: “This is something that’s mattered to me from the very beginning. I still act at the mercy of that ideal. The morals of this world have not affected me that much yet!”

Anastasia: “You’re sayin’ somethin’ mysterious again… But the fact of the matter is, during the battle against the White Whale, and the battle with the Witch Cult afterward… people died. For sure, there were casualties in those fights. Natsuki-kun, did ya say anything like this regardin’ those fights too?”

Subaru: “Don’t treat me as a fool, Anastasia. Their deaths were tragic, but those people were prepared to die in battle, even if they did not want to die. They understood what they were doing. There’s a big difference between those, who were prepared, and innocent civilians, who are not!”

He understood that this notion was unreasonable, and that it might be completely illogical. However, this was what Subaru believed. That awareness was what mattered to him in a situation of life and death.

Subaru: “The people of this city should not be forced to prepare themselves for death. It is up to them to regard this place as a battlefield. There was never any obligation for them to take up a soldier’s awareness. Leaving them behind is wrong.”

Anastasia: “Even if it’s wrong, people will be attacked even if they’re unprepared. And when that happens, won’t those people have to be prepared?”

Subaru: “No. It’s only logical that those who have prepared themselves for battle will be met by others likewise prepared for battle. That’s what Knights are for, it’s their duty to protect those who aren’t prepared to protect themselves! That’s the kinda Knight I idealize! That’s the dashing Knight I pretended to be, in front of those defenseless village kids!”

Having accepted the accolades of a Knight, Subaru found himself able to live his dream. It was only natural that he would think in this grand way. The village children looked at him with admiration shining in their eyes whenever Subaru said something valiant and dashing. And so, Subaru wanted to do his best for them.

Of course, it helped that Emilia, when she listened in, would look at him with those same bright, shining eyes.

Subaru: “As Emilia’s Knight, I want to fight for Emilia, but that doesn’t mean that no one but Emilia matters. Anastasia-san, as your Knight, Julius fights, above all, for you. But he doesn’t want to stop there. He’s not satisfied with just that. That’s the nature of a Knight, they’ll stop at nothing to look dashing and valiant.”

Anastasia: “…”

Subaru: “Julius especially. He could be on the verge of death and still be putting on that cool act of his, because this bastard is the Finest of Knights. In other words, he wants to look way cooler than anyone else.”

As Anastasia was stunned silent due to his words, Subaru gestured toward Julius with his thumb, who promptly fell into an embarrassed, awkward silence.

A speechless Anastasia and a stunned Julius were so rarely seen that Subaru could not help but grin happily, even though it was not the time nor the place.

Subaru: “Defeating the bad guys is a simple enough goal. But deciding to live with the guilt of making sacrifices is ridiculous. Everyone must be saved, every villain must be defeated. Even if you don’t succeed, you have to set out with that idea, right?”

Choosing the option to accept sacrifices from the start was not the same as failing to stop said sacrifices as a result. Of course, it would be easy to interpret that as a selfish sense of self-satisfaction, but—

???: “—To live for your own satisfaction is the most human way to live. I completely agree with you, bro.”

Subaru: “—!”

As Subaru elaborated upon his naïve ideals, a new voice inserted itself into the scene, one that sympathized with his point of view.

Everyone was surprised to hear that voice, and turned their faces to the entrance of the City Hall. Having caught everyone’s attention, the man there looked back and forth, seemingly unhappy.

???: “Hey, looking at me with such enthusiasm is a little off-putting. I know that my seductiveness isn’t exactly at its prime, so I don’t know how well I’d meet all your expectations.”

Subaru: “—Al.”

It was Al, one of Subaru's acquaintances who had disappeared after he had left the hotel this morning. He seemed unharmed, speaking with lighthearted jests and no trace of hostility.

Without moving from his location, he glanced back and forth at the people crowding the room again.

Al: "Are these the only familiar faces at the City Hall? Weren't there more this morning?"

Subaru: "…They're upstairs with Crusch-san. Why are you here?"

Al: "Well, when the commotion started, I decided to turn ass and find a place to hide for a bit. When things started settling down, I took a peek outside, and heard the broadcast. So I decided to come to the City Hall. My first thought was that you were probably involved, and, if not, I'd at least be able to find someone who knows what's going on."

He spoke his usual absurd optimism while playing with the seams of his helmet, making a metallic sound. However, everyone but Subaru felt more than a little displeased at his answer.

After all, he was one of the few people who was capable of fighting, yet had chosen to prioritize his own safety.

Al: "C'mon, don't look at me like that. I'm sorry that I couldn't be there, but it's just that the stars didn't align properly. Besides, I don't think the results would have changed based on my presence alone."

Garfiel: "Oy, captain. Is this bastard tryin' to provoke us or somethin'?"

Garfiel was the first to reach the limits of his patience. Al's casual demeanor had infuriated Garfiel.

Thinking back on it, Al and Garfiel had never met. When Priscilla crashed the nice breakfast at the hotel, Garfiel had been absent. From his point of view, Al was a strange and potentially dangerous man.

Subaru: “Wait, wait, Garfiel. He’s Al, the Knight of Priscilla, one of the candidates of the Royal Selection, although he hasn’t officially met you yet. I didn’t tell you, but all five candidates are in the city right now…”

Al: “Technically I’m just the Princess’s subordinate, and not actually a Knight, bro. I don’t expect much of myself to be able to call myself a Knight. Oh, by the way, I don’t mean anything rude about you, bro.”

Although Subaru had stopped Garfiel from overreacting, Al responded to his introduction with a note of irony. His attitude had Garfiel gnash his fangs together in rage again.

Anastasia: “Alright, enough, enough! Shush! You’re all being seriously too annoyin’.”

With a loud clap, Anastasia diffused the swiftly escalating tension. Her round eyes fixed themselves on Al—

Anastasia: “Aren’tcha just like your master, appearin’ so suddenly and makin’ a mess of the atmosphere? What a terrible personality. Causin’ a fight’ll rub people the wrong way, so how about you drop it for now?”

Al: “Wow, such hurtful advice. Unfortunately, this is just the way I am. Everyone says that I tick people off and disrupt their rhythms. Well, it works as a survival technique.”

Al stuck a finger into the gap between his head and his helmet, scratching the nape of his neck sheepishly. Anastasia turned to Subaru with a small sigh.

Anastasia: “Although things seem to have gotten even more complicated, my plans won’t change. If the path to victory requires sacrifices, then I’ll make a plan with those in mind. If Natsuki-kun refuses to take any losses, then work hard and think of a plan. I’d also like to avoid any sacrifices, if at all possible.”

Subaru: “Then, you won’t stop me from visiting all the other shelters?”

Anastasia: “…If ya got time to spare, then go ahead. Anyway, we do need more combat power. If ya find anyone at all who can fight, try to recruit them.”

Reluctantly, Anastasia withdrew her opposition of Subaru’s idea. Convincing her to change her mind entirely would have been impossible. As such, Subaru would not complain about the leeway he had been granted.

Anastasia: “Take a Conversation Mirror. For the time bein’, let’s set your time limit to six hours, so return before that. After that, we can’t screw up anymore, so keep that in mind.”

Subaru: “Time limit… Right, I haven’t asked yet. What’s the deadline for the requests?”

Julius: “The deadline was set to tonight, at the time the date changes—That’s only nine hours from now.”

This time, Julius was the one to supply the information in Anastasia’s stead.

If there were six hours to go until the strategy meeting, then Subaru would only have around three hours after he returned. Before that, he had to somehow come up with an idea that would sway Anastasia.

On top of that, before the time limit, he also needed to find a way to defeat the Witch Cult and actually make it come to fruition. Only then would the city be saved… but no, even that was not enough.

Rescuing Emilia. Retrieving Rem’s memories from Gluttony. Restoring those who had been mutated by Lust to their original forms. Only by achieving all these goals could he say that they had claimed complete victory.

Subaru: “There’s not much time left, do you have a map of where the shelters are?”

Anastasia: “Yup, we’ve got several. Here’s a map of where Ricardo and the children from the Iron Fang have gone, and where they are goin’ now.”

Ricardo's map was given to Subaru, where the shelters the beastman had visited were marked. Comparing it to another map, it seemed that the Iron Fang had set out for the farthest shelters. Conveniently, this left the nearby shelters to Subaru, who had to travel by foot.

It was almost as if someone had expected him to do this.

Julius: "Subaru, allow me to accompany you."

Subaru: "Julius? No, you shouldn't. You'd be a huge help, but we'd be in trouble if we didn't leave enough fighters in the City Hall."

Julius offered himself as a escort, but Subaru refused the proposal, citing lack of strength as the reason.

Ricardo had been stationed to patrol outside, and Subaru intended to take Garfiel with him as well. Although Wilhelm was upstairs, giving him the responsibility of defending the entire City Hall would be too heavy a burden. And even if that were not the case, the Crusch Camp was currently entrenched in gloom.

Upon hearing Subaru's reply, Julius nodded, albeit reluctantly. He seemed to be far less calm than usual, and his impulsiveness was a rare sight indeed. Subaru gave his shoulder a light pat, then pointed to Garfiel with his chin.

Subaru: "Garfiel, come with me. We'll go visit the other shelters and look for people who can fight. We have to find a way to end this prolonged restlessness."

Garfiel: "…Right, got it. Leave it to my amazin' self."

Even though Garfiel's response to Subaru's request came a beat late, he nodded in consent. With that, Subaru examined the map in his hand, thinking on which direction he should start exploring Pristella, starting out from the area around the City Hall

His top priority was securing combat power—in that case, locating Reinhard would be his best course of action.

Al: "Maybe go to the shelter nearest the hotel first? I don't think the Princess would've wandered far from there."

Subaru: "In that case, if we follow this path… Wait a second."

Subaru halted, seeing Al's finger pointing to a place on the map. He had inserted his own plans into Subaru's quite frankly. Tilting his head inquisitively, Subaru asked,

Subaru: "You're… coming along too?"

Al: "Yep. After all, going alone would mean trouble, and not finding the Princess would also mean trouble. If I had known this'd happen, I wouldn't have left her alone even if she told me to go away. In a mess like this, I'm afraid of what'll happen to her if I don't look for her."

Subaru: "…What a picture-perfect master-servant relationship, oy."

Although the situation gave him a somewhat odd feeling, Subaru was grateful for the increase in manpower. Garfiel, on the other hand, was very visibly disgusted upon hearing that Al would accompany them. After all, at this critical juncture, he would certainly keep one eye open around unfamiliar people.

However, although Al was somewhat annoying, he did seem to genuinely want to find Priscilla.

Subaru: "Speaking of Priscilla, I last saw her in the park on First Street fifteen minutes before the attacks happened. If she didn't leave the vicinity, she should be in a shelter near there."

Al: "Really? That's super-helpful info, bro. Then let's start from there."

Delighted at this news, Al pounded Subaru's back several times. Then Subaru, with a pleased Al and a frowning Garfiel in tow, left the City Hall for the nearby shelters.

And, seeing them off was—

Echidna: "Ouch, you were totally treated like the bad guy there, were you not?"

Anastasia: “Quiet, ya scarf fox. It’s not like I haven’t worked it out already. If Natsuki-kun’s still able to speak with such conviction when he returns, then he’s really bad at learnin’.”

Anastasia spoke with a slightly helpless expression, and the scarf rustled slightly on her neck.

No one else noticed that this short conversation was taking place.

Chapter 40:
Corrosion of Wrath

1

Twenty-five shelters per district made a total of a hundred shelters in all of Pristella.

At Al's suggestion, they started their search on First Street, where they were more likely to be able to find those needing help. They were required to travel prudently and move cautiously in order to avoid as much combat as possible.

Al: "Having said that, I feel like we're overreacting. After all, we have that bro with us. You'd think we wouldn't need to be so scared, bro."

Subaru: "It's best to be careful. Our own forces are limited, whereas the enemy's barely been scratched. Even one second of negligence'd cost us. Not to mention, in addition to the enemy, we're trying to avoid others causing a commotion."

Anastasia's opinion, back in the City Hall—she had introduced the notion that the populace's unrest could lead to riots. Although he wanted to believe it would not happen, he could not deny that possibility.

Visiting the various shelters and trying to assess the situation while recruiting combat power—Subaru intended his mission to be an opportunity to fight the mounting sense of anxiety.

Al: "Yep, that also sounds about right… Well, you won't hear me complain about going the safe route. After all, if it comes down to a fight, all I can do is rely on that bro."

Subaru: "You… often say that, but are you really unable to fight? You did manage to reach the City Hall safely."

Al: "If I had to choose between combatant and non-combatant, I'd have to go with the former. However, at best, my skill's just that of a normal person. If I'm up against those who have gone beyond the limits of a normal human, I'd be a corpse at the edge of the screen in about two seconds. Nope, no way, it'd be way too reckless to consider."

Making a noise with the rim of his helmet and waving his right arm about in dismissal, Al declared his own powerlessness.

Although somewhat dissatisfied with his attitude, Subaru's views on the matter matched Al's. There was a certain level of skill that he would never be able to reach. Perhaps the difficulty of survival in this world meant that its inhabitants' biological composition was fundamentally different. No matter how much Subaru trained, he would never be able to match the likes of Julius or Garfiel, let alone Reinhard—no one could ever reach that level.

Subaru: "But, that shouldn't be enough reason not to fight."

Al: "Shouldn't it? Personally, I think that having no chance of victory is more than enough to convince me not to even try. Ahhh, except leaving something like regrets behind. Well, I'm not that kinda person, anyway."

Subaru: "…"

Al: "C'mon, don't be mad, bro. I think your positive attitude is great. It's just not one I can really adopt myself. That's all."

With the stance of each party already established, their dialogue could only run parallel. Subaru kept quiet, and Al apologized for putting him in a bad mood, before noticing something and raising his head. Following his land of sight was Garfiel, who had been quietly scouting the road that lay ahead.

Crouching on all fours, Garfiel turned back eerily silently, wrinkling his nose.

Garfiel: "Looks like the next three roads're all clear. Or actually, more like lifeless 'n barren 'n empty. It's technically safe, but really damn suspicious, yeah?"

Garfiel snorted, despite the positive impression.

Avoiding battles had been their goal, but not having encountered a single incident also fueled a sense of unease. A quite puzzling feeling, however time did not allow them to entertain such hesitation.

Subaru: “Pointlessly fretting won’t do us any good. The shelter we’re targeting’s just up ahead. Let’s get there as fast as we can. The roads are safe, yeah?”

Garfiel: “My amazin’ nose says so, at least. Damn, looks like we don’t have any other choice.”

Scratching his short blond hair, Garfiel stomped the ground in frustration. Subaru nodded, and Al’s silent shrug indicated that he had no objections.

Although their journey from the City Hall had already taken about fifteen minutes, thanks to their caution, it had been safe and sound thus far. After all, the worst case that they had considered would be that the Witch Cult had stationed troops all about the city.

Thinking that they would stumble upon road after road of that lot would be no exaggeration.

Al: “Doesn’t it seem like the Witch Cult’s unexpectedly neglected to set up sentries?”

As he ran, Al turned to comment. Glancing at him, Subaru questioned him with a “Why would you think that?”

Al: “The reason’s very simple, they don’t have the manpower to monitor the streets. Haven’t you noticed, bro? Compared to the city’s vital points, the Witch Cult was lax in securing the city. And it’s the same with allowing the opposing force to move so freely. If they seriously wanted their demands fulfilled, they wouldn’t be acting like this.”

Subaru: “Blocking everything off and giving exact demands would be the common thing to do in that case, wouldn’t it? Then why do you think they didn’t? Is there any other goal?”

Al: “Hah, I wouldn’t claim to know. But, I’d imagine it’s something like—”

Although Al had probably wanted to respond casually, at Subaru’s stern glare, he fell silent for a moment, probably with a wry smile under his helmet.

Al: “—Whether we comply with their demands or not doesn’t really matter.”

Subaru: “Huh?”

Al: “If they were serious about their demands, you’d think they’d have been more precise and detailed. However, I’m sure you’d agree there are ways of twisting their wording, bro… So they aren’t taking their demands seriously. If we follow through, great. If we don’t, whatever. It’s that kind of feeling.”

Subaru: “Why… then it’s like they’re just toying with us…!”

Al: “Aren’t they just toying with us? Is that really so unlikely?”

In contrast to Subaru’s speechlessness, Al spoke with a blank, listless voice. And to his final question, Subaru found himself unable to even deny it.

—They were simply being toyed with. That was all.

Considering the vicious imagination of the Witch Cult, such a possibility was no joke. During their attack, although they had acted with the advantage and made tactically sound decisions, there were many places where their movements were incomprehensible.

During the battle in the City Hall, Capella and Alphard had been lying in ambush, but Sirius and Regulus were absent, indicating that they were not using their entire strength. In addition, Subaru’s party had suffered no casualties.

Now, the disparity between the city’s occupation and the Witch Cult’s lax attitude also served as evidence that the Cult were not doing their utmost to have their demands be met.

Garfiel: “Captain! No need to listen that bastard’s words. You, if ya keep casually plantin’ funny thoughts like that in the captain’s head, my amazin’ self’ll grind ya to dust, yeah?”

As Subaru fell into a sea of contemplativeness, Garfiel turned to glare at Al, who was running alongside Subaru, with a ferocious gaze as he snapped at him.

Garfiel: “Endlessly chatterin’ on ‘bout stuff that doesn’t even matter, a bastard like ya, without even the balls to fight, should just shut the fuck up! No matter what those fuckers’re plottin’, my amazin’ self’ll just keep hittin’ and beatin’ and crushin’em! That’s all ya need to know!”

Al: “Aren’t you suggesting extreme measures again, huh? Although it is true that I’m no match in a real confrontation against them, that doesn’t mean my thoughts don’t matter. Speaking of which, what harm does guessing their intentions bring us, huh?”

Garfiel: “You bastard—”

As his teeth made a sharp ringing sound, Garfiel’s feet grinded to a halt. At the same time, Al also stopped moving, filling the atmosphere with tension.

Subaru cut between them at once, holding a hand against each of their chests.

Subaru: “Hold up! The hell’s wrong with the two of you? Is this really time to be turning your weapons on allies?”

Garfiel: “This bastard’s not an ally, captain. It’s clear he’s up to no good. It’s definitely best if we just did away with him here ‘n now.”

Al: “Actively looking for a fight’s a no thank you, but I’m not one to stick to non-resistance when someone’s motivated to fight.”

Garfiel cracked his wrists, and Al turned around. Subaru, frustrated at their attitude, felt rage begin to boil within him as well. The pricking of a thousand thorns emanated from the core of his body, bidding him to beat and punch and kick the two uncooperative men —

Subaru: "…Something's wrong."

He was worried about the possibility of his head overheating and immediately jumping to murder as a response. No matter what, his own anger had escalated too quickly. And why were all of them so hostile and frustrated to the point of turning on each other?

And the conflict between the two seemed to be agitating Subaru as well—

Subaru: "No… way…"

An inability to direct the flow of his thoughts and feelings—with that realization, Subaru felt a chill. After all, he had felt this exact sense of discomfort many times before.

Subaru: "Is Sirius's influence approaching…?!"

Fanning his face with slaps, Subaru tried to reawaken his own consciousness as he glanced around.

His inspection yielded no sightings of that bizarre monster, nor did he hear her jarring voice. However, the dim feeling of gloom and disgust pressed heavily into his very being.

Subaru: "Hey, Garfiel, Al, stop! Take a deep breath and calm down. Isn't it strange that your argument's escalating so quickly? That's probably due to Wrath's influence. Your emotions are becoming uncontrollable."

Garfiel: "Hah? Whaddya mean, captain, this guy's stupidity's what's pissin'… wait."

Subaru: "…"

Hearing Subaru's claim, Garfiel gritted his teeth, pressing a palm onto his head. Slowly, he shook his head and blinked many times in quick succession.

Garfiel: "…It's not really worth fightin' over. That kinda thing's usually only just an annoyance."

Subaru: “That’s Wrath’s ability. Just to confirm, but you are sure there are no enemies around us, right?”

Garfiel: “Not a whiff, nor a sign… that’s for sure. But…”

Precisely because his senses were so trustworthy, Garfiel began to shudder.

In other words, the scope of the Sirius’s power was far beyond their imagination. If the theory that she was currently occupying a control tower was correct, then her Authority’s influence encompassed almost the entire city. Of course, there was quite the difference compared to its intensity in the square.

Al: “Well now. This is what it feels like to be tampered with by others. Not something I’d want to experience more than once, for damn sure. Now I’ve tasted the worst feeling.”

Al murmured, the torrent of anger engulfing him cleared, much like Garfiel’s. He glanced over at Subaru, lifting his chin.

Al: “But, bro. If we don’t get a move on, it’s dangerous, no?”

Subaru: “What? What are you talking about?”

Al: “You noticed something was strange, bro, and after listening to what you said, we also realized something was wrong. However, that’s not the case for other people, yeah? If this feeling is spreading through the entire city… then, for the average person, unaware of the situation, it’d be impossible to stay rational, yeah?”

Subaru: “—Hk!”

As he considered what Al had pointed out, the worst-case scenario flashed through Subaru’s mind. He exchanged a glance with Garfiel, who had imagined the same scenario and flinched sharply. Instantly, they sprang into action, beginning a reckless sprint. Their destination was the nearest shelter.

Al: “Ah, wait!”

Watching the two of them shoot off, Al hurriedly turned to chase them from behind.

In his anxiety, Subaru completely disregarded stealth as he raced forward with irresponsible abandon. Garfiel's steps, however, were sharper and travelled farther than Subaru's, and in the blink of an eye, he had left Subaru in the dust. His shadow vanished at the T junction of the next street.

According to the map, there should be a shelter at the corner into which Garfiel had disappeared.

Al: "Is the road safe?!"

Subaru: "Garfiel rushed in without any hesitation. So no one's there!"

Answering the shouts coming from behind, Subaru arrived at the corner, lagging far behind Garfiel. Without losing so much as a single drop of momentum, he turned the corner and saw the stone cottage. Rushing towards the hastily opened door, he confirmed that there was indeed a ladder connecting to the ground and frantically sprinted down the stairs, his dim field of vision finally opening up—

Subaru: "You're… kidding me…"

—Splattered with blood and screams of sorrow, a landscape of hell spread before him.

2

Al: "They killed and killed each other… Only a fifth of them are still breathing, and those guys are going to have to completely recover. This is really the worst of situations."

Gazing upon that horrific scene, Al bit back his feelings and whispered with a strangled voice. Subaru, sitting beside him, had no energy to respond.

In the shelter that they had rushed into, the people gathered in the refuge had turned on each other, causing a fratricidal catastrophe.

The initial argument had most likely been a trivial matter.

Forced to squeeze into a cramped, claustrophobic space, fearing the demands that the Witch Cult had broadcasted. During that time, dark thoughts had snuck their way into their hearts. The situation would not improve even if it stayed as is, so it would be okay for them to take action, right? Those emerging ideas roused action, and action required contact with others. However, the consequences of such contact were not necessarily anything good.

The explosive conflict between Garfiel and Al, on the road, had been the product of such a thing as well.

However, there had been no Subaru in the shelter to calm everyone down. The quarrels had intensified as everyone's feelings collided and spread, infecting the surrounding area, doubling the effect. As emotions had risen back and forth, their unbearable anxieties grew into abominations. That had ultimately resulted in tragedy.

Garfiel: "The survivors have fainted, and their wounds have been treated. But the burial of the dead… that'll have to wait. Captain, have ya contacted 'em yet?"

Subaru: "I have. The Iron Fang should be on their way here. I think entrusting the survivors to them will be fine. The problem is, after that…"

Subaru had underestimated the degree of the disaster caused by the amplification and propagation of the emotions.

In the closed space dubbed a shelter, the intensity of the waves of emotion inside the hearts of people was unpredictable. Of course, no one would be able to maintain a positive and optimistic attitude, and even if those emotions were negative, nuances could still usher in tremendous differences.

If the initial feelings were only sorrow, lament, or despondency, without any initiative to take action, the people would be relatively fine. However, if the initial emotion had been rage, or anything similar, the result would the same they were witnessing inside this shelter.

Subaru: “I’ve heard that people were urged to flee to these shelters, but… that may have been a bad idea in hindsight.”

Assuming that the Authority of Wrath worked on the basis of sharing and intensifying emotions, then the greater number of people residing in her sphere of influence, the more effective her power would become.

In short, if people were mirrors, any beams of light originating from them would be reflected back infinitely due to the sheer number of reflections. Replace light with emotions, and it goes without saying that said emotions would be greatly amplified.

Even the most minimal contact with others would have terrifying consequences.

In this situation of unease and fear, this Authority forced each person to be alone.

Subaru: “How disgusting…”

Garfiel: “Captain, what are we gonna do? I agree wit’cha on visiting these shelters, but if things go on like this…”

Having finished with healing, Garfiel, his forehead drenched in sweat, wore an anxious expression. Understanding the reason for his unease, Subaru fretted over the wording of his response.

No matter what, Subaru could not organize his thoughts. To visit the various shelters, to assemble forces, to call on everyone to not abandon hope—none of those courses of action were wrong.

However, the pressing situation did not leave Subaru with the time to comb the city.

The handful of people who were willing to fight on had likely been the source of the tragedy. Their hearts had brought about strife. With the shelters functioning as isolated test tubes of emotions, persuading the remaining people to leave the shelters might even improve their chances of survival.

Subaru: “But if we do that and fail to retake the control towers, everyone will die.”

After all, these were shelters set up in the city of Pristella.

Perhaps they had been designed to protect its citizens against any potential floods causing by the opening of the floodgates. In the unlikely event that Subaru and the others were overwhelmed and the watergates were released, those who would have left the shelters for fear of their companions would suffer certain deaths.

Whether staying inside or going outside, a foolproof measure did not exist.

Garfiel: “Captain…”

Subaru: “…”

As Subaru wallowed in indecision, Garfiel’s gaze pierced his profile.

That was an expression and voice which sought answers and salvation from Subaru. That was the figure of someone seeking the only light they could depend on in a world of darkness, looking for guidance and reassurance.

How could Subaru respond to that expression?

Just like him, Subaru was also grasping at straws for a solution. Just like him, Subaru too could not find an answer amidst the darkness.

However, there was no point in complaining about his weakness. Throwing a tantrum, raging to the heavens, taking it out on someone, would save no one. If he had the leisure to complain about his weaknesses, it would be far better for him to say something meaningful.

Anything meaningful at all would be fine, as long as it benefited someone else.

Al: “Captain this, captain that… Really, it’s like you’re casting a reliable, convenient charm, bro. What an outstanding attitude, it’s making me tear up, really.”

However, the one who suddenly broke Subaru's silence was instead the man with a sword. Leaning his back against the wall, Al's gaze moved from the scene of horror to Garfiel.

His cold indifference took Garfiel aback for a spell.

Garfiel: "Hah? The hell's that mean, ya bastard…"

Al: "Do you not understand without having me explain it? It's exactly as I said. Refusing to think and delegating your judgement to others is easy. Is "captain" some kind of magic spell to you? Is it the name of a superman who can get you out of any tough situation?"

Interrupting Garfiel was Al's mocking attitude.

Al: "From just those moments I can tell how much you depend on him, but does this guy here look like such a big shot? In terms of strength, you have him beat, no question. In terms of intelligence, there'll always be someone out there better than him. And luck? Even if you said he's got good luck when he's stuck in a situation like this, no one'd believe you, yeah?"

Garfiel: "Shut the fuck up! Ya fuckin' bastard, quit talkin' shit 'bout the Captain like that! The hell do ya even know 'bout him? This person here's damn amazin'!"

Al: "Wow, wow, are you just a kid? Where's that strength, then? If he really were as amazing as you say, he'd have taken care of this whole deal by now. Or are you saying that he's already thought up a solution, and he's just pretending to fumble along?"

Even as Garfiel began shouting, Al's ironic tone did not falter. And as he learned over to peer into Subaru's face, Subaru found that he could not retort to any of his words.

At that reaction, Al straightened up, continuing with a "You see?"

Al: "Being responsible for everything, carrying everyone on your back, is remarkable, isn't it. It's a protagonist's privilege. However, most average people cannot take on such a role. They're not strong enough. Of course, that goes without saying for me, and even you, bro. You’re the same. So why do you have to carry such a burden? Don’t get your hopes up. It’s pitiful, isn’t it?”

Subaru: “…”

Subaru did not quite understand what Al was trying to say. Could he be under the sway of the Authority of Wrath once again? If so, what kind of feeling was now dominating Al’s heart?

Anger? Sadness? Something else entirely?

He seemed furious, but also mournful, and also mocking. Even figuring out what he felt in that moment was of extreme difficulty.

Al: “Hey, bro. What’s been troubling you all this time?”

Subaru: “…What’s been troubling me?”

How to save this city. How to keep the people who had fled to the shelters safe from harm. How to rescue Emilia. How to cure Crusch. How to restore Rem’s memories. How to drive away the Witch Cult. How to find the optimal path, where everyone would be saved.

Al: “How to best serve your venerated princess—are you unable to even answer that immediately?”

Subaru: “…”

Hearing the disappointment in Al’s voice, Subaru slowly raised his head.

Motionlessly, Al was looking down at Subaru. As his face was covered with a helmet, his expression was indiscernible. However, somehow, Subaru found his own chest being saddled with anxiety.

Al: “I only care about the Princess… about Priscilla. So everyone else, frankly speaking, is completely irrelevant to me. For example, acting together with you, bro, is only so I can improve my odds of surviving and finding the Princess.”

Subaru: “Al…”

Al: “So, that’s why I don’t understand your feelings at all, bro. That’s important, this is a priority… In that case, it’ll be impossible for you to see what’s most important. Wanting to take care of everything, doesn’t that just make you a cliché of a guy who doesn’t know how to fight for what you find most important?”

Clicking his tongue, Al strangled some kind of emotion.

Even Garfiel could not find a retort to that devilish demeanor. And even Subaru, who bore the brunt of it, could not find the correct words to return.

Al: “The silver-haired miss is the most important thing for you, isn’t she, bro? If you’re just saving her, do away with the fretting and hesitating and act. It’ll be easy.”

Subaru: “…Don’t bullshit me. I’ll definitely kill the bastard who kidnapped Emilia. And in any case, it’s not like I even have any idea how to. It isn’t as easy as you say.”

Al: “But you’d have much less to burden you compared to saving everything. If you reduce your load, your body becomes lighter, and the scope of your reach will increase. Isn’t that the case?”

Subaru’s weak words of resistance were smoothly deflected by Al’s snappy comment.

Al: “Are you trying be a saint? Or a hero? If so, it doesn’t suit you whatsoever.”

Shrugging his shoulders, Al discarded Subaru’s confusion as something ridiculous. Subaru found that very attitude incomprehensible.

Back when he had quarreled with Anastasia in the City Hall, the one who could even described as stubbornly assertive, and who regarded him as an ally, had been none other than Al.

It had been Al who had agreed to his approach on evil, laced with self-satisfaction. However, after arriving here, why he had changed his opinion?

Subaru: “What you’re saying now is totally different from before. Are you or are you not on my side, which is it?”

Al: “No, no, no, you’re completely off. I’m not saying that indulging in self-satisfaction’s wrong. But the limit of that self-satisfaction’s another topic entirely. Your idea of wanting to rescue everyone, bro, was denied upon seeing the horror in this shelter, right? In that case, it’s enough, isn’t it? If that’s the case, why not just leave this place? You can be honest now, and protect only that which is most important to you.”

Subaru: “Leave this place… You mean running away? In this situation?”

Al: “What’s so wrong about it? What’s wrong with choosing to flee in the face of something you can’t handle? After recovering the Princess, I intend to flee from the city. I don’t have any obligation to the people here, or to morals about humanity, or anything that justifies putting my life at risk.”

Sticking his fingers into the neck of the helmet and scratching lightly, Al glared at Subaru.

Al: “You could do that too, bro. Save just the miss… just Emilia, and run away, and you’ll be just fine. Anyway, the Witch Cult are pests that’ll just come back even if defeated here. Just like bandits on the side of the road, yeah? There’s no reason to get involved.”

There was only one answer to Al’s suggestion.

Subaru agreed that the Witch Cultists were pests. And it was undeniable that there was no benefit to being involved. However, they had been the ones instigating such a catastrophe. Subaru had to take action to dispel the sparks they had created.

From Al’s perspective, he probably had no idea why Subaru felt he had to act.

Of course, except for the situation of imminent peril Emilia was in, having been kidnapped. Even assuming Emilia’s situation was irrelevant, Subaru could never choose the option of escape.

And the question was why. Well, that was because—

Al: “And even if it needs to be done, it doesn’t have to be you, bro. So why are you so insistent?”

Subaru: “If a kid jumped into the road at a busy intersection with the light still red, before even thinking about a reason, I’d immediately pull him back onto the sidewalk… It’s probably something like that.”

Al: “…”

Al’s sigh in response to Subaru’s answer was obvious.

Subaru himself was wondering if his answer was truly the correct answer. But upon taking a moment to think about it, the words just rolled off his tongue, and the tightness in his chest vanished slightly.

Subaru: “I don’t find it a hassle to put everyone into consideration. Because I’m here, I’ll try to do those things, one by one. Because I’m here, I will be able to do things. There are a lot of places I won’t be able to reach, as the people here can prove.”

He thought it cowardly to pretend to be completely unrelated to the whole thing. It was something Subaru should not have even considered to do.

Garfiel: “Cap…”

As he began to call upon Subaru, who had responded so calmly, Garfiel seemed to cut himself off. Just now, Garfiel had hesitated to say the word “captain”. Al had just pointed out Garfiel’s reliance, so he was probably trying to resist the urge.

Subaru found himself pleased by Garfiel’s concerned hesitation.

At the same time, he realized something. A sudden idea. A miraculous coup that could be used to take advantage of the Authority of Wrath.

Subaru: “Garfiel, don’t hesitate, okay? Just call me the usual.”

Garfiel: "…"

Subaru: "Although, initially, you embarrassed me a little, but that shyness is long gone. Although there's no guarantee that I can live up to your expectations, but I'll try to do it as long as I can."

He had no way of knowing what he looked like under the expectant gaze of Garfiel.

However, it was due to the result of Subaru's actions that Garfiel was sometimes able to see him as a beacon of hope just when he thought he had reached a dead-end. And a once-lonely young girl, who had once denied everything, felt the same way.

Therefore, Subaru had no choice but to take responsibility for his actions.

Garfiel: "…Yeah. Yeah, that's right, Captain. Got it. My amazin's self's also going to be helpin', no matter how much strength's needed. So, as long as ya don't say anythin' feeble, it'll turn out just fine."

Subaru: "Alright. Then, I'll be relying on you. After entrusting the wounded here to the Iron Fang, we'll have to return to the City Hall immediately. After all, Anastasia will probably oppose it."

Standing up and patting himself down, Subaru went over to Garfiel, his head still lowered, and struck his shoulder.

Garfiel snorted, clasping his fists together as he gazed him. Then, Subaru turned and tilted his head at a silent Al.

Subaru: "My mind's been made. Although in a different direction than you were hoping for."

Al: "…As you prefer, bro. At least, I'll follow you until we find the Princess, or until it becomes meaningless for me to stick with you."

Although his proposal had been entirely rejected, Al responded without any disappointment.

Even if uncomfortable with his attitude, Subaru shifted his footsteps towards the outside of the shelter, prepared to act immediately after reinforcements arrived.

Behind him, along with Garfiel, Al followed suit, slightly distanced from them. As he regarded the backs of the two striding forward, Al reached for the back of his neck with his one arm, supporting it with a hand, and exhaled a long, long sigh.

Al: “I’m sure… you don’t know what will happen if you don’t meet the expectations of that many people. After all, without suffering in such a way, you probably would never understand.”

Chapter 41:
Heroic Reveries

Anastasia: “You sure came back early?”

As they returned to City Hall, Anastasia greeted them with a somewhat strained smile.

Having left the building full of bravado only to return like this, honestly, Anastasia’s was about the last face Subaru wanted to see.

But this was no time to be concerned with such feelings.

Subaru: “Yeah, I’m back. But I’ll head out again as soon as I’m done here. There’s just something I have to try in City Hall first.”

Anastasia: “Did you come up with somethin’ again? I got a bad feelin’ about this.”

Subaru: “Well… the first shelter was a horrible sight, I mentioned that in the communication mirror already. And I think the influence of Wrath must have affected other shelters as well.”

Anastasia: “So they’ve succumbed to the emotional resonance… It’s not like I don’t feel it myself. If I let my mood drop, it feels like it’ll just keep on droppin’ forever. …But I guess it works a little differently on everybody.”

Subaru nodded at Anastasia’s analysis.

In fact, Subaru had also noticed this on the street. The effectiveness of Sirius’ Authority can vary drastically between people.

Perhaps simply being aware of the Authority’s existence could help alleviate its effects: “The fact that Subaru was able to calm Garfiel and Al this way precisely proved this.

Al: “I dunno how the shelter got like that, but I can’t help but worry ‘bout the same thing happenin’ to our main guys bunched up here. I’d really rather I didn’t come back here only to get caught up in another blood sacrifice or somethin'."

Anastasia: "Well, you had no need to worry about that. Luckily, we only have intelligent, rational people here. Though I can't say the same about the guy who's always screwin' up the atmosphere."

Al, who came back with Subaru, said this while looking around the first floor of City Hall. Hearing this, Anastasia snorted, putting a stop to Al's smart-assery with a gibe.

Seeing Al reply with a silent shrug, Anastasia turned back to Subaru.

Anastasia: "So, what're you plannin' to do? You came back 'cause you had an idea, right?"

Subaru: "Aah, right. …By the way, where's Julius? He isn't with you?"

Anastasia: "I don't like bein' bombarded with question after question, you know… Julius' been actin' a little strange. I think part of it's because we haven't found Joshua yet, but I've a feelin' that's not all of it."

Subaru: "Acting strange… Now that you mention it, he was a little strange, wasn't he?"

Waking up after the failed attack on City Hall, Subaru did notice that Julius was less articulate than usual. He seemed to be making judgements and suggestions that he would never have made in normal circumstances, and there was a visible lack of confidence about him.

He was a man with a strong sense of duty. Subaru had thought that it was because of regret for letting Gluttony escape, but perhaps it was more than that.

Garfiel: "Capt'n. It's a bad habit t'be concernin' yerself with every problem out there. I know you're worried 'bout Julius, but that ain't somethin' we can fix right now."

Subaru: "Ah, yeah, you're right. Well, I'm sure that guy'll do just fine on his own without anyone worrying about him. Compared to that, we got our own things to deal with. Anastasia-san. The broadcaster on the top floor is still in working condition, right? It's not like it's broken, or we lost the manual or something…"

Brought back by Garfiel's reminder, Subaru asked this question. On the receiving end, Anastasia blinked her round eyes a few times before answering,

Anastasia: "It's not broken, and I've worked with similar devices before so that's fine… but what do you plan to do with it?"

Seeing the surprise in Anastasia's eyes, Subaru scratched his cheek.

Even though he'd expect her to oppose it, it was the only plan he could think of. In terms of minimizing casualties, it would also be the most effective measure.

Subaru: "As I said in the communication mirror, the area is currently under the influence of Wrath's Authority. The shelter we visited… became washed in blood because some small irritation was allowed to fester. The slightest negative emotion could spiral into the extremest disaster. It's scary."

Anastasia: "Yes. My thoughts exactly. The more people there are, the harder it is to control and the more rapidly panic spreads. That said, with the refuge shelters… or even without the shelters, people will tend to huddle together. Right?"

Subaru quietly nodded to Anastasia's question.

What's so frightening about Sirius' Authority is that the more people are together, the more powerful its influence becomes. And when people heard the Witch Cult's threats over the broadcasts, that started an inescapable trend of panic: "A truly sickening way of exploiting people's helplessness.

It was unclear whether the Witch Cult was hoping for their cooperation, but the fact is that it created a vicious cycle that was threatening those people's lives this very moment.

Anastasia: "Do you mean to say… you've thought of a way to counter it?”

Subaru: “It’s only a “Maybe this could work” kinda thing. I do think it’s worth trying. It’s just…”

Subaru’s words abruptly trailed off in front of Anastasia’s expectant gaze.

Seeing this, Anastasia narrowed her eyes as if to peer into Subaru’s innermost thoughts, while Subaru exhaled a deep breath,

Subaru: “Once we start doing it, everything will be heard by the Witch Cult, word for word. So there’s the possibility that we could run into other dangers if we provoke those guys.”

Anastasia: “And in exchange, there’s a good chance that we can reduce the existing threat.”

Subaru: “Yeah, that’s right. Now that we’ve retaken City Hall, and with Sirius’ Authority being the only one affecting the shelters… even though it’s hard to balance the risks, I still think…”

It’s impossible to imagine how the Witch Cult will react if they did something big here. The dangers were equivalent to bringing a burning match into a gunpowder arsenal, as is always the case when dealing with the Witch Cult. What makes it so difficult to assess is that the gunpowder could also blow on its own at any moment whether they bring in the match or not.

Anastasia: “—I think I know more or less what you’re planning to do now, Natsuki-kun.”

Subaru: “Really?”

After briefly sinking into thought, Anastasia let out a long sigh and said. Hearing this, Subaru raised his brows, surprised at her reaction,

Anastasia: “Going by the flow of the conversation, and since you asked about the broadcasting device at the start, I’d be more worried if I still can’t figure it out after that.”

Subaru: “W-Well, yeah, I guess. So what do you think? You’re against it, aren’t you?”

She’ll probably oppose it, just as he thought beforehand.

And so, Subaru would have no other choice than to clear the giant hurdle of convincing Anastasia—

Anastasia: “Haa, what am I gonna do with you…”

Subaru: “…Egh, you’re ok with it?”

Anastasia: “Logically speaking, it would be the best course of action. Regardless of how much I like winning, if it means leaving a mountain of corpses behind by the time we eradicate the Witch Cult, there’d be too bad of an aftertaste.”

Getting that unexpected answer, for a moment, Subaru stood there stunned.

Meanwhile, Anastasia chewed her lips as if trying to deal with some indigestible emotion inside her, but it was Garfiel who broke the silence.

Garfiel: “Yo, Capt’n and Big’Sis-chan. What’re you guys talkin’ ‘bout doin’ again?”

Anastasia: “Such an unperceptive child… Even my Ricardo could’ve figured it out.”

To Garfiel, who was left out of the loop, Anastasia tossed that unsparing remark. Garfiel gritted his fangs as he heard this, but Al patted his shoulder from behind, laughing at Garfiel as he turned around,

Al: “Basically, what bro’s thinkin’ is this: “Rather than tryin’ to stop the Authority of Wrath from spreadin’ throughout the city, it’d be quicker ‘n easier to try to turn it to our advantage instead.”

Garfiel: “Turn it, like what…”

Subaru: “Sirius’ ability causes the sharing of emotions. When people are anxious and afraid, that emotion swells as more people bunch together, until eventually, it gets set off by something small and explodes. So…”

Anastasia: “If you can replace fear and anxiety with another emotion… paint it over with something like hope, then that’ll be what’s shared instead.”

Garfiel’s question was answered by Al, and Subaru, then lastly by Anastasia.

While listening, Garfiel’s eyes grew wider as he leaked a groan of understanding,

Garfiel: “Aaah so that’s it! Then they won’t be killin’ each other. And if things go well, even the ones whose spirits’re broken’ll return to the fight.”

Subaru: “When they’re engulfed by the surrounding atmosphere, even seasoned fighters would be unable to stand. If we can release them from that anxiety, I think we won’t have any problem bolstering our forces anymore.”

Garfiel: “Ain’t that awesome?! Do it, Capt’n! We got th’arcane device. So th’sooner we start…”

Anastasia: “Wait wait! It’s not all that simple. It’s not like I hadn’t considered it myself…”

Anastasia clapped her hands to stop the over-excited Garfiel.

Seeing this, Garfiel bared his fangs,

Garfiel: “Hah? Why’re we holdin’ off? Y’just said you agreed, didn’t ya? Don’t tell me you’re backin’ out at th’last minute.”

Anastasia: “I never said I’m backin’ out. I told you, I’ve thought about this. There’s another problem to this other than just weighin’ the pros and cons.”

Subaru: “The pros and cons… the ones we talked about earlier?”

Anastasia: “The pro is the goal of this strategy itself: “Eliminating anxiety and despair from the citizens so we don’t have that constant threat at our backs. The con is that whatever we broadcast into the city would naturally also get into the ears of Witch Cult. We have absolutely no idea how they’ll react.”

Anastasia raised her hands to both Garfiel and Subaru, and with “However”, she continued,

Anastasia: “In terms of disadvantages, I believe they’re almost negligible. The Witch Cult never forbade resistance when they made their demands in the first place. It’s as if they don’t even mind if they’re thwarted or opposed.”

Subaru …Now that you mention it, even though we attacked City Hall, they didn’t use that as an excuse to exact any retribution. It’s like what they did to the people in City Hall was just for their own amusement.”

Anastasia: “Amusement? I like that word. It’s a pretty accurate way of describing those guys’ sick inclinations.”

Anastasia sighed, while Subaru wanted to gag just at the thought of those Sin Archbishops’ faces.

However, they both agreed that there was no extra risk in making the broadcast itself. So then, Anastasia’s concern was—

Anastasia: “While I’ve no objections about the broadcast itself, the problem is… what’ll it contain, and who’ll be saying it.”

Subaru: “What and who…?”

Not understanding what Anastasia was saying, Subaru furrowed his brows.

If she was asking about who should make the broadcast over the city to rouse up the people’s hopes and chase away their anxiety, then—

Subaru: “Well, that’s where Anastasia-san comes in. People recognize you as a Royal Selection Candidate. If something inspiring comes from Anastasia-san's mouth…"

Anastasia: "This might sound strange coming from me, but I think it's difficult to expect that kind of effect from my words. As much as I hate to admit it, I'm not up to that task."

Subaru: "…"

Anastasia shook her head at Subaru's intuitive suggestion.

Subaru didn't understand her meaning. Since, naturally, the whole of Priestella would know about Anastasia's position as a Royal Selection Candidate.

Her fame certainly far exceeded anyone else present.

Subaru: "Not up to it… why? I mean, Anastasia-san, you're…"

Anastasia: "If renown is all that matters, then I would indeed be the most suitable. If that's all it took to change things for the better, then I'd be happy to do it. But that's not how things are. My renown and beatin' the Witch Cult are not related at all. Just knowing that "Someone famous is fighting the Witch Cult"—might do something, or it might not."

Subaru: "But…"

Anastasia: "In that case, it'd be pointless. What's needed is hope. Hope that could replace all the anxiety in people's hearts with a single stroke."

Subaru had no words to reply to Anastasia's statement.

Honestly, he wanted to chide her for her faintheartedness and refute what she was saying. However, it wasn't anyone else, but Anastasia herself who seemed to rue the pitifulness of that statement the most.

Anastasia could not have said those words without thinking. Quite the opposite.

It was precisely because she had thought it over thoroughly that she had judged herself unworthy of that role.

Anastasia: “I may be able to trick and beguile people with magnificent words. And I’m sure that out of every ten, five would be deceived. But it’d be only a frail, desperate straw that would give way at the slightest whiff of wind, and all it would accomplish is create a momentary change in feeling.”

Subaru: “Th-Then… what about Crusch-san? She has the military experience and belongs to a noble family of Lugunica.”

Anastasia: “Right, the words would certainly carry weight if it came from Crusch-san, but that would be the former Crusch-san. The current Crusch-san doesn’t have that kind of influence over people. Not to mention that Crusch-san is currently fighting for her life. That’s a problem that’ll have to be settled before askin’ her to inspire anyone else.”

Subaru: “Fighting for her life? It’s that bad?!”

Hearing that Crusch was in even worse state he had been told, Subaru took a step towards Anastasia.

With the height difference between them, Anastasia looked up at Subaru and tightened her lips. Subaru quickly turned to Garfiel, only to see him weakly shaking his head,

Garfiel: “Th’cat-eared Sis’ won’t let her die, I’m sure’of it. She’s injected so much life-force into her… but I’m against lettin’ her talk in front of the broadcastin’ device as well. Hell, she can barely make a sound…”

Subaru: “Damn it! Then what about Julius? If it’s Julius, he’d…”

Anastasia: “It’s true that Julius is a Knight of the Royal Guard, one of the greatest Knights in the Kingdom, and my pride. But how much would Julius’ name mean in this city? At best, his chances’re about the same as mine. And I’m more eloquent.”

Crusch was out of the question, and Julius was also shot down.

Of the faces in City Hall who could possibly inspire hope in others, only Wilhelm and Ricardo were left. But Ricardo has neither the influence nor the popularity.

And how could anyone ask this of Wilhelm now? Even if he agreed, what advantage would Wilhelm's title as former head of the Royal Guard even bring to the table?

Subaru: “Then, what do we do? Who else is there…?”

Al: “Well…”

Just when Subaru thought he had found an effective countermeasure against Wrath, he was stuck without anyone to execute it.

While Subaru sank into these thoughts, Al casually raised his hand,

Al: “If anyone's gonna do the broadcast, shouldn't it be you, bro?”

Subaru: “—Hah?”

Hearing him say this as if it were a matter of course, it took Subaru a moment to react.

Leaving his mouth gaping open, there was nearly no need to think twice about what Al had just said.

Making such an unfunny joke at a time like this, what was he thinking?

Subaru: “Say, Al. We're in the middle of a serious conversation here. The kind where every second counts. I can't deal with your jokes right now.”

Al: “Oyoy, wait a minute. I'm aware that I'm a guy Princess-san hired because more than half of my remarks are irrelevant, but I wasn't joking just now.”

Subaru: “If you weren't joking then what made you think I could do it? Either you're trying to be funny or you're mad, and I don't know which's worse here.”

Al: “What’s so crazy ‘bout that? Why don’t you have a look around?”

Although Al was someone who has “Not Serious” written all over him, at that, he suddenly lowered his voice and nudged with his chin. Following his movement, Subaru shifted his gaze to the two others beside him—Anastasia and Garfiel. Though Subaru had imagined that they must be just as baffled by what they had heard,

Subaru: “…Oy, you guys too?”

“…”

Their gazes were serious, certainly not surprised or annoyed at all.

They were staring at Subaru with sincere affirmation in their eyes.

It was almost as if they were saying they agree with Al.

Subaru: “You’re kidding, right? Why do you look like you’re all agreeing here? If Anastasia and Julius can’t do it, what makes you think I can?!”

Al: “Well, like I said on the street, we all got this far because of you, bro. Garfiel agrees with me. The way he keeps callin’ you “Captain, Captain” and all.”

Subaru: “How’re those two things connected?!”

Al: “Same thing! You must’ve done somethin’ right to make Garfiel call you that. That just shows how much he trusts ya, right? You seem to think what you did wasn’t that big of a deal for some reason. But aside from you, who else in this city or this world can say that they’ve defeated “Sloth” of the Witch Cult?”

Subaru: “…”

Al brought his face right up to Subaru’s.

His cold helmet bumped into Subaru’s forehead, and a small warmth could be felt through the icy hard metal, coming from Al’s forehead on the other side. For a moment, feeling himself pierced through by his invisible eyes, Subaru held his breath.

Al: “In a city occupied by the Witch Cult, who better to inspire hope in people than a man who’s killed a Witch Cult Sin Archbishop? The only ones around who meet the criteria are you and Reinhard. And you’re the only one here.”

Subaru: “—gh.”

Getting hit with another bump to the forehead, Subaru stumbled backwards.

Watching Subaru back away holding his head, and Al gave his single shoulder a shrug.

Anastasia: “I’m of the same opinion. If anyone should do it, it’d be you, Natsuki-kun.”

Subaru: “Anastasia…”

Saying this, Anastasia looked down.

It was an expression that seemed to be lamenting her own powerlessness, all the while entrusting that hope to someone else.

At this point, seeing that expression, Subaru finally noticed the great expectation resting on his back.

Subaru: “Garfiel… you think so too?”

Garfiel: “I dunno any details ‘bout you killin’ some Sin-bishop “Sloth”. But yeah, I’m thinkin’ th’same thing.”

At Subaru’s quiet question, Garfiel scratched at his short head of hair,

Garfiel: “If there’s a voice in this city that can become people’s hopes… I say that voice’d be your’s, Capt’n. If y’really give it your all, I’ve a feelin’ y’can do it. That’s what I think.”

Subaru: “…”

That is a baseless, and tremendously heavy trust.

Surprised, and holding his breath, Subaru clearly understood the magnitude of the faith placed in him.

Looking back, he saw Anastasia. Who nodded.

Next, he saw Al. Who shrugged his shoulder.

As before, Garfiel was still watching Subaru. When Subaru turned to face him, he nodded as well.

Subaru: "…"

Taking in each of their reactions, Subaru turned up his head.

Narrowing his eyes to the light of the weak crystal lamp, he exhaled a long, deep sigh.

—They think way, way too highly of him.

He had felt it from Wilhelm, Julius, and Reinhard as well.

They've got it all wrong about Subaru. All wrong.

They themselves were so much better, have worked so much harder, and were so much nobler than he was.

Yet, as if it were a matter of course, they praise Subaru, offer him their help, and greet him with such warmth. That fact had always tormented Subaru.

When the person you respect, the person you don't want to lose to, and the person you can never catch up to all give you their affirmation, it's not just a simple matter of being overjoyed.

It made him anxious. That someday, when his real self is exposed, he will surely disappoint them.

When they realize that the real Subaru is actually pathetic, weak, and hopeless, surely, they'll be saddened, and will regret the warmth they had shown him.

That was what he had always thought. And yet,

Even Al, Garfiel, and Anastasia, had such expectations of Subaru.

On the verge of being crushed by its weight, Subaru had pushed himself to his limit, and yet his limit was not nearly enough as he tried to live up to that expectation over and over.

This is the road Natsuki Subaru chose.

—The road he had once promised to a single girl that he would take. Her hero's road.

But, one way or another, he was no longer just her hero. What Subaru was carrying now, was—

Al: "If you do this, bro, from now on it'll be heroic reveries that you'll be carryin' on your back."

Al suddenly gave this warning to the silent Subaru.

Watching Subaru's eyes drop, Al continued in a listless voice,

Al: "You can never lose. You must only win. You'll take up their hopes, carry their expectations, and fight to show them the future. If you make this decision here, that's what you'll have to do."

Subaru: "…I can never lose, huh. Sounds just like how it's always been, doesn't it?"

Al: "The weight of it's different. If bro loses here, the defeat won't just end with bro."

Subaru didn't understand what Al was saying.

Subaru's battles had always been this way. When Subaru loses, Subaru isn't the only one who's lost. Everything Subaru wanted to protect would be lost with Subaru's defeat.

It had always been this way. It had never been otherwise.

If defeat didn't cost him anything, he would have had no reason to fight.

The fact that Subaru was fighting was because there were things that could not be protected unless he fought.

And after today, their numbers would swell to unbelievable proportions.

Subaru: “Tch, isn’t that still how it’s always been?”

Al: “…”

Exhaling a sigh, he had made up his mind.

The pounding of his heart until now settled down as his vision cleared.

Though he couldn’t see Al’s face, he could sense that Al was holding his breath, watching him with an astounded expression.

Subaru: “Anastasia-san, I’ll do it. If my voice can make a difference, then leave it to me.”

Anastasia: “…You’re sure? Once you take on people’s hopes…”

Subaru: “It’ll be no different from what I always do. “Hero”, doesn’t sound too bad, does it. Though honestly, it’s kinda embarrassing to be calling myself that…”

Seeing Anastasia’s worried expression, Subaru softly rubbed the tip of his nose,

Subaru: “If it’s just a matter of being a hero, I’ve already made my decision a year ago. Otherwise, I’ll bring shame to the girl watching over me, and the girl whose back I’m watching.”

Anastasia: “—Is that so. Well, alright. Boys always like to show off, after all.”

As if saying “There’s no helping it”, Anastasia smiled, and gave Subaru a light poke in the chest.

Subaru was a little taken aback by that reaction.

Since that might've been the first time he had seen Anastasia let down her guard and show her true emotions.

With that feeling rapidly melting into his chest where he had been poked, Subaru lifted his face.

Subaru: "Thank you, Garfiel. Al. For helping me make up my mind."

Saying this to the two at his back, Subaru followed behind Anastasia.

Just what would he say when he's standing in front of the broadcasting device, he wondered.

He's still not sure what or what not to say.

But, strangely, there was no confusion or anxiety accompanying it.

After all, it's just the same as usual, right?

—Because he knew that, just as usual, he has no choice but to show off again.

Chapter 42:
The Newest Hero and the Most Ancient Hero

1

—An oppressive silence had fallen over the refuge shelter.

There was the occasional faint sound of sobbing and someone nervously tapping their fingers on the floor.

Listening to that unsettling backdrop in that stillness, the girl hugged up her knees, feeling the coldness of the wall against her back.

It was a little girl with golden hair.

Resting her chin on her small, pale kneecaps, the girl gently wrapped her arm around the little bundle at her side.

Leaning against the girl's left shoulder, with his head buried between his chest and legs, was an even younger boy—the girl's younger brother. He had been crying vehemently until now, but, apparently tired from the sobbing, had now fallen asleep.

Wet teartracks still lined his cheeks, and the corners of his eyes were red from crying. The girl wanted to softly stroke his hair, but hesitated, afraid that it might wake him.

If he could sleep, then it'd be better if he kept on sleeping.

While listening to her younger brother quietly snoring, she hoped that he might at least find some rest in his dreams. Because the reality outside those dreams would be far too harsh for her little brother to bear.

Though the same applied to his older sister, thinking this of him.

—It had been several hours since the announcement that the Control Towers to the Great Water Gates of Priestella had been taken.

That morning, the girl was out in the city plaza with her little brother when they heard the broadcast. She couldn't believe her ears when she heard those words, full of hate and malice. Worrying for her parents as she listened to that unacceptable ultimatum, the girl took her frightened little brother by the hand and ran to the shelter with the adults around her.

—If an unexpected situation occurs, quickly retreat into the shelters.

That was the emergency response procedure broadcasted from City Hall every morning.

Honestly, the girl didn't remember paying much attention to the morning broadcasts aside from the Bard's songs. But those words nevertheless remained at the back of her mind such that she immediately remembered them when the emergency arose.

However, neither the girl nor the surrounding adults seemed to have any idea about what to do once they were inside the refuge shelter.

—Witch Cult. Control Towers. Great Water Gates. Demands.

That vile woman's ear-piercing voice showered abuse upon the frightened people.

Every one of her deranged, senseless words filled the girl and the adults' minds with dread.

Trapped in this dark shelter, they knew nothing of what was happening outside. It was only natural that as time passed with no improvement in sight, panic began to take hold.

First, the voices of mutual encouragement weakened, then gradually, anxiety and frustration festered in the silence. By the time anyone noticed it, displeasure had have become apparent on the faces of everyone around them, and the atmosphere had been infested with pent-up discontent and hostile gazes.

Once it begins, there's no stopping it.

Staring at each other, shouting at each other. At worst, people begin trading punches.

Even in this shelter, this atmosphere was looming, ready to explode at the slightest touch.

Boy: “aa—h.”

Yet the perilous air on the brink of drawing blood was shattered by the girl’s crying little brother.

It appears that, even with the violent urge boiling inside them, the adults still had enough decency not to attack in front of a little golden-haired child crying for help.

The sound of a child crying is powerful, in a way.

She had always thought that her little brother’s crying was noisy. But, realizing what it had accomplished just now, the girl hugged her brother from behind and wept a little.

With this alone, violence had been averted inside shelter.

But everyone knew that it was only a temporary calm resting upon a precarious equilibrium.

Next time, it would certainly not be something a child’s cry could stop.

Knowing this, the people in the shelter, who should be tied by their shared fates, began to keep their distance from each other, not only verbally, but with their gazes and their breaths.

As if to avoid being influenced by other people’s consciousnesses, they shut out everything from the external world. Who knows what might draw someone else’s attention, incite their anger, and end up pulling the trigger?

So whether it was for themselves, or for everyone else, they held their breaths with rigid faces as they waited for time to pass. “Something will change if you just wait for it”, they left themselves to that fleeting hope.

Girl: "—a."

Suddenly, the girl lifted her face with a quiet moan.

While silently yearning for a change to come, she caught the subtle shift in the atmosphere.

Spurred to the same reaction, the people around her also turned their heads, perhaps for the first time in hours. This is because everyone living in this city knew that the faint tremble in the air—was an indication that a broadcast was coming.

In that world of silence, it almost sounded like someone nearby sighing. That precursor to the broadcast sent a sense of physical revulsion throughout her body.

The change they were hoping for should have been something positive. But a broadcast only brings the Witch Cult's malice.

What kind of impossible demand would that shrill voice impose next?

But here, the girl's pessimistic prediction was betrayed.

{—Uhhh… so um… can everyone hear me properly? Mic-test mic-test, one-two one-two}

Instead, the voice she heard was that of a youth who sounded somewhat confused.

Unlike any other broadcast before this, the youth's voice was lacking confidence. It wasn't the charismatic voice of the man she had grown used to hearing every morning. But a young voice she had never heard before.

The girl's eyes grew round. The surrounding adults also traded gazes of doubt, unsure of what was going on.

Such sentiments would not reach the person behind the broadcasting device. Nevertheless, after doing a few more checks to make sure that the broadcast going through, the youth cleared his throat. And,

{Sounds like you guys can hear me, that's a huge relief. So, first of all, sorry for doing a broadcast all of a sudden. I probably scared you, huh. Considering the circumstances, most of you must be on edge about what I'm going to say. But don't worry. This isn't the Witch Cult broadcasting to you now. Please know that first}

…It's not, the Witch Cult?"

Apparently not used to talking through the device, the volume of the youth's voice fluctuated up and down.

But, since the listeners were so overwhelmed by the content of his words, no one bothered to remark on it. Looking up overhead to where the voice seemed to be falling from, the darkened expressions on the people's faces began to shift. It was the sensation of having sighted the first glimmer of hope.

Someone quietly muttered,

Then, that means… we're saved?"

Those words encompassed the hopes of everyone inside the shelter.

That's it. Isn't it? If someone who's not the Witch Cult is speaking through the broadcasting device, that can only mean that they've recaptured City Hall. If someone managed to drive the Witch Cult out of City Hall, then maybe the Witch Cultists in the Control Towers and all over the city are also—

The Witch Cultists… are all driven out…?"

{Next, I have to apologize for getting everyone's hopes up, because the threat of the Witch Cult hasn't gone away yet. We were able to retake City Hall, but they're still holed up in the Control Towers. Those guys' demands, and the danger of the city sinking beneath the water are still in play. Please understand that as well}

"…"

Yet, this fleeting hope wasn't crushed by anyone else, but by the youth behind the broadcasting device himself.

It was almost as if the youth had read the minds of everyone inside the shelter. But isn't it far too cruel to extinguish their fledgling hopes this way?

Someone who had unwittingly stood up with expectation in their eyes sat down again.

Nobody can blame that someone for feeling discouraged, being told that their hope of being relived from their fears was misplaced. Instead, the fierce point of everyone's anger turned to the youth making the broadcast.

{I'm sorry}

However, the youth had apparently foreseen that the crowd's anger would fall on him.

{Where are you listening to this broadcast right now? Maybe you're in one of the refuge shelters, and I'm sure there are those who didn't manage to escape into the refuge shelters as well. Everyone must be filled with anxiety, right? I can understand what it's like to be afraid and wanting to curl up into a ball. And I guess you're all thinking "Who is this random guy toying with everyone's hopes at a time like this?"}

"…"

{I'm… just a nobody. Like everyone else, I'm just being tossed around by fate, getting crushed under the unreasonable circumstances, and so scared that my legs can't stop shaking. That kind of guy. Even the job of doing this broadcast… I only accepted it after making a huge fuss. And I still think that the burden is too heavy for me. Honestly, there are others who are more qualified to talk to everyone like this. I'm sure there are}

The youth's voice was trembling, as if speaking straight from the people's terrified and cowering hearts.

And then, what followed was simply the honest thoughts of a youth doubting his own value.

The attitude of the listeners had gone beyond surprise and disappointment, until all that was left was uncertainty.

Right now, when what everyone yearned for was hope, why did they put this youth in front of the broadcasting device?

Even the youth himself said that there were more qualified people.

But why did they send him?

{But here I am, talking to everyone. So many people greater than I am told me that I should do it. That it won't be totally pointless. But, can you hear me trembling? Speaking in front of people isn't my strong suit. I'm not good with words, and I don't have the charisma to lead anyone. I'm weak, helpless, and even here, in such an important position, I can't help but want to run away…}

The tone of his voice gradually fell, as if dragging the listeners' hearts into the abyss.

That weak, faltering voice sounded like it was creaking through a chest shrunken by anxiety, only to tangle up at his stomach. If the youth behind that voice was within arm's reach, she would've liked to plug his mouth to shut him up.

Boy: "Big sister…"

Before she knew it, her younger brother was awake.

Hearing that call, the girl hugged her little brother's ears as if to keep that wimp's voice from sneaking in and infecting him with it's cowardice.

But, as the price for protecting her little brother, that voice continued to strike upon the girl's eardrums, drawing her into its weakness.

Still, the youth's voice went on,

{I don't know what I can do… what I really want is just to plug my ears, hold my head, hide in a corner by myself and wait for someone else to fix everything for me…}

Girl: “—no…”

Squeezing her eyes shut, the girl shook her head as if rejecting that sense of helplessness and despair.

I know. I know even if you don’t remind me.

What the youth was saying was nothing less than the inner thoughts of every person cowering under the Witch Cult’s threat.

It was the weakness eating away at the girl’s heart.

It was the cowardice rooted in the depths of the adults’ minds.

It was the unbearable dread tormenting her little brother’s soul.

Surely, it was something nobody could do anything about.

And to have to face that unreasonable reality in spite of this—

{—But, since I can’t run away, I’ll fight. That’s just the kind of guy I am}

Saying this, the youth’s voice was clearly shaking.

Girl: “…huh?”

Not sure if she had misheard it, the girl opened her eyes and looked around her.

The owner of the voice wasn’t there. But all around, she could see astounded faces just like her own.

The voice paused for a moment, as if choosing his next words.

And,

{Let me ask you again. Everyone listening to this voice, where are you now? Have you escaped into a refuge shelter? Are you hiding inside your house? Are you trembling alone? Are you with someone? Are you with the person most important to you? Or, even if you’re next to an unfamiliar face, is it a face that you have grown to know over the past few hours?}

"…"

{It's a pretty arbitrary request, and it may be difficult, but please don't be alone. When a person is alone, they'll just start coming up with lame ideas. I know that from experience. Trust me. So please don't be alone. Stay with someone. And—}

Inhaling, with only a slight hesitation,

{And if you can, look at the face of the person who's with you}

Girl: "…"

Following the youth's words, the girl's gaze slowly fell into her arm.

Her little brother was looking up at her. His swaying, uncertain emerald eyes met hers.

{Whose face do you see now? Is it someone important to you, or a stranger who you've spent these past few hours with? Or maybe it's a friend. …But most likely, it's a wretched face. A face that's about to cry, a face that's in distress, and I imagine it probably isn't smiling. No, perhaps there is someone out there who is putting up a strong face, forcing themselves to smile so as not to worry the people around them. If there is, then that's an amazing person. If someone you care about is smiling this way, you should be proud of them. But now, with that in mind, compare it with the smile you know}

Her brother's face was close to crying.

It was a crumpled face, a face that was about to burst into tears again.

While, reflected in her brother's eyes, her own face was hollow as if it had lost its expression.

{—Is this acceptable to you?}

Girl: "…no way."

A small, thin voice slipped from the girl's lips.

It was a weak and broken sound that was impossible even for herself to hear.

Nevertheless,

{I can’t accept this. I will not accept this}

The youth’s voice rang, as though having heard her reply.

{I also have people I cherish. Friends I hold dear. And I cannot forgive whoever put that pained, sorrowful expression on the faces of the people I love. I don’t want you to force yourself to smile. You kidding me? Quit joking around. I want to raise my voice and shout that the smile of the girl I know should be way cuter than this…}

Boy: “B-Big sister…”

{I don’t want to keep losing. It’d be too pathetic to give up here. There’s no way I can allow it. They are the ones in the wrong. Even if you are too weak to do the right thing, to strike down those in the wrong, you should at least know what is right. And when you know that you are right, there is no way you can allow yourself to lose to those who are wrong. At least, I don’t intend to surrender and bow to those guys}

Girl: “Fredo…”

Hearing her little brother faintly calling her, she gently held him closer and pressed her forehead against his.

A feverish heat transferred between them. Hot, very hot, it was the heat of life.

She couldn’t tell if it was her younger brother’s or her own, but the heat was certainly there.

{I want to run away, but I can’t run away. I want to cry, but I can’t cry. The enemy is strong, but I don’t want to lose. And so, I’ll fight. I know I am weak, and stupid, but still I will fight. They are wrong. They are wrong to have made the people I care about look like they’re about to cry. So, fight. I will fight. —And I want you all to fight}

Girl: “—hk.”

Her breath clogged. Her throat suddenly closed, ashamed of her own weakness.

Surely, it was because the voice of the youth had ceased to tremble, but had become powerful, as if pointing to the road ahead.

She could understand the youth’s feelings. She received the youth’s message, painful and clear.

In her heart, the girl’s will was the same as the youth’s. She wants to fight. She wants to do all she could to drive out the thugs who had attacked their city. But, both she and her little brother were small, young, and their reach were far too short.

They were helpless, ignorant, weak, and cowardly, and so—

{Don’t get me wrong. I said I want you to fight, but I’m not telling you to pick up a stick and fight them. In fact, please avoid doing anything so reckless. I don’t want you to mob up and spill blood fighting against the Witch Cult. What I am asking you to fight for is to not look down}

Girl: “To not… look down…”

{Staring at your feet isn’t going change anything. Your gaze isn’t going to bore a hole in the floor, and even if it does, that won’t fix a thing… So please, lift your face and look ahead}

She looked up. Not at her knees, not at her brother’s blond hair, but at the shelter.

And there, she saw the faces of those around her also lifting.

Their eyes met, wide open as if in astonishment.

Just like the girl, everyone had subconsciously raised their faces, obeying the voice of the youth.

{If you look around you, surely, you’ll meet someone’s eyes. Like you, this is someone who is afraid and wants to run away… but, just like you, this is also someone who doesn’t want to lose. There is the person you cherish, there is the person you are looking at now, and, if you add yourself to the list, that’s already three people. There should be more depending on where you are}

Just as the youth said, the people’s gazes intersected as they lifted their faces.

The gleams within their irises were complicated, and surely, the girl’s own eyes must’ve been the same. However, there now seemed to be something more than just tremors of terror.

{If you can see that you are not alone, then that’s enough. You are not alone. That in itself is powerful, don’t you think? I don’t want to see saddened expressions on the faces of people I love. And I don’t want the people looking at me now to see a miserable expression in my eyes. I’m not the only one who’s so vain, weak, and stubborn, am I?}

“…”

That beseeching, calling voice was trying to muster the people’s courage.

And yet, to the girl’s ears, the youth was pleading for help—for something, anything, to cling to.

And then, she realized it.

The youth’s feelings had never changed since the moment this broadcast began.

While lamenting his weak, insufficient self, he did not give up.

He was telling himself that that was his only weapon, and telling everyone else that they were also the same.

{Please, help me believe this. I may be weak and hopeless, but I can’t give up just yet. I’m not the only coward who hates to give up… please, help me believe it}

It was a cowardly voice. A cowardly plea.

It was a voice which, when everyone needed help, was shamelessly shouting quicker and louder than anyone: “Please help me”—

{Or… am I the only one?}

The voice lost its confidence. Or rather. The youth’s voice had no confidence to begin with.

A sense of agitation surged up. Don’t go. Whatever it takes, she wanted to shout for him to stay.

Girl: “…you’re. not.”

A faint voice, indiscernible like a mosquito’s cry, spilled from her throat.

This voice would not reach him. The reply would have to be louder.

In order to answer the voice of that coward, afraid and alone—

{Who believes… even now, we can still fight… am I the only one?}

Girl: “—YOU’RE NOT!”

Opening her mouth, the girl screamed at the top of her lungs.

Voices resounded throughout the refuge shelter. Not just the girl’s.

Others who had also lifted their faces shouted out as well.

They were voices resisting against sorrow, weakness, and fear.

If that was the youth’s plan all along, then they fell for it through and through.

Who cares, even if it was? That wimpy trembling of his voice, that faltering pep-talk, that pitiful encouragement, and that pleading, clinging faith, even if all of it had been an act…

If they fell for such a masterful performance, who could blame them?

But, if this really was the voice of a clumsy wimp, how could anyone just leave him be?

{I'm not, am I?}

Girl: "—You're not!"

{You guys are still fighting, aren't you? You haven't been swallowed by weakness, have you?}

Girl: "We haven't… we don't want to lose!"

The depths of her chest grew hot. The roots of her teeth were trembling, and a passion different from anger was raging.

That feeling wasn't the girl's alone. It was a flaring passion engulfing everyone into a single inferno.

The anxiety they had only recently shared now became a bonfire of a different emotion.

{If you are with someone important to you, hold their hand and believe in them. If you're with someone you don't know, give them a nod and assure them you'll do your best together. Because neither you nor that person have been crushed by defeat or are about to give up fighting. And as long everyone goes on fighting, I will fight to the end as well. I will fight—I will fight, and win}

"…"

In the end, this is just a shelter far away from City Hall.

No matter how loudly they shouted here, no matter how they scream that they are with him, none of it would reach the youth.

Still, the youth sounded relieved, as though he had heard the girl and the others' replies. He received it, he received it and proclaimed in a voice trembling in swelling emotion:

—I will fight, and win

There was no question of whether it was possible.

Only faith that surely, he will.

Just as the youth believed that the girl and the people of this city would not be beaten by despair—

The girl and the citizens believed that the youth behind that voice will prevail in the perilous battle ahead.

Why did they believe it? Because surely, this voice—

{—My name is Natsuki Subaru. I am the Spirit-Arts User who defeated Sin Archbishop Sloth of the Witch Cult}

"—!!"

An uproar erupted at the revelation of the youth's identity.

The girl didn't quite understand the significance of that declaration. But this was not the case for the people around her. The impact was overwhelming, and certainly not in the negative sense.

At first, they were startled, then, as comprehension followed—hope and faith spread explosively as even the girl's heart was swallowed by that wave of emotion.

{My colleagues and I will do everything to take care of the Witch Cult in this city! So, please believe in us and fight on. Hold onto the hands of the people precious to you and cast away the cowering part of yourself that wants to surrender. And…}

"…"

{—Leave the rest to me!}

Deafening cheers erupted, flooding the shelter with heated enthusiasm.

Expectation became hope, and, in a single breath, one hope became hope innumerable.

The girl looked down at her younger brother in her arms and saw the undeniable light dwelling in his eyes.

Just to be sure, she embraced her brother tightly once more. Her brother's arms wrapped around her body in return, and, while savoring the warmth of that embrace, the girl looked up towards the ceiling.

Unable to hide his fear or apprehension, that youth nevertheless took on the hopes of every person in this city and declared that he will fight.

The girl closed her eyes, sketching out the image of the hero whose face she didn't even know, and prayed for every imaginable good fortune upon him.

—Because surely, he must be just a common-place youth, fighting for the sake of someone important to him.

2

Leaving the magic device shaped like a gramophone, Subaru slowly stepped back.

Nervous sweat had completely drenched his forehead. Leaning against a nearby workbench, he roughly swiped it off of his brow.

Taking deep breath after deep breath, he wondered if the device was picking up that sound.

But when he looked to Anastasia, who was in charge of operating the device beside him, it seemed she had already safely powered it off. Instantly, he was washed over with relief.

Subaru: "…Hhaa, that was exhausting."

He spilled a sigh as his head churned with unimaginable fatigue.

Honestly, he was in such a trance while he spoke that he could barely remember a thing he said. It wasn't that he forgot everything, but the memories were too vague in places.

And he had Anastasia's speech notes, too…

"…"

Wiping off the droplets hanging down his chin with a sleeve, Subaru noticed that the room was extraordinarily quiet.

The people who had been watching the broadcast didn't say a word. Beside Anastasia, were Garfiel and Al. While Julius and Ricardo, who later joined them, were also standing in a corner of the room. To see all these usually-noisy people suddenly dead-silent couldn't be a good sign.

Unless, was his incoherent broadcast just that bad?

Anastasia: "Natsuki-kun."

Subaru: "Uwaha! I'm sorry! I'll do better next time!"

Anastasia: "Why're you apologizin'? Strange child."

With his heart wracked by anxiety, Subaru blurted out an apology the instant he heard his name. While, laughing at his reaction, Anastasia tilted her head smiling.

Anastasia: "It's a strange thing to say to a strange child, but, Natsuki-kun, did you…"

Subaru: "Hm?"

Anastasia: "Did you use to be a con-artist back in the day or somethin'?"

Subaru: "What's with that baseless accusation all of a sudden?! As you can see, I'm just a normal everyday student… or actually, in a certain sense, I'm not even a student!"

Anastasia: "Ah, no no… I didn't mean that in a bad way. I was just trying to say that the way you spoke was exquisite… how you cast them into despair only to lift them up again, simply an impeccable use of rhetoric."

Waving off Subaru's protests, Anastasia weakly giggled "Tahhaha".

But, hearing this only made Subaru more muddled than ever.

Subaru: "Rhetoric? The hell're you talking about? I blanked out right away and didn't even know what I was saying. All the letters on the cheat-sheet got blurred together and I couldn't remember a thing after I gave up reading."

Anastasia: "Yeah, you pretty much skipped our draft. You can't imagine how I felt when right off the bat you started sayin' things that had nothin' to do with what we discussed… but it seems I needn't have worried myself."

Subaru: "I'm very sorry about that! But, generally, wasn't it more or less in line with the notes? I mean, if it was that bad, you would've stopped me, right, Anastasia-san?"

The notes in his hand: "the cheat-sheet he'd forgotten about at the most crucial moment, was filled with flowery oratory designed to clear away the anxieties of the people in this city.

It was a proud conglomeration of Anastasia's negotiation techniques, Garfiel's vast stores of proverbs, and even some of Subaru's modern knowledge of neat and witty comments.

Even though he couldn't read from it when it actually mattered, he probably had some of its ideas floating around in his head and wound up including them in his speech one way or another.

Anastasia: "I don't know how to put this, but, Natsuki-kun, your speech didn't even touch on anythin' in the notes. I mean, none at all."

Subaru: “—Eh?”

Without leaving any ambiguity on the matter, Anastasia’s words instantly shot down Subaru’s speculations.

Suddenly growing rigid, Subaru looked around at the others to confirm if this is true. However, the other four only showed their respective version of awkward faces as Subaru’s gaze passed over them.

Among them, Julius took one step forward. And, while picking at his front hair,

Julius: “It’s just as Anastasia-sama said, Subaru. Your broadcast didn’t contain any of the things we discussed beforehand. In particular, the part that was supposed to have been revealed at the start, about your accomplishment of slaying Sin Archbishop Sloth, was moved into the second half. It was almost to the point that I wanted to ask you what you were trying to do.”

Subaru: “Seriously? If I didn’t say that, then wasn’t I just some super-random-guy to them?! If it was like that, you could’ve stopped me! Even if I had to start over it would’ve been better than confusing the hell out of them!”

Julius: “Start over? That’s unthinkable.”

While Subaru started flipping out at Julius’ confession of doubt, Julius shook his head with an expression of complete seriousness.

Then, with almost a sense of reverence towards Subaru,

Julius: “—It was… a wonderful speech.”

Subaru: “…Aah?”

Julius: “It didn’t matter that you forgot the notes. With your own ability, you’ve accomplished something far beyond our expectations. I have nothing but praises for your achievement. This is the same sentiment which I had felt when you slew the White Whale and Sloth.”

In front of a stunned Subaru, Julius only piled on his exaggerated praises.

In a way that was utterly unlike Julius, Subaru thought he saw excitement in “The Most Perfect Knight”’s eyes. But the moment he regained his senses, Subaru began to suspect that something was up.

What’s gotten into this Knight? Could Subaru have upset his composure that much?

Subaru: “Quit joking around… I always thought your jokes aren’t very funny, you know.”

Julius: “If that sounded like a joke to you, then it’s only because you think far too little of yourself. But, then again, perhaps that is exactly what made your speech what it was. It was a speech no one but you could have made.”

Subaru: “You really are making fun of me, aren’t you?”

Considering the critical situation they were in, Julius’ praises were only making Subaru more frustrated.

Subaru had already gotten used to Julius’ sarcasm by now, but this wasn’t the time to be pointlessly bickering like this. If the speech didn’t have the effect they had hoped for, then they’d need to come up with another plan as soon as possible.

Subaru: “Instead of giving people strength, if all I did was make them distrust us, then it won’t work even if I try again. Next time someone else should…”

Anastasia: “Natsuki-kun, that’s enough of your self-deprecation, you know? It’s making people uncomfortable just listenin’.”

Saying this, Anastasia put a stop to Subaru’s whining from the side.

Glaring at Subaru with a look of disapproval on her adorable face,

Anastasia: “Your speech was exceptionally effective, guess I have to spell it out for you since you can’t seem to realize it yourself. —

Natsuki-kun, your speech was more perfect than we could've ever imagined. You have the talent of a true demagogue, you know."

Ricardo: "I'm with th'young miss y'know! Khhhhyya, that gave me shivers! What's with you 'n words! Y'make it look easy, bro! The way y'tricked Emilia-sama, Crusch-sama, that lil'girl 'n th'ground dragon into fallin' all over ya, m'I right?!"

Subaru: "Both of you're saying things I can't just let slide! What d'you mean tricked! Who're you calling a demagogue!"

Listening to their overly-scandalous evaluations, Subaru raised his voice, shouting.

But Anastasia and Ricardo only innocently looked at each other and shrugged. And here, seeing how everyone seemed to be in on it, Subaru began to suspect that they weren't entirely joking.

This grew all the more obvious when he saw Garfiel, squatting on the floor, watching him.

Garfiel: "Capt'n…"

Subaru: "Garfiel… what do you think?"

Garfiel: "Capt'n's the Capt'n a'right. I was right t'follow ya outta th'Sanctuary… that's what I think."

Subaru: "…Your expectations are always a bit too heavy on me."

Garfiel: "Well that's yer own fault, ain't it, Capt'n."

Garfiel got up and walked over to him, flashing his fangs smiling. Seeing this, Subaru expelled a sigh through his nostrils, and,

Subaru: "In that case, running from my responsibilities would be the same as giving up, wouldn't it. I don't want that to happen… that's probably what I said in the broadcast, right?"

Anastasia: "There you go."

Anastasia smiled, watching Subaru scratching his head, looking deflated as if only just now accepting this. She pumped up her little chest at this unexpectedly good outcome and softly rubbed her scarf with her hand,

Anastasia: “In fact, you’ve raised everyone’s morale so high that I’m gettin’ worried they’ll start doin’ somethin’ stupid. Even here, you’ve got us pumped full of spirit on account of Wrath’s Authority, you know.”

Subaru: “If you exaggerate like that I’m gonna think you’re pulling my leg again… seriously, just how good of a radio DJ was I, anyway…”

Getting hoisted up higher and higher was only making it harder to wrap his head around it.

Tearing himself away from the whirlpool of warm gazes, Subaru slowly walked up to the arcane device once more.

Subaru: “In any case, if that speech had made a difference, that’s better than anything. Hopefully, this’ll be enough to stave off any more violence in the refuge shelters… So, any thoughts on our next step?”

Anastasia: “Now that the citizens are calmed down, we’ve taken care of everything apart from the root cause itself. However, after Natsuki-kun’s speech, the Witch Cult definitely knows about our intentions now…”

Subaru: “Wonder what their reaction will be. Like you guys said, aside from the fact that it’ll be irrational, there’s not much else to go on. At the same time, we must settle this as soon as possible.”

Regardless of the effectiveness of Subaru’s speech, it didn’t change the fact that the means to destroy this city was still held in the hands of lunatics. Even with the greatest optimism, chances were, the Great Water Gates would be released at the stroke of midnight and the city would be swallowed beneath the flood.

No matter what, they must end this before that happens.

Anastasia: “And to do this, we’ll need to capture all four towers at once… correct?”

Subaru: “There are four Sin Archbishops and two enemies we don’t know about. We’ll need to consult with our forces on how to tackle this.”

Simultaneously capturing all four Control Towers is the necessary condition for saving this city.

Concentrating their forces like they did for assault on City Hall wouldn’t work here. Since, as soon as they attack any of the towers, there would be the risk of the other three releasing the floodgates.

Subaru wasn’t confident that they could survive these odds four times in a row.

Up against six major enemies, their fighting strength was—

Subaru: “It’s a… difficult hand. There’s the chance it could turn into a repeat of our attack on City Hall. But… if we could have at least one more card.”

???: “—In that case, how about a Joker?”

While Subaru counted their forces on the fingers of his hands, a voice abruptly chimed in.

Without thinking, Subaru turned towards the figure standing at the entrance of the room, and,

Subaru: “Sounds like in the time since I last saw you, your evaluation of yourself has gone up quite a bit?”

???: “Not nearly as much as Natsuki-san, being asked to make speeches and all… I never thought I had a hero among my friends, but guess I was wrong.”

Subaru: “Still don’t think it suits me, though.”

Seeing the figure shoot him a mischievous smile, Subaru shrugged his shoulders and laughed. Then, walking up to the entrance, he gave that smiling figure a high-five.

Watching this reunion, Garfiel's face also brightened,

Garfiel: "Otto-bro! Yer safe, ain't ya!"

At Garfiel's delighted call, Otto, who had been missing since the troubles started, answered with a nod.

Aside from the dirt on his clothing, Otto seemed completely unhurt. Joining them, he gave the approaching Garfiel a high five as well,

Otto: "I barely escaped with my life. It's a miracle that I survived and somehow made it here alive. Glad to see you two are safe. Though, I know you guys are way harder to kill than I am, so I wasn't all that worried."

Subaru: "Is that right. Actually, I wasn't all that worried about you either. Why is that?"

Garfiel: "I dunno. That's just Otto-bro's natural-vibes maybe?"

Otto: "Can't you worry about me a little more?! In this kind of crisis, it was extremely dangerous to be out there alone, you know?!"

But, in reality, he did manage to rejoin them, so that wasn't very convincing.

Anyway, while they were in the middle of this joyous reunion, Anastasia clapped her hands and squeezed herself into the conversation,

Anastasia: "Alright alright, calm down calm down. First off, it's nice to see that Otto-kun is alive. And I'm sure there're mountains of things you want to ask each other about what you've been up to and such, but…"

Cutting off her words there, Anastasia shot Otto a glare with her green-onion-colored eyes,

Anastasia: "That conspicuous remark you just made… mind telling me what it meant?"

Otto: “The Joker, right? It’s a simple story. If I let him come in right away, my survival would’ve been pretty much overlooked, so I cleverly asked him to wait outside for a bit.”

Looking a little embarrassed, Otto walked over to the door at Anastasia’s prodding and gave a signal to someone on the other side of the door.

Preceded by the sound of footsteps, a new character walked into the room. And,

????: “—Sorry I’m late.”

One sentence. And that utterance alone charged its listeners with the feeling of being reinforced by ten thousand men.

Alongside the sensation of a gust of wind sweeping by, was the illusion of a towering flame appearing before their eyes, compelling their hearts to shudder.

And in reality, this reunion did indeed hold that kind of power.

For the strength that they have been dying to obtain had arrived.

Reinhard: “Reinhard van Astrea—it’s a bit late, but I’ve come to join you.”

Saying this, the red-flame Sword Saint announced his intention to join the fight.

Chapter 43:
Before the Rendezvous

1

Reinhard: “Forgive me for not providing assistance at this critical moment. I can only reflect on how I was lacking.”

Receiving the gazes of those present in the room, Reinhard apologized.

At the sight of the Sword Saint with bowed head, everyone grew silent for a moment. It would be easy to sling negativity in response to his apology. But, words of blame were easier to form than ones which conveyed true intent.

In truth, the fact that they had spent all this time in dire need of power while Reinhard had been missing, his status unknown, had not changed.

To think how the attack on the City Hall would have gone if his strength were present at that moment, that could not be helped. So even simple, negative words, did not easily emerge from anyone’s lips. However,

Subaru: “Really, you idiot. Do you have any idea how much trouble we’ve been in without you?”

Approaching that crimson hero, only Subaru called out to him, while poking his chest.

As that fist lightly touched him, Reinhard, with an attitude like he could not justify himself to Subaru, turned his gaze away. At that scolded and crestfallen appearance unbefitting of him, Subaru snorted.

Subaru: “You know, if you were gonna come anyway, you should’ve shown up fifteen minutes earlier! Then I wouldn’t have had to give a speech that didn’t fit my character at all. That’s supposed to be your job, isn't it?"

Reinhard: "Sorry… However, it was a great speech befitting you. Though many things are required of me, giving courage-rousing broadcasts of that magnitude is not something I could do. You were the right choice."

Subaru: "Between me and you, the required role for that broadcast is a little different, I think."

Subaru poked Reinhard's chest once again, and he smiled wryly. And, he also poked the tip of that downcast hero's nose with a finger.

Subaru: "Reinhard."

Reinhard: "What is it…?"

Subaru: "Since you came, it's like a hundred men did, no, a thousand. I can expect that much right? Can I count on you?"

Reinhard: "…"

It was a force comparable to ten thousand men. Subaru's hundred-fold, even thousand-fold evaluation was laughable.

At Subaru's expectation-filled question, Reinhard's blue eyes blinked. But that hesitation immediately faded, and Reinhard's lips formed into a smile.

Reinhard: "Ah, I want you to count on me. If you expect that much of me, I will comply."

Subaru: "That somehow-making-women-happy kinda talk, can you stop that? Well, no matter… And with that, if anyone has something they want to say now, please go while we're at it."

Seeing that initial discomfort disappear from Reinhard's face as he laughed, Subaru turned and looked back. Gazing over at the faces that had not said anything until now, he pointed to Reinhard.

Subaru: "At these times, the side that gets special treatment suffers much more. Besides, a chance to scold this Sword Saint that wants to be scolded doesn't come by often. So go ahead, do it, do it."

Reinhard: "…"

Subaru: "After you've railed on him enough, let's talk—About how to help everyone."

Subaru puffed out his chest as he spoke.

At that attitude, people held their breaths. Otto and Garfiel, the only two who were used to Subaru's bravado, smiled.

And it was good to have one or two fellows able to see through to his true intentions.

They did not have to hold in their thoughts, because it was right after he had made that kind of speech.

2

After that, Reinhard's personal talking to (details omitted) was held, and again talk of how to recapture the city started up again.

However, other than Reinhard and Otto's similar lines of thought, there was no clear improvement. The number of enemies that they had to attack, and the necessary strategy of striking all control towers simultaneously did not change.

Subaru: "But in the midst of this chaos, where was Reinhard and what was he up to?"

As they all sat around in a circle talking, Subaru suddenly interrupted with that question. Reinhard's expression clouded at his words. Today, his face often became like that.

Subaru: "You don't have Felt with you, and there's a lot of things I want to hear about. Ah, I'm not blaming you, or anything like that, okay? Please believe I'm past that stage."

Anastasia: "What Natsuki-kun was sayin', well, it's somethin' that bothers me too. No way the Sword Saint got scared and went into hidin', I wasn't thinkin' anythin' like that. But I am wantin' to hear a convincing reason."

Following Subaru's question, Anastasia joined in. Judging from the fact she was casting sideway glances, it definitely seemed like she had received reports from Julius.

Right before the turmoil began, Reinhard and Felt had been in contact with Heinkel. After her question, Reinhard's expression clouding over doubly, seemed to be proof of that assertion.

Wilhelm included, the Astreas' approach to the topic of Heinkel was very evasive. Subaru did not know if he should voice it, but the way they treated him was like—

Subaru: "Like someone who's been stuck inside for ten years, and now is a pro-NEET child who's treated as a tumor by his aging parents…"

Otto: "Natsuki-kun's jumping to weird imaginings again, so I'm sorry, but what will you do? If it is hard for Reinhard-san to talk, then I can speak, but…"

While Subaru recalled flashes of an evening news special on shut-ins, Otto chimed in. His worried gaze was directed at Reinhard, and his tone held an apologetic sort of feeling.

Subaru: "Wait, you came together with Reinhard, so did you really stay with him during the turmoil?"

Otto: "No, there was nothing like that. I joined up with Reinhard-san at the last moment… However, I have mostly figured out the situation."

Reinhard: "Thank you, Otto. But this is a problem of my family. Truly, it is a difficult topic to discuss, but it would be for the best to speak of it myself."

Reinhard bowed his head and refused Otto's considerate offer. He gazed ahead, and corrected his posture straight a moment later.

Reinhard: "Firstly, though I have said it many times, let me apologize once more. I was the one person who should have been the first one to assist, so I must apologize for not being able to join you for several hours. I am deeply sorry."

Julius: "…On that point, our view is as we said earlier. We cannot forgive everything like there was no problem. However, you are needed in the upcoming battle. If you seek to repent, then perform well in the fights to come."

Reinhard: "I will do so, Julius… At the time of the Witch Cult's first broadcast, Felt-sama and I were called to a corner of the Second Street. The one summoning us was Deputy Commander Heinkel."

Reinhard, who had started relating the event, called Heinkel "Deputy Commander" in a stiff voice.

It was widely known that they were father and son. And yet, he called his father by title. It was enough to bring about the realization that the the two did not have a simple father-son relationship.

Subaru: "After that fighting and separation from before, Felt answered a summon from him?"

Reinhard: "Deep inside, Felt-sama too would have wanted to refuse. However, the talk regarded a matter related to authority over the Astrea territories, so we could not refuse. What request would be made was unknown to us… Felt-sama accompanied me, and we headed towards the appointed place."

Subaru: "There, how did that discussion end up…"

Reinhard: "My apologies, but as that matter is directly related to the matter of the Royal Selection, I would appreciate being allowed not to elaborate. It is enough to say the talk did not go smoothly."

Reinhard's tone of voice fell, and it was easy to tell the talk had gone poorly. Even if it had not gone down like that, Felt lacked experience dealing with negative emotions. Taking Heinkel's despicable nature into account, it was not difficult to imagine how the talk would have played out.

In the midst of such conversation—

Reinhard: “Then, the Witch Cult’s first broadcast happened. While we could hardly believe our ears, it was clear that we needed to move immediately. It was my intention to head out right away if there was a truly dire situation. The other retainers, they also had a method to call for me if needed, which we prepared beforehand.”

That method was to launch magic into the sky at any time as a signal. Upon Sirius’s appearance, had Rachins fired off the signal, Reinhard would have rushed to the scene within thirty seconds. There were no lies in those words.

However, Reinhard had heard the Witch Cult’s broadcast filled with clear malicious intent, yet still did not move. He did not come running to the scene, and not just that, but had kept silent for several hours.

Why was that?

Subaru: “You knew that the broadcast was coming from the City Hall, no? At that point, you would have had the option to run to City Hall… Then why didn’t you come?”

Reinhard: “…”

It was not that he was scolding him. That was not his intention, but his voice was firm as he pressed for answers.

There were more than a few things that occurred to him. If Reinhard had been present during that fierce battle for the City Hall—Crusch, who was suffering now, would not have been harmed during the fight. It might even have ended without that strange event befalling Subaru’s right leg.

Though it was not intentional, the gazes growing harsh here were not just Subaru’s.

Receiving the stares of everyone in the room, Reinhard, who had until then been speaking fluently, closed his mouth, and lowered his gaze once again. With long lashes and shining eyes, he was hesitant to speak any words beyond what he had already spoken.

Even so, after those few conflicted seconds slowly passed, the hero choppily continued his words.

Reinhard: “—Deputy Commander Heinkel… took Felt-sama as a hostage.”

Subaru: “…”

Reinhard: “That is my irreversible failure. Felt-sama was taken custody, and a sword was held against her neck to stop my movements. And so, I could not act.”

Subaru clearly understood why Reinhard had struggled with those words so much.

The master he should give his all for, had been taken captive by none other than his father's hands. Just how much had Reinhard's heart been affected by humiliation and shame?

Subaru: "…Tch, what the hell? That Deputy Commander, is he a pawn of the Witch Cult or something?"

Receiving that shocking confession, Subaru muttered to himself, while thinking of Reinhard's feelings.

If it were true, it was certainly cruel. He had heard that Witch Cultists had hidden themselves here and there, so it was difficult to know just who could be one of them. But for one of them to appear among family like that was something he did not even want to think about.

After seeing how Sin Archbishops other than Petelgeuse really were like, his opinion was all the stronger. All the Witch Cultists were the lowest of the low, mere human trash.

Reinhard: "—If it were like that, how would I react? My feelings, how would they be…"

Subaru: "What?"

However, Reinhard responded to Subaru's idea, an idea accepted by roughly half of those present—with a somewhat uncomfortable voice.

That attitude of his, Subaru wondered about it. However, the other half—made up of Anastasia, Julius, and Otto, were making expressions that said they had reached another conclusion.

Reinhard: "The Deputy Commander is not a member of the Witch Cult… At least judging from his remarks after seizing Felt-sama, I saw nothing that suggested so."

Subaru: “Then what is he, some kind of idiot? No, even if he isn’t stupid it is fine… Then, why? Why take Felt hostage? Doing something like that, what point—”

“Is there?”, Subaru was about to say, when he realized.

The depressed look on Reinhard’s face and the pitying one on Otto. Seeing those at the edge of his sight, the conclusion he drew almost made him want to laugh.

He could not laugh at that. It was completely helpless. Then, Heinkel’s actions—

Subaru: “—Were just because he wanted to keep you there?”

Reinhard: “…”

Subaru: “From the Witch Cult broadcast, he realized the city was dangerous… So, to get himself some protection quickly, he just wanted to dearly hold on to the strongest guy at hand?”

Reinhard: “…The Deputy Commander said something like, “your precious master and father are both here. Will you abandon them to save some bastards whose faces you don’t even know?”“

Subaru: “Your own father spouted that bullshit?!”

His rage boiling over, Subaru struck the floor with his fist.

Throughout this day, ever since morning, he had been repeatedly coming face-to-face with this passionate rage. However, he had never imagined feeling this furious about an opponent completely unrelated to the Witch Cult.

Reinhard: “I had no words to reply with. Of course, Felt-sama was saying it was all a bluff. Since she would be fine, she told me to go rescue the others—But remaining there even then was my decision. The blame indeed lies within me.”

Subaru: “Why does it have to be like that?! Whose fault it is, it’s obvious to everyone here who’s to blame here?!”

Reinhard: “Even so, the choice was mine.”

At the shouting Subaru, Reinhard would not concede his share of the blame.

That obstinate Reinhard, he probably would not bend on that, no matter what anyone said. Subaru furiously held his tongue and forced his violent feelings to calm down.

Reinhard: “Nevertheless, I was trapped in that stalemate. What happened after is nothing remarkable. Even after further broadcasts I was left unable to act… I was severely scolded by Felt-sama.”

Anastasia: “But she ain’t witcha. Is Felt-chan doin’ alright?”

Anastasia asked Reinhard, with a bitter smile. The girl’s expression was blank, making her hard to read as she fiddled with her scarf. Even so, she was showing concern for Felt’s state, as the latter had not joined them.

Anastasia: “Bein’ held hostage like that for hours’d be quite tiring mentally. Now that Reinhard-kun’s here like this, I’m thinkin’ the issue’s probably been all sorted out.”

Reinhard: “Yes, that is the case. Felt-sama has now joined her retainers at a shelter. The Deputy Commander has been arrested and Felt-sama is watching over him.”

Subaru: “Arrested… He was caught, huh.”

Reinhard: “I am content with that result. But without Otto’s cooperation, even that could hardly have been achieved, I think.”

Subaru: “Ah, so that’s where Otto’s name comes in, huh.”

Subaru furrowed his brows at the mention of Otto’s name, who had yet to appear in this tale. Having reached his turn, Otto lightly cleared his throat to call for attention.

Otto: “Those were the state of affairs. And so, I arrived at that scene by complete accident. Simply because I was aware of the relationship between the three, by happening upon the scene I could roughly come to understand the situation.”

The Astreas’ family problems and the situation with Felt’s problems related to territories. Knowing that much already, he had spotted Heinkel holding Reinhard in place with Felt as a hostage. Even someone slow in the head would be able to figure out what kind of situation was happening.

Otto: “I, too, understood that being unable to borrow Reinhard’s power in the fight against the Witch Cult was the worst-case scenario. I went pale at that thought, so I knew I had to do something about it.”

Subaru: “And so Otto somehow drew attention to himself, and Felt was freed. That was how Reinhard was able to move, and now he managed to reach us… Something like that, yeah?”

Otto: “Luckily, Natsuki-san’s big speech happened too, so the meetup point was decided without any worry. It would have been nice if we could have moved a little faster, but I had a lot going on as well.”

Reinhard nodded as well, albeit briefly, confirming Otto’s contribution.

Again, the silver-tongued Otto had played an active role somewhere unseen by others.

Garfiel: “But still, what happened to Ottobro ‘til then? Honestly, walkin’ ‘round the city with yer strength, isn’t it the same as committin’ suicide?”

Otto: “About that, there were a lot of twists and turns… No, I will explain it.”

Clearing his throat, Otto indicated the outside of the City Hall building.

Otto: “As scheduled in the morning, I left for the Muse Company alone to request the continuation of negotiations from Kiritaka-san. He had also cooled his head overnight, so it seemed like it would be easy to agree to restart negotiations…”

Subaru: “It seemed, but?”

Subaru assumed that the Witch Cult would have started their broadcast and interrupted discussions.

However, Otto resumed speaking while shaking his head.

Otto: “At the location of the Muse Company, in the plaza of the Third Street, the Witch Cult… A Sin Archbishop made an appearance. We found out about the Witch Cult’s attack when that figure created quite the uproar.”

Subaru: “A Sin Archbishop…?! Before the broadcast?”

Otto: “Yes. Before the broadcast.”

Otto confirmed for Subaru, who was leaning forward in surprise.

But, when thinking about it, that was not impossible. Sirius, and Regulus too, were two other Sin Archbishops who had acted before the broadcast. Other than Capella, who at that moment was attacking the City Hall, the likelihood that those Sin Archbishops would have been doing something else in their free time in Pristella was high—

Subaru: “Wait, Otto.”

Otto: “…”

Subaru’s tone of voice had lowered, and Otto’s gaze turned grim. That worried attitude of his confirmed the thoughts appearing in Subaru’s imagination.

Sirius and Regulus were both encountering Subaru at the time, and so, they could not have been there. Capella too would have been participating in the attack on the City Hall. Then, the Sin Archbishop that had appeared before Otto could only be one.

Subaru: “The one you met by chance, could it be the Sin Archbishop of Gluttony?”

Otto: “…Yes. That was his claim. There was no reason for him to lie, so I think it is the truth. The Sin Archbishop who appeared at the plaza, introducing himself as Gluttony, looked to be a child.”

Otto’s testimony matched up with what Subaru had seen of Roy Alphard.

The selection standard for Sin Archbishops, it was not that he wanted to know anything about that, but Gluttony was at least outwardly a child—a rag-draped, dirty looking child at that. In both words and attitude, he seemed like a he was just kid.

Otto: “At first, unsure if it was an abandoned child, someone called them while drawing closer. Since he was guarding the Muse Company, I think it was one of the White Dragon’s Scales. That person was the first to succumb to Gluttony. I became unable to move. Literally.”

Subaru: “…”

Otto: “Just like that, a person was simply done in. It seems so surreal, but there’s no choice but to believe. Immediately, more of the White Dragon’s Scales all moved to surround him, but it did not end well.”

With his face going pale, Otto quietly spoke of that wretched spectacle.

Gluttony, as if he were performing a casual dance, seemed to have cut down the mercenaries. What was even scarier was, the keen nose of Gluttony—it was a sense of smell which never lost track of his prey.

Otto: “The situation was such that the people on the street tried to run for their lives. However, that guy did not allow that. What he did, I do not know in all honesty. But even those far away from him were caught up in Gluttony’s rampage. The same happened to those inside buildings.”

Subaru: “What was he after?”

After asking that absentmindedly, Subaru realized it was a meaningless question. The acts of the Witch Cult were not consistent with the nature of their goals. And in fact, Otto shook his head, signaling he did not have the answer to Subaru's question.

Otto: "Well, what could it have been… But anyway, it became a dire situation. Even if I tried to flee from that place, I could have been caught up in his attack the moment I showed my back. It was a complete dead end… If it weren't for Kiritaka-san, I doubt I would have made it here as well."

Subaru: "Kiritaka, how did he do that?"

Otto: "To begin with, it seems he must be a careful person. In the office of the Muse Company's president, there's a concealed passage in the building connected to an underground waterway. I escaped using a small boat there. While running away, I saw Kiritaka-san's back being cut open."

Subaru: "…"

Otto: "From the Third Street, I ran away. After that, the Witch Cult broadcast happened and it became impossible to walk around in the city carelessly. Nevertheless, I cautiously moved around the area. That's when I finally came across the scene from earlier."

In other words, by "the scene", he meant the one where he found Reinhard, whose movement had been impeded. That was where his story ended, and at the same moment Subaru understood that Otto had gone through hardships, and had again managed to survive.

But what he was concerned about in his story was—

Subaru: "Why did Kiritaka do that? From what you've told us, he even sacrificed himself to aid in Otto's escape. That was how it sounded like to me."

Otto: "…Yes, indeed. Kiritaka-san, by sacrificing himself, let me escape. In fact, right at the end, he was slashed because he pushed me to the floor and covered me with his body."

Subaru: "Why go so far…"

Inside Subaru, his mental picture of Kiritaka was nearly non-existent. Even the slight image he had was fixed on that scene with his face going red, screaming, throwing a spellstone while throwing a tantrum. Of course, he had not assumed that was all there was to that man.

But to sacrifice his body trying to save a stranger… He had not looked like a man with that level of fortitude.

Otto: “Since I was a customer invited to his shop, he might have held something like a trader’s pride. But definitely, it would seem he had a better reason for himself as well. One a little easier to understand.”

Subaru: “Easier to understand, you say?”

Otto: “Have you not realized? It’s Natsuki-san.”

To the confused Subaru, Otto firmly asserted his reply.

With the abrupt appearance of his name, Subaru was shaken. At Subaru’s reaction, Otto closed his eyes for nary a moment.

Otto: “Witnessing the existence known as a Sin Archbishop cutting down his own subordinates, Kiritaka-san must have felt like there was something he had to do about it. He must have held onto some sense of duty, I think. Then the one that became his hope was you, Natsuki-san.”

Subaru: “…”

Otto: “After the happenings of the previous day, Kiritaka-san already knew about Natsuki-san remaining here. And definitely about your achievement of vanquishing Sloth as well. If so, then naturally that would lead to hope. Putting my escape as his top priority must have been because he expected me to join with Natsuki-san.”

Otto’s explanation fit perfectly, and it slammed into Subaru’s chest with a thud. But that was nevertheless an unreasonable story.

Deep down inside, he knew. To go on, to carry that, it was true, he had decided that already. But then again… Was everyone expecting that from Subaru?

That small, hopeless, and useless person, were they really trusting the fate of the city to a bastard like that?

Otto: “Natsuki-san, please do not misunderstand.”

Unknowingly forming a cynical smile, Subaru was pulled back by a voice. Otto looked straight into Subaru’s eyes. He spoke to that stiffening Subaru’s expression while shrugging,

Otto: “Kiritaka-san had thought of various things regarding his role and responsibility to the city. I understand that Natsuki-san too is hesitating about bearing the fate of the city. But, definitely, what Kiritaka-san entrusted Natsuki-san with is a slightly simpler matter.”

Subaru: “…What?”

Otto: “It is obvious. Somewhere in this city is the woman Kiritaka-san loves. Before wishing for the safety of the city, what he expected most from Natsuki-san was for his loved one to be safe.”

Subaru: “…”

Otto: “That was what he told me when he pushed me onto the floor.”

In short, Otto wanted to tell Subaru that he struggled too much. Those words, spoken to Subaru who felt as if he were burdened with the fate of the city, trembling under that immense weight, unexpectedly pierced deep into his conceited heart.

His face growing hot, Subaru felt ashamed of himself.

What about this city’s fate, what about all these hopes and expectations, how ridiculously stupid.

All Subaru had been considering was the city, which would find itself in disaster if it were not lifted up and saved. But what Subaru had to protect was not something described with that grandiose, superficial word, but the individuals that make up the city. One life, and many other “one lives”.

And each of those lives in turn had others precious to them, and it was just a matter of saving those connections.

Otto: “To think of it not as bearing a single large entity, but instead as lifting many small parts of the whole on your back, does that ease your feelings a bit?”

Subaru: “Wow. It’s a different way to think, but it actually feels right.”

Otto’s assistant power was just so high that Subaru really could not think how things would be without him.

Subaru’s face, which had been gazing downwards, looked up, and, at that result, Otto seemed satisfied.

Anastasia: “What’s that, ain’t it a nice relationship? Lookin’ at it even makes me a lil’ jealous.”

Sensing a pause in their chat, Anastasia threw out a tease. Subaru and Otto, who had been sitting down while talking nearly face-to-face, reflected on her quip.

And then gazing again at all of them, Anastasia tilted her head.

Anastasia: “Even sayin’ so, based on what ya said… The Muse Company’s finished…”

Otto: “The truth is that we cannot know for sure. I only witnessed the events up to Kiritaka-san being slashed, but whether that wound was life-threatening…”

Julius: “Is thinking about Gluttony’s motives truly a waste of time? To me, no matter what, the idea that he caused that disturbance for no reason is unthinkable.”

The one who interjected was Julius, making a disgusted face. That assertive tone of voice stuck in one’s mind.

Subaru: “Don’t just get weird like that. Is there any reason you think that?”

Julius: “…No, I cannot claim that there is some clear basis for it. It is merely my impression from crossing swords with him at the City Hall. I do not believe we should write him off as merely a simple hedonist.”

Subaru was also in agreement. He was not simply a hedonist; he was a malicious hedonist. But that impression was an answer different from what Julius seemed to expect.

Subaru: “According to the broadcast, Gluttony’s request was an Artificial Spirit, correct? Maybe there’s a chance he had gone to find it?”

Reinhard: “It is indeed a possibility. However, there is a problem even before that. Should we not suspect whether the being known as an Artificial Spirit even exists? Is there really such an existence in the first place?”

Subaru mentioned a possible motive that came to mind, and Reinhard joined in with an argument of his own. His question would be the question many others who had heard the broadcast’s demands must have had as well.

Of those present here, only Subaru and Anastasia knew the answer. Without meaning to, Subaru peeked at Anastasia’s face, but her expression was unchanged, as expected of her experience. She had no intention of revealing it, is that what she was saying?

Otto: “—Sorry, just one thing.”

In front of Subaru, who was wavering in his judgement, Otto was again requesting attention.

That guy, with a touch of anxiety held in his face, let out a sigh mixed with resignation. And,

Otto: “I also do not know anything regarding the matter of the Artificial Spirit. But regarding another request, the Book of Wisdom demanded by Wrath…”

Cutting off his words there, after a moment of hesitation Otto spoke,

Otto: “I apologize—The one who brought it to the city was me.”

Chapter 44:
Nothing Left Unsaid

Otto raised his hand and dropped that bombshell, plunging everyone in the room into a state of shock.

The unverified existence of the “Book of Wisdom” was just confirmed, not by anyone else but by one of their own. It was only natural that they’d be shocked—with Subaru being the most shocked of them all.

Subaru: “Wh-Why would you have the Book of Wisdom?”

Otto: “Before you misunderstand, let me explain. I was indeed the one who brought the so-called Book of Wisdom into the city, but the book isn’t mine. I was pretty shocked when I heard the Witch Cult’s request as well.”

Anastasia: “So-called”? That’s a curious way to put it. What do you mean?”

As Otto’s answered the shaken Subaru, Anastasia picked up on that descriptor and asked. At that, Otto looked around at the others, and,

Otto: “You guys all know about the Book of Wisdom, right? Simply put, it’s like the Gospels… those suspicious-looking books of prophecy that the Witch Cultists have… except it seems to be the original. I heard that the difference in accuracy is huge.”

Anastasia: “The Gospel’s original…? It might be a stretch, but that reminds me of the prophecies of the Dragon Annal Stone. Though of course, their credibility, reputation, and standpoints are nowhere near the same.”

Otto: “I’ve never seen the Dragon Annal Stone and the Gospel’s prophecies in action so I can’t say anything about their reliability… and the same goes for the Book of Wisdom, I’m afraid. By the time I got my hands on it, the book was already nothing more than mostly-burned remains.”

Subaru: “Burned remains…”

Otto’s description matched the fates of both volumes of the Book of Wisdom in Subaru’s mind.

One belonged to Beatrice, and was lost in the flames of the burning Forbidden Library. The other belonged to Roswaal, and, according to Ram, was lost in the burning Sanctuary.

It was hard to say how much of its creator, Echidna’s testimony could be trusted, but if her words were to be believed—then both volumes should have been burned.

In that case, what Otto obtained must be its charred remains.

Anastasia: “I see. I think I know why Otto-kun brought the book into Priestella now. It’s to seek the help of Restoration Master Dartz, isn’t it?”

Otto: “…That’s correct.”

With that simple reply, Otto nodded to Anastasia’s conclusion. Though both Julius and Reinhard appeared to accept this with an air of understanding, Subaru seemed confused by the term he had never heard before.

Subaru: “Hey don’t all suddenly go “Ahh” and leave me out of the loop here. What’s a Restoration Master?”

Anastasia: “Just as the name implies, they are Light Magic specialists who can restore objects to their original forms. Dartz, who lives in this city, is quite a famous member of their circle. Even books that are more than half damaged can be restored with pretty good results, if given enough time.”

Otto: “I managed to make contact with Master Dartz and give him the remains of the Book of Wisdom. So the book should be in his workshop at the moment.”

With Otto’s testimony, the Book of Wisdom’s whereabouts has finally been revealed.

Garfiel: “But then, when did Otto-bro meet that guy?”

Otto: “Yesterday, after the negotiations with Muse Company fell apart. Once everyone went their separate ways, I paid a visit to Master Dartz. We had a chat in private, and he seemed pretty enthusiastic about taking on the job…”

Subaru could just imagine Otto going pale in the face when he heard “Book of Wisdom” come up during the upheavals today.

That explains how the burned Book of Wisdom survived and why it was brought to this city, but Otto’s motives were still unknown. Just why would he want to restore the Book of Wisdom?

Honestly, Subaru had no good impressions for the Book of Wisdom.

It was an ominous book not only associated with its creator, Echidna, but with the Gospels in the hands of the Witch Cult. It was the reason Beatrice was bound in the Forbidden Library for four hundred years, and the reason Roswaal’s plots wrought violence upon the Sanctuary.

The truth is, Subaru was relieved when he heard that the books were destroyed.

Otto: “I won’t go into the details of how I acquired it or why it’s here to be restored. I only intended to clarify the Book of Wisdom’s existence and its current location. Anything beyond that is an internal matter within our faction.”

Julius: “But now we have the Witch Cult listing the Book of Wisdom as one of their demands. Whose responsibility do you think that is?”

Otto: “I don’t think anything the Witch Cult does can be blamed on anyone other than the Witch Cult. But if you insist on it, I’ll have to make some unfriendly remarks of my own.”

Otto stood his ground in front of Julius’ protests. And, seeing Otto turn his gaze to Anastasia, Julius quickly shook his head.

Julius: “My apologies. I said something useless just now. Naturally, I have no intention of laying the blame on you. The Witch Cult’s crimes will be properly repaid when we exact punishment upon them.”

Otto: “Agreed.”

Otto nodded to Julius’ determined words while stealing a glance at Subaru. But, seeing that secret gaze, Subaru couldn’t say a word.

What was Otto thinking? Even if Subaru had no intention of suspecting him, he still had no idea what he was up to. Seeing Subaru like this, Otto quietly moved his lips,

{Otto: “Let’s talk later}

The message got through.

He’ll explain everything, then. In that case, they better put the matter on hold for now.

Reinhard: “Now that the Book of Wisdom’s existence has been confirmed, we can’t be so sure that the part about Artificial Spirits is just delusional ramblings.”

With that settled, Reinhard started off with the new topic.

Though it was only going with the flow of things, now that Otto has already revealed something potentially disadvantageous to himself, there was no reason for Subaru to continue withholding his.

Subaru: “Anastasia-san.”

Anastasia: “I know I know. Well, this won’t be easy.”

Seeing Subaru seeking her consent, Anastasia took off the scarf around her neck. She spread it out on the table, while everyone else tilted their heads at her determined expression.

But, what she did next turned all their tilted heads straight.

Anastasia: “—No need to play possum anymore, Echidna. You can speak up now.”

Scarf-fox: “In my case, rather than “playing possum”, wouldn’t “playing fox” be more appropriate, Ana?”

“—!”

Following Anastasia’s call, the white fox scarf stretched out its limbs with a will of its own. Seeing this, the same expressions of shock washed over Julius and Ricardo’s faces.

It seems Anastasia had hidden Artificial Spirit Echidna’s existence even from the members of her own faction.

Ricardo: “Hey Miss… I dunno that thing. The hell is that thing…”

Anastasia: “Sorry for hidin’ it from you, Ricardo. Julius too. —This child would be the Artificial Spirit we’re talkin’ about. Her name’s Echidna, and she’s been my partner in crime for a long, long time.”

Scarf-fox: “Hey Ricardo. It’d be pretty awkward to introduce myself like we’ve just met when I’ve technically known you for ages. We can be all buddy-buddy just like usual if you want.”

Echidna was exceptionally friendly to a Ricardo who looked like he was looking at something creepy. And, as off-put as Ricardo was by the white fox’s attitude, Julius’ face looked even more shocked.

Faced with the secret his master had hidden from him, his pupils were wavering with a rare and unconcealable dismay,

Julius: “…then that means, Anastasia-sama is also a Spirits-Arts User?”

Anastasia: “Nnnn~ not exactly. There is no Spiritual Contract between me and Echidna. I just don’t have the knack for it. And also, unlike ordinary spirits, Echidna can’t fight at all.”

Scarf-fox: “That’s right, I’m as incompetent as it gets. I’m afraid I might even be the weakest spirit there is. So weak that even the Spirit-Knight couldn’t sense my presence.”

Julius: “Is that, so… no, but then…”

Julius’ suspicions were dismissed by Anastasia and Echidna in turn. But, rather than being assured, he turned his gaze toward Subaru, who was standing at the sidelines.

There was a certain sharpness in the yellow gaze he directed at Subaru.

Julius: “Why does Subaru look like he already knows? When I… as your Knight… didn’t know, how could he…”

Anastasia: “It’s not like that. It’s…”

Subaru: “It’s because she’s an Artificial Spirit, just like my partner, Beatrice. After we heard the Witch Cult’s demands, Anastasia-san explained it to me. …So I only found out really recently, not much different from you.”

Julius: “She’s an Artificial Spirit…? Anastasia-sama, is this true?”

Cutting Anastasia off, Subaru explained to the stupefied Julius. Seeing Anastasia nod to his question, Julius muttered “Is that so…” and briefly closed his eyes as if to take it all in before exhaling a deep sigh.

Julius: “I’m sorry I interrupted you. Please forgive me for any displeasure I might have caused you, Anastasia-sama. I am deeply ashamed.”

Anastasia: “I’ve no right to chastise you when I’ve been keepin’ it secret all this time. I should be askin’ your forgiveness instead.”

Julius gave Subaru a nod and apologized to Anastasia. But, seeing Julius’ apology from the side, Ricardo grabbed Echidna off of the table.

Ricardo: “Still, that’s really mean, Miss! How long have we known each other? Why’d ya keep somethin’ like that from me? I’m kinda hurt! Is that all we are to each other?”

Scarf-fox: “I’d appreciate if you don’t handle me so roughly. Even in this form, I'm still quite finicky about my hair. And we wouldn't want to damage Ana's adorable appearance, now would we?"

Ricardo: "Pretty glib-tongued, ain't ya. Ugh, nevermind. I'll let it go this time."

After pulling and squishing it to his heart's content, Ricardo seemed satisfied and let the white fox go. Landing on the table, the white fox quickly scuttled over to Anastasia, wrapped around her neck, and became inanimate once more.

Having resided there for long, it was impressive how quickly it could return to its lifeless state.

Anastasia: "And so, the Artificial Spirits exist as well. …That said, just like Otto-kun's Book of Wisdom, I've no intention of handing this child over to the Witch Cult."

Subaru: "Sorry for keeping it secret. But, it's the same with me. Beako is my partner. I won't even let her hold hands with those lunatics."

Anastasia and Subaru both asserted their decision to refuse the Witch Cult's demands.

Hearing this, Reinhard nodded, and,

Reinhard: "I know. Of course. We cannot accept a single one of their demands. Although, perhaps the one about wedding their bride could be overlooked."

Subaru: "Absolutely not! Because the bride those assholes are talking about is Emilia!"

Otto: "Pff?! Emilia-sama's been taken?! And here I was wondering why I haven't seen her around, so she's in trouble?! Couldn't you have brought it up sooner?!"

Reinhard widened his eyes, and the shocking news sent Otto's eyes spinning. Subaru clenched his teeth in front of those two's reactions and continued with "Sorry…"

Subaru: “It was all my fault, I watched her get taken away. But, since they’re talking about a wedding, they shouldn’t have done anything to hurt her. So we have to go over there, kill them, and bring her back. Absolutely, absolutely…”

Reinhard: “—Yes, we will. We absolutely cannot allow this.”

Just the thought of Regulus sent rage boiling within Subaru’s mind, and, in support of that indignation, Reinhard burnished his intent to fight.

It was an aura so dependable that it was terrifying. Without a doubt, his presence was tremendously reassuring.

And, at this thought, Subaru turned his gaze to the corner of the room—toward the man who had stayed out of the conversation thus far.

Sitting there, leaning against the wall, his expression was hidden behind his helmet.

Subaru: “Hey, Al. You should join the conversation too. You haven’t said a word since the end of the speech. Our most lethal weapon got held up all because of that guy you brought. You better do something to make up for that, you know.”

Walking over, Subaru called to the downcast Al.

And, sighing at the lack of a reaction, Subaru brought up Reinhard’s father—Heinkel.

Heinkel had taken Felt hostage and effectively pinned Reinhard in place.

This clear-cut betrayal by turning a weapon on a Royal Selection candidate was not only a crime of lese-majesty, but fell nothing short of treason. Normally, there’s no way an offender could escape the death sentence after committing such a heinous crime, but just how will Reinhard handle this?

At least, Subaru couldn’t glean it from the side of Reinhard’s face.

Al: “—I’m sorry, but I’m out.”

Subaru: “…hah?”

Perhaps distracted with his thoughts on Reinhard, Subaru didn’t react until Al had already stood up. Taking his back off of the wall, Al looked like he was about to walk right past Subaru. Realizing this, Subaru quickly grabbed Al’s shoulder, turning him around.

Subaru: “W-Wait! You’re out? What’re you talking about? We need every fighter we can get right now, and you want to leave us? What’re you, crazy?”

Al: “Crazy or whatever, you’d be crazy to count me as a fighter to begin with. Any random guy you pull from the shelters who’s been in a fight’ll be better than me. So it doesn’t matter if I go.”

Subaru: “The hell is that! Don’t give me that moody bullshit! What’s going on all of a sudden? If you got something to say, say it!”

Al: “—You’re the only person I don’t wanna hear that from, bro.”

Shaking off Subaru’s arm, Al’s penetrating glare pierced into Subaru from inside his helmet.

That indiscernible gaze and uncharacteristic tone sent a chill crawling up Subaru’s back.

It was unlike hostility or murderous intent, but a fiery emotion all the same.

Subaru felt as if he had seen that inexplicable emotion from somewhere before, but he couldn’t remember where or what it was.

And he went without understanding as they continued their standoff, when—

???: “My inspiration is flashing! Listen if you please: “—Your gaze makes heat swell in my chest∼.”

Subaru: “Shut up!!”

???: “Pyiichi?!”

Subaru reflexively lashed back at the happy-go-lucky voice that came out of nowhere. The target jumped at that shout and tumbled flamboyantly over the table behind her.

Rolling around, moaning and wailing, it was a girl with auburn skin—

Subaru: “You’re… Lilianna?!”

Lilianna: “Uugyaouu! My elbow! My knee! Every bone that can be called a bone in my body is shattered! All six of my ribs are broken! There’s no mistake about it!”

The one energetically rolling on the floor in front of Subaru was the Bard, Lilianna.

Seeing her the same as ever, Subaru didn’t even bother pointing out that humans had more than six ribs but only patted his chest in relief.

Subaru: “I was pretty worried after we got separated, but I’m glad to see you safe. That’s a relief.”

Lilianna: “Safe?! Can’t you see I’m on the verge of death here?! How can you pat your chest in relief in front of a damsel in distress, what kind of sick humor is that?! My inspiration is flashing! Listen if you please: “—Fingers! Ears! And eyes~!”

Subaru: “You’re still pretty lively, aren’t you?”

Sitting up cross-legged on the floor, she strummed her Lullyleigh, suddenly a picture of health. Although the abruptness of her recovery was rather unsettling, Subaru was just glad that she was alright.

Subaru: “But, how did you get to City Hall? It must’ve been dangerous wandering around outside…”

????: “Naturally, isn’t that for me to decide? Commoner.”

Subaru: “Gh.”

Before he could ask Lilianna how she got here safely, an arrogant voice answered the question in her place.

With the ringing of high-heeled footsteps, a woman in resplendent red stepped into the meeting room. Adorned in rouge from head to toe, she swept her blood-red eyes across the room.

Priscilla: “Looks like all the actors are gathered. It was good of you rabble to have gotten ready for the star to arrive. Be sure to keep it up in the future.”

Smiling in a good mood holding a spread fan over her lips—it was Priscilla.

Her sudden entrance surprised everyone including Subaru, but the first to react was none other than her servant, Al.

Al: “P-Princess-san! So you’re alright… I was worried when I couldn’t find you.”

Priscilla: “Mm, is that Al? What is the meaning of you dallying with these peasants instead of serving me? Is it not your duty to look upon my figure, listen to my voice, inhale my scent, and obey my commands? And Schult, making me have to look for him myself, there should be a limit to your insolence.”

?????: “P-Please forgive me, Priscilla-sama…”

While Priscilla mercilessly berated her worried servant, a little boy in butler’s uniform peeked out his head from behind her, timidly clinging to her dress. It seems that Priscilla not only saved Lilianna but her butler as well while strutting around a city overrun by the Witch Cult.

Subaru: “What kind of crazy audacity is that…”

Subaru spilled a sigh at the fine line between exceeding bravery and recklessness. Hearing this, Priscilla turned her glare to Subaru. Snapping close her fan, she briskly walked over to him, and, Priscilla: “You there, don’t move.”

Subaru: “—hk.”

With a swoosh of wind, she held the tip of her fan to Subaru’s throat.

As usual, moving with inconceivable speed, she reached him before his eyes could even register her motion. But, since Reinhard did not intervene, Subaru figured he was in no actual danger.

Subaru: “What’re you doing? We’re having an important conversation here, we don’t have time for…”

Priscilla: “Good. —So that clumsy broadcast earlier was your voice, then?”

Subaru: “…Yeah, what about it?”

As pathetic as it was to rely on Reinhard’s lack of movement as his indicator, Subaru chose to huff back at the huffing Priscilla. At that response, she narrowed her eyes,

Priscilla: “Decidedly, I will not tolerate anyone getting more attention than myself. So, I’ll prove how obviously superior I am to the likes of you.”

Subaru: “Huh? Ow?!”

Flicking up the fan at Subaru’s neck, it snapped against his chin so hard that tears came pouring out his eyes. With this, Priscilla left him, and imperiously sat herself down in one of the seats at the round table.

Priscilla: “Such a worthless chair. I can tell how cheap it is just by sitting on it.”

Making that scalding remark about the quality of the furniture, she swept her gaze across the faces seated at the table. Then, opening her red-painted lips, a splendidly gruesome smile rose on her face.

Priscilla: “Come now, I will allow you to tell me everything about the current situation. Be good slaves and fulfill your responsibilities to your utmost. As reward, I will lend you my help. Remember to be grateful.”

Al: “Wait, Princess-san! Now that we’ve found each other, there’s no reason to stay here, right? We should get out of this dangerous place and…”

Priscilla: “Are you suggesting I run away, Al? If so, then you are gravely mistaken.”

Seeing Priscilla reclining into her seat as if intending to participate in the conference, Al hurriedly protested. But Priscilla shot back a glare, instantly freezing Al inside his metal helmet.

Priscilla: “Are you listening? I am the one who decided to stay in this city. And I will be the one to decide whether to leave it. I do not accept instructions from anyone. Besides, you want me to turn my back on these rabid fools and shamelessly run away? Who do you take me for?”

Al: “…”

Priscilla: “Everything in this world works in my favor. So why should I leave and allow this obnoxious mess to continue? If you wish to call yourself my servant, then know this, Al. I am favored by divine providence, and thus, my actions are divine providence.”

Priscilla’s will could not be swayed.

Everyone present, most of all Al, knew this. Seeing Al slump his single shoulder, the young butler—Schult, quietly snuggled against him. And, wryly smiling at his consoling gesture, Al made up his mind as well.

Subaru: “Otto, you have a minute?”

Otto: “Yeah, let’s go.”

As the round table began briefing Priscilla on the current situation, Subaru whispered to Otto. Apparently having anticipated this, Otto complied without a hint of surprise.

Subaru: “Garfiel, let me know when they’re done.”

Leaving this instruction behind, Subaru left the meeting room with Otto.

And as soon as they were outside, they turned and faced each other in the hallway. Meeting Subaru's gaze, there was no confusion in Otto eyes. He knew exactly what they needed to talk about.

Subaru: "Why the hell're you trying to restore the Book of Wisdom? No, before that, when did you pick up its remnants?"

Otto: "It was a year ago, after we've settled the problems in the Sanctuary. After Emilia-sama's snow disappeared, I was wandering around the premises when I… well, it wasn't exactly by chance. I heard what happened from Ram-san, so I was actively looking for its burned remnants as well."

Subaru: "So then, the one you found was Roswaal's Book of Wisdom?"

Otto: "Yes. I was unusually lucky since that happened to be the place I wanted to check out."

"Unusually lucky" must be a jab at how usually unlucky he was. Although Otto was wryly smiling, Subaru was in no mood to share that sentiment.

Because Otto's reasons for doing this was still a knot inside Subaru's chest.

Otto: "Tell me honestly, Natsuki-san, what do you think of Margrave Mathers?"

Subaru: "Roswaal?"

As Subaru sank into silence, Otto posed him this question. It sounded both somewhat relevant to the topic at hand, and yet not relevant at all. For a moment, Subaru pondered on the question,

Subaru: "Well… I think we definitely can't let down our guard about that guy. Not after everything that happened a year ago. But, since that guy's goals are clear now, and assuming they haven't changed, I don't see him as an immediate threat. In fact, now that we understand each other, I kinda feel like an accomplice."

Otto: "I don't trust Margrave Mathers at all."

Otto declared, pointing out how naive Subaru's thinking was.

Hearing this, Subaru widened his eyes at the sharpness of that statement.

Otto: "You mentioned what happened a year ago. Yes, that's true. But he has been plotting long before what happened in the Sanctuary. You and Emilia-sama seem to be awfully forgiving about that."

Subaru: "…It's not that we forgave him. Everything that guy does makes me want to scream "What the hell", and I'm still super pissed off. But, the fact is, we need that guy's help. So there's not much we can do, and Emilia has the same considerations."

Otto: "That's called being forgiving. …Though I'm not saying that's a bad thing."

Otto shot an impatient gaze at Subaru, conveying his sense of urgency.

In other words, Otto was telling him that he wasn't nearly wary enough. Of course, Subaru knew that it was something he had to keep eye on, but,

Otto: "It's fine. The way you're approaching it is fine. There's no need to change that. Since I'll be seeing to the necessary precautions."

Subaru: "Precautions?"

Otto: "As the Internal Minister, I've had plenty of opportunities to interact with Margrave Mathers. From what I've seen over the past year, I didn't notice any signs of scheming or strange behaviors. But, that's not to say he couldn't have already laid his plans before that. He could easily have put some sort of delayed-activation in place."

Subaru: "…"

Subaru closed his mouth. Otto's wariness and concerns got through.

He had every reason to distrust Roswaal. It was just the natural consequence of that man's actions, be it good or bad. Though in this case, mostly bad.

Otto: "If he follows the Book of Wisdom's every word and believes that it foretells the future, then one look inside the book will let us know everything that he is planning. That way we can take the necessary measures to guard against any betrayals in the future."

Subaru: "You mean, you want to restore that book… because you don't trust Roswaal?"

Otto: "…Quite the opposite. It's precisely because I don't want to distrust my allies that I want to make sure. At least, I want to know for sure that nothing unfortunate is going to happen. So I kept the Book of Wisdom in hopes of restoring it. …I didn't consult you before doing this, sorry about that."

With this apology, Otto lowered his head.

But, in front of him, Subaru couldn't say a word. He did not feel like he had the right.

Otto's concerns and the actions he took to resolve them—

They were all things that Subaru and Emilia should have noticed. In fact, the pains he took to do this were entirely for Subaru and Emilia's sake.

Now that he realized how Otto had been silently helping him, Subaru felt at once ashamed, remorseful, and incredulous that he hadn't realized this earlier.

And why would Otto do this for him? Was it just because they are friends?

Otto: "I won't tell you why, though. It's pretty boring anyway."

As if having read Subaru's thoughts, Otto replied.

Being beaten to the punch by the smiling Otto, Subaru breathed a deep sigh.

Subaru: "Somehow, it's like you're always bailing me out, you know."

Otto: "That may be, but I think you're good just the way you were when you made that broadcast, Natsuki-san."

Otto scratched his head, while Subaru clicked his tongue and dropped his shoulders, a bit embarrassed by his considerations.

Subaru: "I understand. I'm on board about the Book of Wisdom. But the problem is, those assholes are still looking for it. So what do we actually do?"

Otto: "Regardless of whether it's successfully restored or not, I think we better get it back. There's a great chance that Master Dartz could get hurt, and that'd be the last thing I want."

Subaru: "But we're going to simultaneously attack all four Control Towers. We don't have any forces to spare for that."

Otto: "I may be a non-combatant, but I can more than handle myself if I travel by the waterways. I may not look like it, but duping animals like water dragons is one of my top strong suits, you know."

Putting his hand beside his mouth, Otto must be boasting of his Divine Protection of Anima Whispering.

In fact, when it comes to running away, Otto's Divine Protection would actually be quite handy. Besides, the enemy's main forces were concentrated at the Control Towers. Assuming they didn't bring any extra Witch Cultist lackeys, Otto shouldn't be in too much danger.

Otto: "Rather than worry about me, you should be thinking about the assault-teams. You have to save Emilia-sama, after all. That's quite the responsibility."

Subaru: “Understood. I’ll take that Greedy asshole’s head myself.”

That white-haired monster who took Emilia flashed across his mind.

That, and the fact that he was a Sin Archbishop, meant that he was an enemy that must be defeated.

Otto: “Shall we head back? They must be about done with the debriefing.”

Seeing the invigorated Subaru, Otto turned his head to the meeting room. But, just as Subaru nodded and was about head inside with him,

??????: “Subaru-dono.”

He was stopped by a call from the stairway.

There was no mistaking who that voice belonged to. The person upstairs, watching him with his stern blue pupils—was Wilhelm.

Subaru: “Otto, you go on ahead.”

Otto: “Alright. We’ll continue this later.”

Otto went back into the meeting room while Subaru walked up the stairs to meet Wilhelm, waiting on the upper level.

Then, as soon as they were at the same height, Wilhelm lightly bowed his eyes.

Wilhelm: “Sorry I could not join the conference. I apologize for the inconvenience.”

Subaru: “With the situation as it is, no one would think to blame you, Wilhelm-san. So, um… how is Crush-san?”

He heard she wasn’t well. Or, not just unwell, but in quite a terrible state. As a woman, she probably wouldn’t want anyone else to see her like that, either.

Thinking back on the wretched state of his leg, he could imagine what kind of damage Crusch must have sustained. And that thought alone made him regret imagining it.

To Subaru query, Wilhelm softly cast down his eyes.

Wilhelm: “Crusch-sama has asked to speak to you, Subaru-dono. May I trouble you to come with me?”

Subaru: “Crusch-san asked for me? No, of course I’ll come, but… is that really alright?”

Wilhelm: “It is her sincere wish. Though Ferris will not be happy about it.”

Subaru: “…I guess not.”

Ferris would probably have some bitter words to say to Subaru.

After all, the only two who faced off against Capella on the top floor of City Hall were Subaru and Crusch, and Subaru alone should have protected her.

Wilhelm: “If Ferris says something disrespectful, please do not mind him. And please forgive him, if possible. Deep down, he does understand. It’s just that he is facing emotions that he could not process.”

Subaru: “Watching the person most important to him suffer… I can understand why he’d want to curse the people around him, if only just to take his mind off of the one he’s worrying about.”

If venting his rage could ease some of his pain, then who could blame him?

And so Subaru was prepared to take on some of his abuse as well.

Wilhelm: “This way.”

Without remarking on Subaru’s reply, Wilhelm led Subaru towards the place where Crusch would be waiting. Tick, tack, the regular rhythm of their footsteps echoed through the hallway.

And on the way,

Wilhelm: “Subaru-dono, there is something else I need to tell you.”

Subaru: “What is it? Is it something other than Crusch-san…?”

Wilhelm: “It’s about the two swordsmen accompanying the Sin Archbishops.”

Unwittingly, he stopped his breath.

It should have been so obvious, how did he let it slip his mind? Mimi’s unsealable wound, inflicted by the “Divine Protection of the Death-God”.

The true identities of those super-class swordsman should—

Wilhelm: “One of them is “Eight Armed” Kurgan. A formidable swordsman who had been a general of the Vollachian Empire, a man who should have died ten years ago.”

Subaru: “A man who… should have died? Uhm, Wilhelm-san…”

Wilhelm: “And the other…”

Wilhelm cut Subaru off just before he could ask his question.

He stopped his steps, and Subaru followed suit. Then, Wilhelm turned his back, and sank into a momentary silence. Subaru took a step forward to peek at the side of Wilhelm’s face—but instantly regretted it.

He should not have seen it.

Wilhelm: “—The other, is the Previous-Generation Sword Saint, Theresia Van Astrea. My wife… who should have died in battle against the White Whale fifteen years ago.”

Subaru: “…”

The fact that he could have kept his voice so steady must be a testament to the strength of his will.

But when Subaru saw the wrenching agony that twisted the side of Wilhelm's face, all that impression fell away.

Chewing his lips, with rage and grief interwoven within his eyes, a crazed passion contorted his wrinkled face beyond recognition—one look at that expression, and all his emotions were clear as day.

Subaru: "Your wife… and a general of the Empire? Unless… they're actually still alive…?"

Wilhelm: "If that's… no, that isn't possible. Whether it's my wife or Kurgan, both of them are dead. That cannot be overturned. The dead are still dead, but being defiled."

Subaru: "If they're still dead, then… it's something like Necromancy?"

Necromancy—magic that manipulates the dead, is quite common in fictional universes. Of course, as far as fiction is concerned, magic that can return the dead to life is quite common as well. Although, nothing so convenient exists in this world.

This was something Subaru had painfully come to understand in the year-and-several-months he had spent here.

Wilhelm: "Magic that manipulate the dead are forbidden. Though I do know of someone who once used it. In the Demi-Human Wars—the civil war in Lugunica between Humans and Demi-Humans decades ago, she was one of the three enemies of the Kingdom fighting on the Demi-Humans' side."

Subaru: "Three enemies of the Kingdom…?"

Wilhelm: "The Demi-Human Hero, Libre Fermi. The Great Strategist, Valga Cromwell. And…"

After pausing for a moment,

Wilhelm: "The Witch, Sphinx. The abominable existence who, without batting an eye, ruthlessly spilled the blood of Human and Demi-Human alike. The only Witch besides Satella whose name remains in the History of the Kingdom."

Chapter 45:
An Inescapable Curse

As Wilhelm spoke the name of a Witch he had never heard of before, Subaru shuddered.

Aside from Satella, the only Witches Subaru knew of were the six Witches of Sin he had met in Echidna's tomb. The fact that Witches other than those somehow existed was devastating news.

Subaru: "Then, Wilhelm-san, if that Witch, Sphinx, is involved in this raid by the Witch Cult… Are you saying there's a Witch too, in addition to the Sin Archbishops?"

The main enemies numbered four Archbishops and two warriors. If that was the case, adding a Witch to their forces made the disparity in strength become a desperate matter.

However, Wilhelm raised a hand at Subaru's concerns.

Wilhelm: "Pardon me, my wording was unclear. The existence known as the Witch Sphinx perished in the Demi-Human War. There is no possibility that it might be participating in this assault."

Subaru: "The Witch is dead? There's no mistake? The impression I have of Witches is that they tend to fake being dead, and have lots of freedom even after really dying."

Satella, too, was like that, as whenever Subaru violated the taboo, it would draw her out. And in the castle of dreams, enjoying her afterlife, Echidna was the same.

Even hearing a Witch was dead was no guarantee at all.

Wilhelm: "What impression Subaru-dono has of Witches I am unaware. But Sphinx is only named a Witch, merely an existence given that title for convenience. The fact is that the Kingdom's military referred to it as such, but the concerned party never called itself the same."

Subaru: “Calling them a concerned party… Did Wilhelm-san ever meet them directly?”

Wilhelm: “Several times, during the civil war. The event that may have triggered the end of the Demi-Human War may even have been the beheading of Sphinx. Roswaal, Bordeaux, and my wife were all leading figures of that time.”

Subaru: “Roswaal?!”

An unexpected name popping up caused Subaru to open his eyes wide.

At that reaction from Subaru, Wilhelm slightly lowered his head for a moment and became immersed in thought.

Wilhelm: “I knew the Roswaal-dono of two generations ago. Although back then I was not very friendly… she took care of me.”

Subaru: “Two generations ago… Ah, that’s right. The name Roswaal is inherited from generation to generation.”

Wilhelm: “Unfortunately, that predecessor passed away soon after. I grew distant from them following that, and the current Margrave Mathers is only a passing acquaintance… But this is all superfluous talk.”

He was now lending an ear to tales of surprising relationships, but the original topic was definitely not about that. Subaru nodded his head, and then Wilhelm continued his tale with an “And so,”

Wilhelm: “Not Sphinx, but some being using a spell that acts similarly, is my thought. The method of controlling the dead was at the time called cases of Corpse Soldiers.”

Subaru: “Corpse Soldiers… That… Does it have any weaknesses?”

Wilhelm: “From what I know, the Corpse Soldier is limited to a technique for moving the body. It does not seem to be able to bring back the abilities possessed in life. It merely shames the dead while keeping the appearance. A reflection of the user’s nature.”

Subaru: “But, the Eight Arms, and… that.”

He was at a loss for words.

The one turned into a Corpse Soldier, whose very death was being profaned, was Wilhelm’s wife. Even if Wilhelm had already accepted it, Subaru was speaking of it with hesitation.

Wilhelm made a bitter face at Subaru’s reluctance, loosening his lips.

Wilhelm: “I am grateful for your concern. But, it is necessary—Yes, the skills of both my wife and Kurgan are close to their abilities in life. It exceeds the power a mere Corpse Soldier can pull out.”

Subaru: “Then, isn’t it possible that this is something different than a Corpse Soldier? If so, then your wife might not even have died…”

Wilhelm: “My wife is dead. Because my strength was lacking.”

The side hanging onto a fragile hope here was Subaru. Wilhelm’s clear voice cut down Subaru’s feeling with a single stroke.

And there were no words Subaru could say to that elder swordsman’s profile.

Wilhelm: “Even at the time, that which could not simply be judged as merely a Corpse Soldier did very rarely exist. Whether it was due to aptitude in the procedure, or another factor I am unaware of… We should perhaps believe that it may be the strength of those two.”

Subaru: “Is there a way to take them down?”

Wilhelm: “Thoroughly destroying the body, or cutting away the curse mark somewhere on the body. Then the Corpse Soldier will return to a simple corpse. It must be done this way.”

Wilhelm’s considerate voice could not easily be heard.

He was conscious of his calm, trying his best to focus on what he felt he had to do—His trembling voice, his clenched fist, his scrunched eyes, in that moment he was unable to hide anything.

Wilhelm: “I apologize for holding you this long. Crusch-sama cannot be made to wait any longer. Now, this way.”

Wilhelm bent his back and indicated the door of the division they had reached. On the innermost part of the fourth floor, was a room with a crumbled plate labeling it as a lounge.

Inside, Crusch, who had called Subaru, was waiting.

Passing Wilhelm’s side, Subaru headed for the door, the sound of footsteps echoing.

Definitely, the distance to the door felt awfully long. There was even the impression that the soles of his shoes stuck to the floor and interfered with Subaru’s progress.

The fact that this reluctance was his own weakness, Subaru was clearly aware of that.

Subaru: “—It’s me. Natsuki Subaru. Is… Crusch-san?”

He knocked, and called out with a voice so quiet he wondered if it reached the other side of the door. Like that, after a brief silence, taking no more than a moment, the other side slowly opened the door.

The face that appeared was Ferris’s. But his appearance had changed entirely.

Ferris: “Subaru-kyun…”

Red eyes puffed up from crying and disheveled brown hair. Covering his entire body in black stains was, not his, but someone else’s blood, his white skin splattered. He must not have had time to clean it. His cheek and neck were also smeared with fresh, sticky blood.

Witnessing such a miserable appearance, his breath inadvertently caught in his throat.

Subaru: “Crusch-san called me, I heard. So…”

Ferris: “Yeah. Inside, she’s on the bed… Definitely don’t do anything unnecessary, please.”

A firm voice, with some hatred intermingled near the end. However, that hate was not directed at Subaru. It could be said to be directed at everything. Hating everyone in the world, Ferris was now controlled by rage with nowhere to go.

Taking a deep breath, Subaru followed Ferris inside.

It was not a very spacious room for a lounge. Long tables and chairs were arranged in two rows, and further back, the small room was divided by a threshold. The bed was past it.

And on that shabby bed she was laid.

???: “Na… tsuki-sama?”

Crusch, fully conscious, recognized Subaru had entered and called him by name.

Reacting to her voice, Subaru’s throat felt like it had constricted. Readying himself, feigning calm, calling out assuring words—He was unable to even do something so simple…

Crusch: “My appearance is not presentable… My apologies…”

Subaru: “…No, that’s not, like that… Haaa. It’s not like that.”

Seeing Subaru’s tense atmosphere, Crusch apologized in a lethargic voice. Subaru, feeling flustered by her sorrowful attitude, raised his voice to mend his vague words from earlier.

—Having been drenched in Capella’s blood and clothed in its curse, Crusch was in a wretched state.

Her neck, the back of her hands and feet—over all exposed skin, dark-blackened veins were visible. It was not difficult to imagine that under the towels and blankets and clothes, the skin there would be afflicted with the same. These black blood vessels, which pulsed instead of circulating blood like regular blood vessels, gave off the appearance of a writhing serpent strangling Crusch's thin body.

That formerly white, unblemished skin of hers was now being violated horribly.

Of course, the damage was not limited to areas below the neck.

Crusch's dignified visage, reminiscent of a slender sword's beauty—its left half had received disfiguring stains. Compared to that, the right side of her face retained her beauty. That rather emphasized the contrast between the two sides, and made the unfairness of a noble person being defiled more apparent.

A patch had been placed to cover the left eye, the sight underneath difficult to imagine.

Subaru: "This is… The same curse left on me, the dragon's blood?"

If it was indeed the same, then nothing could be crueler.

Because he knew Crusch Karsten, there was no limit to Subaru's heartache.

He looked down at his own right leg. Like Crusch's skin, it also was mottled and wrapped with blackened veins. However, Subaru's leg, terrible sight notwithstanding, was otherwise unaffected. Neither pain nor feelings of pain were felt by him at all.

But Crusch was definitely different. Her breathing was labored, and whenever the dark veins pulsated, she sighed as if withstanding pain.

Subaru: "Ferris…"

How was it not cured, he wondered as he turned to gaze at the greatest healer in the Kingdom. However, Subaru's brief thought only served to hurt Ferris, who further grit his teeth in helplessness. He bit down on his lips, stabbing his own arms with his nails while bowing his head. Ferris understood his lack of power and regretted it more than anyone else in the room.

Knowing the relationship between the two, Subaru had no reason to doubt all possible methods beyond his imagination had been exhausted already.

Subaru: “Crusch-san… What do you need of me?”

Why, in such a painful situation, had she called out for him?

He did not think that there was something he could do. Maybe there was something she wished to say. To ask for revenge on Lust, who had done this to her. Perhaps even some resentful words would be directed towards Subaru.

Even if fed insults, even if curses were poured on, he would accept it all.

At Subaru’s question, Crusch opened her mouth, enduring the pain. Leaning in close to her lips, he paid his utmost careful attention, to make sure her faint breaths would not go unnoticed. And—

Crusch: “…Un-Unharmed… I am relieved.”

Subaru: “…”

Crusch: “I heard… that like me… you were cursed…”

Subaru felt a burden lift from her in the softness of her relieved sigh. At the same time, he understood the true feelings in her heart, and grew so angry at his own stupidity he wanted to die.

He had been thinking it would be easier to be criticized.

So he had doubted Crusch’s integrity, and had underestimated her noble heart. She had truly just been worried that Subaru had been afflicted with the same pain as herself.

Subaru: “Sor… I’m sorry… Crusch-san…”

Having suspected her feelings because it had resulted in her suffering, and being unable to suffer on her behalf, he squeezed out those mixed emotions in his voice.

Without realizing what he was doing, he stretched out his hand and grasped the hands Crusch had weakly laid over her stomach. The black blood vessels had no special texture even if touched. That the feel of skin with this ruined of an appearance did not change was even more pitiful. But,

Crusch: “Fuu…?”

Subaru: “Ugh?!”

The sudden sound of Crusch’s sigh, and the simultaneous pained noise from Subaru’s throat overlapped.

Agony as if he had grasped a hot iron stabbed into his whole body starting from his palm. In an instant, Subaru released Crusch’s hand and stared at the palm the sensation had come from.

That blackened erosion was spreading over it.

Subaru: “What the…?!”

Ferris: “Show me, Subaru-kyun!”

Grasping the groaning and hurt Subaru’s hand, Ferris inspected the erosion. The light of healing blanketed the spot, but there was no sign of either the pain or the affliction fading away. Instead—

Subaru: “Ferris… Crusch-san’s hand!”

Ferris: “Eh…?”

Subaru’s gaze was directed at Crusch in astonishment, and beckoned Ferris to direct his own the same direction. And those yellow eyes widened as well, witnessing the same occurrence as Subaru.

Subaru had grasped Crusch’s left hand—on that hand, though slightly, the blackened erosion had thinned. Looking down at his right hand, noticing that shift, a certain idea passed through Subaru’s mind

Subaru: “No way, it moved from Crusch’s body to mine… Is that it?”

He could only think that. The change on the hand he had touched and the change on his own were positive and negative, respectively. There was no doubt that the curse had traveled from Crusch’s body to Subaru’s.

Ferris: “Bu-But I haven’t changed at all? I examined Crusch-sama’s body, I touched her many many times since… Me, for me…”

At Subaru’s hypothesis, Ferris shook his head.

That was not joy at a possibility for healing being found, but rather an appearance of suspecting that the hypothesis was false. No, his own feelings were definitely different.

Ferris: “I can’t make Crusch-sama feel better…”

Subaru: “Then, let’s try it one more time.”

Pushing aside Ferris, left in dismay, Subaru once again stood before Crusch. Crusch, her face showing she was unaware of what had occurred, directed her glistening eyes at Subaru. To not show a tense face to that eyepatch-wearing, single-eyed gaze, Subaru took a deep breath.

To check it again, this time, he lightly brushed Crusch’s cheek.

Subaru: “—Guh, ugh!”

Immediately after, Subaru’s brain was stabbed with pain as if magma had been poured into his veins. Through the tips of his fingers, the curse that was violating Crusch’s body flowed in, and seared his senses.

Subaru: “Gaaaaah!”

Feeling unbearable, severe pain, Subaru screamed loudly and yanked his body away. Like that, falling back with the momentum, the hand which had been touching Crusch lost contact with her body.

Subaru: "Ah, haaa, haaaaaa…"

His lungs shivered, and his eyeballs cramped.

Opening and closing his mouth repeatedly like a fish on land, Subaru desperately sought oxygen.

Ferris: "Su-Subaru-kyun… Are you okay?"

Seeing his breathing start to calm, Ferris spoke to Subaru. Barely able to spare enough feeling to notice the hard floor he had landed on, he raised his body with difficulty. And gazing up at the face of Crusch, as she laid in bed,

Subaru: "How is it, Ferris? Was it effective, even just a little?"

Ferris: "Ah…"

With a plop, Ferris sat back down again to confirm Crusch's condition.

He too would have seen it with his own eyes. The cheek which was being eroded by the curse had been relieved, just a little bit. If such treatment was possible, then saving Crusch was also—

Crusch: "You cannot, Natsuki-sama…"

Subaru rose to try once more. However, it was none other than Crusch herself that stopped him.

Not understanding the meaning of her words, Subaru asked.

Subaru: "Did you not… notice? Your hand is…"

Crusch: "—Hand?"

Hearing this, she looked down at her right hand. And it was then that she finally realized the change that had occurred.

Similar to his right leg, blackened blood vessels covered the skin. That much was fine. With that alone, his resolve to take on Crusch's curse would not be shaken.

However, there was definitely something strange.

Compared to the spots which had been taken from Crusch, the extent of the erosion was much greater. The corrosion on her body, the darkened parts of her left hand and cheek, those dark blood vessels had all grown a shade lighter due to Subaru's touch.

However, Subaru's right arm, having absorbed that dark erosion, had its skin completely covered in black, all the way up to his elbow. The concentration was clearly different. The ratio the curse was transferred at was not one-to-one. It was more on the level of ten-to-one, perhaps not even that.

Subaru: "No, even then…"

Whether that was cause to hesitate was another matter.

There was pain in the moment of transfer. But, once it had been accepted onto his body, there was no sign that the curse would actually hurt Subaru, so far.

Compared to Crusch's constant hellish suffering, the pain Subaru felt lasted for only a moment. Besides, there was not even any need to consider which side should bear the burden of its torture, the man or the woman.

Whether it was his right leg or right hand turning black, if it was for the sake of saving Crusch, it mattered not.

Crusch: "Natsuki-sama, that cannot be… I am unable to accept those feelings."

Subaru: "Don't be silly. It only stings a little, so it's fine. Compared to getting a tattoo while showing off and regretting it later, let's think of it like dirtying a body that was already dirty in the first place. I can take away the pain too. It's strange, but I don't feel any pain, so…"

Crusch: "Can you guarantee that will be true in the future…? It could be that both Natsuki-sama and I will become unable to fight. In the current situation, that would be a fatal blow…"

Worrying more for the city and the people than her own body, that was Crusch's judgement. It was logically sound, but not everything should be considered with logic alone.

Crusch: "Ferris, please stop Natsuki-sama…"

Ferris: "I… I am…"

Crusch: "Please. Because Natsuki-sama is now needed by people other than me…"

Ferris: "If Subaru-kyun resolved to help… C-Crusch-sama's suffering…"

Ferris's hesitation in making a decision was because he kept Crusch at the top of his priorities. That, nobody could blame him for. Of those present, no one was in the wrong, after all.

The notion that "whatever is not wrong is right" was mistaken.

Crusch: "You must not be overwhelmed by the emotions of a single moment. Natsuki-sama, I ask of you…"

Subaru: "Crusch-san, even then, I…"

Crusch: "Did you not say so before? —"What is left, leave it all to me."“

Subaru: "—Kh!"

Crusch's pleading eyes took hold of Subaru and would not let go.

Had those reliable words come from his mouth? Was Crusch telling Subaru to fulfill the words she had heard?

Crusch: "Please say that to… me as well…"

Subaru: "…"

Crusch: "“All that's left, to leave it all to me."“

A pained smile was awaiting Subaru's words.

Swallowing his breath and shifting his tongue in his dry mouth, Subaru quietly closed his eyes.

Without thinking of the future, only immersed in what was in front of him, he was making her say things that did not need to be said, so at least—

Subaru: "Crusch-san, calmly rest here, please."

Crusch: "…Natsuki… sama."

Subaru: "Because everything that's left, you can leave it all to me."

Crusch: "—Yes."

If it was just filling the needed role and saying the desired words, then it just had to be done.

Hearing Subaru's reply, Crusch took a deep breath and seemed to relax.

Her eyelids weakly blinking shut not a moment after proved that, up until now, by any means possible she had been holding onto her consciousness. At that moment breathing a quiet sigh, Crusch once more began her time of battling the effects of the curse's erosion.

Subaru: "Sorry, Ferris. But I have to go now."

Ferris: "I'm… What should I… Is it alright?"

Draping a towel like a blanket over Crusch and standing up, Subaru heard a small voice as he was leaving. It was the first time Subaru had seen Ferris showing weakness.

In his innermost thoughts, what he wished now was to remain at Crusch's side. But in the current situation, Ferris's ability would not allow for such a thing.

Subaru: "I need your strength. I'm not saying to leave City Hall. But I'll tell them to evacuate the wounded here, if something happens. So, I'll leave that to you."

Ferris: "…The one I wanted to help most, and I can't help them."

Subaru: "Ferris…"

Ferris: "Sorry. I said something stupid… Just give us a moment, please."

While looking away, Ferris sat down on a chair next to the bed. Subaru lightly patted his shoulder and, finally, he stepped out of the lounge.

Unchanged from when he had entered, Wilhelm stood upright, waiting in the hallway.

Wilhelm: "Thank you very much for considering Crusch-sama's feelings."

Calling out to Subaru upon his return, Wilhelm spoke. Did the events that transpired within the room leak outside, or perhaps Subaru's expression was just easy to read?

Subaru: "It isn't some noble tale like I considered her feelings. Since it's more a story of how I was encouraged… My body, what's up with it anyway?"

Taking on Crusch's curse, and its effect being weakened against him in the first place. Going back even further, everything about the Witch Factor and Return by Death was, in truth, ambiguous.

One day, would he get to see the reason and reach the conclusion for such things?

Subaru: "We will leave Crusch-san to Ferris. Once everything is settled, I'm thinking of trying what I did once more."

Wilhelm: "Is that right arm fine?"

Subaru: "At first glance, it's a bit iffy. If I wear long sleeves and gloves it might look alright… For the sake of rescuing a pretty girl, a scar that doesn't fade away isn't any trouble at all."

Even though he had some aversion to it, those were Subaru's true feelings.

If there was no other solution, then he would absorb Crusch's curse in full, even if his body became pitch-black because of it. Emilia, Rem, and Beatrice, he would have to beg forgiveness from all of them.

Subaru: "But, that's all something for after we overcome this turbulence. Wilhelm-san, let's head down. The others may be discussing the plan to retake the control towers right now."

Probably, all the top-class powers that this side could muster would already be gathered there.

What followed after would depend on their compatibility with the abilities of each Sin Archbishop, as well as the timing and execution of the capture plan. Only six hours remained until the deadline imposed by the Witch Cult.

Wilhelm: "Subaru-dono, regarding that matter, I have a request."

Subaru: "A request?"

Wilhelm's words stopped Subaru as he headed for the stairs—The elder swordsman nodded his head towards the door behind him, showing concern in his eyes for his master within.

Wilhelm: "If possible, please recommend for me the task of subjugating Lust. Since I am aware of its powers of mutation and super-regeneration, I will request this of you."

Subaru: "Revenge for Crusch-san, is that it?"

Wilhelm: "That as well. But beyond that, it is essential to capture Lust alive and have it explain what was done to Crusch. For that, I will even become a demon. Before cutting off its head, I will definitely question her about it."

The killing intent given off by the Sword Demon felt like a wave of heat to Subaru. Furiously, darkly, having been unable to do anything, Wilhelm's ardor to avenge his master now rose up like flames.

Subaru: “That spirit is fine… But are the Corpse Soldiers alright?”

Wilhelm: “…”

Subaru: “Your wife, would you not know her best? Whatever else we do, it’s Wilhelm-san who needs to settle that score.”

Wilhelm: “Subaru-dono, has Reinhard arrived below?”

Wilhelm suddenly interrupted Subaru, while he spoke of his concerns.

Awkwardly, Subaru nodded. Reinhard’s strength was indispensable for the attack. However, it was possible that the previous generation Sword Saint could obstruct him.

Wilhelm: “The true nature of the Corpse Soldiers, could you avoid speaking of it to Reinhard?”

Subaru: “…Eh?”

Subaru was perplexed, unable to grasp the reason for the abrupt request.

Subaru: “That’s… Don’t tell that guy about Wilhelm-san’s wife, is that what you mean?”

Wilhelm: “Yes, that is correct. For Reinhard… for my grandson, I want to avoid him meeting my dead wife. He will surely blame me. Because the fault is none other than my own.”

Subaru: “That sorta thing, that it’s Wilhelm-san’s fault, that…”

“Is not true”, he wanted to say, but Subaru could not carelessly remark so.

Because the image of Heinkel’s appearance ruining the mood earlier in the morning had appeared in his mind.

There was no credibility. However, it could not be denied. Wilhelm had once accused Reinhard of being the cause of his wife’s death. And he had not rejected such a difficult and unbelievable past.

Wilhelm: “Does Subaru-dono know that the Divine Protection of the Sword Saint is special?”

Subaru: “…Honestly speaking, I’d say I know little about it. Maybe the people called Sword Saint all had the Divine Protection and having it means you become incredibly strong. I only have that impression of the Divine Protection…”

Wilhelm: “That understanding is rough around the edges, but it is correct. But if there is a difference between the Divine Protection of the Sword Saint and other Divine Protections… it is the fact that it can be inherited.”

Subaru: “An inherited… Divine Protection…”

At Subaru’s sigh, Wilhelm nodded. The elder swordsman closed his eyes as if recalling a sorrowful past.

Wilhelm: “That Divine Protection has been passed down for generations since the time of its founder, Reid Astrea. The Divine Protection lives on in the bloodline of the Astrea family, and selects one person in the family as the next Sword Saint. My wife’s Divine Protection definitely passed down to Reinhard.”

Subaru: “A Divine Protection that is inherited down the family… Is that so? And when your wife passed away, the Divine Protection transferred to Reinhard.”

Something caught in Subaru’s head as he tried to understand and make sense of it.

After the preceding Sword Saint had been defeated and slain by the White Whale, Reinhard had inherited the Divine Protection. It was a painful past, but one that could also be described a proper passing on.

That flow did not fit at all with what had been said in the argument between the members of the Astrea family this morning.

Wilhelm’s mourning, Heinkel’s mockery, Reinhard’s silence, those were all interfering with the idea of a legitimate succession. And the answer was—

Wilhelm: “It was… at the time of the battle against White Whale.”

Subaru: “Wilhelm-san…”

Wilhelm: “Reinhard received the Divine Protection during the Great Subjugation, which my wife had joined. During that battle, my wife was abandoned by the sword, and could only participate as an ordinary woman.”

—That was the truth of the Astrea family division.

Amidst the great expedition that had been sent out to subjugate the White Whale, the Divine Protection was suddenly passed down to the next generation. And, during the skirmish, the former Sword Saint lost her Divine Protection, having been left behind in that battlefield.

The previous generation, having now become an ordinary person, had still fought against the Witchbeast to protect the many other soldiers that had accompanied her—And then disappeared.

Wilhelm: “The one that took away the sword from my wife was none other than me. Overruling my wife, who was loved by the sword, forcing her to cast it aside, and turning her into an ordinary woman, I was the one who did it. That… was what called forth the death of my wife.”

Subaru: “…”

Wilhelm: “The Sword God did not forgive my wife’s betrayal, and so her Divine Protection was taken away while on the battlefield. She could rely only on a single blade. I think of how she must have felt then… It was true that I could not accept it, and defamed Reinhard, whom the Divine Protection had chosen. Driven by impulse, I could not forgive my grandson, even as he wept over the death of his grandmother, bearing a burden too heavy for his shoulders… I regret that now.”

The regret that Wilhelm had revealed to Subaru on the previous night—He was referring to that mistake.

Even knowing that Reinhard had not done anything wrong, Wilhelm was unable to accept that fact as he mourned his wife’s death. As a result, the Astrea family had split apart.

Wilhelm: “I do not want to repeat it again. Reinhard has no responsibility in my wife’s death. I have no reason to blame my grandson at all.”

And so, he was saying he would bring this to a close himself, instead of revealing it to Reinhard.

That feeling he now understood painfully well from this talk. Even Subaru would wish the same to happen if possible. But the burden Wilhelm carried was too high.

Subaru: “About Crusch-san and your wife… They will be taken care of, Wilhelm-san. And even if I don’t talk about the Corpse Soldiers, you never know where they’ll show up…”

Wilhelm: “That is definitely a needless worry, Subaru-dono.”

Subaru: “Eh…?”

Wilhelm shook his head at Subaru, as the latter was about to point out that it was not certain. And the Sword Demon spoke as his expression twisted into a fearsome grimace.

Wilhelm: “—Because, there is no chance of my wife not coming to meet me.”

Chapter 46:
A State of Mind

When going back to the rendezvous point with Wilhelm, everyone had been looking forward to Subaru's return. With Reinhard looking at Wilhelm, the grandfather welcomed the reunion with his grandchild while pulling his chin.

While the two stood together along the wall exchanging sidelong glances, Subaru sat down next to Otto at the round table.

Subaru: "I'm sorry for being late. How did the negotiations turn out?"

Otto: "We just ended up with the same matters we got from the start. It will surely be better from Natsuki-san's side … how is Crusch-sama doing?"

Subaru: "It seems she isn't doing well. However, it's not like we can already say that there is no hope. Once we get to the negotiations after driving out the witch cult, we might be able to do something."

Otto: "Is that so? If that's the case then that alone is good news."

With Otto stroking his chest with a ho, everyone else having listened to the story also made a similar gesture of relief. While viewing their reactions, deep down, Subaru wanted to give them a heartfelt apology.

Although it wasn't a lie, it was a statement which was far removed from reality. There might be a way to save Crusch, which would also be considerably risky for Subaru. If her conditions were among the same conditions as Subaru's, he would expect her chances to rise considerably. (TN: "Probably referring to the conditions needed for the dragon's blood injected by Capella to not be rejected or something like that)

Subaru: "Either way, Crusch-san's return to the frontlines for this battle is impossible. Since it seems that Ferris also doesn't want to be separated from her, I think is would be best if the relief party were to stay behind at City Hall. Additionally, where we'll be meeting, there is the possibility that we will become unable to communicate."

Anastasia: "That means the plan to attack the four places simultaneously hasn't changed. Seems that gettin' to the location from City Hall in the center as seen from each control tower comes first, right? Then… …"

With a clap, Anastasia looked out over everyone's faces.

In that case, shall we finally truly go into the main issue? —There are four control towers and four Sin Archbishops. For the sake of defeating them, we will hold a war strategy meeting."

From Crusch's faction was the "Sword devil" Wilhelm.

From Felt's faction was the "Sword saint" Reinhard.

From Anastasia's faction were the "Valuable knight" Julius and the "Leader of the iron fang" Ricardo.

From Emilia's faction were the "Spirit knight" Subaru and the "Shield of the Sanctuary" Garfiel.

And then, from Priscilla's faction was—

Priscilla: "Me and Al will be together."

Subaru: "Although you said such a thing … … will you fight as well? You're a Royal selection candidate, aren't you?"

When each faction's fighters were affirming, Priscilla boldly raised her own name. When Subaru scowled at that, she snorted at him so as to try and scoff at him.

Priscilla: "I would surely be a candidate for the throne, don't you think? Since the previously important fool has become useless, you've united every last one of the untaken weakling fighters. I stand above everybody both at the sword and on the stage precisely because I am who I am."

Wilhelm: “Now you’ve become difficult to ignore. With “fool”, surely you mustn’t mean my lord by that?”

Priscilla: “Since I have something in mind, just don’t stand in my way, I guess. There’s a devious expression, old soldier. Through withdrawal by “losing a fly to catch a trout” and the like, the tales of the chosen cannot be told.”

From the start of the discussion, Wilhelm and Priscilla already clashed with a dangerous presence. Seemingly habitually ignoring the scene, because of various circumstances Wilhelm’s side could not afford to waste time. Since Priscilla’s side generally operated in an excessive manner, that also did not leave out hateful language.

Anastasia: “Yeah yeah, let’s move the discussions forward, because both the weaklin’ and the fool stuff is all fine by me. We ain’t gonna turn on each other.”

Priscilla: “Oh, that’s boring. Isn’t my obedient listening to the weakling’s story to a manageable degree?”

Anastasia: “I guess it wasn’t like the story was about the victory of the weak? If you do not show the extent of your magnanimity, then nobody will follow you. Everyone is getting equally irritated. Have some patience.”

Priscilla: “Hmph.”

As Anastasia’s remark was missing its target, Priscilla did not object as she only snorted. As she watched the weapon being pointed at her, Wilhelm, who had been staring daggers at her, had also withdrawn it.

Since it was natural that there were disagreements between the factions, he made a serious face.

Wilhelm: “Well then, Priscilla-sama’s faction will be Priscilla-sama and Al together … … even if your boy cannot expect to be taken into consideration?”

Priscilla: “Can something even be done by such a very delicate and weak child? That child has been accompanying me throughout merely for the sake of serving me. Naturally, we will put him aside beforehand."

Wilhelm: "Understood. Then it's been decided that we'll capture the four locations with no less than eight fighters."

The boy who was Priscilla's butler —Schult, while drooping his head, was exactly evenly split between fighting and not fighting at the round table.

Leaving out the names of the eight combatants, the non-combatants were Anastasia, Schult, Liliana and Otto with Crusch and Ferris on the upper floor making six people.

Anastasia: "Before we split up our fighting force, shall we go ahead and reaffirm our knowledge of the Sin Archbishops once more? Let's see, the person who has seen all their faces … … is just Natsuki-kun, right?"

Subaru: "Yeah, I think so. Although even I am disgusted with talking about the witch cult's leaders, I will try to get myself to give an explanation. I know about their abilities, though to a certain extent."

While gathering everyone's attention, Subaru began to speak.

About the witch cult who which had attacked this city and the horrible Sin Archbishops who controlled it.

Subaru: "First is Wrath. This Sin Archbishop, who calls herself Sirius, is a fellow who's completely wrapped in bandages. I don't know what she looks like, though I believe she's probably a woman. She attacks using the chains wrapped around her arms. In addition, it seems like she also uses fire magic."

Reinhard: "If it's only that then she doesn't seem to be a significant threat. Is she considerably talented?"

Subaru: "If it's said by you, then it's difficult for anyone to answer, Reinhard. … … If we're talking about simple fighting strength, then Wilhelm or Julius will be able to provide sufficient opposition. Her other ability seemed to be an equal match with Emilia though.

Nevertheless, she has the Authority of Wrath.”

Reinhard: “An Authority… …”

Reinhard frowned to that sound as he brought his hand to his chin.

Subaru continued as he nodded back at him,

Subaru: “The biggest point about a Sin Archbishop’s repulsiveness, is their characteristic ability called their Authority. Being an incomprehensible force which differs from both magic and sorcery, it’s useless to even think about how it works. Since every one of them is powerful, defeating the Authority will become the crux of defeating a Sin Archbishop.”

Wilhelm: “Since Subaru-dono had supposedly defeated Sloth in the past, was that the Authority itself?”

Subaru: “It was. The Archbishop of Sloth’s Authority, the “Unseen hand” was Sloth’s second ability. The Authority can grow an unknown number of powerful arms which are not only invisible, but also have incredible strength. If someone were to be caught in them, they could easily completely tear their body apart.”

Julius: “Having witnessed them myself, I’ve also verified their repulsiveness. In practice, it’s believable that just by snatching a body its power could gouge out someone’s flesh.”

Julius followed up on Subaru’s explanation.

During the united front against Petelgeuse, it was Subaru lending his eyes that made him see Petelgeuse’s “Unseen Hand”. He was in an ideal position to reinforce his explanation.

Subaru: “Moreover, Sloth has the ability to forcefully snatch away the energy of people in his range. Whether this was the Authority is difficult to tell, but we overcame it by using spirit art users who were immune to it. This was also because it was me and Julius.”

Julius: “Even if we were able to tell whose ability it was, assuming the Sin Archbishop was holding such a terrifying ability, it’s not like we would definitely succeed if we were to assign a capable fighter to the right opponent.”

Subaru: “You said an unusually good thing, Julius. It’s something like that.”

When Subaru praised him in his own way, Julius looked at Subaru with a discerning though lukewarm eye. While getting an uncanny feeling from that gaze, Subaru once again clearing his throat continued,

Subaru: “So, let’s go back to the discussion about the Authority of Wrath. What we know as of now about Wrath’s ability, is the sharing and propagation of emotions and senses.”

???: “Sharing … emotions and senses?”

Since Subaru’s explanation didn’t really make sense, most of the discussion members tilted their heads. Because it was difficult to explain, it was necessary for Subaru to choose his words carefully.

Subaru: “I mean, It’s that Wrath is able to unipolarize the emotions of people in its range. It makes one person’s anger into everyone’s anger and one person’s sadness into everyone’s sadness.”

Anastasia: “What the heck’s that? If that’s what it means, then it’s simple as to why.”

Subaru: “Certainly if it were just that you would just forcefully make yourself use your ability to sense the mood, but it’s not like that. The scary part of this ability is when it’s able to unipolarize until it reaches hostility. That is, if Wrath is your opponent and directs their hostility towards your perceived companions, it will definitely also be transmitted to the people in the perimeter.”

Otto: “So it turns the townspeople in its perimeter against us?”

Subaru: “Exactly.”

By snapping his fingers, Subaru indicated that Otto had drawn the correct conclusion.

Although it gave everyone depressed looks, the problems didn’t end with just that.

Priscilla: “Foolish commoner, did you say that Wrath or whatever can share emotions and senses some time ago?”

As the first to finally reach an understanding, Priscilla reclined on her seat.

Piercing through Subaru with her crimson eyes, while concealing her mouth with her folding fan,

Priscilla: “If the explanation from just now was about sharing emotions, then sharing senses is again different. And if we then assume that that is just my way of imagining things, is it not a considerably repulsive ability?”

Subaru: “I don’t know how you’re imagining it, but it’s the worst. Wrath’s Authority shares the wounds of people in its range. This does not exclude Wrath’s wounds.”

Ricardo: “If even the person himself ain’t no exception … … hey, bro, that ain’t true, innit? Ain’t that the worst? In other words, wouldn’t other fellas die if Wrath were ta be killed?”

He had already once realized that terrible scene in practice by Reinhard’s hand.

Even if they crushed Sirius, who was the source of the malice, that act alone would inflict permanent wounds to the people surrounding them. They wouldn’t know if anyone dragged into the fight would be fine if they managed to kill her.

Priscilla: “—Interesting.”

To this hopeless information, everyone held their tongue without coming up with counter-measures. In such a midst just one person, only Priscilla was cheerfully warping her cheek into a sneer.

Priscilla: “Very well. I will give that Wrath fool a picking. You’re free to rejoice.”

Subaru: “Well, wait, wait, wait up! Although I don’t know why you're so eager, it's not something you can take so lightly! Were you listening to what I said?!"

Priscilla: "Let's settle that I was listening. Thus upon having listened to that, I have declared that I will go. They are indeed a disgusting opponent with cowardly methods, so it's appropriate for me to cut them down."

Without even listening to Subaru's attempts to stop her, Priscilla looked over everyone while folding her fan to make a sound.

With that sharp gaze and zeal, she overwhelmed even strongest fighters present.

Priscilla: "If you've said everything about the Authority, then there is a verse that comes to mind about those Karakuri. "Wanting to be accompanied by the same masses who disregard you" and the like is impertinent. The vulgar masses exist entirely for my sake. If some insolent worm turns their hand to me, I immediately throw them out of my garden."

Al: "P, princess … … Aren't you bragging even a little too much?"

Priscilla: "What kind of foolishness are you saying, Al? Knowing your cowardice, what is it about that you get cold feet from the insolent opponent who sours my mood? With me, there is no point in being afraid if the singer is there."

Al: "It's not like I'm saying it because there's nothing to be afrai… … Singer?"

When Al tried to stop his master's irrational behavior, he stopped as he heard an unexpected word. While generously nodding at her follower's surprise, Priscilla, pointed with her folded fan at Liliana who sat at the corner of the round table.

As she suddenly became the topic of the discussion, Liliana opened her eyes wide at the fan that was thrust before her.

Liliana: "Did mean m-me with that name?! Why are you doing that so suddenly and neglectfully again?!"

Priscilla: “You mustn’t be forgetting about your travels? How long your songs have shaken the hearts of the masses. You should do the same thing with that. In short, you should fight for the emotions of the vulgar masses and such.”

Liliana: “Seems like I was making you anxious just because I raised my voice a little? You might say that under no circumstances you are overestimating me too much, but pressuring a weak young girl like me … …”

Priscilla: “Oh. So, if it’s your choice, you allow the song you inherited from your ancestors to be defeated?”

As Priscilla snorted, Liliana’s facial expression changed to Priscilla’s words which sounded like she despised her wholeheartedly.

Showing a forced smile, she wore a facial expression with an earnest charm as she menially tried to ward it off.

Liliana: “That is, what do you mean … …?”

Priscilla: “It seems like it even if you do not think so. Does your song, which has been passed down so zealously, seem like it is being sung when the hearts of the people, which are begging for help, are exposing their sometimes unsightly cowering? That kind of loser’s whining, is that not all a bunch of idle futility? Even a dog’s barking is still better than insisting on being selfish. There, how is it sinking in? It’s like the praise of a loser.”

Liliana: “Aah Aah! You’re going so far as to say it?! Are you blurting it out?! Fine! I’ll go! I’ve understood alright?! Catching me, the minstrel Liliana, like that! Using such language! A woman will become obsolete with this silence! Even the late Kiritaka-san will come crawling out of his grave with regret like this!”

Because of Priscilla’s fierce provocation, Liliana became excited as she intensely exploded back at her. With her face becoming a bright red, she violently strummed the musical instrument placed on top of her lap.

Liliana: “Stop it if you were thinking about letting even a requiem be sung to comfort Kiritaka-san's soul who pitiably fell into the city's waters! I'm a scramble of emotions? Bring it on! I, the person who has come to inherit the song, and my song, which has dazed the people of the world, will we lose to an unknown power due to something like that?! We don't know the song's power after all! Grrr!"

(TN: "Probably somewhat inaccurate in some places here. Liliana's manner of speech feels weird in general…)

Schult and Otto hurriedly dragged down the thoroughly excited Liliana who was performing while lying sprawled on top of the round table. Taking a distant view to the corner of the room where Liliana who started playing was held down, Subaru had shifted his focus to Priscilla.

Subaru: "Her manageability aside, you seem sure of her success. But even if you're right, to just throw her into this when you don't know her chances … …"

Priscilla: "I am not planning to lose or anything. Everything in this world will be made to my liking. Besides, it is because I was together with that singer that I have come so far as to this city hall. After taking her around with me precisely because I recognized that singer's usefulness, I have again decided to take her with me."

Subaru: "Are you saying that Liliana is an opposing force to Sirius?"

Priscilla: "It would be my defeat if it were not for that singer. And something like my defeat is impossible in this world. Therefore, it is because of that singer. Need I explain this any further?"

Because none of the insufficient explanations were feasible, it steadily became unbearable for Subaru. However, it was Schult who raised his hand instead who tried to follow-up on Priscilla's remarks.

The butler boy's adorable eyes quivered as he chose his words with utmost care,

Schult: "U, uh well … … I think that it's true that Liliana's song has a special power. It’s true that they were released from anxiety or irritation when they listened to Liliana-sama’s song … … That is also what we learned from several refuge shelters which we passed by before we came here.”

Subaru: “You were letting Liliana sing to the refuge shelters you were visiting?”

Priscilla: “I believe I said so.”

Subaru: “You didn’t say that!”

Even the insufficiency of her explanation was excessive.

While being troubled by Priscilla’s attitude, Subaru turned his head to Reinhard.

Subaru: “Hey, Reinhard. Do you know of an innate ability that can see people’s, or rather … … Oh right, they’re divine protections. Can’t such things like divine protections be seen?”

Reinhard: “I think there’s a divine protection which learns about people’s divine protections. I’ve heard that the owner of the “Divine protection of Judgement” can see them. They aren’t in Lugunica, but in Vollachia, aren’t they? I see, so we want to check what kind of divine protection Liliana-sama has? It will certainly become one of our main questions.”

When he understood the purpose of Subaru’s question, Reinhard went deep into thought.

Since he just tried to ask because he had nothing to lose, even he knew that he had asked something unreasonable from Reinhard. Subaru shook his head to the pondering red haired youth and said “Never mind”.

Subaru: “Although I strangely expected something since you said that you heard all kinds of incredible things, it’s not like you’d be convenient to that extent. It’s fine. For now, we’ll be able to cancel Wrath’s authority somehow with Liliana’s song after testing it a little … …”

Reinhard: “You don’t need to worry about it, Subaru. —I’ve received it now.”

Subaru: “Ha?”

Patting the shoulder of Subaru who tried to propose an experiment with Liliana’s song, Reinhard smiled. After that, while narrowing his blue eyes, he gazed at Liliana who was performing in the corner of the room.

And then,

Reinhard: “I was surprised. Liliana holds the “Divine protection of Telepathy”.”

Subaru: “I was surprised by you because of the divine protection from just now. Eh? What did you say just now? Did you say that you received it? What did you receive, the treasure that is children?”

Reinhard: “Subaru, it’s not a situation to be making fun of. I have been able to confirm Liliana-sama’s divine protection. The “Divine protection of telepathy” is, so to speak, a divine protection which transmits the owner’s thought to others. It’s a divine protection which primarily just transmits trivial thoughts to companions whom the owner shares a close bond with, but … … a song, huh? I hadn’t even thought of something like that.”

While Reinhard was honestly admiring Liliana, Subaru’s jaw dropped after seeing him with such a face from his side.

Since Reinhard’s power was already a cheat, this guy, who was said to be beyond superhuman, was being loved way too much by the gods.

The divine protection he needed, that divine protection which he thought of turned up in his possession or something if he wished for it.

Subaru: “—?”

Barely managing to reach even a thought, Subaru picked up on what happened.

He could acquire a divine protection he thought of if he wished for it. At least it could only be expressed with what happened to the present Reinhard himself. Though that in and of itself was an extremely and reassuringly enviable power.

Since it seemed likely that he was mistaken about something, Subaru did not finish his remark.

The members of the Wrath capture group were decided —Priscilla, Al and Liliana.

Chapter 47:
Recapturing the City Outpost

1

Subaru: “For now, let’s leave the task of dealing with Wrath to Priscilla’s squad. We’ve got assurance from Reinhard that Liliana has a Divine Protection.”

Reinhard: “An unfamiliar Divine Protection may not sound very reassuring. But certainly, Liliana-sama’s song may be an effective countermeasure for what we’ve heard about Wrath.”

Following Subaru and Reinhard’s remarks, the gazes of the round table participants turned to Liliana. She was playing with her braid, and while holding it under her nose, she was play-acting as if it were a beard.

Liliana: “Ee-yeh, please leave it to me. This Liliana, once she gets a request, she definitely gets the work done. Rest assured, I only sing in a place where my singing is desired. And if so is wanted, then I sing! Isn’t this such a happy thing?! If I could even get some tips, then that’s cause to throw up my arms and celebrate!”

Subaru: “Something like a tip won’t be coming out of this, so first quit with the capitalist pig talk.”

Liliana: “Buhaa—!”

The excited Liliana deflated, and now Priscilla let out a snort instead. With eyes like crimson flames, she turned to inspect Subaru and Reinhard in turn.

Priscilla: “Seeing two boys gossiping in whispers, I looked into what they were plotting, but it seems they were merely wasting their energy on a useless consultation. That singer’s worth had already been confirmed by mine own self. Now, to crush those foolish fanatics.”

Subaru: “Even saying that, we need to be sure that nothing backfires on us…”

Priscilla: “How amusing—I am staking my singer’s life on her song. This singer who ran her mouth, why would she take on some uncertain danger to her life? There is no point in taking on that kind of risk.”

Subaru: “…”

The words she spoke did not leave Subaru much to reply with. In truth, the one that had suggested using Liliana, and believed her potential enough to face off against Wrath, had been Priscilla herself.

Unlike her words and attitude, her prudence and cleverness were exceptional, and already well-known.

Al: “Princess, don’t bully bro too much. Let’s just stay quiet, us two.”

Priscilla: “What’s that, Al? Worm, are your thoughts and your views still crooked? You have aged quite enough as a man but still just act like a girl, I see. Do not lower your worth even further in front of these commoners.”

Al: “…It’s not like that.”

Turning away his gaze with a swish, Al rested his chin on his right arm and entered a complete observer mode. Priscilla gave a snort to her servant’s behavior, reclined on her seat, and ceased talking.

Finally, it seemed like the story would flow into the next part now.

Subaru: “And with that, Wrath’s capture will be left to Priscilla’s team. Now, to form groups for the others… Let’s talk about Lust. Who to handle that one, I would like to nominate Wilhelm-san for this assignment.”

Julius: “Nominating Wilhelm-sama? May I ask the meaning of that?”

Wilhelm: “I have humbly requested as much from Subaru-dono, Julius-dono.”

Wilhelm raised his hand and answered Julius’s question. The elder swordsman collected his gaze, and lightly shifted it upstairs.

Wilhelm: “As you all well know, my master, Crusch-sama, is currently suffering under the effects of the cruel power of the Witch Cult’s Lust. I have an obligation to fight for my master as Crusch-sama’s servant. This is also a wish of mine that goes beyond my sense of duty.”

Anastasia: “Ya wanna capture the Sin Archbishop alive if possible, and ask ‘em ‘bout those symptoms. Wilhelm-san’s motive must be somethin’ like that.”

Wilhelm: “It is as you say. Therefore, please leave the subjugation of Lust to me.”

Those blue eyes with strong will behind them let out a darkness which pressured the room.

Wilhelm’s deeply-held determination, and his gratitude towards his master—with eyes that showed those feelings, nobody could raise half-hearted words against it.

Except only one, of his own flesh and blood.

Reinhard: “In truth, I am opposed to it.”

Wilhelm: “…Reinhard.”

While everyone was overwhelmed by the swordsman, only Reinhard’s expression did not change. Staring at Wilhelm with his usual serious expression,

Reinhard: “Currently, honored grandfather has lost his composure. Of course, to feel hostility towards the Sin Archbishop who harmed Crusch-sama is understandable. However, I do not believe that you will be able to achieve the objective with that feeling.”

Wilhelm: “Losing one’s composure is a hinderance in achieving the objective? Is that what you are saying to me?”

Reinhard: “Considering Crusch-sama, failing to capture Lust cannot be afforded. Therefore, I will take on that task. At least, I will be able to face that side with a better mental state.”

Reinhard’s words were correct, and had been formed with sound logic, one which considered possible situations to ensure as much certainty as possible. That Wilhelm was being too forceful, and was losing his composure was not incorrect. But, when Reinhard gave that opinion, Wilhelm loosened his lips.

Surely not gently, but instead with a smile like a ferocious beast’s.

Wilhelm: “—Losing calmness here is a given, Reinhard.”

Reinhard: “Nevertheless, honored grandfather…”

Wilhelm: “Just who do you think your grandfather is? I am Wilhelm, the Sword Demon. I am a half-hearted person who has attempted to become one with the sword, but instead fell in love with a woman. But because I am a half-hearted person, I have never done anything I should half-hearted!”

A fierce smile washed over Wilhelm’s clear and mild impression. It now was reminiscent of a demon who had burned away his life, having dedicated himself to blood and iron, having been fascinated by the sparkling beauty of a blade.

And despite that, the demon yet held a smidgen of warmth in his gaze.

Wilhelm: “When I decide to wield the sword, my heart is uplifted. Even if I am not calm, on the battlefield, it is all the same to me. That is how I have lived on to this age. This time as well, I have no intention of rotting away without repaying my obligation to my master in full. I shall not decay. Your worry is unnecessary.”

Reinhard: “That reasoning, it’s not just that mentality…”

Wilhelm: “A mentality held to the end becomes certainty. Even if it takes fourteen years, even what some may call a blunted sword shall fulfill its vengeance on its wife's enemies."

Upon being told that Wilhelm believed he had avenged his grandmother's death in full in the battle against the White Whale, Reinhard could not say anything further. But even then, Reinhard kept his eyes downcast, unconvinced. At his grandson's obstinate posture, Wilhelm continued on with "Besides,"

Wilhelm: "The battlefield that requires you is not here. The scene you are needed in is elsewhere."

Reinhard: "The scene I am needed in…"

Wilhelm: "—Subaru-dono. My grandson, please take him with you to your battlefield. To rescue Emilia-sama, you will need to battle Greed. Reinhard would act as a sword for you."

Suddenly having his name called, Subaru opened his eyes wide. As if pulled along by Wilhelm's nod, the gaze of Reinhard also turned to him.

At that appearance, Subaru scratched his head as if thinking it can't he helped.

Subaru: "Honestly, I wanted to wait to say this until after the topic of Lust was sorted out… Yeah. Your power's frankly something I want to borrow for the fight against Greed that I'm in charge of. For that annoying fucker, I definitely think I'll need your strength."

Regulus of Greed floated into his mind. According to his fragmented knowledge of the Sin Archbishops' abilities, the power Regulus possessed was the most dangerous of all those deviants.

Though he could not say for sure, in the current situation, he could not imagine calling Regulus's ability by anything other than a stupid word like "invincibility". Of course, he did not want to think of him as a simply invincible existence. Some kind of weakness or limit had to exist, that was what he wanted to believe.

Subaru: "To break through Regulus's invincible defense, we need strong attacking ability to deal with him. To put it simply, his offensive and defensive ability, compared with the other the Sin Archbishops, I think is at the top. So, I want to borrow Reinhard's power for when we attack him."

Reinhard: "An untouchable opponent… Certainly, for a monster such as that, I would be the right choice. However…"

Even after hearing of Regulus's absurd power, Reinhard's hesitation did not disappear. But, seeing Reinhard's worry, another voice rang out.

That sound was coming from none other than the one next to Subaru.

???: "—Then, Wilhelm-jii'll just be goin' with my amazin' self."

Striding forward was Garfiel, gnashing his sharp fangs as he glared at Reinhard. Reinhard made a surprised face at him, as if wondering, "You?"

Garfiel: "Recommend me, Captain. My amazin' self's skills, ya understand 'em too. For rescuin' Emilia-sama, my amazin' self's not needed. Right, Captain?"

Subaru: "No, Garfiel. I don't want to tell you something like that…"

Garfiel: "I don't need comfortin'. And I'm not sayin' this stuff just 'cause I'm sulkin'. It's the other way 'round. For my amazin' self, this time, there's another bastard that needs seein' to here."

His brows furrowing at Garfiel's attitude as the latter breathed roughly, Subaru realized far too belatedly.

That was it. Among those whose appearances had been changed by Lust in the City Hall, there had been a person who was an acquaintance to him—someone who had been turned into a black dragon.

Then, for Garfiel, Lust was no opponent he was unrelated to. In addition—

Garfiel: "It's true that we can't forgive that damn woman, but it's not just that. That duo, the ones who schooled me, they were with that disgustin' Lust."

Subaru: "…"

Garfiel: "'Cause of my amazin' self's mistake, there's an idiot that got injured without needin' to. So my amazin' self's got to give 'em as good as possible for them. And so, my amazin' self'll be followin' gramps over there."

At Garfiel's keen gaze, Wilhelm slowly lowered his chin.

Here, the elder swordsman and the young warrior were united, standing together in a fight for vengeance. At the root, they both shared motives borne of thinking strongly about women they cared about, so they had even more in common.

Towards Garfiel's expression, Subaru too had nothing more to say.

Subaru: "I might be repeating myself here, but Lust's power is to mutate and transform. She can morph herself and can also force mutations onto others. And… her blood. No matter what, do not let her blood touch you. It's what caused Crusch-san's injuries. Personality-wise… They're all terrible, but she's especially bad."

Wilhelm: "Understood."

Garfiel: "Stomp and crush 'em."

At Subaru's last confirmation, neither Wilhelm nor Garfiel showed any sign of backing down.

When Subaru finally made eye contact with Reinhard to check what he thought, the Sword Saint, who had been firm up to this resolute scene, seemed to have lost the desire to speak.

Reinhard: "It does not matter. Garfiel's ability is certain. And if my honored grandfather is there, then by whatever means necessary he will cut them down, that can be relied on."

Garfiel: "Sayin' it like that makes it sound unconvincin'. "The torktoi's mild but the taste's superb", as they say."

Reinhard: “It is the truth. I believe in yours and my honored grandfather’s victory. I will act as Subaru’s sword.”

As Garfiel scratched his face with an uncomfortable look, Reinhard nodded to Subaru. From the Sword Saint’s believable words, Subaru felt like he had received a lot of help.

Subaru: “I’m sorry about this selfish hope, Reinhard.”

Reinhard: “It is fine. No matter where the battlefield is, I will give my utmost efforts. If that will be of help to you, then that is what I wish for.”

Subaru: “For just relying on you, I’m really sorry. The thing is, I’m relying way too much on you being really strong, but… the parts where you’re lacking, I’ll fill them in somehow, so please look forward to it.”

Reinhard: “…”

Hearing those words, Reinhard suddenly widened his eyes and shut his mouth. Subaru tilted his head at that unusual reaction, and Reinhard laughed lightly, keeping a faint smile.

Reinhard: “For you, that would be nothing at all, right? —Aah, I am looking forward to it. To see you filling in for me, the parts I cannot reach.”

Subaru: “—? Then look forward to it a lot, I am too. So, I think we know the flow by now, so inevitably, there’s the last one, Gluttony…”

Julius: “—Then, me and Ricardo are left to be in charge of that.”

Following after Subaru’s words, the one agreeing in a low tone was Julius. Hearing him speak in a rough voice which was unlike him, Anastasia directed a concerned gaze at her Knight.

Anastasia: “Julius, you alright? Your complexion hasn’t been lookin’ so good for quite a while now…”

Julius: “I apologize for causing you anxiety. However, I am fine.

When speaking of comforts and discomforts of the body, I cannot make something like weak complaints in front of Subaru."

Subaru: "What do you mean by that?!"

Julius: "Of course, I was thinking of your difficulties with your leg when I spoke. Please do not snap at me like that. In a situation like this, I have no intention of getting into arguments with you."

Subaru: "Hm…"

He took a lot of damage from a motive he had not thought of. At the same time, he felt a strange sense of something being out of place. Julius's appearance seemed suspicious to him, just as it had been for Anastasia. Why that was, he still did not know, but even then…

Julius: "Ricardo and I will be taking the leftover responsibility of handling Gluttony. Originally, Subaru and Wilhelm-sama would have served as his opponent. Due to their ties with him, they would have wanted to manage it themselves. Because you assigned this task to us while enduring those feelings, we will definitely carry it out for both of you to see."

Subaru: "…Ah, so that's it."

What Julius felt was true, Subaru would have wanted to subjugate Gluttony himself. Wilhelm would too, and above them, Crusch, still suffering, would have felt the same.

The Authority of Gluttony, which consumed Memories and Names—thinking of Rem, who had suffered that damage, being put into sleep that lasted even now, Subaru wanted to crush Gluttony completely with his own hand.

Hitting, kicking, stomping on him, forcing him to regret the atrocities he had committed, to turn his face into a teary mess as he forced him to bow down to the ground until he felt catharsis, that was what he wanted to do.

That role, he had given over to others—

Subaru: “No matter who it is, honestly, I don’t want to leave it to them. Rem… I wanted to restore her. I wanted to get her back myself. I believed doing that to be my role.”

Julius: “…”

Subaru: “But, if it won’t do unless I entrust it to someone, then I’ll leave it to you. Don’t get the wrong idea. It’s by process of elimination… and only by process of elimination, but I will leave it to you. For me, you’re the only one I can tolerate handing this role to, even if I don’t like it.”

Rem’s very memory and existence were being held hostage.

Emilia’s freedom had been taken away, and she was still waiting for help to arrive.

Both of them were precious relations to Subaru, both of them were precious people he had to get back, and so, to both of them, Subaru wanted to show his cool side.

However, Subaru was Emilia’s Knight, and Rem’s Hero too, so,

Subaru: “I will defeat Greed, and I will rescue Emilia. Blowing away Gluttony, I’ll hand it to you… Don’t screw it up.”

Julius: “—To your expectations, I will respond. Especially this time, definitely this time.”

With a firm nod, Julius accepted Subaru’s trust.

The Finest of Knights then gazed towards Wilhelm, and inclined his head slightly.

Julius: “Wilhelm-sama.”

Wilhelm: “Of what I wanted to say, Subaru-dono has spoken most of that for me. It is true that I do not have the most harmonious feelings for Gluttony… And so, I too will entrust it to Julius-dono. There are too many scoundrels present in this city.”

From that Sword Demon growing sharp, Julius seemed to gain a bit of courage. Ricardo, who had until then quietly observed their talk, now chimed in,

Ricardo: “And what’s this, my thoughts don’t even seem to be heard in this talk y’all havin’. I don’t even get anyone to care ‘bout me, that it?! Though, that this lineup’s the best so far, I can agree to that.”

Anastasia: “Ricardo really’s lookin’ for attention. Gettin’ miffed like that with yer big size doesn’t really look cute, ya know… Take care of Julius for me.”

Ricardo: “Relax. Have ya ever see me lyin’? Ana-bo.”

Anastasia: “Could ya stop usin’ that title? I’m yer master, ya know?”

Ricardo guffawed loudly at the sight of Anastasia’s miffed face and puffed-up cheeks. The black-iris eyes that gazed down on Anastasia had a very kind glint in them.

Subaru: “Then, with this, the lineups are decided, right.”

—Following Subaru’s remark, all those present at the round table nodded their heads.

Subaru: “For the attack on Sirius of Wrath, Priscilla and Al. Counting Liliana, that’s three in all.”

Priscilla: “The notion that I may succumb to the toying of emotions is a laughable one indeed. Showing my opponent how they were in the wrong place at the wrong time while facing the wrong enemy, such a helpless fool deserves a lesson!”

Liliana: “I only sing, I only sing~! It’s what I am, just a lump of meat that sings! Do not cherish your life, cherish the stage. Okay, good, I feel like I can do it. Right now, I really feel like I can do it!”

Al: “…”

Priscilla fanned herself as Liliana engaged in questionable self-hypnosis. Al’s face could not be seen, but the impression that he was still not convinced seemed to come from his whole body.

Though it was a mildly unsettling trio, confidence-wise they were the strongest there.

Subaru: “Next up, for the capturing of Lust, Garfiel and Wilhelm-san.”

Garfiel: “Got it. My amazin’ self will grab ‘em by the throat, ‘n make ‘em cry ‘n say sorry.”

Wilhelm: “Please leave it to me—With the both of us, it is assured.”

The pair with the most fighting spirit, could it be said to be these two?

The Sword Demon Wilhelm had his gratitude for his master, and also his wife, who he had not forgotten even for a moment. As for Garfiel, there was some form inside him that could not be grasped, some emotion that made his feelings quake.

Perhaps these two warriors both sought some answers in the battle ahead.

Subaru: “And for the conquest of Gluttony, it’s the two of you, Julius and Ricardo.”

Julius: “By none other than you both, we have been entrusted this task. It will certainly be resolved. Like this, then, I will negate him.”

Ricardo: “Those damn bastards made my family suffer. I don’t need to hear those words to know. I’ll punch ‘em, hit ‘em hard and make ‘em cry.”

This pair had the least connections to the Witch Cult. And yet they could safely be expected to not fall behind the others, since it was definitely certain that both were highly-respected battlers. Together, he had already overcome hardship with them. Nowhere in these comrades-in-arms lay any cause for doubt.

Because of that, the choice to yield the detestable Gluttony was made possible.

Subaru: “The last one is Greed, Reinhard and I being the two to meet him. I'm counting on you."

Reinhard: "—Ahh, leave it to me. I am depending on you as well, Subaru."

At Subaru's request, Reinhard nodded his head with his usual resolute attitude. But something in his draped mien seemed soft, and while in the middle of battle it might strike one as imprudent, right now his appearance seemed to overflow with humanity.

Why it was such a reassuring look, Subaru did not know.

Anastasia: "Then, with this, the choices for the fights're decided. And on the matter of choosin' places to set up Communication Mirrors for reports, there are three of 'em in all. Assuming one's left in the City Hall… For the other ones, what should we do?"

Subaru: "Personally, I definitely want someone to take one for Wrath. And one to… Lust or Gluttony, one of those two would be nice, I think."

Anastasia: "What're your reasons?"

Subaru: "Wrath is someone with influence over the whole city. The situation the city's in will change based on whether we can beat her or not. Therefore, that news is something I want to be able to share quickly."

Regarding the use of Communication Mirrors, they all nodded as if Subaru's suggestion was correct. As for the reason for bringing a different one to Greed,

Subaru: "As we've said, Reinhard will be with Greed. Assuming anything about Greed beyond his ability being unknown would be optimistic, but I can't say that the possibility of it being handled instantly doesn't exist. If it ends up being like that, I want to set up a situation where Reinhard can be sent as reinforcements."

Otto: "However, unless the team at Greed possesses a Communication Mirror, then sharing that information would be impossible, correct? I certainly believe that Natsuki-san's opinion is largely correct."

Subaru: “The answer to that is simple. Use the broadcasting magical device. With a city-wide broadcast, I want us to keep everyone informed of places that need help. Using the Communication Mirror, Anastasia-san will organize all the information, and will take on the responsibility of conveying it to everyone. How’s that?”

Anastasia: “I’m thinkin’ that’s wise. Yer head seems to work well sometimes, Natsuki-kun.”

Anastasia laughed with an impressed look, and tossed a Conversation Mirror towards Priscilla. She caught it with her fan, and presented it in front of Liliana.

Liliana: “Wa-Wa-Wah?!”

Priscilla: “Singer, you take it. Since I cannot lift anything heavier than tableware.”

Liliana: “That fan is almost as heavy as some tableware. Don’t say pompous things.”

Priscilla: “Do not speak so foolishly, inspect this design. Gold is hung and inlaid from it luxuriously, and from just that it is weighty. Do not toss it in with the likes of dishes.”

Liliana: “Then isn’t that heavier than tableware…”

Regardless of what she had said, in the end, Liliana wound up taking it. Ignoring Liliana, who was quickly fixing her hair in the mirror, the last Conversation Mirror was passed to Wilhelm.

Subaru: “Considering the number of enemies, the group assigned to Lust needs this more than the group for Gluttony. Since two people are going it should be fine, but contact Anastasia right away if it seems dangerous.”

Wilhelm: “Understood, I will be sure to contact her.”

Showing consideration for Julius, Wilhelm placed the mirror in his breast pocket.

However, it was a slightly worrying judgment. Wilhelm could become hot with fury and ignore the instructions from now. And Garfiel, needless to say, was the type to explode at the slightest provocation.

—Regardless, like this the battle preparations were complete.

Subaru: “Let’s take a moment. Once that’s done, we’ll leave and start the operation to recapture the control towers.”

At Subaru’s words, everyone present replied by nodding their heads. However, seeing their quiet, tense appearances, Subaru thought the mood was poor anyhow.

Subaru: “If you’re making angry faces, don’t you get the feeling that bad stuff gets closer?”

Otto: “A sign that Natsuki-san will say something strange occurred once more.”

Subaru: “It’s not weird. It’s important. No matter how large of an army gathers, if morale is low, it can turn into a rabble. I’m not saying our morale is low here, but I don’t think my motives are bad. So, let’s raise our voice.”

While clapping his hands, Subaru stood up.

Subaru: “Let’s do this, everyone! With this fight, get rid of these bastards who have disturbed this city! The Witch Cult fails, and we get a happy end!”

Others: “…”

At Subaru’s urging, they looked at each others’ faces. Then, nodding —

Others: “Ohhhhh—!!”

Like that, a high-morale reply came back.

If they were able to return with such a strong answer, then they would definitely be fine. This many members, this much of a vanguard, it was not something that could just be prepared again.

—The city recapture, began in earnest.

Subaru: "—This fight will be our victory!!"

With Subaru saying whatever he wanted, the round table meeting concluded.

2

Her muffled sensations recovered; her consciousness slowly returned to reality.

As reality started to permeate through drowsy senses, the feelings in her hands and feet naturally returned. Then, while feeling spread through the rest of her body, her first sensation was of something soft embracing her.

Warm, it was relaxing like she was wrapped up in a large animal's fur.

She had felt something similar quite a long time ago. A long time ago, back when she was young, a time when her mind was not running in time with her body, a time when she feared sleeping alone.

Now far from the feeling of that fur's texture, quite some time had passed since then.

Emilia: "—Ah."

At first, her eyes welled with tears from its nostalgic touch. Putting aside her silly desire to keep feeling the warmth, she slowly opened her eyes. Her long eyelashes shivered, and amethyst irises blankly noted the world.

She was in a room with high ceilings, and strange decorations which she had never seen before. Lying on a bed there, she found herself wrapped up in a summer blanket crafted from quality fur.

A stranger seated beside her had been cleaning her face with a wet towel.

Emilia: “You are…?”

???: “…”

Looking down upon her when she opened her eyes was a beautiful woman with a pure-white face.

That rather sickly, blood-drained face, was pretty and expressionless like a doll’s. Her beauty was such that she would surely light up the room if she smiled, but her face was rigidly held like a mask, which could not laugh.

Rising, her long hair waving behind her, the woman in a black dress left the room right away.

She quickly tried to call out to her, but as she fretted on how to call her while not knowing her name, the door clicked shut. As such, she found herself alone.

Emilia: “Where am I?”

Hesitantly, she sat up on the bed. Though she felt slightly heavy, no pain or signs of poor condition could be felt. The heaviness could be from using too much magic she was not yet used to, a sign that her body was unable to withstand that burden.

Having gotten that far, right away she remembered what had occurred to her.

Emilia: “Right. Ah, at the square, I fought a strange person, and…”

Continuing on, in her head the events from just before she lost consciousness came to mind.

A monster with a face wrapped in bandages—The one Subaru had called Wrath, had turned with fearsome combat prowess and downright creepy amounts of anger towards herself. For a moment, she had taken on the fight at an advantage, but then losing to the force of those fiercely burning flames, she had been sent flying—

Emilia: “And then, I must have passed out. But I’m still alive.”

As she was outmatched, there was no doubt it had been a desperate situation.

Someone had perhaps come to her aid. Subaru and Beatrice had been there, it could be she had been rescued by those two. Even then, her heart was crushed by how pathetic she had been.

Emilia had struck such a pose at Subaru, and had boasted so much, but not only had she lost, she needed to be rescued too.

Emilia: “Mh, there’s no time to be dejected. I’m already late, so there’s no time to pause in my steps and repent. I’ll reflect while walking.”

Tapping her snow-white cheeks with both hands, she raised her spirits. Time spent depressed was time squandered.

Having been provided a bed and blanket and even having been watched over by a caretaker, this place must be a benevolent someone's home. Since she had not been taken to her own place, her situation may have been quite severe.

Emilia: "But I can't feel any pain, so maybe a skilled healer… Ehh?"

While moving to stand, Emilia came to realize something about herself.

Emilia: "I'm naked."

When her bare feet touched the floor, she noticed that not a single piece of cloth was draped on her body. Emilia's head tilting, she first wrapped the blanket around her body and got down from the bed. Gazing around the room, she looked around hoping for something to wear, but regrettably could not find anything.

Emilia: "Hmm, what should I do? If I leave the room like this, I'll be thought of as bad-mannered…"

Before leaving the forest, and after leaving the forest, in-between study sessions, and having learned various things, that point had been drilled into her by Puck and Annerose, respectively. She should not show skin in front of others. Following that rule, then her own appearance right now was completely a problem.

Emilia: "But, I'm worried about everyone and it's an emergency, so it can't be helped."

She had to find out what had happened after the conclusion of the battle with the Sin Archbishop as quickly as possible. With that as justification, Emilia emerged from the room garbed in a single blanket.

Walking out to the corridor, it was definitely not a building she had ever seen before. However, compared to how she had imagined it, the outside of the room gave an oddly unsophisticated impression of a cold hallway.

Emilia: “I thought I was somewhere like a mansion, but that was totally wrong. Hmm, is it just this room that’s strange?”

Turning back, she looked at the room she had slept in.

A large bed, and a small wardrobe. However, upon closer inspection, she could not escape the impression that something was off about it. It gave the impression that a bed and other furniture had been brought and messily piled inside an empty room.

And that might not have been wrong. By checking the atmosphere of the corridor, this was definitely not a place meant for people to live in. This was a place where people worked. If she focused her ears, the faint sound of water and a hint of something operating could be heard.

While Emilia puzzled over that, there—

???: “Ah, it seems you’ve opened your eyes, how relieving, what a relief. I’m relieved you’re safe.”

Emilia turned around, having been addressed.

Just then, at the far end of the corridor, a young man emerged. Having discovered Emilia, the white-haired youth grinned at her, walking relaxedly.

???: “However, I’m not comfortable with you walking around right after waking up. It’s just that you endured a lot of hardships, so if something happened to your body, it’d be a headache. In that regard, I want you to take good care of yourself. Even moreso since it’s not just your body, I mean.”

Emilia: “Hm, you are…?”

Blinking, Emilia gazed at the young man speaking to her.

That attitude of narrowing the gap between others with a single step was somewhat close to Subaru’s. However, the crucial difference between Subaru and him, was that his attitude had no intention of respecting the other person.

That was Subaru's timid virtue, and the young man in front of her did not show any hint of it. It was as if he did not have any remorse for others.

—At the same time, Emilia was recalling a feeling she could not describe regarding the young man in front of her.

???: "Is that so? Sorry, sorry. I've even seen your sleeping face, but this is your first time seeing me, I'd assume. I haven't even given you my name yet. Even if you and I are to be in a relationship, this kind of impolite attitude won't do. I was too hasty on that point, it is my fault. I honestly am sorry. Since I am a human being capable of such things."

Emilia: "Y-Yes…"

Emilia's reply to that endlessly, fluently speaking young man was quite heavy.

The reason for that might be that his attitude overwhelmed her, but a more significant implication was contained within. That was, Emilia's subconscious was appealing to her.

—She felt that she recalled seeing this young man, somewhere before.

???: "It's a waste of a scene, it's a shame that this place lacks the atmosphere. But I believe that when you look back to it, you will remember it as a special moment. If you were to look at it that way, it would not be a bad thing. A small happiness day-by-day is just more than enough to make the path known as life brighten up. I'm sure this is especially true for you. You want to look at the good parts of life, and not just the bad parts. Don't you think so too, Emilia?"

Emilia: "I don't recall telling you my name… So, you are?"

???: "Oops, I'm sorry. It's a bad habit of mine to stop considering my surroundings when I become excited about something. It's for that reason that I sometimes dislike my affectionate personality. It could be that you are the one making me feel such emotions. And so, my name, was it?”

After an incredibly long and flexible detour, this young man was barely entering the main subject.

Feeling mysterious tingles burn her skin, Emilia did not take her eyes off of the young man’s behavior. She intuitively understood that her own safety was at risk.

And the cause of that intuition was the young man in front of her.

Regulus: “My name is Regulus Corneas. I hold a leadership position in a certain group, but something like that is of no concern to you. What is indeed important to you is just one thing. That I am your husband, and that you are my seventy-ninth wife.”

Emilia: “…Eh?”

The young man—Regulus presented his name, and the meaning of what he so marvelously spoke of, she did not understand. Emilia was confused, and her pretty brows frowned. However Regulus paid no mind to Emilia’s reaction, and was staring at the girl’s body, covered only with a single light cloth.

Regulus: “That appearance is poison to the eyes. I’ll order a change of clothes to be brought over right away. You can relax. They are in the same situation as you, my other wives. Putting on wedding attire is something they have gotten used to.”

Emilia: “Wedding attire, what do you mean? No, it isn’t just that. Calling me your wife, what are you saying?”

Regulus: “Right. I was forgetting the most important thing! For one such as myself, that was dangerous.”

Emilia opened her mouth to ask another question, but Regulus was not listening. He clapped his hands, and lightly grabbed Emilia’s shoulder as she was about to question.

As she felt the odd amount of force coming from those fingers, Emilia frowned. Drawing close enough to touch Emilia’s forehead, Regulus gazed into her eyes.

Regulus: “I was forgetting an important, very important question. Your awareness of the wedding comes after this. Emilia, this is important, so I want you to answer from the depths of your heart. For our future, it’s very important.”

Emilia: “…”

At that weird level of pressure, Emilia swallowed her breath, remaining silent.

Taking her attitude as assent, Regulus smiled. And with that smile, he asked.

Regulus: “Emilia, are you a virgin? This is really important.”

And with that smile, he spoke.

Chapter 48:
The Person You Will One Day Fall in Love With

1

For a moment, Emilia did not understand the meaning of what had been said to her.

Without thinking, she swallowed. The young man in front of her—Regulus, in response, raised a hand while smiling.

Regulus: “Aah, I’m sorry for doing this so suddenly. I may have shocked you a little. Honestly, I apologize on that point. It seems I keep on having to say it, but I am a man capable of apologizing. There are unsightly people in this world who do not acknowledge their own sins and blame this and that, too small to admit they make their own mistakes. They think they do not get a single thing wrong, even if you empty out everything they’ve done since birth to this very moment and examine it. Mistaken so, I think they become like that, but just how arrogant can they be? If they could just examine what lies under their feet a little more, and compare themselves to the vastness of the world and come to truly understand how small of an existence they really are, then they would not end up like that, just a single apology, is what they call a personality? It reflects their character. Don’t you think so?”

Emilia: “Then, apologizing is important?”

Regulus: “Correct! That’s right, apologizing is important. What a relief. It’s obvious, and you seem to understand that point, so I am quite relieved. In this world, people that can not understand something so obvious are unexpectedly many. It makes me dislike them. So, it seems there’s no problem on the matter of adjusting understandings between the spouses about apologizing. I’m relieved, it seems like I’ll be able to get along well with you from now on. And so, I apologized. The problem was, I was being a little impatient…”

Having spoken up to that point, Regulus’ eyes looked Emilia up and down. As her body was only wrapped in a blanket, she froze up a little at that view.

Regulus: “Yes, shyness is important even between spouses. On that point I think you are very good. Once again, it’s about the question from just before, I’d rather you not misunderstand. I, more than anything, was not checking whether or not you are a virgin from a worldly point of view. I’ve said this multiple times, but I am your husband and you are my wife. It will not do for a marriage to lack strong ties of affection and courtesy. Connected with the long, long chain called love, devoting everything to your partner is obvious. Therefore, that you have never been touched by another man… That’s the kind of assurance I need.”

Emilia: “Assurance that, I wasn’t touched by others…?”

Regulus: “Of course, checking whether or not you retain your maidenhood by sure evidence is nonsense. But as a kind of touchstone, I think it has such significant value. So, deliberately, even knowing it would be an experience you don’t enjoy, I asked. I want you to understand that this is due to my love for you. Some stranger you don’t love, who cares about how their virginity is. It’s because I love you, that’s why I’m checking.”

Regulus fluently and continuously spoke of the rationale behind his thoughts. Battered by these waves of words, Emilia felt something creepy about the cooly-talking Regulus.

Without knowing why, something about his appearance ceaselessly stirred a feeling of déjà vu in her heart, and the contents of what she heard pouring like water were not retained in her memory. Only, she was aware of one thing.

What he treated as important, the term “virgin”. That was—

Regulus: “And so, I want to ask once again. —Hey, are you a virgin? Or not?”

Emilia: “Um, by “virgin”, what do you mean? Sorry. I, haven’t heard it before.”

Regulus: “…What?”

After being thrown a question prepared with flowery words, Emilia apologetically replied so.

She knew Regulus had a strong attachment to the word, but Emilia did not know very well what it meant.

Perhaps, it refers to a young girl, she thought.

Inquiring in a low voice and hearing Emilia’s reply, Regulus’ expression clouded.

Closing his eyes, he shut his mouth. Fallen in thought like that, his appearance caused anxiety to creep up, but the silence didn’t last as long as imagined.

Opening his eyes wide, Regulus reached his open hand towards Emilia. And,

Regulus: “Excellent. —You are, my ideal girl.”

Emilia: “Eeh?”

Holding Emilia’s hand, Regulus wore a bright smile on his face.

It was a truly happy face, unlike the smile from just before. He had the kind of expression, that a beaming child might make after getting a toy they really wanted from their doting parents.

Regulus grabbed and shook Emilia’s hand up and down, and repeated the gesture many times.

Regulus: “Yes. That is how it should be. The virginity of the body this, the virginity of the body that, it’s not really suitable for me as a touchstone, I had always thought so. However, the true sense of pureness is what lies in your heart. Your body being virgin is a given! What’s really important, is that your mind remains virgin as well. I feel as if I have reached a truth. Amazing. You have brought something new to my previously satisfied self.”

Emilia: “…”

Regulus: “Yes, yes, I get it. Rest assured, I will welcome you as my wife. Besides, because of that I realized something important. Henceforth, when welcoming a new wife, just inquiring as to their virginity will be insufficient. If they are not at the level of a child lacking knowledge of what virginity even is, that lowers the value of a wife. An adulterous heart will not do. It is unbefitting of my wife.”

Releasing Emilia’s hand, Regulus stepped away with a very satisfied appearance.

The meaning of his remarks were still not very well grasped by Emilia. In the first place, what he meant by “husband” and “wife” was a mystery to her. By Emilia’s understanding, the wife was part of something the father and mother were, one each, but from Regulus’ remarks, the image of many wives came to mind. Such was a notion far off from Emilia’s common sense of the nature of married couples. Perhaps he was talking about a different concept with a shared pronunciation?

Regulus; Whoa, and your appearance cannot be left like that. I will arrange for a change of clothes straight away. —No. 184! Come here.”

Emilia: “…”

Leaving the perplexed Emilia alone, Regulus suddenly spoke out a number. Then, from the other side of the corridor, the woman who had left the room Emilia was in now appeared. A young woman with long blonde hair and a polite manner, she arrived next to Regulus and demurely greeted him on the spot. Regulus nodded at her gestures, and Regulus: “For her…A change of clothes for No. 79 As soon as that’s prepared, I will hold the wedding. This child is in the same position as all of you. Get along, and do take care of her.”

No. 184: “…”

Regulus: “Yes, you are no longer prone to laughing. —Good child. A good wife.”

To the silently nodding woman, Regulus spoke as if satisfied.

After that, approaching Emilia who still seemed lost, he ran a finger through the side of her silver hair, and stroked her head.

Regulus: “Then, a little while later.”

Emilia: “Yes…”

Emilia’s instinct was appealing to her, to avoid going against him.

Accepting Emilia’s short reply, Regulus then, with the sound of footsteps, disappeared to the other side of the corridor.

Regulus had merely just been there, calmly too—Even then, his existence gave off a strange pressure, which seemed to her a dangerous threat that reminded her of the time her old homeland had been threatened.

No. 184: “This way.”

The woman next to Emilia suddenly called out to her. She had been gazing at the back which had long since disappeared. Hearing the woman’s voice for the first time, she was reminded of string instruments from its clear beauty. However, the voice, just like her expression, felt as if all feelings of emotion in it had frozen and hardened.

Emilia: “Hey, sorry. I, have a looot of questions I want to ask…”

No. 184: “Your change of clothes.”

Emilia: “The clothes are important, but there’s also…Yes, do you know where this place is? I was, at a plaza in Priestella with a Witch Cult person…Ah, really.”

Ignoring Emilia as she tried to ask questions, the woman started to walk off immediately. Following quickly behind her, Emilia kept asking questions trying to somehow shine light on the situation, but that fully-turned back replied to her with nothing.

Guided by the woman in front of her, she arrived next to the room she had slept in previously. It was also a space which resembled a simply arranged room, in which furniture had been forcefully shoved inside.

Emilia: “This must have, originally, been a slightly different room…”

No. 184: “The clothes chosen with care, and so on, Husband-sama brought them over. No. 79, you are to change into them.”

Emilia: “By No. 79, do you mean me? Just now, I think Regulus called me by that, too. You’re…”

No. 184: “I am No. 184 His wife, like you.”

Emilia: “Like me…”

As the door closed, only then did the woman—Naming herself No. 184, engage herself in conversation. There was no change in the voice which had lost its emotion, but it seemed barely possible to make conversation.

Emilia: “About the word ‘wife’, I’ve asked a few times, but does it mean the same as ‘missus’? Then, I, don’t think I’ve become Regulus’ missus…”

No. 184: “Even if no such idea resides with you, he has such a notion. And if he has that idea, that means yours are irrelevant.”

Emilia: “Isn’t that strange. To become a missus, you have to be married with your master, right? I, didn’t get married with Regulus, and don’t have any thoughts to. Marrying is between a guy person and a girl person, who say they will keep being together and have to keep liking each other after. I, can’t make a promise like that with anyone yet.”

No. 184: “If you mean a wedding, it will be held right now. With that, the matter will be concluded.”

No. 184 did not seem to possess any notion of listening to Emilia’s words. Even as dialogue seemed established, it actually wasn’t, and Emilia became more and more confused.

In the meantime, No.184 had approached Emilia, and was trying to pull aside the blanket covering her.

Emilia: “Ah, wait, what are you doing?”

No. 184: “Changing you into bridal attire right away. Fortunately, your clothes are already prepared. When undressing you to lay you in bed, your size was checked, so please rest assured.”

Emilia: “You were the one who undressed me?”

No. 184: “Do you think I’m Husband-sama? Please be assured. He does not make a habit of stealing peeks at women’s skin, and he doesn’t have any interest in women in the first place. After your virginity has been assured, he does not do anything.”

Emilia: “You, are talking about that ‘virgin’, too?”

No. 184: “…It is surprising. Surely, but it wasn’t acting, you really did not know?”

For the first time, something resembling emotion slightly flitted across No. 184’s expression. At that faintly surprised look, Emilia opened her eyes wide, then slightly laughed.

Emilia: “What, you can be surprised, too. Then, you can talk while smiling. That is, much better suited for you, I think.”

No. 184: “…Husband-sama does not desire it. I will also leave this advice with you: “Husband-sama likes your usual look. It is wiser not to laugh, rage, or change your expression. If possible, even not opening your mouth would be better, I think.”

Emilia: “Are you saying not to talk? Why?”

No. 184: “Since you won’t know, whether it infringe on Husband-sama’s rights.”

Stripping the bedding from Emilia, No. 184 proffed undergarments. After receiving it, she held it up to her body, and the size seemed to fit perfectly.

Watching her putting on the undergarments while shaking her hands and feet, No. 184 suddenly gave a long sigh.

Emilia: “Is something wrong?”

No. 184: “…No, I was merely thinking that you were beautiful. Your narrow hands and feet, white skin, and long silver hair, especially.”

Emilia: “—? Thanks. Even if you don’t really mean it, I’m happy. I only have Subaru and Anne telling me things like that.”

No. 184: “Subaru…A man, is it?”

Emilia: “Yes, my knight. He will rea~lly be worrying about me, I think. So, I want to find out where I am quickly…”

Probably, it would be causing him lots of worry.

In Emilia’s head, there wasn’t any concern of Subaru having been done in. He had Beatrice with him, and the notion of Subaru falling into a situation where he would die didn’t reach Emilia’s imagination in the first place. Subaru, he would get through it somehow.

And so, being captured without being able to say anything to Subaru was really pathetic.

No. 184: “That man you call Subaru, do not ever mention him to Husband-sama.”

Emilia: “Uh, why?”

No. 184: “To borrow Husband-sama’s words, the virginity of your mind may become suspect.”

Emilia: “Again, it’s about that ‘virgin’.”

Giving a term as the reason without explaining what it meant was really confusing.

Without explanation beyond that for the pouting Emilia, No. 184 took a pure white dress from the closet, and held it close to Emilia's body.

With a brilliant-looking front, and many fancy ornaments stuck on, it was a beautiful dress.

Emilia: "But, it looks hard to move in."

No. 184: "Complaints too, not speaking those would be wise. I will dress you now."

Wondering, her head tilted askew, whether such a wonderful outfit would even suit her, Emilia was putting it on as instructed by No. 184, she was changing into the dress.

2

Regulus: "—Aah, isn't that just great. As I thought, white suits you."

Emilia: "…Thanks."

Regulus said in a bright voice when he saw that Emilia had changed clothes,

His appearance too had changed from their hallway meeting just before. Emilia's expression suggested that she had noticed, and Regulus lightly popped his collar in reply,

Regulus: "A wedding is important, you know. Normally, I am of the thought not to not be attired as such, but I wouldn't want to embarrass you with some unfun stubbornness. It is the ideal for spouses to show consideration for each other, without thinking of it as uncomfortable. For this level of work, I do not wish to burden you with worried thoughts about all the consideration I have shown you, I merely want you to know that, if it is for your sake, I am a man that can accept making some changes. And for the venue, it will be ready soon, in just a little while."

Emilia: "The venue…You mean here?"

Dressed in a white tuxedo and robes, Regulus turned his head, and following him, Emilia also gazed around the space she was in.

It was a cathedral—To be exact, it was a cathedral used only for the single important task of beginning a wedding ceremony.

After having been changed by No.184, Emilia had left the building for the first time, and quickly realized she had been resting in a room within one of the control towers. As such, Emilia had been led by No. 184 from the tower and brought right to this cathedral.

The outside of the cathedral was busy with laboring figures bustling about, for the wedding preparations which they were methodically continuing. And wordlessly, blankly carrying out the preparation of the venue, wherever one looked, were beautiful and fashionably attired women.

Regulus: “These girls are my wives, they’re in the same position as you are. All together, they number 291…It’s sad, but a lot of those kids died, you know. But still, for those that are still with me, I pour my love onto them equally, I think. That’s obvious. Some principle of favoring and loving only one person is too distorted to be fitting for what you call a husband. I never do such absurd things. A fixed love, in a fixed amount, by fixed ways, I divvy it out. Here, there is no favoritism, no inequality, no injustice. Be relieved. For I, also love you in that same way.”

Emilia: “What you are saying, isn’t it…”

???: “—Husband-sama. Briefly, a word.”

“Isn’t it weird?”, Emilia was about to say.

Coming to the front, No. 184 who had been waiting at their side spoke to Regulus Hearing No. 184’s words, he vaguely furrowed his brows.

Regulus: “You know. I’m talking to her right now, you see that, right? Interrupting me now, when we’re sharing in nurturing the sprouting of love between us, just me and her, don’t you think you’re smearing poison on it? Or is that just not on your mind? Such small courtesies between a husband and wife, I think they’re really important. Didn’t I keep telling you that? And yet, by still getting in the way, you’re making my very minor wish go to waste.

What do you think, No. 184?”

No. 184: “I am truly sorry. However, this is important. I know it is presumptuous, but I am only acting out of concern for Husband-sama. I humbly ask you, to hear my words.”

His speaking grew more rapid, and signs of danger erupted from Regulus’ whole body. However, even exposed to that razor-sharp look, No. 184’s resolute attitude did not bend as she advised him. Naturally, at that sight, Regulus drew back the thorns from his appearance.

Regulus: “…Fine. Speak. Sparing some kindness for the wife, is a husband’s generosity. I am not such a petty man that I can’t even do that much.”

No. 184: “I am truly grateful. Well, it is regarding the message of the broadcast from a while ago…Will that be all right? If, potentially, a disturbance was made at the wedding.”

Regulus: “The broadcast? Ah, the one that the trembling voice I don’t really know made. Does it actually matter? If they just talk, it’s not a problem at all. It’s some complaint-filled coward that can’t even speak of their own skills, listing off some fitting words, that’s all it seems to me. If it’s Capella, or Sirius, if it’s for those trash then I don’t know…But I don’t care. Or, is it that you don’t trust in my strength? Then, as a wife, are you doubting your husband’s abilities?”

No. 184: “No, I believe in it. If Husband-sama is there, then we have nothing to worry about. I was merely hoping for Husband-sama’s words to wash away my anxiousness, that’s all. Please kindly forgive a lacking wife, who failed to rely on you.”

With a seemingly prepared reply, No. 184 tried to dodge Regulus’ inquiry. With a feeble girl’s words and an expressionless face and voice, No. 184 compelled him. And Regulus shook his head as if impressed by her words.

Regulus: “Is that how it was. That, I myself didn’t think of it, sorry. Even if I wasn’t asked, I still should have noticed your anxious thoughts. One must consider the thoughts of others, even if they are unspoken, so just how much was I acting as I pleased? I reflect on myself.”

No. 184: “It is rather I that is deeply sorry. Husband-sama’s words have given me courage. I, too, will immediately set out to help in preparing the venue.”

Regulus: “Ah, please do.”

Giving her farewell, No. 184 turned away from Regulus. At the same time, she met Emilia’s eyes and gave a furtive sort of wink. That was, probably, a warning to Emilia about the carelessness of her words from before she had been cut off.

It was not wrong to describe Emilia as having neglected the danger Regulus poses. As such things were communicated, Emilia didn’t hesitate to make a split-second judgement.

Emilia: “—Watch out!”

No. 184: “Huh?”

As No. 184 was trying to make her escape, Emilia tugged hard on her arm. Clutching her tall but light body to her chest, Emilia took a big step backwards.

The space in front of her, where No. 184 had stood moments before, was caressed by the wind. Opening a long furrow in the cathedral floor, shattering it, and piercing straight through in a line of destruction. Without slowing down, the wind hit the main gate, turning the entryway into powder, then spread its destruction outwards.

Emilia: “…”

At that instant of overwhelming destructive power, Emilia, who was cuddling with No. 184, could not speak. No. 184 also, noticing the destruction while getting up from behind her, froze and completely curled up.

And, standing at the destruction’s point of origin in a pose as if he had swung his right arm moments before, was Regulus,

Regulus: “Sorry, sorry. My hand just slipped. —It’s a relief that nothing happened to you kids.”

Emilia: “…”

Regulus: “I’ll be in the waiting room until it’s time, so call me when everything’s ready, ok? Aah, while you’re waiting too, wouldn’t putting up your hair be better? That option is much more attractive, I believe. It is beautiful as it is, I think, but putting effort into being beautiful is something that must be done ceaselessly is what I’m thinking. Rather than trying to stay beautiful, trying to become beautiful, is more the minimum level of courtesy towards someone that likes you, I say. Of course, I myself remain satisfied with my currently filled environment, but I have no mind to limit what I have been given already.”

Talking as if the moment’s destruction was nothing, Regulus, while smiling at Emilia, headed for the waiting room door on the other side of the cathedral. Blankly left staring at the leftover traces of destruction, she was taking in deep breaths.

Emilia: “Just now, what was that…?”

No. 184: “…Thank you very much, for saving me.”

Saying so, No. 184 pulled away from Emilia’s bosom Her previously frozen form fixed her disheveled hair, and she left Emilia’s side right away. Her steps were taking her to, where the other women inside the cathedral were preparing.

It seemed those women were continuing their work with looks that suggested they were completely unrelated to the destruction from before. Not only that, but several of them had gathered around the destroyed floor and door, and could be seen beginning to work on somehow hiding its traces out of view.

Emilia: “Wait! This is weird! Don’t you guys think it’s weird?”

Others: “…”

At that unperturbed attitude, Emilia raised her voice in confusion. As one, the women paid no heed to Emilia's voice, and merely continued to prepare in silence.

If it's like this, then it will go on forever, Emilia thought, heading for the only person who her words seemed to get through to. Towards No. 184,

Emilia: "Just now, weren't you almost killed? If I hadn't pulled you back, surely your body would have been blown away. It was scary? Then, why."

No. 184: "Well, what is it? I've already thanked you for saving me. Beyond that, what else do you want from me? Anything else, is that not a violation of my rights?"

Emilia: "This isn't about rights or obligations! Let's talk about something more—More important!"

Emilia pointed to the women still hard at work inside the cathedral.

Emilia: "Regulus said they're his wives. They're all, that person's wife? And since they're wives, they do what he says? If you're a wife, then even if you're about to be murdered, you quietly accept it…That stuff, is weird. It's weird!"

Emilia: "That is too strange…Marriage is soo happy, it's something happy people do, isn't it? To me, you, the others; None of them look happy at all. Am I, wrong?"

No. 184: "Yes, you are mistaken. Even if you aren't happy, marriage is possible. Spouses do not have to love each other. If they keep on being together, they become spouses. Then, as spouses, they grow used to it."

No. 184, did not deny that she remained in a position she hated. Not only was she not refuting it, she was even affirming her own situation. That was distorted, and wrong.

Marriage, is for those who want to become spouses. It is not something you just want to get used to.

Emilia: “That marriage stuff, I have no intention of going along with it. I, will be leaving like this.”

Others: “…”

Those women who had not been paying attention to Emilia’s words, at that they now raised their faces. As the wedding dress-clad Emilia announced her rejection of the marriage, they stared.

Weathering the storm of those emotionless gazes, Emilia squared her shoulders.

Emilia: “I have someone worrying about me. And there’s a lot of things I have to do no matter what. So, I can’t just end up in a place like this. Together with everyone, right away, I will do what I have to.”

No. 184: “Such things, Husband-sama will not forgive it.”

Emilia: “I, do not remember having become a wife of Regulus. So, I don’t want something like forgiveness. Together with everyone, then…I will definitely return to save you all.”

No. 184: “—Euh.”

Emilia: “All of you, I know you’re not staying with Regulus because you want to. So I’ll, talk to Regulus and free everyone. Anyone that still wants to stay with him then, can just keep being his wife. But, the people that want to be separated, I’ll separate them. Even if you’re forcefully married like that, it’s meaningless if you’re not happy together.”

The picture Emilia had painted inside her mind, was of two people who loved each other and looked forward to being joined together. What floated in her mind, from her dream before, were Fortuna and Juice’s appearances. Those two people had never wed, and had never become spouses. Still, she thought it was good.

If it was those two, then Emilia wished she could have married them. A happy marriage and marriage ties of mutual love guaranteed, their relationship was the right one.

So—

Emilia: “I know of people who loved each other, but could not be married. And so, getting married and being unable to be happy after, I don’t like that kind of relationship.”

Others: “…”

At Emilia’s declaration, a stir spread throughout the indifferent women. But, No. 184 rapidly extracted herself from that hubbub.

She looked right at Emilia, and then at the destroyed entrance.

No. 184: “If you are choosing to leave, then that is your right. However, Husband-sama would not forgive us. On the spot, surely, we will all be slain.”

Emilia: “Even though you’re his wife…?”

No. 184: “A wife that cannot even fulfill Husband-sama’s wishes, is the same in Husband-sama’s view as one not able to fill all the requirements of a wife. If you leave, we will die. If you will still go, it will be you who kills us.”

Emilia: “…”

Facing Emilia, No. 184 while taking her own life hostage spoke.

Her opinion, with its extreme contents. As if it reflected the opinion of them all, the women in the cathedral stood to surround Emilia, and restricted her movements.

Of course, there was nobody there who could fight and stop her. They were all somewhat ordinary women. Born from ordinary households, having ordinary morals, having lived while yearning for ordinary happiness, ordinary women.

At some point, a wheel had come loose, and they had merely become accepted as one of Regulus’ wives.

Others: “…”

She was unable to refute one bit of their resolute determination. Emilia had seen Regulus' crimes with her own eyes.

For just slightly talking back, he had simply tried to blow their life away in response, it was that Regulus. When he learned of Emilia's escape, it was hard to claim that he would not take his anger out on them. It was none other than Regulus' wives who understood this well.

Emilia: "How many, of Regulus' wives are here?"

No. 184: "Husband-sama's spouses, total 291 people. Of those, 238 have already passed away, so the remaining number 53 in all."

Emilia: "Those wives who passed away…"

No. 184: "Do you need an explanation?"

The question she received in reply, gave off a feeling of mocking her question.

That answer, even without asking, Emilia came to realize it. And that answer lay in none other that the actions of those women circling around her without speaking.

Emilia: "If I left, then all of you would suffer something harsh…"

Rather than a harsh punishment, it would more likely be a certain, unavoidable death.

Unmistakably, these women were hostages to Emilia's free will. Thinking of the damage leaving this place would incur, she should not move rashly.

She thought about Subaru and his companions, outside of the cathedral in Priestella, worrying about her now.

She thought of them, and in her mind, Emilia apologized.

Then,

Emilia: "Okay. The wedding, let's do it."

3

After that, the venue's preparation proceeded at a rapid pace.

Though they weren't professionals, the damage was repaired so well that it was barely noticeable anymore. Just by looking at the fine workmanship, one could tell just how often those women had to clean up after Regulus' tantrums.

After Emilia agreed to proceed with the wedding, No.184 and a few of Regulus' other wives tended to her hair in the dressing room and decorated her with various adornments.

Except for the times when Annerose helped her with her hair, this was the first time Emilia's hairstyle had been so elaborate since Puck disappeared within the crystal.

Her long silver hair was gathered up and woven into a braid.

So as not to distract from the purity of her white dress, with only a few simple embellishments, Emilia's bridal gown was complete.

Emilia: "…"

Looking at her reflection in the mirror, Emilia admired the women's handiwork.

Indeed, she looked very different from usual. With no one around to make demands about her hair aside from Subaru's occasional requests, it had been a while since she was imbued with such feminine charm.

Though she couldn't help but feel it was wasted on her.

No.184: "Well, let's go. Please take care not to damage Husband-sama's mood."

No.184 reminded Emilia as they headed out of the dressing room.

Turning into the chapel, Emilia saw that the attendees had already lined up, waiting for her arrival—all of them wives of Regulus, along with Regulus himself in a white tuxedo standing in front of the altar.

Although she didn’t know the exact procedures, Emilia stepped onto the red carpet laid from the entrance and walked towards the altar where Regulus was waiting.

Regulus nodded with satisfaction when he spotted the beautifully adorned Emilia,

Regulus: “I almost didn’t recognize you when you put on the dress, but the adornments took it to a whole other level. I was right to have kept No.79’s seat vacant. I couldn’t be happier with my judgment.”

Emilia: “No.79…Why’s that number vacant?”

Regulus: “Well, there used to be a woman who I initially thought would be a perfect fit for that number, but unfortunately I deemed her unsuitable before the wedding could take place. Although her all-important looks was very close to my ideal, I nevertheless reluctantly kept that seat vacant. But thanks to that, I met you, so it was all worthwhile after all.”

Emilia: “Kept… vacant…”

What’s that supposed to mean?

The mere sound of it reignited Emilia’s already desensitized sense of awryness.

But even with this vague outline, she couldn’t quite put her finger on just what it was. Meanwhile, Regulus adjusted his suit in front of Emilia in her bridal gown.

Regulus: “Well now, shall we commence the wedding ceremony? I suppose it’s a bit on the informal side, but I hope you don’t mind? As long as the ceremony proceeds properly, the rest are just superficial details. I’m not one of those fools who prioritize the surface only to lose sight of the essence. Failing to see a matter’s substance that way is simply laughable. How can someone be satisfied with only exteriors and outward appearances? Content with their ignorant, self-contained existence, they’re are too stupid to even notice that they're being laughed at behind their backs."

Emilia: "…"

While Regulus continued his convoluted tirade, No.184 walked to the other side of the altar. Apparently, she would serve as the facilitator of this ceremony.

Indeed, she seemed to be fulfilling a coordinating role among Regulus' 53 wives as well. Though it wasn't clear what that coordination amounted to when Regulus could kill any of them on the slightest whim.

That was just another reason why this man was beyond forgivable.

Emilia: "Say, Regulus. There's something I have to tell you before I marry you."

Therefore, Emilia wanted to make it absolutely clear.

No.184's expression tensed at Emilia's words. But Regulus gave a surprisingly friendly nod in reply.

Regulus: "Aah, that's right. There are some important things I want to tell you as well before you become my wife. Though I suppose I could gradually teach you after we are married, it's vital that you should be mentally prepared beforehand. To discover our differences here and there after we're already married would be tragic, don't you think? In order to make sure something so unfortunate doesn't happen, I think it's crucial that we openly share our thoughts with each other. Once we become a couple, we'll be bound heart and soul, so it's important that we sort this out first."

Emilia: "Mmn, yeah. If it means being bound heart and soul, it's important, isn't it."

Regulus: "Right? It's good that we get on the same page. So, my other wives must have already told you some of the rules, but why don't we go over them. First, once you're married to me, you are forbidden to smile."

Emilia: "…?"

Frowning, Emilia didn't seem to understand Regulus' meaning. But Regulus raised a finger and continued, "Well…",

Regulus: "It's quite important, you know. I like your face. I really like your face. I select my wives based on their faces. Beautiful, adorable, charmingly well-proportioned faces. I've had 291 wives in all, and all of them had beautiful faces. Your face is adorable too. And that's why you will become my wife. Do you understand?"

Emilia: "…"

Regulus: "Here's what I think. There are many, many people in this world much more selfish than I. Don't you often hear about couples whose love begins to die the moment they get married? They went into a relationship because they liked each other, but as soon as they're living together all sorts of problems start popping up. Incompatible tastes in food. Incompatible habits. Incompatible hobbies. Incompatible schedules. There're all sorts of selfish excuses, and once the illusions about their partner fall away, they treat them like trash. I utterly despise such hopeless people."

Smiling, Regulus happily extolled his views on love.

Innocently, unreservedly, he raved about his indignation at those who scorned love.

Regulus: "Who isn't a little selfish? But why the disillusionment? Someone you like may have different sensibilities than you, but why the disillusionment? How can people be so stupid? Isn't it absurd? That's why I select partners based on their faces. If my partner has a face I like, I won't grow disillusioned no matter what kind of person is behind it. Because I love that face. As long as that face is there, my love would never die."

Emilia: "…"

Regulus: "Even if they don't put away their clothes after they take them off. Even if they're a murdering maniac who indiscriminately butchers children. Even if their cooking skills are atrocious. Even if they sold their own brother to pay off their debt and ran away. Even if they don't separate different colored laundry that'll color-bleed into each other. Even if they're a psychopath who secretly kills animals for fun. Even if they have god-awful taste in clothing. Even if they're money-grubbing by nature. Even if they don't like to bathe and smells like a homeless person. Even if they seriously believe the apocalypse is coming and keeps on talking about it—I don't dislike them."

One after another, Regulus pointed to the 53 women present, shouting.

It wasn't clear which one which of those descriptions matched which one of the women. Nor could Emilia understand how he could claim to love only their faces and separate that from the person underneath.

Regulus: "I would never say it in past-tense like "I used to love". I love your face. Even if you're the Witch who seeks to slaughter every person in this world in utmost, excruciating agony, I will not grow disillusioned. As long as I have your face."

Emilia …What does that have to do with not smiling?"

Regulus: "It's very simple. There are times when a girl who's normally cute and beautiful can suddenly turn repulsive the moment they smile, you know? As if I could allow such a thing. So, it's not only smiling, but crying as well. Either way, I won't allow your cute adorable face to be distorted in any way. So, no smiling. No crying. No sulking. Only adorableness is permitted."

Holding Emilia's chin in his fingertips, Regulus quietly demanded.

As for what would happen if she refused, those earlier events had already answered that question.

But what made no sense was how he could he commit such senseless atrocities when he claimed to love their faces.

Emilia: "You said you love their faces and would never grow disillusioned… if so, then why did you attack this person earlier?"

Regulus: "Huh?"

Seeing Emilia pointing to No.184, Regulus tilted his head.

Without lowering her arm, Emilia broke free from Regulus' fingers,

Emilia: "If I hadn't pulled her away, this person would certainly have died. This is also someone whose face you love and therefore took as your wife, correct? If that's true, then how could you do such a thing?"

Regulus: "Aah, that's simple too. It's because, temperate as I am, she still managed to upset me. I don't ask for much, do I? But some people are just way too inconsiderate. I thought surely none of my wives is like that, but what else can I do when it's right in my face? Since there's no helping it, I had no choice but to fulfill out my obligations."

Emilia: "And so, you became disillusioned? You're contradicting what you said just now…"

Regulus: "I'm not disillusioned. I still like her face, I still love her. Even if she's dead, that still doesn't change my enduring love for her. Don't you hear it often? "Even when someone you love dies, that person lives on inside your heart, because your love for that person endures and will not fade"? That's exactly how it is with me."

Regulus' twisted logic was impeccable.

Impeccable, without the slightest confusion, his logic was complete within his mind. Without the slightest room for rebuttal, it was perfect, flawless.

In front of the speechless Emilia, Regulus furrowed his brows.

Because he spotted a color of distrust within the silent Emilia's eyes.

Regulus: "I've actually been wondering for a while now… do you, maybe have a problem with me? If so, then that's really disappointing. I've already made concession after concession out of consideration for you, yet can't you appreciate my considerations at all? A person shouldn't be all talk, you know. If you have just the slightest consideration for other people's feelings, if you could just put yourself in other people's shoes, you wouldn't be like this, I don't think. If a person can't even make that modest effort, then I can't see how such a person can have any value whatsoever. It's disrespectful. More specifically, it's disrespectful to me. That, that's unforgivable."

Emilia: "I think marriage should be something reeeaally beautiful."

Regulus: "Huh?"

Emilia: "It's a ceremony that joins two people who love each other and want to be with each other. It's a reeeaally big deal to like someone, and so, to find someone out of all the people in this world and have that person also like you back… is an amazing thing, I think."

Emilia in her bridal gown held a hand to her chest, while, listening, Regulus' face contorted with disbelief. The expressions of the wives in attendance, including No.184 at the altar, began to darken.

They must be worried for her, Emilia figured.

—It was proof that they were compassionate, kind-hearted people after all.

Emilia: "Why do you call your wives by their numbers?"

Regulus: "Why get caught up on names? Just like getting bogged down by the superficials, it's a complete misunderstanding of love. I don't need these superfluous embellishments to be confident that my love is real. And so, there is no need to debase myself with such vain trivialities. For love to be equal, one has to let go of those inessential aspects, don't you think?"

Emilia: "…I see. But, I don't dislike being called "Emilia-tan" by Subaru at all."

Regulus: "Subaru…?"

Hearing a name he could not let slide, a color of displeasure rose on Regulus' face.

But Emilia ignored the shift in Regulus' expression as she continued,

Emilia: "When Subaru calls me Emilia-tan, his voice is packed with feeling. And, occasionally, when he leaves out the "-tan", I can immediately tell that it's something special. I don't think it's pointless at all. Names should… carry that kind of feeling."

Regulus: "Hey uh, it's like you're just talking by yourself at this point, but, who is Subaru? It's a person's name, isn't it? Actually it's a man's name, isn't it? A girl who's about to marry mentioning a different man's name in front of the man she's about to marry, that goes against all common sense no matter how you look at it, doesn't it? Even if it's just some random stranger's name it still hurts, you know. It hurts. You know?"

Emilia: "He's not a random stranger. Subaru is my chosen Knight, a person who calls me by my name and tells me that he loves me."

Regulus: "—Hha?!"

Hearing Emilia's answer, a flood of bloodcurdling aura gushed from Regulus's body.

Sensing this, No.184 and the other wives immediately tried to run for it, but,

Regulus: "Don't move!! Anyone dares move, I'll cut their head off!"

Emilia: "…"

Regulus: "I'll let you explain yourself. Try to choose your words carefully so I don't misunderstand. I don't want this wedding to turn into someone's funeral. You know?"

Heaving his shoulders, shuddering, Regulus suppressed his emotions as he spoke.

Held in place by Regulus' threat, none of the attendants moved. But, without flinching, Emilia met his swelling aura head on.

Emilia: "Marriage should be between two people who love each other. But, I don't think this meets that criteria at all."

Regulus: "…"

Emilia: "Because, I still don't know how to love a man as a woman. Even though Subaru tells me that he loves me, I still can't return his feelings or even give him a straightforward answer. That's reeaaally unfair of me, and I know how much it hurts him. But…"

Regulus fell silent. But Emilia wasn't thinking about him.

Anyone could tell. That Emilia's eyes did not see him at all.

Emilia: "Even though I don't know how to love someone, I'm sure someday I will. One day I will love someone as a woman. And I've already decided who I'll love when that day comes. That's why…"

Taking a breath and looking up at Regulus, Emilia spoke.

Emilia: "—I can never be yours."

Regulus: "—hk! Aaaagh is that right?! Well I don't want a selfish bitch like you as my wife either! ALL THE BETTER HHAAHHH??!!"

Regulus' face bursted red at Emilia's declaration.

In front of Regulus' reaching fingers, Emilia's whole body surged with mana to meet his attack. To counter his unknown destructive mechanism, her first action should be—

"—?!"

Just when their attacks were set to begin, a violent noise crashed throughout the chapel.

Accompanying the sound was tremendous momentum as something shot straight into Regulus' body like a bullet. Crashing into Regulus in his white tuxedo and shattering upon impact was a wooden door panel—one of the two at the chapel entrance that they had just reinstalled.

It had flown all the way from the entrance to hit Regulus.

And,

???: “Damn it, we kicked at the same time but the result’s not the same at all! What’s with your leg strength?!”

????: “Sorry I didn’t adjust it properly. But it managed to hit the target I was aiming to hit, so it turned out alright, didn’t it?”

???: “The flashiness of the entry is nowhere near the same, okay? My kick only managed to open the door, but your kick landed a direct hit on the enemy…”

Two grumbling silhouettes appeared at the chapel entrance.

One was a black-haired boy, and the other a red-haired youth.

Emilia’s eyes widened in astonishment, and in front of her, Regulus picked away the wooden shards like picking off insects. Standing there, unhurt, he was glaring at the two intruders with contempt in his eyes.

Regulus: “You certainly have the gall, crashing a sacred wedding ceremony. I don’t remember inviting any male guests, but mind telling me who you are and what wedding presents did you bring? HHA?!”

Met with Regulus’ bellow, the two at the entrance looked at each other.

Then, giving each other a nod,

Subaru: “Spirit Knight without his spirit partner, Natsuki Subaru.”

Reinhard: “Descendant of the Sword Saint, Reinhard van Astrea.”

Announcing his name, Reinhard took a step forward.

Next to him, Subaru gave Emilia a wink before pointing at Regulus, saying,

Subaru: “I object to this marriage. —And I’ll be taking the bride with me.”

Bonus Short Stories

Otto Suwen’s Internal Affairs Struggle
Line 2

1

“I see… Hm, I understand. I’ll remember that, teacher.”

“Please do so. Well then, go back directly, please.”

Bitterly smiling to Emilia’s vaguely mischievous reply, Otto split from Subaru and the others, and started walking towards the city of water.

It was an exchange on the way back, which doubled as an evaluation meeting after the negotiations at the Muse Company had ended up being cancelled.

Having received Anastasia’s invitation, the whole Emilia Camp had arrived to Priestella. Otto had proposed to split with his fellows, such as Subaru and Garfiel, and go alone to do something else.

As his ostensible reason, he said that he would do it to keep up acquaintance, as the Internal Affairs Minister of his camp, with an influential person of the city. And, in fact, he did intend to fulfill such role, but his primordial reason was not that.

Subtly breathing, Otto directed his gaze at the bag he held in his own hands.

It was a handbag with nothing extraordinary to it, but the matter was its content.

Inside the bag was one book—of which, furthermore, most pages were burned to lumps of ash.

This book’s name was the ‘Book of Wisdom’—accurately speaking, that thing used to be the ‘Book of Wisdom.’

A big part of its binding was charred, and not a single page could be used to consult its contents. Since it was in a condition that made it more accurate to call it a bunch of burnt paper rather than to call it a book, the thoughts of the person who carried it around were unclear.

Truthfully, even Otto's reason appealed to him to dispose of such book stub at once. But his instinct, too, appealed to him to not do so.

Trapped between both his own reason and instinct, Otto took a deep, deep breath.

When he thought about what was about to come, he felt pretty heavy-hearted. —Because, in any case, from this, Otto would try to, ironically, restore the book that he knew well it was better to dispose of.

—The name of the 'Master Restorer' Darts was a famous name in his field.

He was someone who repaired broken and damaged items for a living, and he was said to use an extremely rare magic, called restoration magic, that could return whatever object to what it was in the beginning.

There were a lot of artisans who used their techniques to repair works of art such as pictures, but restoration magic seemed to be something he had devised all on his own, and some rumors stated he had turned even a 'Meteor' back to its original state.

Where Darts was located was in the Watergate City Priestella—therefore, relying on the rumors about him, Otto had brought the mysterious book stub to this city of water.

If the mysterious script were to be repaired by his hand, then maybe the book's content could be inspected. However, only restoring the book had the risk of the content being unreadable. Therefore, in order to restore even the item's original function, the 'Master Restorer' Dart's power was necessary.

Rumors had it that he was someone hard to please, but he would have to find a way to coax him.

Doing so, repairing the ‘Book of Wisdom,’ and verifying its contents was absolutely necessary.

Only if he could do that, would Otto Suwen be able to accept his current position.

—So would be the necessary ceremony for him to establish himself as the Emilia Camp’s Internal Affairs Minister.

2

—A story from those times, when the topic of the trip to Priestella had not even come out yet.

“—It’s this late at night, and you’re still working?”

When he was suddenly addressed from behind, Otto turned back.

The time was late night, the place was the dining room of the Roswaal estate. It was that one time of the day, so late even plants were said to be sleeping; but, for one part of the mansion’s residents, it was just the beginning of their active hours.

Otto was from that part, and from that same part was also the girl who stood behind him—

“—I see you were awake too, Ms. Ram.”

“Of course I’d be. I better lighten and support Master Roswaal’s workload, even if it’s just a little, or else he’ll just be overexerting himself.”

Seeing Ram holding her own arms as she spoke, Otto bitterly smiled.

Habitually, this girl in maid clothes would affect a disposition that was sloppy, frivolous, and indolent towards work; however, she was actually the one who devoted herself to the mansion’s owner with more passion than anybody else.

Although it was nothing worthy of praise, there were a lot of times in which Otto, immersed in his paperwork, had seen the sun rise from his room. Just like in his case, it was late when the lights in Ram's own room disappeared.

He knew that was a vestige of the fact that she took her work to her room and kept helping her master.

Of course, were he to point that out, her reaction would be instantaneous—

"Disgusting."

"What, I have not said anything, why have you looked at me when saying that?!"

"Stop talking so loudly. It would be bothersome if you happened to wake Lady Emilia or Petra up. If you want a diversion, you may go hit Barusu's room's door to your heart's content."

"I will not do such a malicious thing. …Ms. Ram, will you too drink coff?"

Shrugging his shoulders at Ram's curses, Otto shook his own cup and showed her its content.

The cup's content was coff—a simple beverage made out of parched beans that were made into powder and then dissolved in hot water. Its flavor was controlled by the quality of the beans and the way it was brewed, but Otto was not too mindful of the flavor.

His main objective when drinking coff was its trait as the most effective beverage when it came to fighting off sleepiness.

During his daily life as a merchant, which made up a considerable part of his whole life, his body had gotten totally used to a life of not sleeping.

In business, things such as driving a dragon carriage, while ignoring sleep in a match against speed were the order of the day.

On those days, coff's power was definitely indispensable to open his dropped eyelids by sheer force, making it some sort of comrade-in-arms to Otto.

Staring at Otto's comrade-in-arms, "Hah," Ram snorted,

"I don't need it. I don't even know how you can drink such muddy water."

"That's an expression I've heard a lot, but this is the first time I've met someone who actually uses it."

Seeing Otto drink the coff with a bitter smile, Ram said nothing. Instead, she passed by Otto's side, took tea leaves out of the cupboard, and started brewing her own portion of tea.

The flavor being controlled by the way it was brewed happened equally for both tea and coff. In that respect, the way Ram brewed tea was so polished it could have the previous remark taken back, and even Otto could clearly tell the difference in flavor.

Then, Ram poured tea on a laid out cup and took a glance at Otto,

"If you throw out that muddy water in your hands, I'll allow you to drink Ram's tea."

"Hmmm, a charming offer. Although I do have objections I would like to make about it being treated like muddy water."

"It's just muddy water to me. Even Otto's clothes are green, and you also sip muddy water, just like weed."

"I understand! Look, I have shed the muddy water! Brew some tea for me, please!"

Giving in to her sharp tongue, Otto went to the sink and threw his comrade-in-arms out. Although his shed comrade-in-arms's resentment could be heard from the drainage, Otto covered his ears to hear absolutely nothing.

As she watched that from the side, Ram pushed the steaming cup towards Otto,

"Sip it."

"Don't say it like that!"

Receiving such a rather Ram-like offer, Otto accepted the tea with stiff cheeks.

When he put it on his mouth, a sweet fragrance went through his nasal fossae. Just as expected, the way Ram brewed it had something different about it.

And—

"—Seems like your wariness of Master Roswaal still hasn't faded very much."

He was made to realize that the flavor of the tea was probably not the only thing that had something different about it.

When he heard those words, Otto swallowed the tea that was in his mouth. It was not even anything particularly surprising. He could be sure that it was no mere coincidence that they happened to meet here this night.

More than anything, since she was Ram, she would have already predicted Otto's answer.

"I think it is natural. Can one be not wary of the Margrave?"

"Someone with a magnanimity so big it makes one shiver and a surpassing softness wouldn't do it."

"A person who possesses such things… I have one close to me and, to be honest, it makes my head hurt."

Ram's accurate metaphor made Otto's head hurt in a non-metaphorical way.

It was difficult to forgive the incident that, approximately one year ago, Roswaal had perpetrated towards his camp, population, and generally everyone who was related to him. It was even more pertinent to reword it as an unforgivable felony.

And despite everything, Subaru and Emilia had forgiven Roswaal's felony. —It was not as if they had actually forgiven him in form, but their treatment of him was as good as an acquittal.

Of course, they could not afford to lose the position Roswaal had as a margrave for the Royal Election, though.

“Even without that, I am afraid it looks like the conclusion would be the same…”

“Self-interest is not all that makes people move. To live thinking that, just because it is so for oneself, it must be so for everyone else is proof of a poor mind, Otto.”

“That is an amazing argument, but what if this was an affair without relationship to the Margrave?”

“It’s unknown what the forgiving side feels. Barusu doesn’t matter, but I wonder if Lady Emilia is fine with that.”

The purity of Ram’s nonchalant attitude left him without any more words to speak. In any case, Otto would not be able to become as defenseless as Subaru, Emilia, and the rest were. He could not afford to, he thought too.

“It has been roughly a year since I started helping out with the work here at the mansion, has it not? I can no longer help my shoulders growing stiff with how much I am straining my mind. Why is it that, even though I have a roof, a bed, and a room, my sleep hours have decreased more than back when I was a travelling merchant?”

Whether he did peddling or worked under somebody else, wherever he was and whatever he did, Otto was fated to be burdened with trouble. —It was, probably, Otto’s older brother who had said that.

At that time, it was just something he laughed off; but it had become his circumstances, at which he was pretty unable to laugh. Yet, while aware of it, Otto dared to think of laughing.

If it was trouble he would not be able to avoid burdening himself with anyway, at least he would bear them all as he laughed.

“I like my current life just as it is. Even if it is an environment in which, for example, my sleep hours get awfully ground, or I am made to treat my years-long comrade-in-arms as muddy water.”

"All Ram did was to make an offer. Otto was the one who stabbed his comrade-in-arms from behind."

"—Therefore, I shall make every effort that is possible for me to protect this environment."

Without following Ram's jest, Otto drank up the cup's content and spoke. Directly receiving that look of Otto's from the front, Ram cast her light pink eyes down.

"Otto will protect by doubting. Then, Ram shall protect the present by believing."

"…"

"We're dividing roles. Ram will be in charge of believing, Otto will be in charge of doubting like a bad person."

At being called a bad person, Otto experienced an upsetting feeling.

Still, would even such assessment be appropriate if he were to compare himself to the people who were cursorily pictured in his head?

"Even so, I think there are too many people in charge of believing in this mansion…"

"And that's why Otto is necessary. The right person in the right place. …The impression of usefulness that expression gives is way too strong. Let's leave it at the level of a bucket for a roof leak."

"Lady Emilia will be angered. You know she has a strangely strong sense of gratitude towards buckets."

Listening to Otto's reply, Ram collected the empty cup and took it to the kitchen. Otto scratched his head as he stared at her small back.

The talk was over, said her back. Slight caution or warning? Or was it just trying to convey 'I'm watching you,' like Ram would do?

"Otto."

Suddenly, a voice addressed Otto as he was about to take his leave from the dining room.

When he turned back, Ram stood still at the kitchen's entrance, looking at him with narrowed eyes.

"What would have to happen for you to feel like forgiving Master Roswaal?"

"…Forgiving him is probably something I cannot do. But."

Ram's light pink eyes demanded the continuation of the words Otto had cut. Having resumed his advance, Otto put his hand on the dining room's door and, as he took a step forward to the hall outside, answered.

"—If only I had the chance, maybe I could think of dispelling my distrust."

3

No matter what happened, Otto would probably never forgive Roswaal.

He did just that. Just that was done to him. Therefore, it was a reasonable retribution.

Deeds would always jump back at oneself. Roswaal's current hardships were the result of his own deeds. Because he thought that, Otto felt no pity for him.

But it was just as he had answered Ram. —If he had the chance, maybe he would dispel his distrust.

And, probably because he himself wanted that chance, he had gotten involved in this disloyal act.

"—I see. Now this is a big deal, you."

In the dim store's interior, a tall, spindly man took a look at the remains of the mysterious script that was brought to him, and spoke while touching his well-ordered mustache. Inside the store from which had already been completely evacuated, “Do you understand?” Otto rose his voice at the words of the man—’Master Restorer’ Darts.

“Its condition is so ruined it makes me feel apologetic as the one showing it, though…”

“I’ve been in this path for so long. I know an article that’s got history behind it when I see one, you know. Even with my long experience as a restorer, things with charm this deep are seldom met by the eye.”

Despite his peculiar expressions, Dart’s eyes shone, and anyone who saw him could tell that he was enthusiastic. As Otto felt alleviation at having apparently overcome the first obstacle,

“Then, do you think you could fix it?”

“Restoring it is a work I feel as distant as returning a collapsed sand castle to its original state. If the article is like this, returning it to its original state is gonna be a legendary exploit… I can do it.”

“—Ngh! So I may ask for it?!”

“No problem, but, may I say something?”

Nodding to the eager Otto, Darts closed one eye while fiddling with his mustache.

“Leaving the time it’ll take to restore it and the remuneration for later… if you don’t mind, may I ask what you intend to use this for?”

“…I am sorry for you, Mr. Darts, who will be repairing it from now on; but once I am done verifying the book’s content, I intend to burn it up without leaving a single fragment.”

“Hmph, an honest man you are. …Will your goal be fulfilled with that?”

With no signs of displeasure, Darts stared at the mysterious script on the desk and asked. To those words, “That is right,” nodded Otto with his shoulders shrugged,

“If possible, instead of being always in charge of doubting people, I want to have the relief of knowing at least my fellows will not stab me in the back. And it would be nice if such relief helped my stomach too.”

“—That’s good. I’ll take it. However, before I do my job…”

“I know. That is why I brought it.”

Before Dart’s assenting eyes, Otto took an alcohol bottle out of his handbag and put it on the desk.

The ‘Master Restorer’ Darts was famous for his fondness of rare articles and alcohol. And also for drinking enough to end up full before accepting a job.

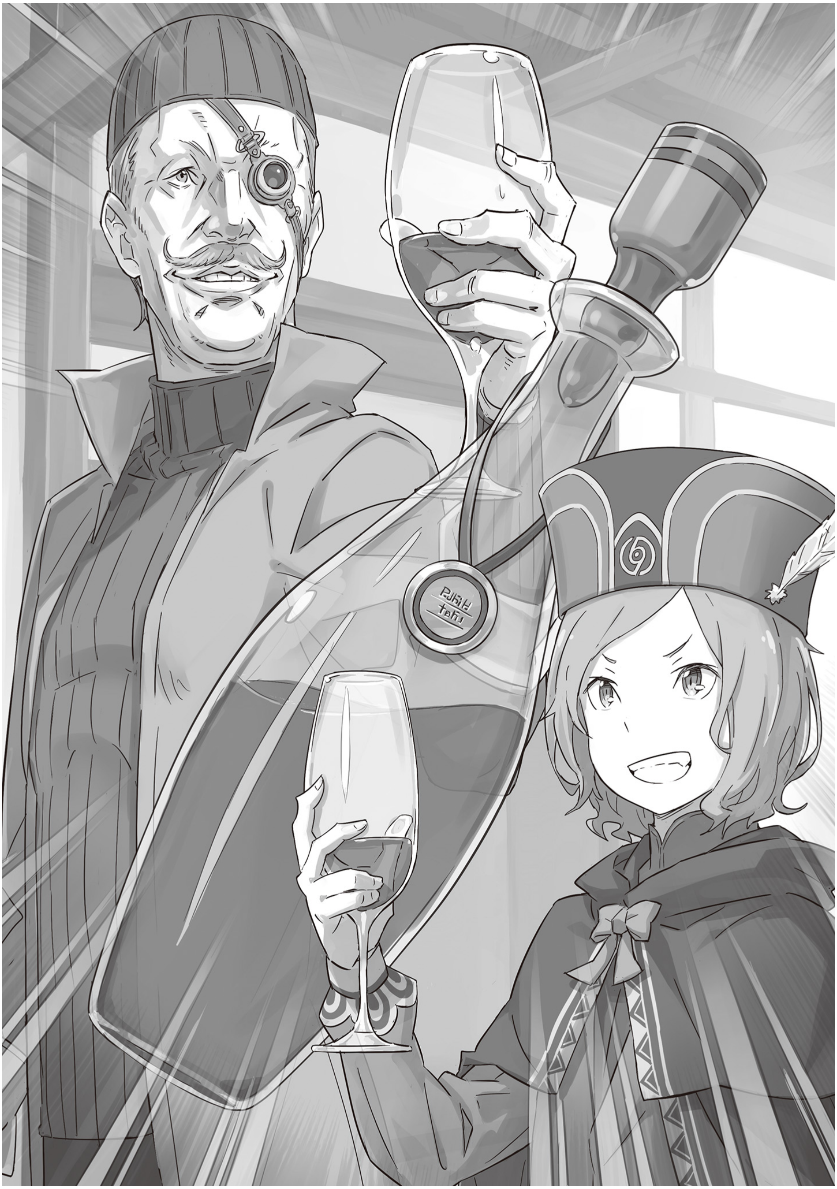
“—Allow me to keep you company. If it is for my mind to be at peace, I am fine with it.”

Readily pushing the alcohol bottle onto the desk, Otto showed his teeth as he smiled. Being that smile directed at him, Darts, too, formed a terribly malicious smile on his face.

The necessary ceremony, for Otto Suwen to become the actual Internal Affairs Minister of the Emilia camp.

As if preparing for that ceremony, this day, Otto drank alcohol until he was full along with Darts; and, the next morning, he returned to the ‘Water Plumage Inn’ in a drunken condition.

There was one act in which Beatrice saw his intoxicated form and feared like a hero, but that was a story different from the one now. —This was one of the problems held by the always-troubled Otto.



Petra’s Emilia Camp Struggle:
Page 3
(Edited Machine Translation)

In the serious atmosphere, there was a deafening sound. Petra straightened her back.

The spacious meeting room was filled with a strange and unique atmosphere of tension. In the center of the room, there was a table with space for more than a dozen people to sit around, and now it was filled to the max.

There were more than ten attendants, each with his or her own servants, making a total of more than thirty people gathered in the meeting room.

…The meeting of the Western Border Leaders.

That was the grandiose name of this meeting, and the goals of the participants were just as the name would suggest.

Lugunica was divided into four parts: North, South, East, and West, and the person who ruled the western borders of Lugnica, was Petra’s master, the renowned Margrave Roswaal L. Mathers

The meeting was centred on Roswaal, who brought together the powerful people of the Western Borders.

The owner of the mansion, Viscount Talion Aluz, whose position was second only to Roswaal’s in the west.

The mayor of the industrial city of Costuul, one of the five major cities in the kingdom, Reynolds Rex.

The one who owns a number of vast farms and is known by the name of "Dairy King", Griffith Allen.

Also, the head of the Western Merchant Union, "The Hypocrite" Gwen Merrett.

At the moment, the situation of the gathering of outstanding people, including the above-mentioned ones, is hellish. None of them are people who you can underestimate, and they are not Roswaal's comrades.

If there were anyone who was Roswaal's comrade, it would be…

???: "…Petra, it's been a long time since we last met. I am relieved to see that you are still in good spirits."

The first to enter the meeting room and greet her like that was a youth with dark blue hair, Clind, whose master is Roswaal's relative, Annerose Miload.

Frederica: "The meeting is about to begin. Could you please go back to Annerose-sama's side? Also, please don't approach Petra at will."

Clind: "Why must I follow your instructions? Are you Petra's mother or guardian? There is no such information in my memory. Doubt."

Clind,who just entered the scene, and Frederica, who had halted his advances, sandwiched Petra and faced off against each other.

It seemed that Frederica didn't want Clind to get close to Petra, so she was always lashing out at him. It was at moments like this that Petra felt that she was truly valued by her, so she secretly expressed her gratitude to Clind for his existence.

Having said that…

Petra: "Frederica-neesama, Clind-san, the meeting has already begun…"

With Petra's mediation, Frederica and Clind ceased fire. After Clind, who elegantly bowed before making his exit, had returned to his master's side, Petra and Frederica gestured towards each other then proceeded to head back to their designated position.

During this small incident, the participants took their seats at the conference table, and the meeting between the leaders of the western border officially began.

As usual, the purpose of this meeting is mostly to bring resolutions to important issues related to the rule of the western borders.

Before Petra was educated in the mansion as a maid, she had only a vague impression that Roswaal, who held the title of a Margrave in the West, was one of the select few who held enormous power in the Kingdom of Lugnica. Of course, the greatest person in the kingdom is naturally the King, but Roswaal, who ruled the West under the king's orders, can be considered the greatest person in the West of the Kingdom.

Therefore, even at the talks held at the borders of the west, Roswaal participated in the negotiations as the speaker and gave his final rulings on major resolutions that can greatly influence the lives of the citizens, including Petra.

This is not only Roswaal's power but also his duty. …However, this time is different from the ones before.

Talion: "…I hope to hear Margrave Mathers's views on the Royal Selection."

The first to bring up the topic everyone wanted to discuss was a gentleman with a beard, Viscount Talion Aluz. Sitting across from Roswaal in the venue, he was the acting speaker of the day.

The heavy sense of responsibility gave a strong sense of tension in his eyes and expressions.

Petra: "…"

At the start of the meeting, Petra, who was acting like a part of the furniture, stiffened, feeling the tingling tension on her skin.

Glancing at her side a little, Frederica, who was also in the same position, stood upright and composed. Adhering to unwavering etiquette adds supreme beauty to her standing posture. Petra couldn't help but be fascinated by it.

Tailon: "Oh, but please don't choose the Royal Selection itself as a topic to start this long-winded meeting. Time is precious. Especially for someone in a position like me."

Gwen: “Too roundabout Talion-chan”

In contrast to Petra who was immersed in it, the tension in the conference hall had already begun to shift.

The man who interrupted the words of Viscount Aluz while leaning his body on the table was an unshaven brave man. The representative of the Western Merchant Union Gwen Merret. He stroked his brown hair.

Gwen: “That is not what we were hoping to hear, right?”

Talion: “I thought I told you before, stop calling me Talion-chan, alright?”

Gwen: “Ah, sorry sorry… After all, we are much more concerned about the candidate you are backing than just the craziness of the Royal Selection in general, don’t you agree Roswaal-chan?”

Without even heeding the warning from the Viscount, Gwen gave Roswaal a lazy smile. His attitude towards Roswaal seemed to be a bit more intimate than that of the other participants, but…

Gwen: “Besides, didn’t you say this beforehand? “Because I found a candidate to participate in the royal election, I will be backing that girl, I’ll leave the work of shielding and supporting her to you all” There was such a thing. But…”

Gwen, who was smiling but at the same time not smiling, frightened Petra.

Gwen: “If that girl is a half-elf, isn’t this just a trap?”

Gwen’s words added to the heavy atmosphere of the conference room.

Including Viscount Aluz, the other participants who had not yet spoken probably agreed with Gwen. And Annerose, who stood in the position of her comrade, seems to be ready to change their views.

The atmosphere was filled with a strong sense of suspicion against

Roswaal and rejection towards the "half-elf".

Petra: “…”

Half-elf, using this term, treating Emilia in such a manner truly aroused Petra’s anger.

However, it was only during this year that Petra started feeling such anger for Emilia after getting along with Emilia day and night and learning about her as a person. For most people, half-elves and the “Witch of Envy" are closely interlinked. If she didn’t personally know Emilia, even Petra would probably react like them.

Therefore, as long as they get to know Emilia, their mindset will change accordingly. However, the curse carried by the name of being a half-elf wanted to take even such an opportunity away from Emilia.

In order for Emilia to get this opportunity, today’s meeting took place.

Therefore, Petra is looking forward to Roswaal’s first words. Looking forward to the most annoying unforgivable master who was the only one that could reverse the predicament that Emilia is currently in.

She doesn’t know if he realizes Petra’s contradictory thoughts and expectations or not. Roswaal nodded to everyone.

Roswaal: “In other wooords, as long as the subject in question is a puuure-blooded elf, Gwen-dono would raise his hands in faavour?”

Gwen: “…”

This is the first time Roswaal spoke at this meeting. Let alone Gwen and other participants, even Petra was caught off guard by his unhesitant tone.

And Roswaal crossed his hands on the table between the white gaps that were born.

Roswaal: “Putting aside whether I was joooking or not…Before I tell you the deetails of the Royal Selection, I apologize for conveying to you the incorreect contents. Hoooowever, please don't misundestaaaand."

Gwen: "Oh? Misunderstand?"

Roswaal: "My pooosition is not such that I have to aask you, but a position where I can commaaand you."

In response to Roswaal's deep voice, the atmosphere in the venue once again tensed to its limits.

In this atmosphere, Roswaal closed one eye and stared at his surroundings with his yellow pupil.

Roswaal: "You looots' circumstances and that of those quuuarrelling trash nobles are different. Emilia-sama, who I back, is an indispensable presence for winning the Royal Seleeection. For this reason, the Mathers family has spent a looong time preparing the western borders to become what it is toooday."

Griffith: "Fufufu. That statement makes it sound like preparations for the Royal Selection began several generations ago."

In the middle of Roswaal's speech, the morbidly obese "Dairy King" Griffith interjected. Facing the question of this giant who had almost passed his twilight years, Roswaal shrugged.

Roswaal: "This weeestern border is a place of exile for weirdos. After the ooorigin of Emiiilia-sama was made public, those vassal loords who immediately changed their attitude are fundaaamentally different from everyone present heere, no?"

Griffith: "Why? Do you plan to suppress and hold our reins using the power of your authority?"

Roswaal: "The inteeensity of suppression depeends on the resistance…That is whaaaat I would liiike to say, at least."

In the hostile venue, the atmosphere around Roswaal changed instantaneously. All the attendees were surprised by this sudden change in attitude.

Roswaal: “In the paaast, I would give priority to quickness aand reliability and take the most pooowerful approach. But unfortunately, it is quite tricky to use that method right nooow.”

As he said this, Roswaal glanced at Frederica and Petra behind him… No, he glanced at Petra. Seeing him look directly in her blue eyes, Petra couldn’t help but hold her breath.

… “Keep your eyes open at all times.” What Ram said echoed in her mind.

It wasn’t until now that Petra realized that the original meaning of those words also contained the meaning of having to observe carefully.

Roswaal: “Neeevertheless, even if I talk exteeensively about Emilia-sama’s character here, it still laaacks authenticity, right? Sooo I’ll just change the player. Petra-kun, cooome here.”

Petra: “Ah?!”

The sudden call of her name caused Petra’s shoulders to twitch as she screamed.

She wondered if she heard the wrong name but Roswaal’s nasty smile that gave her a feeling of Deja Vu was in her field of vision. At that moment, Frederica couldn’t help but utter angrily.

Frederica: “Master…! Master, doing such a prank in a situation like this… I can’t remain indifferent.”

Roswaal: “Praaank? My, what an unexpected staaatement. As you know, there is no persuasiveness in my words that can gain their trust. This can be easily seeeen from their usual behaviour”

Frederica: “These words should still be coming from your mouth…”

Roswaal: “In addition, regarding persuasiveness, yooouu can’t do it either. After all, I have been with you for faaar too long, they knoooow you. So naturally, they would have biased thoughts towards you.”

Frederica: “Guh…”

To Frederica, who wanted to take on Petra’s position instead, Roswaal said so first. And the reason Frederica stopped speaking after hearing the reason was due to that indisputable fact.

Backed by this ruthless fact, Roswaal looked at Petra again.

Roswaal: “Hooowever, I haven’t spent a long time with Peeetra-kun. They should aaall know about the matter regarding her haaating me, right?”

Petra: “…”

There is no way to deny it. Petra recalled that when she first arrived at the mansion for this meeting, her matters had already been known.

She was investigated in some form and Roswaal had already expected it.

In other words, he wanted to let Petra, who does not support Roswaal, support Emilia.

Talion: “That said, Margrave Mathers. Will that maid’s words really have such power…?”

Gwen: “Isn’t it fine, Talion-chan? Let them be.”

Regarding Roswaal’s answer, Viscount Aluz and Gwen once again disagreed. However, the debate between the two ultimately ending with Gwen’s victory is a matter of course. This is also true for this time, Gwen’s words forced Viscount Aluz to make concessions.

Then…

Petra: “…”

Returning to her consciousness, Petra was already bathed in the gazes of all these powerful people and had become the center of attention.

Petra: “That……”

With thirsty lips and dry tongue, Petra’s head devolved into intense chaos. The tense strings shook her heart, and she began to feel dizzy. Why did it turn out like this?

Just a year ago, Petra was a mere village girl. For her, the people who own villages, towns, and majestic and spacious territories outside of her own village were as far from her as the sky.

But now, Petra is standing in front of them like this…

Annerose: “Don’t be afraid. Just treat them like you treat uncle.”

The one who spoke to Petra, whose breathing had become rapid, was a young girl sitting a little further away …Annerose, sporting a bun of dark blue hair. Her awe-inspiring attitude and posture made Petra’s breathing slightly disturbed.

After all, she was only a nobleman who was ten years old and is younger than Petra.

Annerose: “Take a deep breath, and then say something about Emily. Even if you make any strange remarks, I will cover for you. After all, it’s all for Emily.”

Annerose’s words made Petra choke, then she closed her eyes tightly.

Annerose held excessive kindness towards Emilia. Even if she wasn’t on stage, her words were still powerful.

If she can speak for the unsuspicious Petra to support Emilia, then it is not a bad choice to follow it.

However, Petra will not do it

Petra: “…Thank you, Annerose-sama. But let me do it.”

Annerose: “Re…, really, can you do it?”

Petra: “I will work hard. After all, this is a task entrusted to me.”

After an earnest request, Petra accepted the task of the day and volunteered to take up this task.

She remembered all the words Subaru and Emilia said to Petra before leaving the mansion. Amongst them, there is not a word expressing concern regarding Petra's shortcomings.

Subaru and the others never felt uneasy regarding Petra, they have always been looking forward and never hesitated to believe in her.

And so…

Petra: "…Master"

Roswaal: "Hmm? What's wrong?"

Petra: "I really hate you more than anything."

Turning her head, Petra's thin lips opened, and she confronted Roswaal angrily. Upon hearing this, Roswaal raised his eyebrows slightly in surprise.

But Petra no longer looked at the changes in his expression following it, but instead quickly turned and lifted the corners of her skirt.

Then, she showed a perfect curtsey that was enough to intoxicate all the people present.

Petra: "I must apologize for taking so long. I am a maid serving Margrave Roswaal L Mathers, Petra Leyte."

All: "…"

Petra: "Although I am still clumsy and might repeat myself, please allow me to tell you about Emilia-sama. Not about a "half-elf", but about Emilia-sama."

Facing the sight of the vassal lord, Petra opened her words with this kind of opening remark.

Unbelievably, her inner turmoil had disappeared at this very moment, and nothing but boundless pride filled her eyes.

This is a matter of course, because,

…How could you not laugh with joy when you speak of a person you like.

Behind Petra, who made such an awe-inspiring declaration was Roswaal, who smiled at the immature figure with excellent posture, and Frederica who was tightly holding onto his arm and shaking with anger.

No matter how much Roswaal apologized, saying that he overdid it, Frederica would not let go of his arm and calm down. But compared to her anger, there was another overflowing sentiment that filled Frederica’s heart at this moment. This is also a matter of course.

Because, it is far more important to guard her cherished, beloved sister’s shining stage than to be angry at her master with a bad personality.

END

Joshua Juukulius's Second Careful Encyclopedia

1

—As a breeze flew through the sky, it took a letter with itself.

???: "W-Wait! Please wait!"

Shouting, the boy raised his hand into the sky, aiming for the floating letter. However, the letter left him behind and flew away, as if flapping wings, with utter grace.

Chasing it down the slope was an elegant faced youth.

His tied purple hair, his clear face, and his bright twinkling yellow eyes, along with glasses on just his left eye, were features characteristic to him. Wearing a well fitting dress of black, it could be safely said that he came from a noble household.

That was also another factor that made his dash down the slope look like there was something wrong.

???: "Kh ~hk…! If only, I had taken a look, at the content… Ah! Ah ~hk!"

Sitting beside the window in a quiet room, immersed into the world of literature. —That was the kind of scenario befitting the youth, but here he was, looking upwards and shouting.

People in the surroundings wondered what he was doing, as they witnessed the youth fall flat in the middle of the slope. And, where the letter, which was sought after by the youth, had landed was visible.

—The letter hung onto a dragon ferry travelling in the waterway, and went along with it.

After borrowing the power of wind, this time it borrowed the power of water. Rather, it would be more appropriate to say that it borrowed the power of the water dragon, but that was not the issue here.

???: “…Hey you there, are you alright?”

Passing by the fallen down youth, who gave off the impression of being asleep, was a huge man who asked that question. Seeing the lack of response, the passerby looked at his face, sensing that the problem here may be severe—

???: “—Darn it! I cannot just stay fallen at this place!”

???: “Huh?!”

Forcefully swinging his long legs, the youth sprang and stood up. At his sudden movement, the passerby was visibly surprised, to whom the youth responded to with a “Kindly excuse me”, bowing gracefully.

???: “Though I have shown you an unpleasant sight, I assure that there is no need to worry. I have been given the responsibility of completing a certain task, and I will surely complete…”

???: “I-Is that so. So then, what should be done?”

By the end of the energetic youth’s words, the passerby pointed towards the waterway.

Where he pointed to, there was visible a swimmer swimming leisurely, a ferry carrying a letter, and a street.

???: “W-Wait! Please wait!”

Changing his expression, the youth continued his chase for the letter.

2

—Reaching the age of 17 this year, was Joshua Juukulius, the younger brother of Julius.

The Juukulius household has been a noble family and had a long history with the kingdom of Lugunica. Traces of the family’s prominence and the outstanding members of the household go back to several generations.

Although there are several noble households who do not do so, in the Juukulius household, being born as a male directly meant that you must become a royal knight. Naturally, the child also received the necessary education for that, following the words “the correct way of life for achieving elegance” that have been passed down the generations since ancient times.

However, Joshua’s body betrayed the expectations of his parents, who also held the same belief.

When he merely held the sword in simple playful imitation when he was a child, just that affected his breath, before even receiving any proper training. His education plans were changed, after he got bedridden due to a fever.

—As far as he could remember, he could only see most of his days and time being spent sitting on a bed, reading a tome.

“…”

Turning the pages, he looked outside the window, where he could see the garden of his mansion, and his brother practicing the way to uphold the sword.

He was under the same teacher that Joshua was supposed to be under, had received the same education as what Joshua was supposed to receive, and had taken the responsibility upon himself which Joshua was supposed to take. —Seeing his figure, young Joshua narrowed his staring yellow eyes.

—At a great distance from him, in the garden, red spheres hung onto the trees.

Joshua: “Hah, hah…”

With both his hands on his knees, Joshua panted hoarsely in a desperate attempt to regain his strength, making an expression as if he was on the verge of death.

It had been a total of five minutes since he had started his pursuit for the floating letter—and his body had already reached its limit. On top of that, instead of flying, the letter was now on a ferry, distancing itself away from Joshua further and further.

Joshua: “If I, am unable to, get hold of it, again… it’ll be, quite a, problem.”

Joshua shook his head, as he tasted a bit of blood in his saliva accompanying his immense breathlessness.

The letter was important. He cannot just lose it, and his apologies will not be accepted either.

The content of the letter included instructions that will have a severe impact on the future of someone who may become the ruler of the kingdom. —And he knew, that person was also waiting for the letter.

He did not believe in something like hope, but in what was spoken in jest was the undeniable strength in the tone. The letter surely held sincere, heartfelt feelings.

—For a year and a half now, Joshua had been working with his master, Anastasia.

Not just her being a royal candidate, but even ties to the supreme council that she represented. Being able to help someone like her with housekeeping was an honour for him. However, the stimulus for fascination and joy for Joshua, was stepping into the outside, unfamiliar world.

Unlike when reading books, he could feel the true essence of the reality that was this world—and had witnessed the scene of a person’s life transforming with his own eyes in the Chamber of Commerce.

And, in those scenes, the person was somewhat having the exact the same expression always.

The heart-breaking belief of the young Joshua, was that this was an expression of sincerity.

Henceforth, no matter how discomfiting the other party was, they would not tolerate such an attitude. Moreover, using your own mistake to cause harm to the opposing party was simply unspeakable.

Joshua: “So, if the letter gets away now…”

???: “—Mister! Please, take this!”

Joshua: “Eh?”

Joshua tried to lift his eyes and head with his further strengthened determination. What was in front of him was the letter he swore to chase till the edge of the world.

Eyes widened, hands shivering, Joshua held the letter. He was not dreaming. It really was there.

Joshua: “Ah, ah, a~h.”

???: “Very well! If this made you happy then my spirits have also been uplifted, that is!”

Joshua: “Yes, yes! Thank you very much! If I was to lose it, I would… I would, be unable to face anyone in future!”

???: “Then I am truly glad! It is an honour I could be of help!”

Hugging the letter to his chest, Joshua bowed his head. A smiling young boy stood in front of Joshua.

With soft, pink hair, and two cute large, round eyes. Perhaps around ten years of age. Despite his youth, he was well-dressed in robes, and though his nature and disposition was unknown, he gave off a friendly aura.

This young boy had recovered the letter. He could be called nothing but impressive.

Joshua: “By the way, how you did you come to understand that this letter belonged to me?”

???: “I saw mister dashing down the street shouting about the letter with his hand raised to catch it, that is! That is why, I realised that I must not let it go.”

Joshua: “You are right, this letter is indeed important… And I was running behind it, though I was not fast.”

He had been running slowly due to his heavy breathing, feeling sincere embarrassment when the young boy said that he was “dashing”.

???: “Afterwards I hurriedly called out to the master of the ferry. I asked for it politely, and I was able to receive the letter, so I was simply fortunate!”

Joshua: “…No, that is simply your modesty. I am truly grateful.”

The young boy had a modest attitude, and he was quick to point out how what he did was not his feat.

Regardless, Joshua wanted to truly show gratitude to him for his help.

Joshua: “However, I must thank you for this…”

He had nothing on himself right now, but he was just heading to the inn. However, taking the young boy that far with himself would not be good either.

Joshua: “If there is something I can help you with, then please ask anything.”

???: “Ah, then…”

On Joshua’s suggestion, the boy blushed in embarrassment.

And, hesitating for a moment, said.

???: “The truth is I, seem to have lost my way. As embarrassing as it is, I am currently a vagrant child, that is!”

And, explaining his position, provided the perfect opportunity for

Joshua to pay back his favour.

3

Walking down the street was the unusual and perfectly matching pair of the young boy named Schult and Joshua.

Schult: "—That's why, I am trying my hardest to serve the one who showed the grace of taking me in! I am working hard, just so that I am not crushed by my debt to them!"

Joshua: "That is really splendid! It's truly splendid, Schult-kun!"

Schult: "Y-Y-Yes, thank you very much for such words."

Schult turned his head downwards and smiled at Joshua's praise. Seeing him, Joshua was sincerely awestruck.

He was surely a well-natured young boy. From what he said now, it could be said that he had not been brought up in a favourable environment. However, fatefully encountering someone, he was now striving to accept the happiness and fortune he was blessed with at face value.

That was somewhat not like Joshua.

Joshua: "…It seems Schult-kun highly respects that person."

Schult: "Of course, that is! So much so that respect is an understatement, that is! Ah, but, I truly do respect Al-sama and Yae-sama too. Heinkel-san, I am unsure about him…"

He was usually smiling like a flower, but now he made a difficult face. Shaking his head and doing away with his tired expression, Schult glanced at Joshua.

Schult: "Mister must also be having someone he respects. Is there someone like that?"

Joshua: "—. Huhu, I awaited that question."

Schult: "Oh! How cool!"

In front of Schult, who widened his eyes, Joshua raised his face and his pointed his palms forwards. The sun was visible through the gaps between his fingers, making him narrow his eyes and inhale lightly. That was because—

Joshua: “When you look at the sun, you become unable to see the beautiful wind flowing by. To me, my elder brother was a similarly dazzling existence.”

Schult: “Mister’s brother huh! He really seems to be someone amazing, that is!”

Joshua: “Ha~h, you are right! Nii-sama is truly amazing. He is always working hard, as if he can do anything and will try to do anything. His form, his mindset, he is truly the greatest!”

Schult: “Greatest! He really does seem like someone amazing!”

As Joshua clenched his fist, Schult clapped.

It was not rare for Joshua to talk about his brother, but it was rare for him to hear about his brother. Joshua’s heart experiences an unexpected warmth, as it gets charmed by him.

Joshua’s brother, Julius Juukulius, was unquestionably a person who deserved to be respected.

The will to live was strongly etched onto his soul. He had a habit of underestimating himself, but was able to sincerely and objectively acknowledge his own effort and was fully capable of helping himself.

If nobody tells you that you are an amazing person, you will inevitably stop believing in that.

Henceforth, for Joshua, who was only cheaply imitating Julius—

“…”

An incident that happened, that negative incident, and calling back to it, Joshua sealed his lips.

As soon as he heard those words of praise, Joshua stopped his footsteps. The walking Schult looked backwards and glanced at his face. And,

Schult: "—It really seems like mister truly likes that onii-san!"

"…"

Schult: "Hearing this about him, even I have gotten excited! If there happens to be a chance, I would love to meet mister's brother!"

Seeing his smile, he sighed.

Doing away with the conflicting feelings in his heart, Joshua smiled and blankly nodded.

Joshua: "Yes, you are correct. Nii-sama is perfect, so he will surely treat Schult-kun well. If there happens to be an opportunity, then please do."

Schult replied with "Understood" energetically.

He really wanted to meet his brother. The sight of Schult, who heard the praise of his brother and his desire to meet him, was heart-warming indeed.

Behind his eyes, that observed that soothing sight--

???: "—Hmm. Though it's between all this work, something calming."

An eccentric feeling ran up his spine. They were on a street. With a number of people passing by, with a number of voices sounding by, that voice alone shook up Joshua's eardrums with a complete lack of constraint.

Regardless of even that, he could immediately make out the fact that those words were directed at him.

Joshua: "—Schult-kun, listen to my instructions and dash ahead with all your strength, please."

Schult: “Mister?”

Looking back at the street and glancing at the owner of that voice, said Joshua as he patted Schult’s shoulder. Schult was puzzled, but he had no time to explain the details. —No, even he himself did not know any details, including the opponent’s identity.

However, staring at exactly that place among the crowd filled street, the petite youthful boy’s aim was Joshua, and it could be understood at a single look that the boy was not someone harmless.

Joshua: “Here, please take this. Please convey it to my nii-sama or Schult-kun’s master.”

Gently handing over the letter he held, Joshua stepped forward. Schult, who had received that letter, was confused on what he should do. But, before even that,

Joshua: “Run!”

As per how he was instructed, Schult turned and started running. The little boy did exactly what Joshua told him to, swimming between the crowd of people. Seeing his back, Joshua then turned his head forward. —The one standing on the other side of him was now directly in front of him.

Joshua: “—Kh ~hk.”

???: “Sorry for the surprise, onii-san. Even we wanted to play around a bit more. The time promised to mama is coming close. At this point, let’s just wrap this up.”

Joshua: “I don’t even have anything to say regarding that…”

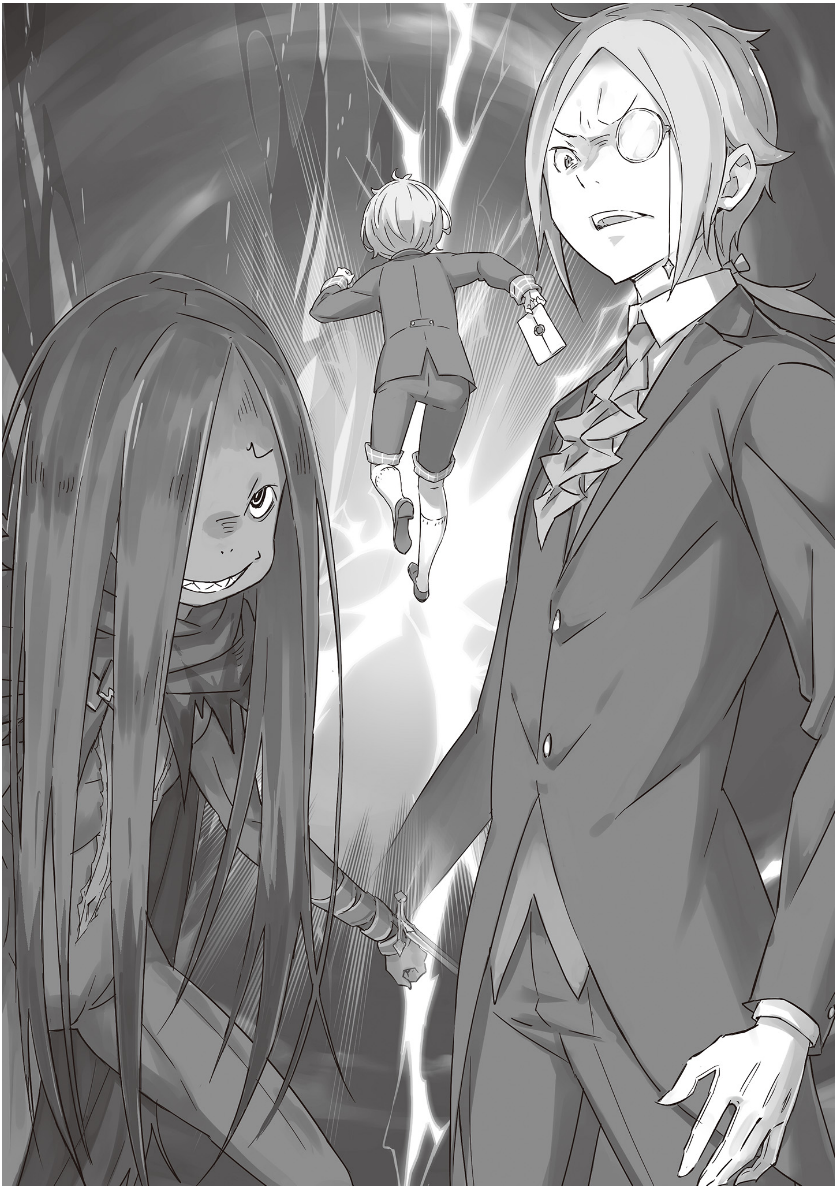
A sound was heard. Joshua, who had received those words, unfortunately had no way of stopping the youth. Swordsmanship, magical talent, body handling, everything would be ineffective in his body. However, the safety of the letter, and Schult was—

Joshua: “Truly…”

???: “Well then, deepest apologies, but there’s no time. —Thank you for the treat!”

Insanity could be felt within that voice, as a shout echoed through the street. Hearing it, above all.

—He unclearly thought whether he had managed to do something even minimally substantial for his Greatest brother, right before his consciousness left him.



Comic Alive Collection 4: Translation Pending

Short Story Collection 4

Felt’s Royal Selection Life from Zero

1

—Ever since she was little, she had been seeing one certain dream over and over again.

It was a dream which began in a dimly lit room.

In a room where only the moonlight was streaming in, she was gazing up at the ceiling. The ceiling was high. It felt like she had been pushed inside a small box, rather than laying down on a bed.

???: “—Are ye really sure about this?”

Suddenly, she heard the voice of someone.

When she tried to look at where it came from, her body would not move. It was not because it was a dream. Even if this was not a dream, during this moment, her body would not move the way she wanted it to.

She simply, somehow felt like this was the right thing to do.

????: “Yes, I’m sure. I can already imagine my brother or wife objecting to it, if they ever happen to know about this.”

She could also hear a reply, the voice sounding different from the first person who had spoken.

It seemed like someone and someone were talking to each other, standing on opposite sides of the box that contained her.

The voices sounded as if they were familiar, but also unfamiliar to her at the same time.

Perhaps, the reason for why the voices felt ambiguous was her own problem. However, she could clearly feel the emotions brimming within the voices.

The familiar voice was filled with disgust, while the unfamiliar voice was filled with affection.

Although, disgust and affection… Neither of those were what she desired, nor yearned for.

???: “I’m indebted to ye all. If I can return what I owe, then I don’t mind taking on this job.”

????: “Thank you. I’m sorry for troubling you, —.”

???: “Ye shouldn’t be worrying about me. You’re concerned for the wrong person.”

????: “…You’re right.”

A cold, sharp voice, and a voice that regulated its emotions firmly.

Inside the box where she could only see the ceiling, her gaze met with someone’s face when they peeked in. For some reason, a shadow was cast upon the face, and she could not see it because it was smudged black.

However, she knew the person was the owner of golden hair and red eyes.

????: “…”

The person gently lifted her body, picking her up from the inside of the box.

They were quite large in size—no, she was small. Almost as if she were an infant. The owner of the voice held her effortlessly, rocking her softly.

????: “Ahh, you’re warm. And you’ve become heavier… Someday, there will be a time when you’ll grow up, so much that my arms won’t be enough to hold you.”

The man said, whilst embracing her.

His voice almost sounded as if it were trembling. Held in the man’s arms, she felt his heartbeat. It was a strangely calming sound, one that made her want to cry.

????: “…I’ll leave the rest to you.”

Suddenly, her ears were pulled away from the sound.

The man handed over the infant in his arms to the person in front of him. The person’s palm was calloused, large, and treated her roughly, just like her impression of him.

She felt ill at ease, completely different from a moment ago. It was not only because of the hardened skin of the palm.

???: “Lending a hand to some human… How far I’ve fallen.”

The person who had placed her on his palm was staring at her, his gaze being a mixture of disgust and disdain.

It was greatly irritating to the infant’s heart.

She did not like it. She wanted to cry out. However, her small limbs could not break free.

?????: “…”

Enveloped by the calloused palm, even her freedom of speech had been seized. Like that, the man started walking with heavy footsteps. She was being taken away from the familiar room, as well as the calming man.

She did not want that. She didn’t. She hated it.

She pleaded for that man to stay with her. She wanted him to stay by her side. She did not want him to let her go.

Even so—

????: “—I love you. Forever and ever.”

An unhelpful voice that did not offer any relief. It was the last thing he had said to her.

2

???: “…It’s morning, huh.”

Her eyelids were warmed by the morning sun streaming through the gap in the curtains, and her consciousness floated up to the surface.

With the sensation of the soft bed wrapping around her whole body, the girl sat up whilst drawing the sheets closer to herself. She scratched her neck-length, golden hair rather violently, and absently turned her neck as she yawned.

Entering her teary-eyed, blurred vision was the room she became used to seeing during these two months.

???: “Jeez, the room is annoyingly huge as always.”

Inside the luxurious room that anyone would be jealous of, the girl muttered with dissatisfaction as she clambered off of the bed of the highest quality.

Having just woken up, the girl stood on the shaggy rug with nothing but her undergarments on her pale body. She had a small frame for her age, and her body lacked feminine curves—however, her well-proportioned face and her strong-willed eyes contained a glimpse of beauty, giving her a promising future when her charm would bloom into a flower.

Her name was Felt. She was a notorious problem child in the past, having made a living in the slums of the Royal Capital with her skill in stealing. —However, the position resting upon her shoulders as of now was wildly different.

The main factor of the dramatic change in the environment around her was—

???: “—Are you awake, Felt-sama?”

With the door to the room being knocked on, Felt could hear a clear, beautiful voice from the other side. Simply listening to it would make one have high hopes for the owner of the voice to have a pure heart and an elegant appearance.

In reality, when people would look at the owner of this beautiful voice in the Capital, most women would let out screams of admiration and then proceed to faint. Even so, despite being a very young woman, Felt curled her lip with apparent distaste.

And then, glaring at the owner of the voice from the other side of the door,

Felt: “Nope, I’m not awake. I’m not awake, so don’t come in.”

???: “You are able to establish a conversation by talking in your sleep? If that is the case, you have developed a new talent, one I do not know of.”

Felt: “You’re damn annoying…”

Upon clicking her tongue at how he did not understand the sarcasm in her tone, the door to the room opened slowly.

Like that, a tall, young, and refined man made his appearance, dressed in a shirt and a pair of pants. His red hair, reminiscent of flames, and his blue eyes that engulfed the azure sky were his defining characteristics. What distinguished him even further was his unpleasantly handsome face, and he was directing a smile at Felt, one that would cause the maidens in the Capital to collapse.

However, his smile had vanished the moment he saw Felt’s appearance when he entered the room,

???: “Felt-sama… Although this is your room, a woman walking around in her undergarments is a little…”

Felt: “I just woke up. Besides, I already told you to not come in. You’re the one who didn’t listen, so don’t blame me.”

In nothing but her underwear, Felt crossed her arms and stuck her slim chest out in the middle of the room. The young man frowned, averting his gaze from her valiant pose.

The interaction was between a young man and woman, but there was no embarrassment associated with it. Felt saw the person in front of her as something different before she thought of him as a man.

Letting out a snort, Felt gazed up at the young man as he looked away from her.

Felt: “Or, does the greatest knight among knights have the capacity to get excited by a miserable-looking body like mine? If that’s it, then I would have to be even more careful about my surroundings, won’t I?”

???: “Please do not demean yourself with words such as ‘miserable-looking’. You have a charm that is unique to yourself. Moreover, it is preposterous for a knight to have their heart swayed by their master.”

Felt: “Who told you to console me about my child-like body shape?! Get out!”

As she threw a pillow from her bed, the young man caught it effortlessly and politely stepped back out of the room. He walked out into the hallway, and then slowly bent over into a bow,

???: “Breakfast is ready. Auntie is also waiting, so please come to the dining room.”

Felt: “I get it, I get it. Just go.”

???: “Understood. Pardon me, I will be taking my leave. —Also, Felt-sama.”

While Felt waved her hand half-heartedly as if she were chasing off a bug, the young man smiled at her, having tossed the pillow he had received back onto the bed with an excellent throw. And then, keeping the same expression on his face, he said,

???: “Good morning.”

Felt: “…That part of you just never fails to get on my nerves. Get the hell out, Reinhard!”

Felt’s first shout of anger in the morning had been scattered in four directions, blocked off by the door that had been closed quietly.

Irritated by the feeling of “losing” the argument for no particular reason, Felt pulled out her clothes from the cabinet, and hastily took off her undergarments.

As the only act of defiance she could do, she decided to pick an outfit that Reinhard might dislike.

3

—The reason why Felt was accompanied by Reinhard and staying in his mansion was the result of several events, and a coincidental, unavoidable circumstance all becoming tightly entangled.

Reinhard had referred to all of that as “fate”, but Felt absolutely hated how it sounded.

She was unable to stomach how he thought everything had been decided from the very beginning. More than anything, they had the worst encounter and their process of getting to know each other was equally as terrible. With their already complicated relationship, just imagining how everything between them was predetermined had aggravated her.

To Felt, it was like being told she was destined to draw the short end of the stick.

That was the honest opinion of Felt, who had obtained the status of the mistress of Reinhard van Astrea, the knight among knights that everyone in the Capital was envious of.

???: “Oh, Felt. Yer up pretty early today.”

Felt: “Ah.”

Once Felt had gotten dressed and exited her room, she came across a large silhouette of a person. The person was a hulking man, gigantic to the point the petite Felt really had to look up at him.

If they had met in a back alley, the difference in their physiques would make Felt be prepared to die. Fortunately, however, this was not a desolate alleyway, and she was also not unacquainted with that person.

Actually, phrasing it as such was unnecessary because of the close and long-lasting relationship between them.

Felt: “Morning, Rom-jii. I don’t really wanna wake up early, but if I stay in this mansion, I tend to get woken up like a good citizen.”

Her face brightening up, Felt ran towards the person she had called “Rom-jii”—a bald, old man with a large frame of over two meters. She had a tender expression on her face, appearing incomparably adorable in contrast to when she had been dealing with Reinhard.

Rom’s shoulders shook with laughter as Felt unleashed a cute charm befitting of her age.

Rom: “Wahaha, being a good citizen is a nice thing, since you’re tiny for yer age. If ye eat properly and live an orderly life, ye’ll grow taller.”

Felt: “From your perspective, it practically won’t make any difference even if I grow or shrink. Like, barely any difference.”

Rom: “That ain’t true. Even though I’m like this, I pay close attention to yer growth.”

Saying that, a smile spread across Rom’s deeply wrinkled face, and he patted her head roughly.

Felt remembered thinking her head might fall off when she was little, but she did not dislike the feeling of the calloused palm. In fact, she was fond of it.

There was a time when she did not want to be treated like a child, but in all honesty, moments like these were the best at making her feel at ease.

—By chance, the dimly lit room from her dreams crossed her mind.

Felt: "…"

Rom: "…Hm? What's the matter, Felt?"

Felt: "Ah, uh, it's nothing. Never mind that, were you able to sleep well?"

Felt put on a smile and asked him, shaking off the strangely sentimental feeling that struck her chest. Receiving her question, Rom answered, "Don't be silly," while slapping his bald head.

Rom: "If you're asking me whether I was able to sleep or not, then yes, I did sleep. But, I can't say it was comfortable."

Felt: "That's true. Life here is way too different compared to what we know."

Rom: "Yes. Well, although that ain't the only reason for my lack of comfort…"

Rom tilted his head while placing a hand on his chin, with Felt copying his gesture. He laughed at her imitation, then urged her to start walking by patting her on the back.

Rom: "Hey, it seems like breakfast's ready. I can have high expectations for how it tastes, right?"

Felt: "Yeah, Granny's meals are super duper good. She's the best at making snacks, though."

Rom listened quietly to Felt's boastful praise, nodding as she blabbered along. They continued to have their pleasant chat while they walked down the hallway.

Felt: "Hm? Ooh, they're going at it again."

Pausing in front of the window, Felt peered into it. The green garden of the mansion belonging to Reinhard stretched out below her, and a sight she had become familiar with was unfolding in there.

Rom: “…What in the world are they doing?”

Felt: “It’s just that warped personalities don’t straighten up easily, so they’re in the process of getting their characters beaten back into shape.”

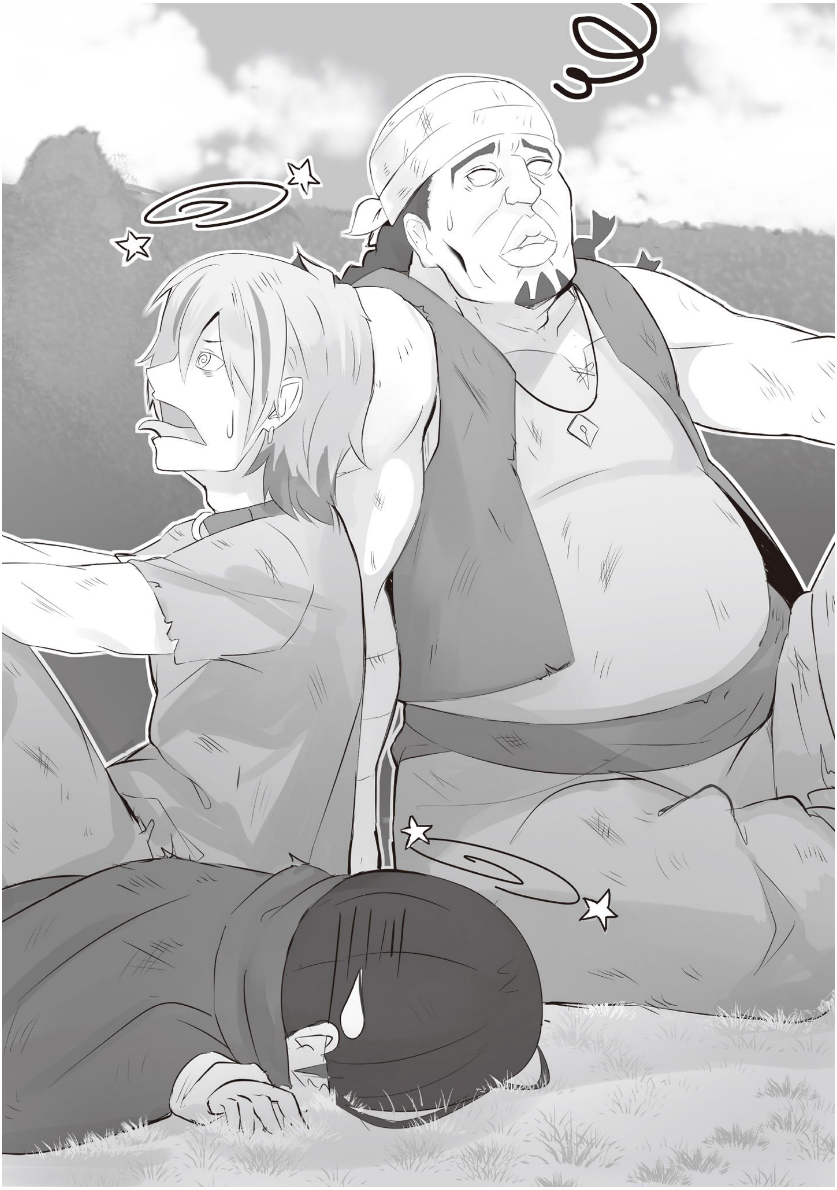
Rom asked, standing next to her, and Felt answered him whilst propping up her arms on the frame of the window, her chin resting in her hands.

In the garden carrying an relaxed atmosphere, where the fresh grass and flowers of various colors flourished, three men were sprawled across the grass, piled on top of each other.

They had quite the boorish appearance, lying on the ground in a fully unconscious state.

And then, there was an elderly man tending to the grass beside the trio. His expression remained indifferent as he brought a wheelbarrow with practiced ease, placing the three men on top of it with little effort, and then wheeled them away towards the back door of the mansion.

Watching the process to the end, Felt smiled whilst showing off her fang,



Felt: “Apparently, they had nowhere left to go because they angered a higher-up, so they chose to follow us as a last resort, but they changed their mind after one night and were about to run away. Then, they were found out by Gramps in the middle of their escape, and got beaten up by him.”

Rom: “I see. I guess it’s a typical conclusion, but did ye predict this?”

Felt: “If we could understand each other by talking it out, then they wouldn’t be here, both in a good way and a bad way. Isn’t it more interesting to make those nasty guys tag along?”

Felt did not dislike those who never knew when to give up, nor those with unpreferable personalities. The area she had lived in was a den full of people like that.

The trio was certainly the representation of Felt’s home environment. However, no matter what, she would not be blindly optimistic about it by declaring it as a good thing.

Rom: “Should that be described as tolerant or optimistic…? Perhaps it’s in the blood.”

Felt: “Hm? Did you say something, Rom-jii?”

Felt clasped her hands together behind her head, turning around to face Rom as he murmured something out. He simply shrugged his large shoulders in response to her words.

Rom: “Oh, I just said I’m hungry. Here, hurry up and get walking.”

Felt: “Yeah, yeah, got it.”

Prompted to get a move on, Felt took Rom with her as she started walking in the mansion. She did not wish for it, but she had become accustomed to her life inside the residence within the span of two months.

At least, to the point she would be walking with a bounce in her steps if she was on the way to the dining room.

Felt: “Mornin’!”

With great anticipation for breakfast in her heart, Felt arrived at the dining hall, having brought Rom along with her. Upon opening the large doors and entering the room, the long table was already lined with steaming plates of breakfast.

And then, turning around at Felt’s cheerful entry, two shadows bowed to her.

???: “Certainly, Felt-sama. Good morning.”

???: “…”

An elderly woman and man had responded to her greeting with gentle smiles. They were entrusted with the management of the mansion, and their duties included taking care of Felt and Reinhard.

Reinhard seemed to have a close relationship with them, referring to them as “Uncle” and “Auntie”. Meanwhile, Felt got along with them, simply calling them “Gramps” and “Granny”.

???: “…”

Reinhard was already seated at the dining table, and three young men were forced to sit at the same row as him, their eyes rolled against the back of their heads. Their physiques were large, average, and petite respectively—easy to understand, and they were placed in their seats in the order of their heights.

Furthermore, Felt’s regular spot was in front of Reinhard, and Rom would be sitting next to her during this morning. She pulled out Rom’s chair, then settled into her own seat, and,

Felt: “Alright. So, time to dig in.”

Reinhard: “—. There is no problem with that, but are you sure there is no need for an explanation regarding those three? My very first thought was that you would be surprised by them.”

He was taken aback by how Felt was about to start eating without making any mention of the trio. Listening to his words, she scratched her ear with a finger, muttering out a, “Ahh,”

Felt: “I saw Gramps bring them along with him from above. Plus, I thought it would be something like this since yesterday. I already told Granny and Gramps, right?”

Auntie: “Indeed. Felt-sama spoke to us last night.”

Felt leaned against the back of her chair, tilting her head, and Auntie returned a nod. And then, the woman who had aged with grace chuckled as she gave her husband a sidelong glance,

Auntie: “Grandpa over here was probably delighted that you have relied on him. Unbecoming for his age, he was full of vigor, waiting at the garden since dawn.”

Uncle: “…”

Uncle wordlessly shrugged at Auntie’s testimony. It was rare for the taciturn Uncle to even utter a word, so no one had reprimanded him for his manners, which could be taken as improper.

Suddenly, Auntie gazed at Felt with a mischievous look in her eyes,

Auntie: “Anyway, it is quite an interesting thing. You had been attempting to break free from the mansion with utmost effort, yet now you are reminding us to ensure those three do not escape.”

Felt: “Hey, hey, did you have to say that?”

Rom: “Huh, ye mean Felt was trying to escape? What do ye mean by that?”

As Felt made a face at the remark she could not counter, Rom’s eyes gleamed with curiosity beside her. Looking at his reaction, Reinhard began to speak with a, “To tell the truth…”

The red-haired young man had an innocuous look, his blue eyes traveling across the entire mansion as if he was surveying it, Reinhard: “A promise has been made with Felt-sama. If she was able to sneak out of the mansion, unobserved by myself, Uncle, Auntie, and the other residents, then we will not track her down against her will.”

Rom: “A competition, I see. That makes sense. I can see Felt taking it personally when someone picks a fight with her. She was probably suffering defeat every day, then.”

Felt: “D-Don’t say it like you’ve actually watched it… That’s why I didn’t want you to hear about it!”

Rom pointed it out with a smug look, causing Felt to bury her head into her hands with a reddened face.

Everything had begun ever since she had been captured by Reinhard in the slums, and confined to this mansion by his hand. Since then, she had exchanged a promise of the competition that Reinhard had explained earlier, and she was desperately searching for a way to escape during night and day.

Of course, as a result of her plans failing one after another, Felt had been staying in this mansion like this, and on top of all of that was yesterday’s events.

Yesterday’s events were a serious matter for Felt—no, it was a grave matter even for the Kingdom of Lugunica.

Felt: “The Royal Selection… the battle to take the throne? Are you hecking kidding me? Why did you have to involve me in that unbelievable situation?”

Reinhard: “To be precise, it is a competition to be selected to accede to the throne, not a battle to take the throne. A competition, not a battle.”

Felt: “That’s not the damn problem. You’re misunderstanding me.”

Felt glared at Reinhard’s nonchalant face, her lower lip jutting out.

The Royal Selection—it was the very event that took place in the Dragon Kingdom of Lugunica, a grand incident that shook the country to its roots.

As far back as a few months ago, due to a contagious disease that occurred in the castle, the members of the long-lasted royal family had collapsed one by one, and at last, every one of them had passed away.

As a result, the throne of the current Kingdom had fallen vacant, and was placed in a worrying state of instability. The Kingdom was in a situation where it had to pick out the next King as soon as possible, but as some kind of joke, it was none other than Felt who had been set up as one of the candidates to the throne.

The person who had forcefully dragged her into that unbelievable situation was Reinhard, sitting in front of her with an innocent look on his face, and that was his true objective for confining Felt to the mansion.

Of course, there was no way anyone could unconditionally become a candidate for the next King. Not to mention Felt came from the slums, a street child who made a living through thievery. What could have gone wrong for someone like her to stand on the stage of competing for the throne? Perhaps it would be more appropriate to question Reinhard's sanity.

However, in the face of Felt's unknown origins, Reinhard had announced an outrageous theory to everyone in the castle.

According to him, Felt was a surviving member of the royal family, having been kidnapped fourteen years ago.

Such a theory was not worth a single thought of consideration, and it was also a load of ludicrous nonsense to Felt's ears. Yet, the associates of the royal castle had all taken Reinhard at his word, and had begun examining the possibilities in earnest. That fact was also ridiculous, so Felt had been sneering at them, however.

Felt: "With the thing with Rom-jii, it all got ruined, huh."

Rom had snuck into the castle in an attempt to rescue Felt. His plan ended in failure, and Felt had to declare her participation in the Royal Selection to free him from his capture.

He had apologized profusely for what he did, but Felt did not regret her decision.

She had made her own choice. Felt had already admonished herself to not be rueful over what she had chosen. To live was a chain of illogical events. Unreasonable things descended on people without giving them any measures to take against them. They were what they were.

In a world where such inconveniences ran rampant, what would she expect from extending her whining and complaining to even what she had decided for herself?

Such a foolish thing did not exist. That was Felt's conclusion, and her philosophy of life.

Felt: "That's why I only hate unreasonable things. To sum it up, it's you, Reinhard."

Reinhard: "You are being quite critical, Felt-sama. I am unreasonable?"

Felt: "No way! I won't let you say you aren't aware of it. If you're the type of person who can't even see what's right below his feet, then I don't wanna talk to you at all."

Reinhard: "You are being quite critical."

Reinhard repeated himself with a troubled expression, aimed at Felt's scathing words.

Anyway, setting aside her dissatisfaction with Reinhard, Felt did not regret her choice. Of course, Rom had been the trigger, and Reinhard was the one who had dragged her out into that place.

However, hearing the speeches delivered by the four other candidates firsthand—the various advocations made by the influential people of the Kingdom, who had gathered at one location, it was true that passion had begun simmering inside of Felt.

She did not know the specifics of what she could do yet.

Even so, as long as this passion continued to urge her on, she had decided that she would not stop moving forward.

Felt: “Though, I feel like there’s a lotta weird stuff going on in the Royal Selection.”

Reinhard: “Do you have any queries concerning the Royal Selection?”

Felt: “Well, anyone would think it’s strange. Even if my birthplace or whatever was shoved aside, what kind of standards are being used to pick the candidates of the King?”

Although Felt did not undergo education, she could imagine a mountain of abilities and talents that would be required for one to possess in order to become King.

Despite the fact that the royal family had been wiped out, it would not lessen the weight of the blood that ran under one’s veins. If a noble’s lineage, close to the original royal family was to be chosen, gifted people would be nominated as candidates, and that would be the natural course of events.

However, every one of the candidates who had stepped onto the stage of the Royal Selection alongside Felt, had all carried a uniqueness that was particular to each of them, but it was hard to say whether they met those kinds of criterias.

Felt: “A merchant from some other country, and a high-handed woman acting like she’s the most important person in the world. There’s also the half-elf girl. There was only one noble woman, but then there’s me. This isn’t a game, dammit.”

Reinhard: “Of course, everyone is aware of that. However, the glow of the insignia has chosen you and the other candidates… It is the will of the Divine Dragon who protects the Kingdom.”

Felt: “So, are you saying the Dragon is a womanizer? How weird are its tastes, choosing me and all that? Are ugly people included in its tastes?”

There were five Royal Selection candidates, and every one of them was a woman. As Felt mocked the truth of it, Reinhard looked like he had no clue of how to answer that.

Auntie: “Now, now, how could you say such a thing, Felt-sama?”

Auntie said in place of the hesitant Reinhard, butting into the conversation. She had been listening to the conversation in silence, but her brows were knitted, as if she could not put up with Felt’s words for any longer.

Felt: “What’s it, Granny? You’re mad because I badmouthed the Dragon?”

Auntie: “No, it is not because of that! I am angry because you have belittled yourself. Calling yourself ‘ugly’… even though you are this lovely? Auntie is saddened.”

Felt: “Wha…? You’re mad at me about myself?”

Upon displaying her astonishment towards the unexpected interruption, Rom-jii folded his arms beside her with a nod. Even Uncle was nodding deeply next to Auntie, and Felt suddenly felt out of place.

Rom: “Listen, Felt. I also think yer appearance is not bad…”

Felt: “Okay, time to drop the topic! How I look doesn’t matter at all! That isn’t even the problem! Hey, bring back the original topic! Talk about the topic before this, Reinhard!”

Reinhard: “Me?”

Sensing that the conversation would take a turn into something awkward, Felt cut Rom off and drew Reinhard out to make him talk. He seemed surprised at her momentum, and then blew out a short sigh, Reinhard: “Ah, yes. I understand your concerns surrounding the Royal Selection. I cannot fathom the Divine Dragon’s preferences, but the first encounter of the Kingdom and the Dragon—when the covenant was exchanged between the Kingdom of Lugunica and the Divine Dragon, the person who had conversed with the Dragon was recorded as a woman, said to be the Dragon Maiden.”

Rom: “And then, in the current situation where conversing with the Dragon once more is highly desired, the next Dragon Maiden would be chosen among the women. I’m assuming that’s how ye interpreted it.”

Reinhard: “If you could, please consider it as the consensus of the Kingdom, not only myself.”

Felt: “Those are the opinions of bigwigs like nobles and knights, right? For evidence, the people in the slums never heard such a thing, like me over here.”

As a representative of the lower classes, she did not welcome any efforts for one to have their way with her, using the “consensus of the Kingdom” as an excuse. Reinhard’s troubled expression against Felt’s opinion remained on his face,

Reinhard: “Are you stating that you are against the Royal Selection?”

Felt: “I’m just saying there’s a lotta things that make no sense. Ah, more than being against it, I have a complaint. I didn’t have the right to choose my knight. Can’t you do something about it?”

Reinhard: “As much as I would like to take your requests into consideration, I believe it will be a difficult task to entrust you to another knight, unfortunately. With all due respect, you have lashed out at the knights and the people of importance at the scene of the Selection, so I presume that it will be a struggle to find someone who could make a pledge to dedicate their sword to…”

Felt: “I know, okay? I’m just being sarcastic. It can’t be helped, so I guess I’ll put up with you.”

Reinhard: “Yes, please bear with me. This body of mine, this sword, everything is for you, Felt-sama.”

Felt: “Ugh, so annoying.”

Felt stuck out her tongue at Reinhard’s overly formal response.

Taking Reinhard’s reputation within the Kingdom into account, anyone would be perplexed by Felt’s attitude towards him. However, every person in this mansion, including Reinhard himself, did not reprove her for it. In fact, they saw her attitude in a favorable light.

Rom: “Well, it’s what Felt decided for herself. I don’t plan on complaining about this and that at this time, but… I can’t deny we’re somewhat inadequate as a Royal Selection team.”

Once the topic at hand had reached a stopping point, Rom muttered that out whilst patting his bald head.

The Felt Camp, one of the teams about to start fighting in the Royal Selection—setting the leader, Felt aside, it included Reinhard, her number one knight. Rom, who was basically her family. The married couple who was involved with the Astrea family and managed the mansion, and lastly—

Reinhard: “These three, who have been remaining unconscious for a terribly long time?”

Felt: “Doesn’t it feel good to have nothing? I’m starting to find this fun.”

Reinhard: “…Fun?”

As Felt contorted her face with a smirk, Rom and Reinhard simultaneously stared at her in wonder. Receiving their gazes, she showed her fang with a, “Isn’t that right?”

Felt: “No one expects anything from us. No matter what you think of it, it’ll be even more of a sight if we flip over the situation from there. This is our advantage.”

Rom & Reinhard: "…"

Felt boasted with a remarkable amount of assertiveness, slapping her own slender chest.

Hearing her overly confident stance on the matter, Rom and Reinhard were unable to utter anything at the moment. Instead, what made the time resume its ticking was a loud clap.

Auntie: "Come now, let's proceed with dining instead of conversing for eternity. Wonderful ideas will not come to your mind if you are hungry. Grandpa says so, as well."

Uncle: "—h?!"

As Auntie said that whilst clapping her hands, Uncle widened his eyes at his name being used to her advantage.

Seeing the married couple's interaction, Felt accidentally burst into laughter. After that, she cracked her neck, and then grabbed her fork and knife to eat her long-awaited breakfast.

She learned some manners during these two months, at least.

Reinhard: "Felt-sama."

Felt: "There's proper etiquette for this, right? I know, I know."

Reinhard: "Yes, please."

It was terribly vexing to have something pointed out by Reinhard even during one meal.

In the future, could there be a possibility that he would give her instructions for anything and everything for the sake of the Royal Selection? If so—

Felt: "Maybe this'll be the first time I'll regret my own choice."

Like that, Felt sated her hunger, squashing out her bitterness with the delicious breakfast.

With breakfast coming to an end, Felt returned to the room that was hers for the time being, keeping a careful eye on the time before heading out to the mansion's garden after a while.

And then, there was the trio, sprawled out on the grass yet again.

Felt: "Don't you guys feel dizzy, getting that desperate even though you missed breakfast? Plus, it's not lunch time yet."

Stepping on the grass, Felt stood next to the trio, tilting her head at their state. They were in the same situation as during the morning, except they were not tidied out of the way, probably because they would not be a bother to Uncle's work. Adding to that, Uncle had determined they would be unable to move despite leaving them unattended.

???: "Sh, shut up. How dare you mess with us…"

A sharp-eyed man had said first upon looking at Felt's gaze, his voice rich with spite.

Lying down on the grass with their limbs spread out, among the three men whose heights were large, medium, and small respectively, the man with an average build and a face full of caution—his name was—

Felt: "I'm not messing with you, Rachins. Actually, I'm a little impressed. I only have one body, so I couldn't split up and get on the move like you three."

However, it must be said that although they could cooperate with each other, it was hopeless if they were defeated one by one.

????: "Wh-What the hell is that old man? He disappeared from my sight when I thought I grabbed him."

?????: "To me, it looked like you were bouncing around on your own and then fell over, Gaston."

Gaston: "There's no way I would do anything crazy like that…"

The large Gaston and the tiny Camberley were exchanging words, sounding exhausted. They appeared to be less hot-blooded compared to Rachins, but all three of them seemed to balance each other very well.

Anyway, Felt could agree with a certain point in their after-action review.

Felt: “I feel you, totally. Gramps gave me a terrible time just like you guys. But, don’t get the wrong idea. Gramps is like that, but his methods are the most gentle. Granny and Reinhard are way more merciless than him. Especially Reinhard, he’s the worst. It’s like he’s trying to break our spirit.”

Gaston: “O-Oh, okay, I see…”

Felt’s stories about her struggles began flowing out like a river. When it came to planning an escape from House Astrea, Felt had more than ten times the amount of experience compared to the trio. However, she did not intend to divulge further information, since she would only be venting out her frustration, as there was not a single attempt which had ended in success.

Rachins: “…Rather than that, you don’t have any complaints against us?”

Rachins asked out of the blue, sitting cross-legged on the grass whilst raising his eyes to look at Felt.

Felt: “Complaints? Me? Why?”

Rachins: “Why, you ask…? I mean, we three are trying to escape.”

He spoke honestly with an embarrassed expression, causing Felt to smile wryly.

Felt: “Well, I expected you guys would try and escape. Though, I don’t even think I was able to be on friendly terms with you all from that short chat from yesterday.”

Felt shrugged her slim shoulders, gazing at the faces of each individual.

Rachins's group will be accepted into the Felt Camp. —She had decided to take the first step with her choice.

Yesterday, on the way back home from the castle, where Felt had announced her intention to participate in the Royal Selection, she and her companions had stopped by at the loot house—their old home, and encountered the trio at the site of the demolished building. They had pointed a knife at Felt, threatening her to fork over her money, but their opponent was completely out of their league.

In the blink of an eye, the trio had been thoroughly defeated by Reinhard, who had been present, and originally, they would have been delivered to the guards. Felt had prevented that, and also extended a hand to them.

It was not as if Felt had been unable to help herself, nor did she take action out of sympathy. She simply thought it would be interesting to win over those three as her allies, and to have them accompany her.

If she were to keep moving in order to become King, she would purposefully choose a refreshing lot of people to bring with her, if things were going to be that way. She had brought them to the mansion for that reason, told them the whole story behind her actions, and made them promise their cooperation, but—

Felt: "Minds change once you cool down. I was also raised in the slums, you know? It's easy to see through the true natures of the people who live there."

Camberley: "Huh? That doesn't really sound like we're being complimented."

Rachins: "That's because it's not even a compliment. Stop screwing around, damn it…"

Felt: "It's good that you guys are stubborn, but you probably didn't even think it through before trying to escape, right? You sounded like you were all being chased by someone else in the first place."

Rachins: “Guh…!”

They had invoked the ire of their superior because they had messed up at work. Their conversation had gone like that, if she remembered correctly.

In other words, even if they fled from Felt, they would have to keep running from owning up to their mistake, so it was unsuitable as a solution to the root of the problem.

Gaston: “Wh, what should we do?”

Camberley: “I thought it would work out somehow. Though, I don’t have anything to support that.”

As Felt had thought, the trio did not have anyone or anything they could rely on.

That foolhardiness about them showed that they were residents of the slums, indeed. Even among the residents, she felt like they were a little too rash, however.

Felt: “There isn’t much stuff I can say. It’s just… this place is much better compared to trying to escape as a conditioned response. Well, I won’t tell you to listen to me no matter what, or anything like that.”

Gaston: “…But, that’s just going to be a loss for you. If you were raised in slums, I can’t think of a reason why you’d lend a hand to us, even though you won’t get anything in return.”

Felt: “My reason for lending a hand…”

Gaston muttered out in a low voice, gazing at Felt. Rachins and Camberley were also staring at her in the same fashion, causing her to scratch her head from having their eyes on her.

Rachins: “It’s just as Gaston said. Lending a hand to us even if you won’t get anything in return? Impossible! No one would think they wouldn’t be treated as a sacrificial pawn, if you tell them to believe you like that!”

Camberley: “Huh? But weren’t you saying we could try believing in her yesterday?”

Gaston: “Shut up for a little while, Camberley.”

As Camberley said something he could have kept to himself, Gaston grabbed his face with the palm of his hand. With the forcefully silenced Camberley behind him, Rachins continued to glare at Felt,

Rachins: “What’s your objective? What do you really wanna make us do?”

Felt: “…I told you everything about my plans yesterday.”

Felt closed one of her eyes in response to his doubt-filled eyes.

The trio had asked her an identical question the day before, and she had given them the same answer. She did not make a sincere plea with them. She had only invited them to come along with her.

Felt: “A lotta people piss you off, right? That’s why I’m inviting you all to make them pay. And you guys are worried because… you don’t know what kind of role you’re supposed to take up, I guess.”

Rachins: “…”

The moment she uttered that one sentence, Rachins’s facial expression had morphed into something else. Gaston and Camberley saw his face, casting worried glances towards him.

Presumably, Rachins was the one who made the most decisions out of the three. However, he was also the easiest to sway, so it seemed like the other two provided him with their support. Such was the nature of their relationship.

They had come this far as a group of three, yet they held no confidence within themselves.

What led Felt to invite them in was not much of a proper reason, and they were not wanted in the sense of being absolutely necessary to her team. Not to mention they had been living their life in the slums. —They did not know why they were chosen.

Because they understood they had nothing to pride themselves on, more so than anyone else.

Felt: “Don’t worry. I don’t know what to do either.”

Rachins: “Ah?”

Felt: “I told you, didn’t I? I grew up in the slums, but now I’m suddenly set up as a Royal Selection candidate. If I was full of motivation, and if I were to say that I already made up my mind on what to do and what to achieve, I would be a monster. The monster’s my knight, not me.”

Reinhard was a monster in terms of physical abilities, but he was quite unreliable when it came to other things.

Felt: “So, I can’t tell you guys to start working your butts off out of the blue, and I won’t say it, too.”

Rachins: “Th, then, what are you planning to do?”

Felt: “I’m saying, let’s start thinking about it after this. I have to learn so many things, and it’s definitely gonna be a pain to study… but, maybe you could throw away your belief that you have nothing, you know?”

At Felt’s fanged smile, Rachins and the other two exchanged dumbfounded glances.

They had nothing. It was the same for Felt, who had no idea of what to do with herself. That was why, as fellow people who possessed matching personal problems, they could at least chatter away and argue amongst themselves while moving forward.

Camberley: “…I’m thinking I can go with you, Missy.”

Unexpectedly, Camberley had been the first to say that. Having been carried on Gaston’s shoulder, Camberley clenched his fists in front of Felt as he was lowered onto the grass.

Camberley: “It’s a little too difficult for me to understand, but now I know which one is easier to understand. It would be really bad for us even if we ran away from here, so…”

He turned around, nodding at Rachins and Gaston.

Camberley: “Let’s reconsider it. Even if we apologized to that Russell and he were to forgive us, our positions as errand boys will never change, right?”

Gaston: “…To think I’ve been convinced by you. That hadn’t happened since I picked up Rachins from the back alley. He was like a ragged piece of cloth back then.”

Rachins: “Shut up!”

Gaston said that while laughing wryly, and then Rachins barked out a retort at his words. However, it was also a sign that the two had allowed themselves to relax and show their agreement with Camberley.

The balance had tipped over. As for which direction it had tilted towards, Felt understood that well enough.

Rachins: “…Just saying, but we’ll be ready to escape at any moment if things start turning against us.”

Gaston: “We’ll also filch any valuables along the way!”

Camberley: “If it comes to suddenly turning aggressive and running away, no one does it better than us!”

The trio declared respectively, finally making their choice to join the Felt Camp.

Felt gave them a contented smile, and then crossed her arms.

Felt: “I’ll tell you this, but even if you throw Gramps and the others off guard, they still won’t have any mercy on you guys.”

Gaston, Rachins, & Camberley:

“W-We won’t do anything like that!”

“We aren’t even planning to!”

“We’ll only try a little!”

The more they spoke, the more their true intentions were exposed.

Well, Felt could laugh it off as an easily comprehensible fault of people who had been raised in the slums.

5

Rom: “—It seems like you’re unexpectedly motivated to do this.”

Felt: “Rom-jii?”

After spending a few heartwarming moments with the trio at the garden, Felt was about to return to her room, only to be greeted by Rom in front of it.

He had a good-natured old man’s look on his fierce, scary face, which caused Felt to scratch the tip of her nose with a, “Oh, you were watching?”

Felt: “It’s not like I can just run away from it right now. Also, I don’t wanna lose when I decided I would do it. You also don’t remember raising a loser, right?”

Rom: “I raised ye to make sure ye wouldn’t get discouraged from getting tossed around by the harsh realities of the world, but with that, ye might be more of a first-class student than I thought.”

Felt: “Heh, give me a break, treating me like a first-class student and all that. It doesn’t suit me.”

Felt shook her head at Rom’s words whilst laughing mischievously. Rom narrowed his eyes at her reaction, with deep emotion surfacing onto his face for some reason.

Strangely, a forlorn feeling tugged at her when she saw his face, and Felt stiffened her expression. And then, although she was deciding this out of all times, she asked him a question that she had to ask.

Felt: “You know… we couldn’t really talk because yesterday was like, a really busy day, right? But, you know, I have something I wanna ask you.”

Rom: “What, you’re being unlike yerself. You’re acting like an ordinary little lass.”

Felt: “—. You’re right, I’m not acting like myself. I get it. Then I’ll just say it.”

With Rom jabbing at her hesitation, Felt took a deep breath before looking at him straight in the eye.

And then, she announced what she had declared back at the castle once more.

Felt: “—I’m participating in the Royal Selection. It’s annoying how this is going the way Reinhard wanted it to, but I also talked it out with Rachins and his group. I also ran my mouth in front of so many people, saying, I’ll do it. But that’s not enough.”

Rom: “Hm, not enough, ye say?”

Felt: “Actually, this is just me being selfish, so I wasn’t planning to make you come with me. But if you aren’t here, I’ll be worried and I won’t have the confidence that I’ll make it. So…”

Rom: “…”

Felt: “I want you to help me. I want you, my only family, to stay together with me.”

To Felt, the only person she could trust was the elderly man in front of her, without exaggeration.

Ever since she became aware of her surroundings, she had been raised in the unforgiving environment of the slums. Rom had always been there beside her. Felt had been taught how to live, learned how to use things to her advantage, and had been gifted with her life.

Even after she had matured and started living separately from him, she did not believe that the distance between their hearts had widened. She strongly felt that way even in the present.

Rom: “…What are yer thoughts on yer origins?”

Felt: “…”

Rom: “The young Sword Saint said it at the castle. That you’re the daughter of the topmost family in Lugunica, and also that ye might be the infant who was kidnapped from there. That ye had a family. What…”

Felt: “You’re my only family, Rom-jii!”

Felt exclaimed, cutting off Rom’s hoarse voice.

Rom: “…”

He stood still, his face stiffening at her response. She angled back her head to gaze up at his face, biting her lip before beginning to speak.

Felt: “I don’t know if that’s actually true. I’m not interested either. My only family is you, the person who stayed together with me since I was a kid. I don’t give a damn about the people who aren’t here anymore, or weren’t even here to begin with.”

She was not putting up a brave front, nor was it a bluff. Those were her genuine, true feelings.

Whether it concerned where she was born or who was her kin, the information that her surroundings had made a scene about was a trivial matter to her, and she couldn’t care less about it.

What was important to her was the person who had stuck with her. That was all.

That was why she wanted that person to stay with her even from now on. That was all.

Rom: “…Oh well, that’s really unlike yerself.”

Having received the full attention of Felt's gaze, Rom broke into a smile. He let out a sigh, looking as if he had been taken aback, and stroked his bald head slowly.

Rom: "If it were ye from a little while ago, ye wouldn't have told me about this beforehand. Ye would've dragged me into this as ye pleased, and then stick yer tongue out as if ye just didn't do that. I still haven't forgotten the day when the loot house got blown away."

Felt: "Uh… no, that was my fault for jumping on a sweet deal…"

Rom: "Aye. It wouldn't have turned into a load of baloney if ye at least discussed it with me. So…"

As Felt reflected on her mistakes with slumped shoulders, a large palm caressed the sulking girl's head.

And then, he crouched over to Felt, who appeared to be surprised,

Rom: "If I don't stay next to her and watch over her, my granddaughter'll keep being a handful. I can't go into retirement in peace like that."

Felt: "Rom-jii…!"

As Rom said that with a laugh, Felt's face brightened. Wondering where her previous anxiousness and nervousness had gone, Rom shrugged exasperatedly at her rapidly shifting attitude.

Perhaps Felt had grown embarrassed at how her reaction went from one extreme to the other, as her cheeks flushed as she quietly escaped from Rom's palm, which had been resting on her head,

Felt: "Al-Alright, it's decided, then. With this, I won't have to come across a situation where you shriveled up and died while I'm unaware. It's worth celebrating or something."

Rom: "Yes, yes, I get it, I get it. Either way, I wasn't even planning on leaving ye and returning to the slums. I guess I'll have ye do yer best and let me live a life of luxury after my retirement."

Felt: “You said you won’t retire, right? I’ll have you work really hard for some time, together with me.”

The time it would take for the Royal Selection to be settled was three years at the very least. Rom drew back his chin in an exaggerated manner at Felt’s demand, which had taken that into account, and said, “Fine.”

At that, she internally heaved out a sigh of relief.

Although she did not expect him to reject her request, the uneasiness that came from the possibility of it had lingered within her. She would fight whoever turned against her as an enemy, but preferably, she wanted Rom to watch over her from behind.

Felt: “Right. Sorry for saying these things at short notice, but Reinhard said he’s planning to leave the Capital tomorrow. Apparently, we’re going to his home towards the east or something.”

Rom: “House Astrea’s territory, I see. If ye wanna fight through the Royal Selection, ye have to start from securing the foundation of yer team. It’s the correct choice.”

Felt widened her eyes when she heard Rom mutter that out with a hand to his chin.

His interpretation was completely identical with what Reinhard had told her. It was almost as if he knew it without needing an explanation, and Felt scratched her cheek at that.

Felt: “It’s like you know about the Royal Selection more than me, Rom-jii.”

Rom: “Nonsense. How much longer do ye think I’ve been living compared to ye? It’s easy to understand this much with a little bit of thinking.”

Felt: “Really? Though, I felt like you’re really reliable. As expected of my Rom-jii!”

She prioritized the sense of security it would bring as the reason for why she wanted Rom to remain in her team, but the indication that he would take a bigger role made her feel as if he would be very trustworthy.

Felt: “That’s why we’re gonna leave the Capital, but are you alright with it?”

Rom: “In the first place, my only personal belonging is this body of mine. I had nothing from the moment the loot house was blown away. If it’s about whether my mind is prepared for it or not, then it’s a yes.”

Felt: “Right, it’s good if that’s the case, but… did you already hear about it from someone else?”

Rom: “Only about leaving the Capital. His devotion to ye is pretty admirable.”

Felt: “You mean, that bastard…?”

Reinhard’s face crossed her mind at Rom’s mocking manner of speech.

Had he informed Rom in advance out of consideration? Simply thinking about it made Felt curl her lip into a sneer, however.

Rom: “Ye might not like him, but there isn’t a knight greater than him out there. Since ye’ll have to put up with him for a long time, ye better find a way to get along with him.”

Felt: “Like, putting you between us whenever we talk?”

Rom: “I wonder why you’re so open with yer hate for him…”

She could only describe the most important reason for it as how Reinhard had been the largest obstacle, standing between Felt and her reunion with Rom, causing her animosity towards him to be nurtured daily.

If was not as if no other reason existed for it, but—

Felt: “Well, I’ll think about it because you told me that… I’m gonna go back to my room, but what will you do? Will you come with me?”

Feeling somewhat strange about having an endless conversation in the hallway, Felt pointed at the door behind Rom.

Felt: “There’s a ton of books he told me to read. So, it’ll be really helpful if you could be someone I can talk to…”

Rom: “No, I don’t mean to disturb ye while you’re studying. I’ll at least learn how to pose myself as an old geezer that assists the higher-ups from my predecessors.”

Felt: “Ah, you’re talking about Gramps and Granny. Right, you don’t have friends either, so use this opportunity to get friendly with them. Gramps won’t speak, so go together with Granny.”

Saying that, Felt parted ways with Rom and entered her room.

She saw a mountain of books dumped on her desk, containing the materials she had to learn as a “ruler”, all chosen by Reinhard.

Felt: “He’s a really merciless guy…”

Felt let out a weary sigh at the sight before her, then cracked her neck before walking towards her desk.

Whilst telling herself that this was a necessary step to move forward, since she had decided to not escape, after all.

6

After staring after Felt as she entered her room, Rom breathed out a heavy sigh.

By chance, it was simultaneous with the moment Felt had also let out a sigh after looking at her mountain of books, but it was an unknown fact to them, who were inside and outside of the room respectively.

On top of that, there was a large difference between the individual emotions embedded into their sighs.

Felt, who had resolved herself to attempt to complete her homework, and Rom's sigh, which harbored remorse and uncertainty.

???: "—It seems like you've endeared yourself to Felt-sama."

????: "…"

It was when he had distanced himself from Felt's room, wondering what to do from now on as he took a step forward.

Upon whirling around towards the voice behind him, he spotted a silhouette approaching from the end of the corridor, making its way towards him with noiseless steps. The shadow was a white-haired, elderly woman who had a straightened posture—the woman Felt had called "Auntie" out of admiration.

She was a gentle person, never forgetful of her courtesy and consideration, but the woman currently walking before Rom was a swordswoman, wildly different from her amicable impression.

In fact, although she held nothing in her hands, Rom could feel the razor-sharp spirit of the sword stabbing into his entire body.

Rom: "Greetings. I thought I didn't forget to give my thanks after the meal?"

Auntie: "Well, well, how are you able to prattle on like that? Have you procured Felt-sama's trust with those insincere words of yours, as usual? If that is so, it seems like your despicable nature hasn't changed."

Rom: "That's a harsh way of putting it. Ye talk about me as if ye know who I am, but have we even met? I wonder what in the world are ye talking about…"

The woman narrowed her eyes as Rom cocked his head. The gleam in her eyes was already sharp as a sword, yet it was growing increasingly cutting, on the verge of switching into the will to fight by revealing her withdrawn blade.

Rom took one step back from his unexpectedly short tempered opponent. However, the moment he made that one step, he noticed a different person standing behind him.

Conceivably, the person was surrounded by a threatening aura, more so than the elderly woman before him—

????: “…”

Rom: “Not only are ye silent, but ye even concealed yer presence. I guess there’s quite the bunch of dangerous servants here. Although, that lad alone would be enough when it comes to fighting.”

Auntie: “You shall not insult the young master. There won’t be a next time.”

Behind him was the silent gardener, and at his front was a sword-like, elderly woman. Rom’s cheeks stiffened slightly at the fact he was trapped between the two, but he waited to see what would be their first move.

If he were to act carelessly, then the gardener would be more troublesome than the elderly woman.

Rom: “Ye seem pretty hot-tempered. That’s yer true self, ain’t it?”

????: “…Do, not… anger my, wife.”

A low, guttural voice kept Rom at bay as he spoke to the elderly woman. From the hoarseness of the voice, he was able to judge that the gardener was unable to speak rather than refusing to do so.

Thinking of the gardener as a voiceless man who was also affiliated with the Astrea family, distant memories started to resurface.

There used to be a fateful connection between Rom and the Astrea family. Inside of that—

Rom: “—I see. I thought I’ve met ye two somewhere, but ye got that kind of connection.”

Rom’s convinced muttering had slipped out, causing the elderly woman to tighten her expression into a fierce look upon hearing it.

As he had thought, the one who easily got emotional was the wife instead of the husband.

Rom: “It seems like that aspect of ye hasn’t changed, Carol Remendis.”

Carol: “—hk?! Where did you learn my…”

Rom: “The people involved at that time, especially the fellows from the Kingdom… Most of them are here.”

The elderly woman held her breath as Rom used a finger to tap his own head. While watching her reaction, Rom gazed out of the window at the garden below.

Rom: “Ye probably only caught those three thugs as a part of taking the opportunity to do what ye were doing. That means the person ye were keeping yer eyes on throughout the night was me.”

Carol: “You should be more than aware of the reason for that.”

Rom: “It seems like that youngster also knew my true identity, after all. Damn Sword Demon… Ye built a pretty nasty family, just as I thought. How irritating.”

He patted his bald head with the palm of his hand, scowling as wrinkles of loathing etched themselves onto his face. It was an expression that he had never shown Felt—after she became aware of her surroundings, at least.

Ever since the day the loot house had been blown away, everything had started taking a turn for the worse and showed no signs of stopping. It was as if Rom’s past, something he had wanted to forget no matter what, began advancing on him in a circle all at once, whilst it also felt like what he had discarded was being collected.

The turning point in life that had visited Felt, his relationship with the Astrea family, his fateful connection to the married couple, and everything.

Rom: “The past is in the past, and war is war. There’s nothing I can say aside from that result.”

Carol: “Out of all the people, you are saying this? Who do you think would believe your words?”

Rom: “I’m Rom-jii, a small-time scoundrel who earned a small sum of money by buying and selling off stolen goods in the loot house. I am nothing more, and nothing less. I’m not thinking of using that girl… Felt.”

He shook his head slowly. Closing his eyes, the memories he had shared with the infant had reemerged.

He had continuously watched over the girl’s growth, ever since she had been tiny to the point she could fit in his palm.

—His resentment and vindictiveness from back then had all been washed away by the days he had spent with the girl.

Uncle: “—Can you, keep… your, word?”

Looking at Rom’s eyes, the elderly woman hesitated to pursue his declaration with her words. The person who had asked the question instead of her was the owner of the hoarse voice, while maintaining the piercing look in his gaze.

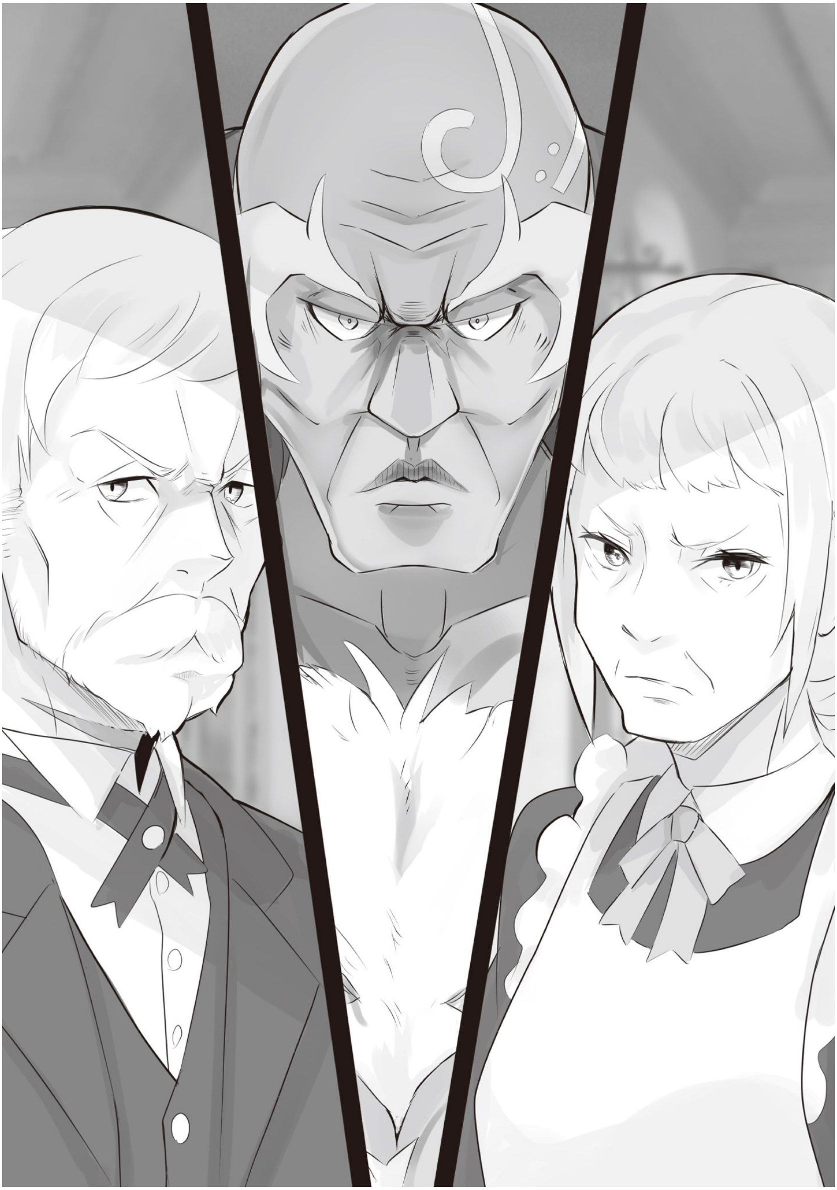
—He saw the warrior with a shield within the man, someone who was always beside the Sword Demon.

Rom: “Can I keep my word, ye ask? Seems like you’re misunderstanding something.”

Uncle: “…”

Rom: “I already made that vow a long time ago. That girl saved my way of life, ye know.”

Saying that, Rom purposefully turned back to face the husband as he began walking. The gardener did not stop him even as he passed by. The elderly woman did not attempt to strike him from behind with the sword she had hidden at her back, either.



Even if they did such things, Rom could not blame them. His lack of virtue had shaped his sins.

However, if they were granting him a reprieve, then he would do all he could.

As someone who had brought misfortune to both his enemies and brethren alike in the past, he would give everything he had to his one and only granddaughter.

Upon making an uneventful turn at the corner of the hallway, Rom's resolve had shifted into a sincere vow.

7

Felt: "Ugh…"

Felt grimaced without making an effort to hide it, right as she turned around the corner of the hallway during midnight.

There was only one person in this mansion that she would show such a reaction to. Said person forced a smile as he saw her blatant attitude.

???: "Felt-sama, allow me to question your decision to say, 'Geh' upon meeting me."

Felt: "Doesn't matter. What, weren't you out somewhere?"

She said to him, sticking her lips out at how his words sounded like a lecture.

Felt had eaten dinner after grappling with the massive amount of teaching materials in her room, but Reinhard had been absent. However, according to Auntie, there was a possibility that he might come home late.

Reinhard: "I apologize for being unable to join you for dinner. I was required to report my schedule from after tomorrow to the castle, and I also attended to a personal matter. Were there any problems?”

Felt: “Those three idiots finally took on a bolder attitude, and they ate loads of food. That’s pretty much it.”

It was after they made their choice to join the Felt Camp, but Rachins and his group’s voracious appetites were truly impressive. Truthfully, Felt had been worried about Auntie potentially finding them unpleasant, but she seemed content with the fact that the young men enjoyed her cooking, remaining pleased for the entire duration of the meal. Felt had been relieved thanks to that.

Anyway—

Felt: “Did you just get back? I wonder if there’s any supper left. Gotta ask Granny.”

Reinhard: “Thank you for your consideration… Have you just finished taking a bath?”

He was quick to spot Felt’s damp hair and her flushed face. She nodded while fanning herself with a hand, her skin tinted with red because she was fresh out of the bath.

Felt: “Yeah, I’m going to have to say goodbye to the bath in this mansion after today. I also had my energy drained by the heartless amount of homework you gave me, so I guess I was sad about having to leave it.”

Reinhard: “I see. Ah, please do not forget to dry your hair before going to bed. It will become tousled if it remains damp, and it would be such a waste if that happens to your beautiful hair.”

Felt: “Mind your own damn business.”

She stuck her tongue out, adding to her own unfriendliness, which caused Reinhard’s smile to become increasingly strained. Felt narrowed her eyes at his back as he passed by her, attempting to return to his room with a, “Alright, I will be taking my leave, then.”

For some reason, she felt like something was wrong when she compared him to his usual self.

Felt: “Hey, Reinhard. Are you feeling down, by any chance?”

Reinhard: “…”

Reinhard’s eyes widened slightly as Felt stopped him by calling his name. Seeing how he had reacted with surprise, she herself was also somewhat taken aback.

It was not rare for Reinhard to appear surprised or impressed. However, no matter his reaction, there was a constant sense of calmness and placidity attributed to his behavior.

Currently, it almost looked like those sorts of barriers had been discarded from his expression.

Perhaps, what she said had been an unexpected blow against him in a true sense.

Reinhard: “May I ask what led to that thought?”

Felt: “Eh? Uhh, it’s not really a big deal. Usually, you would go somewhere, come back, and then start blabbering your head off even though I never asked you to. But today, you aren’t even trying to say anything, and you tried to wrap up the conversation as quickly as possible.”

Reinhard: “…I’m surprised. I have always assumed you disliked me.”

Felt: “Just because I noticed doesn’t mean I don’t dislike you. I used to be desperate about trying to best you every single day, to begin with. If anything, I was observing you carefully to see if you’ll let your guard down.”

Felt denied his suspicions by wording it strongly, unable to bear the thought of him having a bizarre misunderstanding. Just then, Reinhard gave her a vaguely stiff smile, responding with an unusual, “I understand.”

And then,

Reinhard: “You do not have any plans after this, do you, Felt-sama?"

Felt: "…Nah. I'm planning to sleep in early to prepare for tomor…"

Reinhard: "Would you like to speak with me in my room for a little while? There is something I would like you to hear ab…"

Felt: "Listen to me, dammit!"

She protested at how Reinhard had moved the conversation along without her permission, but he did not respond. He started walking away, completely set on welcoming her into his room.

Felt: "…"

Felt could simply return to her room, treating the matter as something that was none of her business. In fact, that was how she had been acting towards him so far. However, there was a case where Rom had provided her with advice.

That she would have to put up with him for a long time. That she should find a way to get along with him.

Felt: "…Oh man, guess I don't have a choice."

Shrugging her shoulders that were still warm from the bath, Felt followed after Reinhard. His room was at the end of the corridor, positioned precisely on the opposite side of the mansion from Felt's room.

Reinhard: "Here it is."

Felt: "Huh."

Striding through the doorway as Reinhard opened the door, Felt stepped into his room for the first time.

She glanced around, surveying the interior of the room, but she was greeted by a dull place.

The layout was identical to her own room, and the arrangement of furniture was also quite similar. He had the same bed as her, and a worn out desk was placed at the edge of the room. The bookshelf next to the desk was filled with books that looked humorless and boring, and a nondescript painting was hung on the wall.

Reinhard's room was organized and tidied thoroughly, giving of the feel of a typical first-class student's room.

Reinhard: "It may not appear like anything special, but…"

Felt: "You're right, it's nothing interesting."

Reinhard: "You are quite critical."

He forced a smile as he replied, somehow regaining his usual relaxed mood without Felt's knowledge. She did not mind it, but it would be tiresome for her if he constructed a wall between her and himself, even though she had accepted his invitation.

Letting her gaze travel around with those thoughts in mind, Felt set her eyes upon a part of the wall. Only that place had a subtly different impression compared to the room of a first-class student.

It was a sword that was hung on the wall. It was not that big—on the small side, in fact. It was elaborately embellished, but it seemed like it would not be too practical. —From Felt's point of view, her first thought was that it looked decently expensive.

Felt: "What's that sword? It looks totally different from the one you're always carrying around."

Reinhard: "Ah, yes. Unlike the Dragon Sword, this is merely a nameless sword."

Saying that, Reinhard caressed the hilt of the sword fitted into a white scabbard, hanging by his waist. The sword he carried with him at all times was one that was tied to an anecdote, which rumored that it had slain the Witch.

Compared to such a weapon, any famous, renowned sword would surely be a downgrade, but—

Reinhard: "—My father had prepared this sword for me, early in my childhood.”

Felt: “Huh.”

Hearing his words, Felt narrowed her eyes at the polished sword that was neatly tended to.

Yesterday at the castle, she had met Reinhard’s father just for a brief moment. They did not stumble across each other at the area of the Royal Selection, but he had paid her a visit in the waiting room before it began.

To be honest, he was not a likeable person. To be blunt, she ought to regard his character with scorn.

That was the very reason why she felt as if she could not say anything positive, nor negative about how Reinhard perceived his own decision to decorate his wall with the gift he had received from such a man.

Felt: “Anyway, you read a lotta books that I can’t understand.”

Felt changed the subject, pulling out several books from the bookshelf before lying down on the bed without being advised to, and then flipping through the pages. Every one of the books were either historical or academic.

Witnessing Felt’s posture, Reinhard brought a hand to his own forehead.

Reinhard: “Your manners are unbecoming for a lady, Felt-sama.”

Felt: “Even a real lady wouldn’t care about how others would look at her, when she’s in her mansion and fresh out of the bath.”

Reinhard: “That is not quite true. You must start thinking about it as such.”

Felt: “Where did you learn that it’s ‘not quite true’, huh? Was it written in these excessively long books? Sounds way too fishy.”

Reinhard held his tongue at Felt, who had sat up whilst disturbing the sheets. Whether it was because she blamed him for his lack of evidence, or because she had mentioned the credibility of his books, it was uncertain which one had struck home with him.

Felt: “From the spine of the books, you only have these kinds of stuff in your bookshelf, huh. Why don’t you get more interesting books, since there’s no reason for why you can’t? Don’t you know how to have fun?”

Reinhard: “Books exist to garner knowledge. You yourself have learned how to read and white because…”

Felt: “Rom-jii only put it all into my head because he said it’ll be useful. Actually, it turned out pretty well since I became able to read sign boards and letters. He also taught me how to calculate numbers to make sure no one could cheat me out of my reward after doing my job. Though, that was necessary for me to survive.”

Reinhard: “…”

Felt: “You didn’t have to be cornered into a desperate situation in order to live, right? That’s why your way of thinking is kinda freaky. You’re correct, but you’re only correct. It’s not like you wanted the books that are in your bookshelf, am I right?”

Reinhard fell silent. Did he lack a rebuttal because he could not find the words to make one, or because verbal abuse was swirling within his chest, which he was directing towards Felt?

That was alright. In fact, it would be more “normal” for him to be furious at a little girl after she had said all she wanted to say to him without restraint.

If she could catch a glimpse of Reinhard’s true colors, which were not reflected in the atmosphere of his room…

Reinhard: “…As of now, I am at a loss for words. I will return a proper response to you eventually.”

Felt: “—. Right. Then, that’s fine.”

If he did not attempt to deceive her with sugar-coated words, then that was good enough.

After that, Felt sat cross-legged on the bed, and Reinhard pulled the chair near his desk, sitting down in front of her.

Felt: “And? What do you have to tell me?”

Reinhard: “Allow me to give you a quick report. Today at the castle, I received an official announcement of my appointment. For the next three years until the conclusion of the Royal Selection, I will be transferred from the post of a Royal Guard to the position of the knight who will be at your side. What will be of me after that will be determined by the course of the Royal Selection, but I look forward to being able to work with you. Although I am very inexperienced…”

Felt: “Quit it with your overly formal stuff. I already heard about it yesterday, as well as after the duel, to the point my ears were starting to itch.”

Originally, Reinhard belonged to the Royal Guard of the Kingdom, and in principle, he was not permitted to leave from his duties. However, exceptions were made for the knights of the candidates who participated in the current Royal Selection, allowing them three years of freedom—in other words, they were entrusted with the role of the sole knight of their mistress.

Felt was uninterested in the trivial matters that accompanied such a fact, and she had displayed that in a curt manner. However, a slightly somber look had crossed Reinhard’s face during their exchange.

She recalled yesterday’s events, thinking the change in his expression could be tied to a topic related to the castle, another topic related to the Royal Selection, or—

Felt: “By any chance, do you look sad because of something related to yesterday’s duel?”

Reinhard: “I… cannot deny that. No, it is related.”

The duel—Felt had brought up a dispute that had occured behind the scenes, whilst the Royal Selection candidates had been delivering their speeches of their respective ideals and policies.

Simply put, it concerned a disagreement between fellow knights of the candidates, but the circumstances of the incident and the positions of the two contributors were quite complicated.

Specifically, the knight who had been handed a crushing defeat was not an unfamiliar person to Felt.

Felt: “You’re familiar with both of them, right? I only know that boy, though.”

Reinhard: “Julius has taken responsibility for the disturbance, and the Knight Commander has given him the order for suspension. Fortunately, he is unscathed, but… I believe he is reproaching himself for his dishonorable actions.”

Felt: “Huh.”

The knight that had been mentioned was a person who had given Felt a very knight-like impression at first glance.

Although the reputation of being the “knight among knights” was attributed to Reinhard, from what Felt had seen, she thought it was far more suitable for the other knight to be described as such.

Was there a problem with the knight’s behavior or the way he spoke?—Felt could not bring herself to approve of what he had done as well.

However, she also could not really agree with how Reinhard had decided to perceive his fellow knight’s behavior as, “reflecting upon his own dishonorable actions”. That knight was not necessarily regretful about it.

Reinhard: “And, this is about Subaru, who is our mutual friend, but he is currently visiting the mansion of another candidate, Duchess Crusch Karsten. Although, I do not know the reason for why he is staying there.”

Felt: “Putting aside whether that boy’s ‘our’ friend, why did things turn out like that? He fought for the half-elf girl, right?”

To be exact, she thought the boy had fought for his self-righteousness because he wanted to believe that, however.

Though he had been placed in a rather complex position, Subaru was someone identical to a savior to Felt. It was true that the incident with the Bowel Hunter would have gone south if he had been absent.

As Felt’s thoughts reached a certain point, an awful possibility occurred to her.

Felt: “This is just a maybe, but you didn’t go to console the boy, right?”

Reinhard: “No, you are correct. I believe his physical and mental state has been driven into a corner…”

Felt: “Ughhh, you really had to do that, just as I thought! Don’t you understand that you’re only rubbing salt into his wound by doing that…?”

Looking at Reinhard’s puzzled expression, Felt sympathized with Subaru for the first time. She was able to figure out why Reinhard appeared discouraged because of that.

Felt: “Even I would sympathize with nii-chan… He refused to meet with you, didn’t he?”

Reinhard: “He did not refuse to see me, at least. However, my visit did not yield a pleasant farewell. It is an unfortunate result, considering we will be unable to see each other for a while.”

Felt was once again astounded by Reinhard’s display of his dejected feelings. Pained by a hostile disagreement with his friend… his reaction to it was akin to a human’s.

Felt: “Seems like even someone like you has a human side, acting dejected because you guys parted ways without making up. Have you known that boy for a long time or something?”

Reinhard: “No, I met him on the same day I met you. Yesterday, when I met him once again at the area of the Royal Selection, it was the first time we had seen each other since that day.”

Felt: “What?! Then your relationship with him is thin as a piece of paper!”

Reinhard: “Whether I knew someone for a long time or not is unrelated to my respect for them. Subaru has something I don’t, and that alone is unmistakably worth my respect. Nothing is special about acknowledging a person that one finds likable as a friend.”

Felt: “It sounds like you’re mocking him when you say that. Maybe nii-chan thought of what you said as something like that?”

Felt muttered out with a look of exasperation at Reinhard, who had uttered such a pure, guileless opinion with a straight face. Looking at his stiffened cheeks which had resulted from Felt’s words, it was too easy to imagine how Subaru had reacted.

Of course it would turn out like that. She felt like she had completely understood, and nothing else.

Felt: “So, the regret is nagging at you, huh… What are you gonna do about it?”

Reinhard: “What I am going to do about it?”

Felt: “I won’t mind even if you put off our departure to your home. If you can’t concentrate on your job because you’re too worried about not making peace with him before leaving, that is.”

It could not really be described as compassion, but Felt could be considerate to that extent.

In fact, it was true that Reinhard had been distressed to the point it had been written on his face. If he could not perform well because of that, then Felt would be at a loss with how to deal with him.

Reinhard: “—No, I am grateful for your consideration. However, I am fine.”

Even so, Reinhard had shaken his head at Felt's offer.

Reinhard: "I cannot afford to delay your first step because of my own issues."

Felt: "I'm saying it's hard to take the first step!"

Reinhard: "Moreover, I am somewhat able to put my mind at ease, since you have been attentive to what I had to say."

Felt: "…"

You don't understand, Felt attempted to reprimand him as such, and was rendered speechless as his lips loosened into a smile. His constant look of placidity remained stripped away, however.

—It felt like his genuine smile was there, beyond the walls that were taken down.

Felt: "Well, I guess that's fine."

Saying that, Felt bounced her hips as she jumped off of the bed. And then, she stood on her tiptoes in front of Reinhard, who was looking up at her.

Felt: "We're done here, right? It was a good way to kill time before going to bed, at least. I also found out my great knight was more useless than I thought."

Reinhard: "Useless… that is the first time someone has evaluated me as such."

Felt: "Then I'll say it to you for all the times it went unsaid. Useless, useless, useless!"

Felt let out a yawn after repeating the word three times in a row. And then, Reinhard forced a laugh as he rose from his seat, opening his room's door for Felt.

Feeling as if he would follow her to her room if she did not say anything, Felt jammed a finger towards the tip of Reinhard's nose right as they entered the hallway.

Felt: “Don’t follow me. I’m going to sleep. You better hurry up and go to bed and forget about it.”

Reinhard: “I believe letting it slip from my memory would be an unfaithful act…”

Felt: “When tomorrow comes, it’ll be no use even if you bring your annoyances from today to the next day. The next time you see him, you better apologize to him properly. Until then, at least try your best to study how to apologize with your books.”

Shoving the books into Reinhard’s chest as he gazed at her with widened eyes, Felt pushed the bewildered knight back into his own room. After that, she attempted to leave without saying anything else, and then,

Reinhard: “Felt-sama.”

Upon being called on, Felt held back the urge to click her tongue as she halted in her tracks.

Felt: “…What?”

Reinhard: “Thank you very much. I would be honored if I am allowed to have a moment of your time to speak with you again.”

Felt: “You…!”

Reinhard had invited her to his room at night with an innocent look.

Felt stuck her tongue out, one half of her exasperated, and the other half of her flushing at his defenselessness.

Felt: “Who cares, you idiot!”

Huffing that out, she began stomping towards her room.

The lingering sensation from taking a bath had already disappeared, but a vague heat had remained in her cheeks.

8

The next day, after welcoming their last morning in the Capital, Felt was taken along by Reinhard, having finished their preparation to depart to the Astrea Territory, where the house Reinhard had been born in was located.

Auntie: “Please take good care of yourself, Felt-sama.”

Felt: “Thanks for having me, Granny, Gramps. Stay healthy, you two.”

She would be parting ways with Uncle and Auntie, who had been nothing but kind to her during these two months, plus a few days. With Auntie having teary eyes, and Uncle bowing silently while they were seeing her off, Felt endured the feeling of being about to cry.

Auntie: “Our granddaughters are residing in the main residence. We have addressed a letter to them to make sure they serve you well, so please make them work hard.”

Felt: “Your grandchildren, huh. I’m looking forward to meeting them… And yeah, thanks.”

Through these two months, Felt’s life under house arrest had started against her will. However, Auntie and Uncle had played a large part in why her life in the mansion did not turn into a bad memory. That was why her gratitude was sincere.

I want to see them again. The way she could think like that was also genuine.

Gaston: “Damn, holy crap! What the heck is this dragon carriage? It might be obvious but nobles are amazing!”

Rachins: “It’s not even something to be scared of! More than that, can someone make sure this isn’t a dream?”

Camberley: “Leave it me to me! Gaaahh! Ouch! I twisted my own cheek and it feels like it’s burning!”

The three idiots who were in the same carriage had put their stupidity on full display, making Felt laugh during their trip. Various hardships were awaiting the three even after arriving at the Astrea Mansion, but that was a story for another time.

Rom: “Anyway, I’m still not used to seeing ye dressed like that.”

Felt: “I didn’t have a choice. I don’t like it either, but I was told that no one knows who would see me even if I’m on the carriage. I can’t decline if Granny begged me to wear it.”

Rom: “Well, ye can’t be wearing my handmade rags forever… It suits ye.”

Felt: “…Hmph.”

Felt turned away her reddened face as Rom complimented her on how she looked in a dress. She had plenty of worries, but she could be at ease if Rom would stay beside her. She was able to reaffirm that.

And then—

Reinhard: “This will be about after our arrival, but I believe undue hardships may be placed on you initially. I cannot proclaim this loudly, but the Astrea Territory…”

Felt: “Save the bad news for later. I had more fun with your story of your own failure from yesterday night.”

Reinhard: “My story of my failure?”

Remaining clothed in her dress, Felt threw her head back leaned backwards at Reinhard’s look of surprise.

She grinned as if she was implying that even if one’s outer appearance could be changed, their inner being—their core personality would stay the same.

Felt: “You should look for something interesting, too. You’d better, if you’re my knight. Don’t keep making me approach you. Isn’t that your job, the knight among knights?”

Reinhard: “…”

He fell silent for a moment as Felt showed off her fang with her smile. Subsequently, he nodded after fully processing her words.

Reinhard: “—I understand. I swear upon my oath as a knight to make an effort.”

Felt: “This is no good, probably.”

As Felt shrugged her shoulders, seeking agreement, Rom and the three idiots reacted with exasperation. Reinhard appeared to be offended, but Felt only gave him a sideways glance as she gazed out of the window.

The dragon carriage ran slowly across the stone pavement, moving outside of the Capital—to Felt, who was leaving her birthplace for the first time in her life, a full-scale “something” was about to begin.

The knight among knights, and a candidate to accede the throne for the next era, who had a complete lack of self-awareness.

Bringing a elderly man with special circumstances and three thugs along with them, the carriage was heading straight towards the east of the Capital.

Like that, their story would be taking a leap outside of the Capital. Not to mention that they would be cut off from their pathway to become concerned with a major incident that would occur a few days later, one which would shake the very Kingdom—but that was a story for another boy.

—Another story of their own was waiting for Felt and her team, after all.

END

Royal Selection Life From Zero: The Golden Lion and the Sword Saint

1

The dragon carriage clattered noisily as it made its way down the road.

The earth dragon pulling it was safeguarded by the Divine Protection of Wind Evasion, which shielded the inside of the carriage from the gusts and rattling outside. However, this Divine Protection had its limitations—it lost its effect once the dragon ceased its stride. It would also take a certain amount of time until it regained its effects again. Such being the case, the rattling wheels were proof that the Divine Protection had indeed lost its effect. But what had caused the sudden halt?

“Oh, Young Master! You have returned!”

“Wow, it’s been a while, Young Master! Wh-What a pleasure to see you again!”

“Reinhard! Please come and watch my sword practice again! Promise!”

With each resounding cheer, the dragon carriage came to a halt, its passengers engaging with the crowd outside the window. Waving and exchanging words and smiles, they attracted the attention of even more onlookers, approaching the carriage in droves.

With such frequent stops, it was no wonder that the Divine Protection of Wind Evasion wouldn’t reactivate. From the moment they stepped foot in the domain, the carriage had become well-acquainted with both the wind and the rattling.

The dragon carriage started up once more as the high-pitched cheers saw them off. Rattling slightly, a young red-headed man returned to his seat and bowed his head to the person before him. “Apologies for stopping the carriage so many times.”

He was a man of remarkable charm. With fiery hair akin to a flame, and eyes as blue as the azure sky, his countenance possessed an ethereal quality, with a smile that enchanted both men and women alike. His voice was indulgently sweet, stirring the hearts of anyone who heard it.

This captivating youth was called Reinhard van Astrea.

Naturally, the person before him blushed in response to his concern. "If you're gonna apologize, at least try to look sorry!" admonished a girl donning a dress in irritation, cheeks red with anger.

The girl, too, possessed her own charm. Her shimmering golden locks were adorned with black ribbons, and her eyes sparkled red like the blazing sun. Her lips revealed a fang befitting her disposition, and her still-youthful figure was clothed in a dress.

Her name was Felt. And she, along with the other man, were the only passengers aboard the dragon carriage. However, the air hanging between them starkly contrasted with their outward appearance. It was only natural. Their relationship was not defined by sex, but as mistress-servant, although the air was excessively bleak even putting it that way.

In such an atmosphere, Reinhard cast a troubled gaze at Felt. "Lady Felt, they are residents of the domain directly under the control of House Astrea. The town and the mansion are in close proximity to each other, so we need to foster a good relationship with them. Besides…"

"Besides?"

"Tilmi, the village gossip, is the most dependable of the bunch, while Jonas dreams of becoming one of the Kingdom's soldiers. And Roswell's baked bread is the best in town. They're good people," Reinhard praised the townsfolk.

"I don't know why I didn't hear about them sooner," Felt blurted out, resting her cheek on her knee, legs spread in a very unladylike manner.

Reinhard raised an eyebrow at her mumbling. “I thought you were angry, my lady?”

“All I’m angry about is your habit of making me look bad first, then making yourself look good. I ain’t got nothing against the people!”

“But you seemed to be in a hurry, so I assumed there was an issue.”

“Oh, shut it! I want to use the bathroom! It’s gettin’ hard holdin’ it in! And these damn clothes! It’s such a pain to use the bathroom in them! You gonna take responsibility if I piss myself?!”

“Isn’t that an issue regardless of whether I…take responsibility or not?”

“Who cares?! If you don’t want that to happen, then hurry up!”

Sullen and annoyed, Felt extended a leg in an attempt to land a kick on Reinhard, but he avoided it with grace, sitting down with a nod. “Understood.” His gaze then shifted outside the window, directing his attention to the path before them. “Rest assured, my lady, we will be there shortly. Your wish will soon be granted.”

Felt snorted at his pretentiousness, peering out the window next to him. Beyond was an expansive view, with an iron gate atop a gently-sloping hill. It had been left ajar and showed signs of age and rust.

As the dragon carriage entered the premises through a gate that had long abandoned its purpose, a building came into view.

“Your folks’ house, huh?”

“Yes. The place of my birth,” Reinhard affirmed with a smile. “The main Astrea family residence, as well as a temporary abode for Your Ladyship.”

Felt’s crimson eyes reflected the full view of the house approaching before them.

Despite growing up in the slums, Felt was a native of the royal capital, thereby familiar with the grandeur of the mansions of nobles. In fact, she had spent the last two months in confinement in one of those mansions, so she could only imagine the magnificence of the Astrea's main residence, and the home of the much-lauded Sword Saint, Reinhard.

"Sure is a lot smaller than expected," Felt bluntly admitted upon beholding the mansion up close. Compared to the other mansion in the royal capital, the main residence was much more modest. Of course, it was still a mansion in terms of size, but it was so simple, it paled in comparison to the stunning structures of the royal capital's Nobles District.

The rusted iron gate remained as-is, with the building also mirroring its signs of age. The vast garden, once a realm of carefree leisure, now appeared to be devoid of purpose.

Felt's apprehension had her anticipating a throng of servants upon their arrival. However, the unease plaguing her now was of a different nature.

"This may come as a surprise, but this is what my family was like," Reinhard confessed.

"You sayin' you guys were one of those poor noble families?" Felt blurt out in disbelief.

"No need to look at me with such pitying eyes."

Felt's voice dropped like a weight, and Reinhard chuckled at the look in her eyes. "I understand the misconception. But it's too early to pity me. It's certainly true that I'm not exactly the wealthiest noble in the kingdom. And the domain isn't particularly grand, either."

"Sure… Well, whatever. Live strong!"

"Well… Thank you," Reinhard said, tilting his head in acknowledgment at Felt's encouraging thumbs-up.

With that, the two travelers arrived safely at the main residence. Reinhard stepped off the dragon carriage first, then turned around and extended a hand to Felt in a gentlemanly gesture. "Lady Felt, may I take your hand?”

“As if!” Shrugging off his concern, Felt landed nimbly beside Reinhard, sticking out her tongue. Reinhard retracted his hand with a wry smile, looking back towards the mansion.

For Reinhard, returning to his hometown, and to the main residence, was a long-awaited homecoming. Felt glanced his way, attempting to discern his feelings. However, something was amiss.

“Where are the three men who came before us?” Reinhard wondered.

“Hm?” Felt swept a gaze around the mansion upon Reinhard’s words. “Oh, the Rachins crew? Huh, yeah, where the hell’d they run off to?”

Their companions were a trio of rogues—Gaston, Rachins, and Camberley. And they had apparently grown impatient with waiting for the sluggish dragon carriage upon entering the domain. Supposedly, they had gone ahead of them to the mansion on foot.

There was also the matter of welcoming them. The trio’s actions had been approved, making it their task to inform the mansion of their arrival.

“Perhaps they are already inside,” Reinhard thought aloud. “I am concerned about the fact that there is no one to greet us, but I will show you inside. Our servants may be few in number, but they are very efficient.”

“You said they’re the granddaughters of that old couple, right?” Felt recalled. “If so, then yeah, I’d think they’d be.”

Felt’s mind reminisced about the elderly couple who tended to the other Astrea family mansion in the royal capital. They were a sweet, pleasant couple, and Felt liked them. When she parted ways with them, they told her that they had two granddaughters at the main residence.

“I was looking forward to meeting them!” she exclaimed. “That old couple really did a lot for me…”

“Aaaaahhhhh!”

The front door to the mansion slammed open with a bang, and a scream echoed through the courtyard. Reinhard swiftly guarded Felt. Just then, a man—or rather, a group of them—emerged before the vigilant pair, howling uncontrollably.

It was a trio of men—large, medium, and small in stature—each exuding a presence of mischief. There was no doubt that they were the missing troublemakers in every way.

These were the three men who were supposed to have gone ahead of them: Gaston, Rachins, and Camberley. They were lying in the yard in a state of tatters, exaggeratedly screaming in pain.

Reinhard, who had been observing the three, rushed toward them. “Gaston, Rachins, Camberley, what in the world happened?”

“What’s it look like happened?!” cried Rachins. The three battered idiots sprawled out on the ground turned to Reinhard, who was headed toward them. They pointed at the house they had just tumbled out of in unison.

“We went ahead and were takin’ a breather, y’know?” Rachins attested.

“Yeah, a break!” shouted Gaston. “Then we knocked, but nobody said nothin’, so we went in…”

“Then those crazy twins came at us and…!” Camberley trailed off.

“Hi,” came a voice. “Crazy twin here, standing on your right.”

“And your left,” said another voice.

“Eeeeeh?!”

As the trio lamented their state, two figures appeared out of the blue. The men clung to each other in fright. Paying no mind to the trembling trio, Reinhard looked at the two figures standing at the mansion’s entrance.

They were a pair of petite young girls with peach-colored hair. From the comments of the trio and the follow-up remarks by the girls themselves, they were most certainly twins.

“Flam, Grassis. Did you do this to them?” Reinhard’s shoulders dropped as the twins alternately opened their mouths in response.

“They looked suspicious, so we felt obliged to do something,” Flam confessed.

“They’re delinquents,” Grassis judged.

“They’re not delinquents. You should have been informed via letter. These men are guests of Lady Felt. Or rather, they will be working for her from now on, which makes them your colleagues.”

“I am sorry for my ignorance, Young Master.”

“Young Master, my ignorance.”

Reinhard appeared exasperated at the twins’ words. Neither Flam nor Grassis appeared very apologetic at all. Felt, however, sputtered a “pfft” at the exchange between the three. “Ha ha!” Felt interrupted Reinhard with a laugh. Smiling like a fiend, she defended the twins. “As far as looks go, I can’t blame you ladies. If I were you, I’d beat the crap out of them, too, if they showed up at my place!”

“My lady…” Reinhard’s brow wrinkled deeper and deeper at Felt’s words as she folded her hands behind her head.

“What, you gotta problem? I got nothin’ to do with their discipline. That’s your responsibility.”

“No, that’s not what I meant,” Reinhard continued his thought. “It’s just improper for a young lady to laugh in such a way.”

“Oh, quit nitpicking already!” Felt clicked her tongue. “Especially when it’s always with me! And you guys, how long you gonna stand there cowerin’ like that? Get your asses inside!”

Reinhard’s warning fell on deaf ears. Scolding the trio, Felt headed for the entrance with long strides, unsuited to the dress she wore. Her imposing presence pressured Flam and Grassis to make way and welcome her in as the lady of the mansion.

“We’ve been expecting you, Lady Felt,” greeted Flam.

“Expecting you,” welcomed Grassis.

“Howdy!” Felt accepted their warm welcome with a smile, unafraid. The twins made a path, and Felt patted them affectionately on their shoulders. “Your grandparents really helped me out back in the royal capital. I’ll be in your care now!”

“Grandmother asked us to serve you well,” Flam said.

“Grandfather gave us flower seeds,” Grassis added.

Acknowledging their words with a nod, Felt slowly entered the mansion. “Wooow.”

Once inside, she cast a somber gaze around the space, taking in the mansion’s ambiance. The interior did not betray the impression of the building’s exterior, retaining the humble, cozy atmosphere it once held.

“Why’s it so insanely different from the mansion in the royal capital?” she asked.

“The mansion in the royal capital was designed to match the look of the Nobles District,” Reinhard explained. “Originally, it was gifted by His Majesty the King in honor of my grandmother. So naturally, in comparison to that one, this one’s rather…”

“Shabby, huh?” Felt finished his sentence. “In other words, this is where your real strength lies?”

“Yes, correct. The other mansion in the royal capital was intended to live up to the name of the family that bore the Sword Saint. In short, that one is simply a matter of vanity.”

“Vanity, huh? You nobles sure love to soak it all up, huh?” Snorting at Reinhard’s explanation of his mansion’s size, Felt continued into the building. With Reinhard in tow, they reunited with the trio. However, there was one more person, someone who was like family to Felt, whom they had to meet at the residence.

“Well, it’s about time. I was really getting impatient waiting around for you guys.”

“Old Man Rom!” Felt’s face lit up as she looked up at the voice. On the second floor of the stairwell overlooking the entrance hallway stood the figure of a hulking old man, waving his hand in the corridor.

The man possessed a towering physique, surpassing most others in height and width—a testament to his belonging to the giant tribe. This man, lovingly dubbed ‘Old Man Rom,’ was Felt’s foster parent, and the only family member she truly trusted.

Like Felt and the others, Old Man Rom had departed the royal capital to the main residence in a dragon carriage, yet the reason he arrived before all the others was apparent.

“So how was your meeting with the bigwig?”

“Horrible! Well, I mostly stood next to Reinhard.”

“I see, I see.” Old Man Rom nodded gracefully, hand on his chin. “However, all things are an experience, you know.”

Felt’s lips twitched as she recalled the hardships she endured.

On the way from the royal capital, although they hardly made any stops along the way, they did pay a visit to an influential figure’s mansion as a sort of courtesy call. They appeared to have a connection with Reinhard’s family, so he hoped they would cooperate with them in the royal selection.

While Felt and the others went to do so, Old Man Rom had opted to leave separately, departing for the main residence ahead of them.

According to Old Man Rom, he just isn’t a fan of formalities. But there’s probably more to it than that. After all, a lot can happen when you live long enough. It’s a natural process. Even a fourteen-year-old like me can understand that. I guess if he wants to tell me about it someday, he will.

Felt, however, respected Old Man Rom's intentions, and refrained from pressing the matter any further.

"I brought in the luggage," Rom said. "The twins said I could use any room I like. You don't mind, do you?"

"No, not at all," Reinhard allowed. "As long as you don't enter my, my family's, or Flam and her sister's private quarters, you're free to use any room of your choosing." With a nod, he looked back at the twins behind him for confirmation, and continued, "You didn't allow Gaston and the others inside, but let Old Man Rom in without issue, I see."

The twins exchanged glances at Reinhard's comment on Old Man Rom's casual demeanor, appearing to have already made himself at home in the mansion.

"Well, Old Man Rom looks super strong," said Flam.

"I don't wanna get hurt," added Grassis.

"Try not to avoid difficult tasks from now on," Reinhard chided gently. "It was fine this time, but it could have caused serious problems."

Suddenly, three voices arose in protest of Flam and Grassis's questionable work ethic.

"Why don't you scold them a little tougher!" shouted Rachins.

"Demand an apology!" insisted Gaston.

"Unfair treatment!" cried Camberley.

Felt grinned mischievously at the sight of Reinhard's poor handling of the situation. "Well, at least we won't get bored here, huh?"

"If that's what Your Ladyship desires…" Reinhard trailed off, gaze sweeping across the faces of everyone in the house. At last, he turned back to Felt, who wore a smug grin. “I, too, shall strive to bring a smile to your face, my lady.”

2

After bringing her scant belongings into her room, Felt completed her move. Having originally grown up in the slums, she had no real possessions of any kind. She had given away most of her household goods in the royal capital, only bringing with her some clothes that Old Man Rom had made for her, and her favorite knife for self-defense, along with the meager savings she accumulated little by little and the change of clothes, including dresses, the old woman from the mansion in the capital had made her bring.

“I’d rather not wear any of these, but at least this one’s better than the ones Reinhard picked out…”

Although Felt had been wearing these fluttery costumes for more than two months, she showed no signs of warming up to them any more than she did to life in the nobleman’s mansion. They just weren’t her style. However, Felt was aware she needed to come to terms with wearing these kinds of clothes. She understood her position.

She had willingly chosen this role and was therefore prepared for it. So, as a compromise between shame and determination, she resolved to wear at the very least the dress from the old woman. If I let Reinhard control even what I wear, I’ll die from frustration!

“Inside the mansion, I’ll dress as I please, though!”

Promptly removing the dress she had been wearing, she tossed it onto the bed. What she wore over her undergarments was the one outfit she always wore in the royal capital, namely a peasant’s best dress. Donning gloves and snug boots, she would have no problem flying and jumping around.

As Felt inspected the condition of her footwear, someone knocked on the door and spoke up from outside. “May I, Lady Felt?”

“No,” she replied, promptly declining the visitor’s request despite instantly recognizing their voice.

“I understand. Pardon me,” they continued, ignoring her wishes and entering anyway.

Felt scowled in irritation at their stubborn persistence. “What the hell did ya knock for?! What if I was changing?!”

“I could feel you jumping around from outside the room, Lady Felt,” Reinhard said. “I heard you were going to change. I had a feeling I’d find you dressed in that manner.”

“Shut it with the sermons! I’ll dress as I please in the mansion! In return, I’ll wear a dress when the situation calls for it. Consider it a compromise!” Felt declared, pointing her finger at him.

“So like a conditional agreement,” he said, as he considered her proposal for a brief moment before giving in. “I understand.”

Felt folded her arms in front of her in response to the unexpectedly frank reply and puffed out her chest. “Good. So what did you want? I was about to take a nap.”

“Well, I’d be happy to give you a tour of the mansion and the domain if you’d like. However, I’m sure you must be tired after the long journey, so if you would like to rest, that is fine, too.”

“Why the hell are you acting so wishy-washy? You’re being awfully sympathetic, huh?”

“Your Ladyship made a compromise, so I want to reciprocate. I will come for you at dinner time, then, so please rest up.”

“Hmph.”

After Reinhard retracted his offer, Felt shut one eye in thought.

Truthfully, Felt had no intention of napping. Rather, she had already planned to sneak out and explore the area herself. Reinhard’s proposal was in line with her intentions, with the exception of the fact that he would be tagging along. Looking closely, she noticed that he had also changed his attire, shedding his armor-like stiffness appropriate for a knight. He now donned a white jacket and black trousers, an outfit befitting of an ordinary young man.

Although this get-up isn't remotely enough to cover up his great brilliance, Felt thought, looking at Reinhard's new look. But his choice of attire made it clear to her that he had a certain level of consideration toward her, albeit in his own way.

Consideration, in essence, requires compromise, huh? Felt gave in, and so did he. So I might as well…

"Hm… Okay, Reinhard. I've changed my mind," she announced. "You wanna show me around, right? Then be my guest."

"Are you sure?"

"Before my mood sours again. I've also been curious about the view from the dragon carriage, so why not?" With a twist of her head, Felt gave Reinhard a light prod in the chest and headed for the door.

Reinhard placed his hand on his chest and bowed to her. "As you wish. In that case, I shall do my utmost to please you, my lady."

"Ugh, don't say it so awkwardly. You're gonna make me change my mind again. Let's get this over with."

Felt's words were met with a short "Yes," and Reinhard stepped up beside her. Side by side, he appeared to be an otherwise ordinary young man without his knightly attire. A person's dress was often enough to alter one's appearance entirely, with such changes often extending beyond the price of each garment. Reinhard's current outfit matched Felt's usual outfit well, exuding a sense of comfort.

"Um… You said you knew I'd dress like this before you came into my room, right? Were you peeping?"

"It was merely an educated guess," Reinhard replied with a wry smile. "Your Ladyship looked uncomfortable in the dress while we were in the carriage, so I extrapolated from that."

Felt's lips twitched in frustration. It was far from amusing, making her feel as if she had been manipulated in the palms of his hands. "Let's get one thing straight, though. I'm not goin' out with you alone! I'm inviting Rom and the others, too! So it won't be just us!"

"I never said we were going out alone! Indeed, having Rom and the others around does make it much easier to protect you, my lady."

Such a textbook response did little more than sour Felt's already bad mood even more.

3

The Astrea family domain was surprisingly modest, considering the reputation of the Sword Saint's lineage, which was widely acknowledged throughout the kingdom.

The Astrea domain comprised only of a small fiefdom, with one small town named Hakuchuri, which was centered around the main Astrea residence. The size of Hakuchuri was also modest, primarily engaged in agriculture, animal husbandry, and the local specialty: the earth dragon industry.

"Beyond the High Klara Plateau is Flanders, one of the five great cities," Reinhard explained. "Flanders is said to be the birthplace of earth dragons, with a long history of its industry flourishing within the city. Hakuchuri also reaps benefits from this, providing homes for many artisans skilled in the craft of saddles, reins, and earth dragon gear."

"Is that what you were talking about before? We can actually ride an earth dragon? I'm actually kinda looking forward to that."

"Then I will make that happen," he assured. "Allow me to find a good earth dragon for you."

"Cooool," Felt responded nonchalantly, before prancing nimbly down the road. Reinhard could not help but smile at his mistress's inability to mask her enthusiasm as he continued leading their tour of the Astrea Domain.

For Felt, who had been born and raised in the royal capital, this was her first real foray into the outside world. It was no wonder that nearly everything that caught her eyes struck her as fresh and novel. Indeed, merely observing her surroundings served as ample amusement for her stroll.

“Hey, Reinhard. What’s the deal with those things?” Felt asked with curiosity, pointing at something.

“Those are black sheep,” Reinhard replied without hesitation. “They’re not raised for meat, but for wool.” However, it was clear that this simple explanation wasn’t enough to satisfy his mistress’s curiosity, so he continued. “Their sheared wool is in high demand, as it can be spun into cotton or yarn. The majority of farmers in this region raise black sheep, as it’s an ideal location for grazing. In fact, I’d imagine such wool must have also been used in your clothing, Lady Felt.”

“Wow, that’s pretty cool! But won’t someone steal ‘em if they’re allowed to roam free like that?”

“Unlike in the royal capital, in a town of this size, everyone knows each other. People worry more about witchbeasts attacking their grazing sheep than them getting stolen. Also, the wild earth dragons keep them in check. There’s hardly ever an issue.”

“What…? They’re wild, but they protect livestock?”

“They’re rather friendly toward humans. So much so, in fact, that they often support us with our daily routines.”

Felt nodded, impressed by Reinhard’s knowledge. She squinted out at the pasture. The black sheep were fuzzy creatures with dark fur that peacefully grazed in the fenced-in grassland. Reinhard mentioned they were at the ideal size to start shearing.

Felt’s questions about livestock, farm equipment, the ranch, the town, and everything in between, were endless. In fact, she didn’t even have any complaints about Reinhard’s guidance at that moment. Well, except for one.

“It still woulda been better if I wasn’t alone with you, though.”

Reinhard smiled wryly and furrowed his brow in dismay at Felt's snide remark. "I am indeed hurt to hear you say that to my face, my lady."

As Felt had grumbled, it was indeed just the two of them, her and Reinhard, strolling through the town of Hakuchuri. Neither Old Man Rom nor any of the three idiots had come along to accompany them. Of course, as she had mentioned before setting out, she did make sure to invite their other party members beforehand. However, everyone else just so happened to be too busy with their own tasks to join them.

"But I didn't wanna cancel just because of that. I ain't no coward, y'know!"

"If Your Ladyship was displeased, I would've had no intention of forcing to you to come."

"This is about my mood. It has nothing to do with you. It's a matter of my own personal victory or defeat. Anyway, I'm having a good time for now."

Waving a dismissive hand in the air, Felt snickered at Reinhard's concern. It was unclear how he may have interpreted her response, but nonetheless, he proceeded without pause. That was his own answer.

Felt strolled along, hands clasped behind her head, glancing up at the tall figure beside her. He's strong. There ain't no question about that. He also almost always has answers when I ask him something. He's probably the best servant one could ask for.

And yet, Felt had always felt an itch of frustration toward him, a particular sentiment that always prompted her to act stubborn around him. Such an emotion was baffling to her, which only fueled her peculiar obstinacy toward him.

"Is something the matter?"

"Nothin'," she replied curtly. "But this area's your hometown, isn't it?"

“I was born in the royal capital. However, I grew up here as a child, so you certainly could call this my hometown. Why do you ask?”

“And despite that…”

Reinhard’s answer made Felt close one eye. And then…

“Oh, Sir Reinhard! You’ve returned!”

A high-pitched voice caught their attention. When they turned around, there was a townsman waving their hand in greeting. Reinhard’s conspicuous appearance, just like earlier in the dragon carriage, made him rather easy to pick out from the crowd. As he waved back, the villager quickly bowed his head, looking immensely pleased.

“That’s Cochran. He’s the heir to the ranch we saw earlier. His friend works as a craftsman of earth dragon equipment. I thought I’d ask him to make some earth dragon gear for you, Lady Felt.”

“It’s crazy how you seem to know so much about everyone you see.”

“Well, it’s a small town, you see. They’re also the residents of our domain. Not to mention I consider them my friends from my hometown. It’s not much to brag about.”

“Friends, huh?”

Felt twisted her head to look at the young man who had greeted them. She had no doubt that he had friendly intentions, as he was the one to approach them. But does he really regard Reinhard as a friend? she wondered. The young man appeared to be the same age as Reinhard. However, it seemed to her that he had drawn a line between them due to their different family backgrounds and personalities, among other reasons.

Reinhard responded to Felt’s musings with a sad smile. “I am in a different position than them, after all. It is indeed challenging to form casual friendships. Nonetheless, I’m willing to open up to them.”

"You're the most powerful knight in the kingdom, a nobleman, and a lord, right? I can understand how they feel. Oh, could it be? Even in your hometown, you don't have a single friend, do you?"

"I'm almost embarrassed to admit it, but I don't have anyone I could call a drinking buddy," Reinhard said, shrugging nonchalantly at Felt's unintentionally sardonic probing. "Even though I am a knight, that title is merely a burden to me here. And yet, it's not something I can simply discard, even if I wanted to."

"Have you ever wanted to discard it?" Felt asked, taken aback by his last remark.

"No. I have never… It's my fate to carry this weight on my shoulders."

His response was devoid of any shame or pride, which made Felt feel an itching frustration. She swiftly shook it off, however, quickly smiling to reveal her fang. "I see, you don't have any friends. No wonder no one came to see ya when you came all the way back to your hometown."

"Well, if you put it that way… Also, it's in poor taste for you to derive pleasure from that."

"Heh heh." Felt snickered. "No matter what you say, it's not going to work on me now." Reinhard had never left himself open, but she'd finally managed to catch him in a moment of vulnerability. I'm gonna keep toyin' with him for a while.

However, Reinhard interrupted Felt's plan with some words of his own. "However… It didn't appear as if you had any friends to bid you farewell in the royal capital yourself, my lady."

"Ugh!" Felt groaned.

"In fact," he continued, "if it weren't for Master Rom, that would mean that you also had no friends."

"Ugh, just drop it!" Felt snapped, her face flushing red since he'd hit her where it really hurt. "Old Man Rom is the only one I need!"

Just as the entire situation was headed to a stalemate, Reinhard suddenly lost his poise and smiled. His shimmering azure eyes reflected the surface of the nearby lake. Felt pursed her lips and asked, “What?”

“Nothing. Your Ladyship really respects Master Rom. It’s endearing.”

“We’re family, you know. Even a great swordsman like you, who can do anything, must have someone he admires, right? Even in the royal capital, it was like that with the old couple, wasn’t it?”

The elderly couple who managed the other mansion had affectionately referred to Reinhard as ‘Young Master’. They loved him. If only in terms of their relationship, they may be his subordinates, but they were practically like family to him. That was why he could act so naturally with them.

“Of course. I admire the old couple, but if you are talking about respect, I respect all my family and ancestors. But of all of them, I suppose I respect my great-grandfather the most.”

“Your great-grandfather?”

“My grandmother’s father. The head of the family two generations ago, Veltol Astrea.”

“Was he also a Sword Saint?” Felt was not too familiar with the intricacies of Divine Protections. All she knew was that the Divine Protection of the Sword Saint was passed down from generation to generation in the Astrea family. If Reinhard, the current Sword Saint, held him in such high regard, then it was only natural that his great-grandfather must have been a Sword Saint as well.

However, Reinhard shook his head at the notion. “My great-grandfather did not inherit the Divine Protection of the Sword Saint. However, he was a virtuous lord beloved by his people for his morality and sound governance. There are no records of him as a swordsman, but I did hear that my grandfather, himself a swordsman, admired him, too. So I imagine that he must have had some skill with the sword.”

“Heh. A virtuous swordsman. I can’t imagine that,” Felt remarked.

Though Felt herself wielded a blade in the form of a knife, it was a personal style vastly different from swordsmanship. When she thought of what a swordsman was, Reinhard was what came to mind. So, it was difficult for her to imagine a virtuous swordsman, as she had nothing but complaints about his character.

“Although it’s true that you’re pretty popular with the townsfolk,” she admitted. “Maybe it’s just ‘cause I’m a stray dog with no concept of that ‘virtue’ stuff…”

“Lady Felt?” Reinhard paused and peered at Felt’s pensive expression. Their gazes locked, blue meeting red, when Felt’s lips twitched. Suddenly…

“You’re way too close!” she spat.

“Ah, my apologies.”

She pushed Reinhard’s chin away with her palm, forcing herself past him. Reinhard chuckled as he was shoved aside and turned his gaze to the sky. Above them, the sun had already begun its descent, tinting the sky in gradients of fading scarlet.

“Lady Felt, it’s about time we return to the mansion. Dinner will be served soon.”

“Hmm, fine. We’ve been walkin’ around all day, so I am gettin’ pretty hungry.”

“Flam and Grassis are preparing dinner tonight, so I’d like to reintroduce you to them again at the table.”

“True, we only chatted a bit earlier.” The twins, who appeared younger than Felt in age, possessed the ability to easily outmatch the three idiots, as expected of being the granddaughters of the elderly couple. It must have been a testament to the training they received from their grandparents.

“They’re both caretakers of the mansion and may sometimes serve as Your Ladyship’s guards if need be,” Reinhard explained. “They descend from a family that has served House Astrea since the beginning, so their skills are truly impressive."

"I don't care 'bout that now. What I care about is their cooking skills!"

"They learned from Auntie, so you can count on their culinary finesse to be outstanding as well."

"Awesome!" Felt clenched her fists in delight at Reinhard's evaluation.

Unbeknownst to her, Reinhard smiled at the sight of the biggest smile she'd shown all day.

As Felt made her way home, a sense of relief swept over her. A feeling she never realized she was capable of. She had been uprooted to a foreign land, surrounded by strangers, and forced to navigate a world she had never known before. Felt was both anxious and determined and resolved not to succumb to defeat.

That half-day journey really cleared up some of my fears. The residence isn't so big, there ain't so many servants, the locals are friendly, and the land isn't so vast. The list could go on, but Felt left it at that. Seeing the reality right before my eyes makes me wonder if those anxieties were all in my head. Thanks to this, I can finally face this new life head-on.

"I'm starting to think you're pullin' some strings, though."

"You overestimate me, my lady. I possess no such ability to control people's minds or actions. It's merely happenstance."

"Well, I can only pray that's true," Felt said, mischievously poking out her tongue, despite having no particular deity to pray to.

Everything is in Reinhard's control. With such paranoid imaginings lingering in her mind, they strolled through town, up the hill, and back to the mansion. Just then…

"You sure you didn't do anything, huh?" Felt asked with a puzzled look.

“I’m afraid I’m just as lost as you this time,” Reinhard responded to her doubts, equally baffled. For there right before them, at the gate of the mansion, lay a basket containing… a baby.

Accompanying the basket was a single note: “Please take good care of Ilya.”

4

“Her name’s Ilya. She’s a baby. She was abandoned in front of the mansion.”

Felt delivered the facts bluntly, placing the basket in the center of the table. There, atop the dining room table, a baby girl with golden locks slumbered peacefully. She couldn’t have been more than a few months old. They had brought her back inside the mansion with them, having been unable to come up with another option.

Everyone in the mansion exchanged awkward glances at Felt’s introduction of the infant. Along with her and Reinhard, everyone else had gathered in the room, including Old Man Rom, the three idiots, and the servant twins. Yet the presence of so many people did nothing to diminish the initial shock.

A heavy silence hung over the room. The peach-haired twins were the first to break it, looking at Felt and Reinhard.

“Young Master and Lady Felt,” Flam began, “you certainly wasted no time having children.”

“The fastest birth ever,” added Grassis.

“Listen, you!” Felt exploded. “I! Am! In! NO MOOD FOR YOUR STUPID JOKES!”

What the twins had intended as a joke failed to amuse, only fueling Felt’s anger instead as she slammed her hands on the table. If their intent was to make light of the duo who carried the baby inside, it only fell flat. However, Felt’s aggressive outburst startled the baby as well.

“Ah…” the baby started to coo.

“Oh dear, Lady Felt, you woke her up,” Flam pointed out.

“She’s awake,” added Grassis.

“Uh-oh…”

The baby’s eyes slowly opened, revealing identical blue pupils reflecting the faces of the diners around her. Then, one second passed, then two, then three, then…

“Waaaahhhhhh!” Little Ilya wailed loudly in response to Felt’s outburst. The volume of her cry was so loud, it echoed throughout the entire mansion.

“Oh, shit! She’s crying!” Felt cried, instinctively covering her ears. “Oh, somebody! Anybody, please, do something about that baby!”

“I regret to inform you, but…” started Flam.

“We’re inexperienced,” Grassis finished.

“Useless! Hey, Reinhard!”

“I’ll give it a try, however…”

Flam and Grassis immediately raised a white flag, while Felt was reluctant to do anything from the start. All the girls had abandoned this fight, so Reinhard, appointed in their stead, scooped up the baby, gently rocking her back and forth and patting her back with a soft thump. “There, there, don’t cry,” he soothed. “You’re a strong child. You’re a good girl, Ilya.”

However, Felt protested his method as futile. “Don’t flirt with her! It ain’t like she wanted you to pick her up!”

However, in Reinhard’s arms, the cries gradually subsided.

“There now, settle down,” he continued. “Calm down… There, you’re all better now.”

“That was impressive. Almost as surprising as when you blew up the loot house.”

“Oh.”

Felt looked at him in shock. Ilya, now quiet, patted Reinhard’s face with her small hand as he smiled in relief. Perhaps she found solace in their identical eyes.

“Or maybe she’s just happy to be held by a good-looking guy. She’s a girl, after all,” Old Man Rom remarked.

“If that’s the reason, babies are crazy,” Felt replied.

Reinhard cradled Ilya as Old Man Rom folded his arms in agreement. But then the tiny Camberley of the three idiots interjected with a “Wait a minute!” He stepped forward and held out his arms to Reinhard. “Give her to me. I had lots of brothers and sisters, so I’m used to handlin’ babies!”

“That’s good to know, but Ilya’s already stopped crying.”

“Never mind that! I’ll show you how to really soothe a baby!”

Reinhard handed Ilya to the confident Camberley, who peered into Ilya’s face and widened his eyes. “Belobelobelobelobah!”

“Waaaahhhhhh!!!”

“‘Really soothe a baby’ my ass!” exclaimed Felt. “Now she’s cryin’ even harder!”

Camberley, making comically exaggerated expressions, only succeeded at upsetting Ilya once again. Despite his attempt to test his soothing skills on her, he was unable to lighten the cranky Ilya’s mood. Negotiations collapsed, and he completely succumbed to the baby’s power.

“Damn! What’s wrong with me? Gaston!”

“Oh, huh? Why ya givin’ her to me?! Uhh… belobeloblaaa—”

“Waaaah!”

Camberley tossed Ilya aside. Gaston, making the next attempt, was also unsuccessful. With Ilya's face red and tear-stained, Gaston passed her off to the next in line. "Rachins, I'm countin' on ya!" he exclaimed.

"Whoa, hold up! What am I s'posed to do with a kid…?! Huh?" Rachins protested with a miserable expression as Gaston entrusted Ilya into his care. However, once in his arms, her crying suddenly ceased.

The baby's unexpected reaction made Rachins break into a chuckle. "Heh, heh… I dunno what's goin' on, but she stopped her cryin'. I guess—"

"Waaaahhhhhh!"

"Hey! Don't go makin' me look like a fool! What, ya run on a time delay or somthin'?!"

"No," Old Man Rom chimed in thoughtfully. "She was probably taking her time evaluating you, and after some consideration, she concluded you were insufficient."

"Shut yer trap, old man! Then you do somethin' about it, Cromwell!" Rachins, who failed the screening test by a slight margin, yelled indignantly as Old Man Rom preached about the psychology of the baby and passed her to him.

Upon having Ilya pressed into his large palm, the wrinkles in Old Man Rom's face deepened as he smiled. "There, there, stop crying now," he soothed.

"Heh, what do you think you're doing?" Rachins said snidely. "If it's that easy to make her stop crying, we would've…"

"Ah—"

"Wha the hell?!"

The three idiots had failed at every attempt, but Old Man Rom appeared to have some sort of magic touch with Ilya. In the end, Reinhard and Rom were the only ones able to pass the bawling baby's judgment.

"As a girl, I can see why she'd choose the young master, but…" Flam commented.

"Old Man Rom is a mystery," Grassis finished her sister's sentence.

"There's nothin' mysterious about it!" Felt erupted. "Choosin' Old Man Rom just shows the kid's got good taste! I'm not happy about lumpin' him in with Reinhard, though!"

The trio hung their heads in shame as the girls talked down to them, despite having also been useless. Still comforting Ilya, Old Man Rom turned his head, casting them a sidelong glance, and said, "Even so… No clues but a name, huh? Wasn't there anything else in the basket?"

"Just a pillow and blanket to wrap her in." Reinhard inspected the basket, gaze downcast. "There was no signature on the letter, either."

"If they're the kinda parents who'd throw away their own kid," Felt said, clicking her tongue, "you really think they'd sign anything? Ridiculous."

Prompting a disapproving look, Felt pointed an accusing finger at him for his lack of understanding. "Get it? This brat was abandoned by her folks. They probably saw you in this mansion and thought they'd leave her here to grow up in a big place. It's disgusting."

"…"

"What about a nearby town? Any chance we might find the parents there?"

Opposite the bitter Felt, Old Man Rom posed the thoughtful question to Reinhard, who pondered the question for a moment before shaking his head. "As far as I can remember, it's hard to say. There were a few pregnant women in town, but…" he trailed off, squinting at Ilya. Wrapped in a white swaddling cloth and fiddling with the hairs on Old Man Rom's arm, it was evident that the baby had only been born very recently. "At this rate, Ilya must only be a few months old. Considering the women who have given birth in that period, the potential candidates are very few. Plus, there's the matter of her appearance…"

"Blonde hair and dark blue eyes, huh?" Felt interjected, running her fingers through her own hair. As far as she knew, hair of this shade wasn't an unusual sight in Lugunica, nor were blue eyes. Thanks to her job and former occupation, she had developed the habit of observing people, and both were quite commonplace. "Blonde hair ain't uncommon. Even my hair's golden."

"Indeed, it is not unusual to see people with gold hair like you, Lady Felt," Reinhard acknowledged. "However, that is mostly limited to the suburbs of the royal capital. In Hakuchuri and southeastern regions like Flanders, brown hair is far more common. The people we met just earlier were the same, weren't they?"

"I suppose so, now that you mention it," Felt said, recalling the townsfolk, still fresh in her memory. Reinhard's right: everyone we met in town had brown locks, while the elderly folk sported gray. "But why's that matter?"

"Exactly what this young man is trying to convey," another voice broke in. "The child's hair and eye color are quite peculiar for a newborn baby… In this region, anyway."

"You're right, Master Rom. Although I do hope my concerns are unfounded…" Reinhard mused thoughtfully, while Felt crossed her arms at his guess.

With a twist of her head, she snorted lightly and scratched her temple. "Ahh shut up! Just what are you tryin' to say, anyway?!"

"There's a possibility that there's more behind Ilya than just being an abandoned child. Therefore, I must ask you something, my lady."

"What?"

"What do you want to do with Ilya once we bring her back?"

At Reinhard's soft-spoken question, Felt's voice lodged in her throat. Choking on her own breath, her gaze turned to Ilya, cradled in Old Man Rom's arms. The baby remained the same, still entranced by the hairs on his arms, oblivious to all the gossip about her taking place behind her back. Abandoned by her parents and left in this mansion, with not a single say in the direction of her own future.

"Lady Felt, please make a decision," Reinhard urged as she pondered.

He wants my input for this decision? Is that his idea of showing respect? Or is he just usin' the situation to test me and see if I can make decisions on my own without his or Old Man Rom's help?

"You're a cheeky bastard, ain't ya?"

"Huh?"

"Nothing. So, you want me to decide what's gonna happen with this kid, right?"

Whatever Reinhard's intentions, Felt's determination was set. Puffing her cheeks, she flashed a mischievous smile and pointed at Ilya. "I got nothin' against this kid, but I'm pissed as hell at the folks who dumped her here. So, I wanna find them and have a little chat!"

"A chat, you say?"

"Yes, a chat. I wanna chat with them, and I wanna know what really goes on in the minds of parents who abandon their kids. I wanna have a discussion." Felt's expression contorted as she spoke. "I wanna talk to the folks who abandoned their kid, and I wanna know how they feel. And for that reason…" she paused. "I'm gonna keep this kid around and scare the shit outta them!"

Reinhard was silenced by Felt's proclamation. The others around her were also rendered speechless. However, aside from their facial expressions, their eyes held the same gaze. Simply put, they were eyes conveying warmth.

"What the hell you lookin' at me like that for? You got a problem or something?!"

“It may have been my fault, but you need to learn to be more honest with your feelings…”

“Shut up!” Felt snapped at Old Man Rom’s affectionate expression with a growl. “I’m serious! Stop makin’ up weird shit!” However, the intensity of her excitement was once again far too extreme for the baby.

“Waaaahhhhhh!!!!” The baby’s cries reverberated through the mansion from the dining room table once more.

“Ahh, goddammit!”

5

Late that evening, just past midnight, Ilya finally grew tired of crying and fell asleep.

“Kids are something else,” Felt remarked, exhausted, plopping down on the couch. “Where does such a tiny body find so much stamina?”

“Speaking of tiny bodies…” Flam said.

“Like yours,” Grassis added.

As the twins retorted to her rant, Felt glared at them. “Shut up. I don’t wanna hear anything from people who are half my size. Just how old are you two anyway?”

“We’ll be twelve this year.”

“Time to become independent.”

“You ain’t independent if y’all’re always together. But still…”

The twins, puffing out their chests, were surprised at Felt’s words.

“That’s true…”

“A blind spot.”

Ignoring them, Felt shifted her gaze toward the back of the room, at the table in the common room, the basket on top, and Reinhard hard at work beside it. “You can even change a baby’s diaper? You really can do anything.”

“Anything is a bit of a stretch,” Reinhard replied. “But I once looked after the babies of an acquaintance of mine. So I do have some experience with diapers.”

“Oh, you took care of babies, huh?” Surprised by this unexpected scene, Felt laid back down and rested her cheek on her hand. From the corner of her eye, she saw the twins squirming, cheeks slightly tinted. She cast a dubious gaze between the twins and Reinhard, puzzled by their reaction. “Oh. I get it! You’re the babies of that acquaintance of his!”

“Lady Felt, that’s so embarrassing!”

“So humiliating.”

Blushing, the twins furtively affirmed Felt’s observations.

Convinced by her reaction, Reinhard chuckled. “You figured it out? Yes. I’ve known Flam and Grassis since they were both babies…”

“You mean you put your hands on those poor babies?!” accused Felt.

“Wait a minute. Please allow me to explain myself.”

“I’m only kidding. It’s one thing for you to hold me prisoner, but it’s quite another to change diapers for these two when they were babies. It’s also completely different from changing this other baby’s diaper right now,” Felt said, lowering her finger and blowing on its tip.

“That’s a relief,” Reinhard replied, withdrawing his hand. “That said, the diaper is now successfully changed. Flam, Grassis, did you get that?”

“Yes, Young Master. It’s perfect.”

“The diaper master.”

"I'll be counting on you. Now then, let's change the blanket and mattress. But she might get uncomfortable if we use something she's not used to, so we'll keep the original bedding for now."

At Reinhard's prompt and efficient instruction, Flam and Grassis bowed and left the common room. Only Felt and Reinhard remained in its confines, just the two of them—or three if you counted the sleeping Ilya.

"With the exception of Old Man Rom, all the men are useless," Felt complained.

"Even if they can't tend to Ilya, they should be able to assist in finding her parents," Reinhard suggested, advocating for the trio against Felt's earlier assessment, his hand resting upon the basket. "Tomorrow, I'll have those three men aid in our endeavors."

Felt frowned at his response, having only intended to say that comment to herself. "Tomorrow, huh? Are you sure? They're deadbeats. They might run away, y'know?"

"I've already talked to the people in town and at the dragon carriage stop. I instructed them to stop and report anyone in traveling clothes or with similar features to Ilya's. I also inquired about the town's recently expectant mothers. But unfortunately, there was no one who resembled her mother."

"After doing all that, is there anything left for those three idiots to do?" Felt was slightly taken aback by Reinhard's diligence as she eyed him with skepticism. For starters, Reinhard's the main one who's been lookin' after Ilya since after dinner. Where on earth did he find the time to do any of that?

"If you don't mind, Lady Felt," Reinhard said, changing the subject, "would you like to try changing her diaper?"

"Uh, maybe next time if I feel up to it," she conceded. "I saw how to do it, so I can probably do it."

"That's good to hear." Reinhard nodded, and Felt pursed her lips at his apparent aloofness.

Pretending to teach Flam and Grassis, Reinhard proceeded to show them how to change diapers, with the intention of Felt learning from it as well. Felt didn't want to entrust everything to Reinhard either, so she had planned to learn from the start.

"You knew I wasn't gonna say anything myself, huh?" Felt muttered. "Shit, you're so annoying."

"What's wrong?" Reinhard asked, raising an eyebrow at Felt's tongue-in-cheek remark.

"Nothing… Wait, no, it's not nothing. What do you think it is, really?" Felt scratched her head with her free hand as she lay slumped on the sofa.

"Lady Felt?"

"Bringing the baby here, finding the parents, and taking care of her were my own decisions. You made me choose. But what are your thoughts on it?"

"…"

"Oh, and for the record, I don't want you to include my opinion in your thinking. I am me. You are you. Let's keep the two separate. Otherwise, I'll feel really weird."

She swung her legs up and down to gain momentum. Raising herself up on the couch, Felt straightened and turned to Reinhard. She noticed him shut his eyes.

Then he looked back at her, motioning gingerly toward Ilya with his hand. "I suppose that even if you had ordered me to abandon the baby, I would still have gone along with it. There is no truly correct answer in this case."

"That's not your opinion, though…"

"And then," he continued, "I think I would have secretly searched for Ilya's parents and sheltered her somewhere in the mansion, behind Your Ladyship's back."

“Oh?” Felt said as Reinhard smiled softly, arms outstretched. Dumbfounded by his grin, she realized that she had been the one he was stringing along. Her face flushed, and anger welled up inside of her. “Y-You…”

“Lady Felt, Ilya is…”

“Ugh…! Don’t act so superior!” Felt wanted to shout at him, but restrained herself at the very last moment, reflecting on the situation. But the anger lingered, and she glared at Reinhard with indignation, delivering her outburst in that single sentence.

In the end, Reinhard always got his own way. Regardless of Felt’s intentions, he was devoted to this baby whether out of his own desire or not.

“You’re only doing it ‘cause you think it’s best for the baby,” she said.

“Indeed, it is in my nature to help those in need,” Reinhard acknowledged. “But in this case, I don’t think one needs to think so hard when it comes to helping a baby, right?”

“…”

“And if you don’t mind me getting a little personal…”

Felt’s eyebrows rose at the sound of the word ‘personal’. It wasn’t very often that Reinhard would preface a statement with his own personal views. And that was precisely the response that she was hoping for on this occasion.

Reinhard smiled thinly at Felt’s anticipation. “It is an honor for me as a knight to be in agreement with you, Lady Felt.”

“I… uh…”

“I remember that moment when you gave me your orders during the royal selection ceremony. I, too, would like to follow my mistress’s wishes whenever possible.”

Felt’s mouth hung open in embarrassment from the sheer audacity of his comment. Reinhard simply shrugged in his usual fashion in response to her reaction. It wasn't an act of courtesy, nor was it a random slip of the tongue. It was unmistakably his genuine opinion, but that fact alone was what triggered Felt's agitation.

Felt gritted her teeth with a shudder, and blurted out, "You know, you really are a jerk, ain't ya? That's exactly what creeps me out about you!" Her heated outburst echoed throughout the mansion. Then, just a beat later…

"Waaaahhh!"

And, in retribution for her poor judgment, the mansion trembled with wails all through the night.

6

At midnight, at the same time that Astrea Manor reeled with violent tremors…

"Did you find the woman and child?"

A low voice pierced a dimly lit room. The voice was mature yet robust, despite its gruffness. It held the kind of power attributed only to those who have reigned above others for numerous years, a power one could only call dignity. Naturally, the owner of the voice had his subordinates. As if to prove this point, multiple breaths of air stirred in the air as one man spoke up. "Please forgive me, sir, but we are still in pursuit. We have no doubt that they have already departed the city."

"Find them. Any leads on their destination?"

"They have no one to turn to and limited resources. We must start from the nearest point and work our way up."

Upon hearing this report from his underling, the man with the voice issued commands without a moment's hesitation. "You're taking too damn long. Narrow it down. Start with Hakuchuri."

In response, the room rustled with unrest. However, the subordinate making the report quietly bowed. "Understood, sir. I will send someone immediately. Although things may get a tad messy…”

“That’s not my concern. My priority is to secure them, but even if the woman doesn’t make it back, make sure the baby does.”

“So be it. Let’s go.”

With that, the subordinate left the room, accompanied by the rest of the men. The door quietly shut behind him, leaving the lone man in the bleak chamber. He creaked out of his chair, rising to his feet, and walked over to the window behind him to peer out.

“I wonder where they’ve run off to…”

Outside the window, the city of Flanders, one of the five great cities, loomed in the distance at night. The room that he occupied belonged to a mansion on a hill commanding a panoramic view of the city.

In his top-floor chamber, the man drew a cigar from his desk drawer and lit it. The faint glow revealed a deeply wrinkled visage. His golden hair had already lost its luster. And his blue eyes brimmed with a fierce glint. “I will find you, Ilya,” the man muttered, his voice drifting away, swallowed up by the dark, starry sky above Flanders.

7

The past few days in Hakuchuri went by like clockwork. It had become routine to hear the wails of a baby and the intense quarrel between a boy and girl in the Astrea’s main residence, situated atop a hill.

“Waaaaah!” The baby bawled with all its might, causing the townspeople to pause in their work. Exchanging glances, they would laugh and comment, “Looks like it’s started up again,” before returning to their tasks.

Such became the day-to-day rhythm in the town of Hakuchuri.

“Lady Felt, I don’t want to repeat myself too often, but please listen to me closely once more.” With a stiff preamble, Reinhard cut in wearing a serious expression on his face. It was unusual for this man, ordinarily mild-mannered, to carry such stridency in his voice, but it was not necessarily a reflection of his emotional state, rather because otherwise, his voice might miss its intended audience. After all, the baby had been wailing with a ferocity that rocked the entire mansion.

“Waaah!” The sobbing baby, Ilya, had been doing her damnedest to protest her life’s woes with all her might. Felt and the others had also done their damnedest to tend to Ilya over the past few days since deciding to keep her at the mansion. However, Ilya was not one to compromise, using her status as a baby as a shield.

Of course, they could never burden a mere infant with adult matters, but…

“All you do is cry, cry, cry!” Felt exclaimed, covering her ears. “That’s all you do, all day, every day, all around the clock!”

“Don’t exaggerate,” Reinhard said. “It’s not all day long. The actual frequency is every few hours. It’s just that babies can’t distinguish between morning and night, so it’s easy to feel it that way.”

“Did I give you the impression that I give a shit about such petty things?” Felt barked, her hands over her ears. “If you have time to bullshit, just show her your face and make her stop crying!”

However, Reinhard shook his head. “No. Right now, anything I do to stop her from crying now would only be a stopgap measure. If we don’t get to the root of the matter, Ilya will weep and sob over and over again. It’s becoming unbearable, even for me.”

“Don’t play the victim card now. What do you mean, the ‘root of the matter’?”

“That, of course, lies with you, Lady Felt. That’s why Ilya is crying right now.”

“Me? What the hell are you talking about? What’s this got to do with me?”

“Take a look,” Reinhard said, pointing at Ilya, who was lying on her bed. Felt, annoyed by Reinhard's remark, glanced at the diaper wrapped around her.

"It's Ilya's diaper," he continued. "Your Ladyship was the one who changed it. But look at how you put it on. It's quite sloppy. I have no doubt that Ilya is itchy."

"Oh, who cares?" Felt moaned, refuting Reinhard's accusation. "As long as it covers her ass and keeps her from shitting all over the place!"

Indeed, the cloth serving as Ilya's diaper was wrapped around her quite haphazardly, and indeed, it had been Felt who had wrapped it. But that said, the whole idea of changing diapers seemed ridiculous to her in the first place.

"Lady Felt… Please be more attentive to Ilya's feelings. Otherwise, you'll only get further away from your quest for the throne."

"Quit talking nonsense! What's a diaper got to do with becoming queen? You get off on watching me change a brat's diapers or something? Pervert!" Reinhard's argument was swapped for a polemic, and Felt clawed at her head in frustration. "Why do I have to deal with this? Where are those twins? What about those three idiots? What the hell are they doing?"

"Flam and Grassis are occupied with the mansion's chores. Rachins, Gaston, and Camberley are looking for Ilya's parents, and I'm sure Your Ladyship knows what Master Rom is up to."

"Mugugu…"

Felt could not say a word as Reinhard drove her into a corner. At the same time, he turned to Ilya, asking, "Are you all right?" He proceeded to readjust her diaper. "There, there, we'll take care of you now."

As aggravating as it was to listen to Reinhard, Old Man Rom was currently away from the mansion. He had left to meet an acquaintance outside of the royal capital, so he was quite busy on his own. Consequently, with Old Man Rom absent and Felt left to care for the baby, her spirits had all but spiraled down the drain.

“So it’s just me and you who are available right now, Lady Felt,” Reinhard concluded.

“If that’s the case, why don’t you search for those parents instead of those three morons?” Felt asked.

“Those three can barely do a thing for Ilya. So if I do that, you’d be left to deal with Ilya all on your own. Don’t you see?”

“What have I done…!” With her head in her hands, Felt sighed at the sight of Ilya, now in a cheerful mood after having her diaper changed.

It had been five days since Ilya arrived at the mansion, and the baby’s tyrannical tendencies were only getting worse. How carefree you are, despite the turmoil you’ve been causing for everyone around here, all the while wearing the smile of an angel. Who do ya think you are, a queen?!

“We gotta find her parents quickly,” Felt lamented. “Otherwise, even I can’t tell what I’ll end up doing to them for making me go through this.”

“In such moments, just look at Ilya’s face,” Reinhard suggested. “Doesn’t her innocence wash over you and make you feel at peace?”

“It’s exactly that face that’s driving me insane right now.”

Although Felt was tempted to snap back at him out of habit, this situation called for something different. There really is no way to win over a baby whose life is bound by neither day nor night. Can’t help but wonder if her folks abandoned her not because of poverty, but because of her incessant wailing.

“Good grief, if that’s the case. Give me a break.” If crying alone was reason enough to abandon a baby, then the world would be overrun with abandoned kids. Before even discussin’ whether I’ll become the queen or not, I don’t wanna believe the country I’m living in is such a cruel place.

"Ah, it's a beautiful day." With Reinhard fretting over Ilya, Felt gazed out the window absentmindedly. The blue sky, white clouds, and idyllic scenery spread out below them. It was not particularly tranquil, but her lack of sleep from the previous night's crying made her feel a bit dazed.

"If you want to sleep beside Ilya, I can sing you a lullaby," Reinhard offered.

"Don't treat me like a child," Felt snapped. "I'll kick your ass." What, does this guy have eyes in the back of his head? How'd he know I was dozing off? Leaning against the windowsill, the wind tousled her golden bangs as she drifted off to sleep…

"Hmm?" Felt squinted against the breeze and sunlight, clearing her throat with a sudden sense of discomfort. She spotted someone skulking around the landscape from her elevated position. The moment they caught sight of Felt, they turned around in a panic and scrambled away.

"What the hell! That bastard!"

"Lady Felt!"

Without a moment's hesitation, Felt vaulted out of the window. Reinhard was startled by her swift reaction but was unable to catch up to her since she'd already landed in the garden. On all fours, Felt turned her attention downhill, where she could still see the figure's back, receding into the distance. Determined to chase after them, she broke into a run, when suddenly…

"Lady Felt," Reinhard said, appearing beside her a split second later with a hand on her shoulder. "If you need anything, please let me know. That is what I am here for."

For a moment, Felt wanted to shake him off, but she dismissed her spontaneous reflexes. Taking stock of the situation, she pointed down the hill. "Some weird-ass creep was gawking at the mansion. Go get 'im!"

"Yes, ma'am!" Reinhard exclaimed, accepting her command.

“Please take care of Ilya,” he added, thrusting the baby into her arms.

Reinhard’s figure faded with the wind not a moment after Felt received the baby’s limber, warm body. Kicking the ground, he caught up to the man in a flash. The suspect seemed confident in his ability to escape, but he was no match for Felt, let alone Reinhard. After all, this was a man of iron defenses that even Felt had not been able to escape over the last two months.

“Oh, it’s settled. That takes care of that.” Felt nodded as she put her hands under Ilya’s armpits, letting her legs dangle. A cloud of dust rose at the end of her line of sight as Reinhard pinned the man down, rendering him incapable of resistance. It all happened so fast, Felt couldn’t exactly see what he did to the man, but she figured that wasn’t important.

Waiting, still holding Ilya, Reinhard returned at a leisurely pace, dragging the man back by the scruff of his neck.

“Lady Felt, this way.”

Without pausing to catch his breath, Reinhard threw the man he had dragged to the ground. He was a middle-aged man with an unremarkable appearance, staring at Reinhard with blank, trembling eyes. “Ugh, you’re even more of a monster than the rumors say, you…”

“Though I’m accustomed to being called such things, right now, I’m Lady Felt’s knight,” Reinhard declared.

“Quit giving that answer whenever you’re called that.” Felt clicked her tongue at his textbook response. “It’s hard on the ears.” She then turned her attention to the trembling man. Observing his nervous smile, she tilted her head and asked, “Correct me if I’m wrong, but you’ve been spyin’ on our house, haven’tcha?”

“Heh, heh. Well, I heard that the Sword Saint had returned, and I was curious to get a glimpse of him.”

Felt glanced at Reinhard. “Reinhard, do as you please with his fingers.”

The panic-stricken man’s face paled. “Wait, wait! You’ll what?! Don’t hurt me! What are you doing?”

Reinhard really left an impression on him, huh?

Reinhard rubbed his brow at the sight of the hysterical man, begging for mercy. “Lady Felt, you’ve portrayed me as a rather terrifying being…”

“That’s just common sense. You should know the trouble you’ve put me through.”

Shrugging at Reinhard’s troubled frown, Felt smiled, flashing the man her fang. “Anyway, it’s your turn now. Who are you, where are you from, and why are you here? Answer, or else.”

“O-Or else…?”

“I’ll sic Reinhard on ya.”

Reinhard no longer defended himself against Felt’s ruthless proclamations. He chuckled, accepting the harsh orders. “If that is my duty as your knight,” he acquiesced.

Sensing something far greater than a threat in this alliance, the man exclaimed in a panic, “Alright, alright! I got it, I got it! I’m from the Black Silver Coin! I was ordered by my higher-ups to find the baby!”

8

“The Black Silver Coin, huh?” Felt put a hand to her forehead as the man recounted his story in full. To be honest, having grown up in the royal capital, I’m not so familiar with the affairs outside of the area, but even I can guess who these Black Silver Coin guys are and what they do for a living.

“The Black Silver Coin is an organization based in Flanders, one of the five great cities,” Reinhard explained. “On the surface, they can appear in a bar in the city, or as an earth dragon goods dealer…”

“But in reality, they are the underworld of the city, the leaders of the dark forces of society. A common trope, ain’t it?” Felt surmised.

There were similar entities in the royal capital with different names, but the reality was the same. Felt had tried to avoid getting involved, but society was not big enough for her to remain completely unaffected.

“But not even the underlings seem to know much more than that.” She sighed. “We have no clue who from the Black Silver Coin is looking for Ilya, or why. Also…”

“We have no idea why Ilya was left at my residence,” Reinhard added.

In the end, they obtained no further information, other than that Ilya was the target. The man they had captured was rolled up in a bamboo mat and shoved into a storeroom, but that was another issue.

We could go directly to the Black Silver Coin, Felt thought, knowing it was a rather rough method. I can just go to their headquarters, use Reinhard as a shield, and uncover the truth. However, Felt quickly abandoned this idea. Not only due to her reluctance to rely on Reinhard but also because she knew it wouldn’t solve the root of the problem.

“But if we don’t do something, we’ll be stuck like…” Pondering over what to do, Felt sank into the weight of her thoughts as she lay on the sofa. Standing by her side, Reinhard looked affectionately at Ilya sleeping peacefully on her bed.

But all Felt could think about was taking action to break through this stagnation.

“Woo-hoo! We’re back! Raise your hands and give us a warm welcome!”

A cheerful, high-pitched voice carried upstairs from the front door of the mansion.

“…Those idiots!” Felt growled. They were supposed to be on duty looking for the parents! Seeing Ilya's sleeping face twitch at the commotion, Felt clicked her tongue and left the room. Standing in the doorway, she raised an eyebrow. "Shut up, you damn idiots! You're gonna wake Ilya up!" she shouted at them.

Camberley puffed out his chest and laughed. "You're one to talk! Besides, you should be talking to us with gratitude!" he cried, before pointing at the front door with all the strength his small frame could muster.

Felt shot him a dubious look. "What? What did you just say…?"

There, Rachins and Gaston appeared, and with them, a beautiful woman with long grayish-brown hair. She appeared to be in her twenties and exuded a soft and gentle aura. Intimidated by the imposing atmosphere of the mansion, her eyes darted around the room with an air of dread. Noticing Felt's gaze on her, she hastily bowed her head.

The woman's appearance deepened the quizzical wrinkles between Felt's brows.

The fearful woman and the three idiots basking in their triumph were nothing but trouble—well, the trio, anyway.

"Reinhard, tie 'em all up."

"Yes, ma'am."

"Hold on with that order! Look closely! It's the brat's mom!"

The instantaneous reaction nearly overlapped with the swift verdict, but that, too, quickly unraveled at Rachins's words—his declaration that this woman was none other than Ilya's mother.

"How did you know…that she was Ilya's mother?" Felt asked.

It was undoubtedly a welcome revelation. But this was not the time for complacency. There remained a strong possibility that the trio had made a mistake in their haste. In response to Felt's misgivings, Rachins smirked with a "Heh. Dumb people might not have caught on, but I figured it out as soon as I saw her clothes. Parents usually abandon kids ‘cause of money. That’s why abandoned kids are usually so shabby. But this kid had clean clothes an’ a nice basket, so I knew right away somethin’ was off.”

“This guy was brought up properly. Unlike us,” Gaston chimed in, standing beside Rachins.

Rachins, embarrassed, immediately cleared his throat and interjected, “Nobody cares ‘bout that now. The reason for abandonin’ her wasn’t the money. Also, she was left on the Sword Saint’s doorstep. So the story’s simple. Lives were at stake. That’s why her folks left her here.”

If she were taken in by the Sword Saint’s family, the chances of her being traced were significantly reduced. Indeed, an assassin from the Black Silver Coin had been repelled. If his speculation proved correct, everything was going according to plan.

“It’s great that you figured out that much, but what happens next?” Felt asked.

“Well, if I was a parent who left my kid with the Sword Saint,” Camberley began, “y’know what I’d do? I’d run far, far away acting like a decoy to protect that kid! So while monitoring the dragon carriage stops wasn’t a bad one, we took it one step further! By setting our sights on long-distance dragon carriages, at last, we were able to come up with this deciding factor!” Exaggerating his gestures, Camberley thrust his hands out before him. Felt, however, had no idea what this ‘deciding factor’ was. She tilted her head in confusion.

“Take a good, good look!” Camberley continued. “This is it, this!”

“This… Hmm?” Stepping forward at Camberley’s assertion, Felt finally grasped the situation. In his outstretched hands, he held a long, thin thread of some sort. No, not a thread, but a strand of human hair.

The hair was long and had a grayish-brown hue. Camberley gripped it tight, proud of his victory over Felt. “This hair, found in that kid’s basket, belongs to someone else! Its color is different from the kid’s, which must mean it came from one of the parents who dumped her here! Which means… This hair is her mother's!"

"That's a creepy method…"

"Is that all you have to say to us after we've made it this far?!"

Camberley tore the lock of hair in his hands and glared at Felt for her offhanded comment, but she quickly brushed it off with an apologetic wave of her hand. "Whatever, good job. But it's still not enough…"

"An outsider, a hair match, and a long ride in a dragon carriage. Not to mention—" Interrupting Felt, Gaston listed out their reasoning, then gestured at the woman with his chin.

Looking closely at the woman once again, Felt saw what he was referring to. The woman standing before them had a bandage wrapped around her neck and chest, hidden by her clothes.

"So it wasn't only the daughter who was in danger, but the mother as well…" Felt clicked her tongue. "Hey, twins!"

"You called for us?"

"Lady Felt wants us."

Flam and Grassis suddenly appeared as if they had literally sprung out of the water. The trio was startled by their sudden appearance, and the woman also looked at them incredulously. Felt, however, accepted it as a matter of course. "I hope you're ready to patch up that injury," she said. "I'm not doin' it. You want her bandages to come out lookin' like one of my diapers?"

"Lady Felt, you've acknowledged your guilt," said Flam, one hand covering her mouth.

"Burn in your own sins," said Grassis, one hand covering her mouth.

"Shut up!"

Following their banter with Felt, the twins approached the nervous-looking woman. They took her by the hand and began to guide her to the parlor. However…

"Ah, before that," Felt stopped them in their tracks. "What's your name?"

"…"

"Your name, lady. Your daughter has one. You have one too, right? At least…"

Just as Felt was about to say, tell us, the woman pointed at her own throat. She then proceeded to shake her head sideways, indicating she could not speak.

"I said her wound needed treatment, an' she gave in. At first, she mistook us for her pursuers," Rachins explained to Felt as the woman disappeared into the parlor.

Felt nodded in agreement. "Not surprising. You don't look like the type of person you'd expect to find in the Sword Saint's household. But thanks for finding her. It really helps."

"Heh!" Rachins was momentarily taken aback by Felt's praise, responding with an immediate smile. Gaston and Camberley mirrored his sentiment from behind.

Yet, there stood one figure, feeling excluded from the picture entirely.

"So, what's with you looking so dumb? It's weird," Felt remarked.

"I must confess, I am surprised," Reinhard responded hesitantly as Felt turned around. The woman's presence, Rachins's efforts, and the twins' duties—in each case, Reinhard observed them in silence. Evidently, his heart was filled with a rare sense of surprise.

"What do you think?" Felt asked. "They're not so bad, huh? Not for a bunch of street punks, anyway."

"…"

“I didn’t anticipate anything like this, though. Well, I suppose there are times they’re more useful than you, the not-so-almighty Sword Saint.” Folding her hands behind her head, Felt gave Reinhard a devious smile.

Reinhard exhaled softly at the expression and continued. “However, we don’t truly know if that woman is Ilya’s mother, do we? We haven’t been able to glean anything from her yet, so long as we can’t talk to her. At this rate…”

“Proof, right? Piece of cake,” Felt interjected, closing one eye, addressing Reinhard’s unnecessary worries. “We just gotta get her to meet with Ilya. Then we’ll have no problem.”

9

“Wah!”

Seeing Ilya happy in her mother’s arms, Felt looked at Reinhard, expecting he had admitted his defeat.

“It’s not a defeat at all,” he remarked. “Through this reunion, Ilya is safely back in her mother’s arms. It’s an unprecedented achievement. It’s a victory for all of us. Rather, for Ilya.”

“Why you gotta be so fussy about it?” Felt retorted. “Anyway, now we know for sure.”

The woman sitting on the sofa in the center of the parlor was indeed Ilya’s mother.

Such was evidenced by both Ilya in her arms and the compassionate gaze of the woman watching her baby. There was nothing to doubt about that.

“A woman who embraces her daughter so lovingly would never want to abandon her, would she?” Reinhard mused.

“And she’s beautiful, too,” Gaston remarked.

“Yeah, that’s important,” Rachins agreed.

“I’m open to older women,” Camberley added.

Reinhard’s convictions lost their emphasis with the trio’s petty judgments layered on top. Flam and Grassis shot them a disapproving glare for their extra commentary, causing them to shrink back. Seeing this through the corner of her eye, Felt snorted and turned her attention to Reinhard. At that, he lowered his head reverently under her gaze. “Please rest assured, Lady Felt. I am your knight, and my loyalty to you is unwavering.”

“What are you talking about? I didn’t even say anything, so quit actin’ so concerned. Also, your focus should be on the lady and her kid now, not me. For now, anyway.”

If what she wants is the Sword Saint, then the best thing we can do now is grant her wish. The woman’s injuries were attended to without incident, and she found herself more at ease. At this point, Felt’s curiosity extended beyond her well-being, as she wanted to know just who was responsible for harming her and putting Ilya in danger.

“It would’ve been easier if it was simply the case of a bad husband who got violent with his wife and child,” Felt remarked.

“Easy is a stretch, my lady. That’s one of the most painful tragedies in the world.”

“I don’t mean to imply that I wish such suffering upon this family. I merely suggest that resolving it would have been more straightforward.” Rebuking Reinhard for his stiff take on the matter, Felt shrugged her shoulders. It definitely would’ve been less complicated if the problem had been limited to this mother, daughter, and husband, or rather, to a single family. We’d only have one person to prosecute. However… “The Black Silver Coin is involved. This isn’t just about them anymore.”

“What? The Black Silver Coin?” Rachins, Gaston, and Camberley, who had played a major role in the hunt for the parents, were astounded upon hearing Felt’s verdict.

Felt briefly explained the story to the incredulous trio. She mentioned the assassin who was after Ilya, and his affiliation with the Black Silver Coin.

Hearing this, the trio’s faces paled as they exclaimed:

“You’ve gotta be kidding! The Black Silver Coin is the governing entity of one of the five great cities.”

“They don’t give a shit who crosses them!”

“And those who do cross them end up in the river!”

The three of them desperately appealed to the others, blaming their adversaries. Felt, roughly scratching her head, concurred, “That’s right. If those guys are so bad, we can’t even have a proper conversation without first thinking of a way to deal with them.”

“That’s not what we mean!” the three idiots protested in unison, but Felt’s stance was unyielding.

“If you wish for me to open up an escape route, I shall risk my life to fulfill my duty…” Reinhard offered.

“That’s not gonna solve this whole problem,” Felt replied.

“Indeed, I am acutely aware of that.”

If the problem could have been settled by brute force alone, there would be no hand more powerful than Reinhard’s unparalleled strength. However, Felt was well aware such means were not always the best course of action. The event unfolding before them was one of them.

“Hmm?” Suddenly, Felt, lost in thought, looked up, feeling the weight of someone’s gaze. The source of the stare was the mother, holding her daughter in her arms. Her hazel green eyes were filled with a mixture of anxiety, hope, and uncertainty. The root of her complex sentiments became apparent. “Are you wonderin’ why we’re trying to help you?” Felt asked, her tone firm.

In response, the woman nodded her head.

“Don’t get me wrong. We…or at least, I, am not doing this for you. If there’s anyone I’m concerned about, it’s Ilya.”

“…”

“I’ve had to deal with her crying at night for days on end. I’m on the verge of exploding from lack of sleep. I thought I’d have no mercy on the parents once I found them, but when I finally found the mother… I realized she was in a messy predicament. It’s a pain in the ass.”

The harshness of Felt’s words caused the woman to stiffen up in anticipation of what she might say next. Ilya, however, oblivious to the tension in the room, reached out her hand towards Felt, smiling faintly in her mother’s bosom.

Felt noticed herself relaxing at this sight. “Damn it…” she muttered.

Unlike her mother, nothing was out of the ordinary for Ilya. Ever since she came to this mansion, she had only seen Felt exude explosive anger from her petite body, always raising her voice.

“I’m getting impatient,” Felt said. “And I won’t be satisfied until I unload this onto those responsible. Hey, you… What about you?”

The woman pointed at herself in surprise, expression puzzled.

“You left that brat here so you can be a decoy, right? Aren’t you angry that they made you do that? Aren’t you pissed that you have to run all over the place?”

“…”

“You think Ilya wants to grow up hearing that her mom was basically running around with a sign on her back saying ‘loser’?”

“…”

The woman’s expression changed at Felt’s provocation. Her face reddened, her eyes widened, and with the exception of the arms holding Ilya, the rest of her body tensed up. Not with words, but with her whole body, she expressed that she did not want that to happen. Felt laughed at the sight. “Twins! Get some paper and a quill!” she commanded.

“Here’s some paper,” Flam said, handing her a sheet.

“Here’s a quill,” Grassis said, handing her a quill.

Felt extended her hands as Flam and Grassis quickly responded to her request. Receiving the paper and quill, Felt offered them to the woman.

“Write down your names. Both of them. The names of Ilya’s mother and father.”

“…”

“This is a once-in-a-lifetime chance. It’s your decision. This is it,” Felt explained.

The woman closed her eyes, contemplating Felt’s words. Then, opening them back up, she offered Ilya to Reinhard. Reinhard gently took the baby into his arms and gasped. Before their eyes, the woman ran her quill over the piece of paper. The mother’s name, her own, was Kalifa. And in the remaining space, she wrote the name of a man—Ilya’s father.

“Doltero? Is that her father’s name?” Felt asked.

“Nooo!” The moment they heard that name, the three idiots collapsed behind them in shock. They screamed and shrank back, clasping their hands together and shaking their heads frantically in disgust.

“What’s your problem?! Quit being so fussy, would ya? You’re losing the respect I just started to have for ya!”

“Take back all the respect you want,” Rachins exclaimed. “But Doltero? No way! That’s the name of the Black Silver Coin’s leader! Oh, wait! I know! It’s gotta be someone else wit’ the same name! Talk about confusin’!”

Perhaps out of desperation, Rachins and the others desperately tried to rewrite the reality of the situation. However, the woman, Kalifa, proceeded to write Doltero's family name after his first.

"Doltero Amule."

This time, the three idiots were out of moves, and they deflated into a heap on the spot. Apparently, the family name also matched the head of the Black Silver Coin as they knew it. In other words, Ilya is indeed related to the head of the Black Silver Coin…

"No wonder they're after her… Wait, something's not right," Felt said.

The Black Silver Coin was trying to retrieve their leader's daughter. I get that. But what about Kalifa? She's his lover or something like that and fled because she feared for her life. Isn't that the exact opposite of wanting to come back?

"If the enemy had been anyone other than Black Silver Coin, I would've understood. But the guy we caught was also from the Black Silver Coin. How can that be? Generally speaking…"

"…"

"Why didn't Kalifa turn to the leader of the Black Silver Coin?"

If his mistress and daughter were in danger, the boss of the Black Silver Coin wouldn't remain silent. Wouldn't Kalifa naturally seek his help for the sake of Ilya's safety? But she didn't. So what could've happened?

"It's starting to smell fishy, isn't it? I'd like to give this Doltero guy a good beating."

"I understand what you're thinking, Lady Felt, but it won't be that easy. When the other party is the Black Silver Coin and its leader, you need to be prepared when making contact with them."

"Were you just talking about Doltero?" A gruff voice suddenly interrupted, causing everyone in the parlor to turn their attention to the entrance. There stood Old Man Rom, having returned from his earlier meeting.

“Old Man Rom, you’re back!”

“Just got here. So what’s this about Doltero? And who’s that young lady over there?”

Rubbing his bald head, Old Man Rom frowned as he observed the unfamiliar Kalifa.

The situation unfolded just as it appeared. Everyone in the mansion gathered in a single room, each wearing a complicated look on their face. The trio had all but lost their usual vitality. The twins held out a piece of paper with two names written on it. Reinhard cradled an infant in his arms, and Felt sat on the sofa. Old Man Rom nodded deeply and spoke. “Hmmm. So you’ve made some progress. But what does this have to do with Doltero?”

“I’d like to ask something, too. If this is true, then you’re truly extraordinary, Old Man Rom.” Jumping off the couch, Felt nimbly ran up to him and looked him straight in the eye. “Are you acquainted with that Doltero guy from the Black Silver Coin?”

“Not only do I know him, but he’s the one I just went to see.”

“Hell yeah!” Felt jumped for joy at Old Man Rom’s response, closing one eye.

“What the—?” Old Man Rom quickly caught her lightweight body, wearing a dumbfounded expression as he asked, “What’s this all about?”

“That’s great, that’s great, that’s great! I knew you’d be the one to come through for me!”

“That’s a flattering assessment, but I still don’t get what’s going on…” With Felt in his arms, Old Man Rom searched Reinhard for a clue to the missing information.

Reinhard held Ilya under his gaze and addressed Felt. “Lady Felt.”

“Yes, you heard that, right? Now we got all the keys we need. All that’s left is to figure out what to do with those keys, right?” Felt’s crimson eyes sparkled as she grinned with satisfaction.

Reinhard bowed in response to her smile and spoke again. “Lady Felt, right now, you look just like Ilya the way you’re being cradled by Master Rom.”

“Shut up! Hurry up and get your ass ready!!”

10

The air in that one room gave Felt a strange sense of déjà vu. It carried a stifling sensation, caused by an eerie sense of oppression that filled the large space. The thick walls, dim lighting, and crude furnishings seemed intended to intimidate guests—coupled with the absence of chairs for anyone to sit on—and after some thought, Felt understood the true nature of the déjà vu she felt.

It reminded her of the royal castle. The atmosphere of that hall, the stage where she stood when she was forced into the royal selection, all of it was very similar.

“In other words, it’s full of enemies, just like back then. Only this time, I’ve managed to get this far on my own. That alone makes me feel so much better.”

“Don’t worry. No matter what happens, Lady Felt, I guarantee I will protect your person…no, everyone here. If anything happens, and if I have to pick you up, please bear with it and hold back your screams.”

“I feel the same as before. Having you next to me ruins my mood.”

Felt snorted at Reinhard’s statement filled with loyalty as usual and casually crossed her arms. Reinhard chuckled at her response, also emanating his usual self.

Their boldness was evident in their capacity to have a normal exchange.

The two currently stood in a room within Doltero Amule’s mansion, located in the heart of Flanders, one of the five great cities. In other words, they were in the very heart of the Black Silver Coin.

Naturally, it should have been expected that a sudden visitor would be turned away at the door. However, tonight, Felt and her party were granted entrance into the mansion where they were treated to the hospitality typical of the underground world.

The reason for this special exception was soon revealed.

“Apologies for keeping you waiting…” The door to a large room opened, and a stern voice accompanied by a solemn bow was directed at them.

A slender man in a black suit appeared. His entire body radiated a piercing sense of intimidation, his eyes like a serpent. Truly the image of an adversary.

The snake-eyed man turned his gaze toward Old Man Rom, who stood behind Felt and the others. “The Boss is here. Lord Cromwell, consider this a special exception.”

“I appreciate your efforts, Safis… Anyway, it’s not a bad deal for him.”

“I see.”

According to Old Man Rom, the name of the snake-eyed man was Safis. His gaze shifted to Kalifa, holding Ilya, accompanied by Felt, Reinhard, and Old Man Rom. Behind those cold eyes, no one could discern what impression Safis had of the mother and daughter.

The answer was never revealed, as the sound of the great door creaking interrupted the silence.

The moment the figure appeared, the air in the room grew noticeably heavier.

The air was bitter in taste, black in color, and low in resonance. The figure sat down heavily in the single chair at the far end of the room, surrounded by this aura of intimidation. He had shimmering blond hair slicked back and deep blue eyes that perfectly matched Ilya’s. However, there was a stark contrast in the rest of his appearance. It was vastly different from that of an ordinary human.

“Are you a demi-human?”

“In every sense of the word. But what importance is blood here, human girl?”

“Well, nothing, I guess?” Felt replied, looking at Ilya peacefully asleep in Kalifa’s arms. “I guess it’s just a good thing she didn’t inherit too many of her father’s traits.”

The man cleared his throat in response to Felt’s comment. “You’re an honest brat with a lot of guts. I agree with you, though.”

Agreeing with Felt’s irreverent remark, the man touched his nose—not a human nose, but a pig-like one—and smirked. It was visibly obvious at first glance that he was a pig-human.

The Pig King, Doltero Amule, as he was known, sat before them in all his dignity.

"Now that we're done with the introductions, I'd like to proceed," he said. "You know why we came all the way here, don't you?"

"Of course I do." Nodding gravely at Felt's question, Doltero called out the name of the silent mother with her child. "Kalifa." Kalifa's expression hardened at the call, but she stoutly made eye contact with the man.

The exchange of looks between this man and woman, the father and mother, carried complex emotions that were hidden from the eyes of anyone else.

"Why did you run away?"

Kalifa could not answer that question with words. It was impossible for her to say anything. Her larynx had been destroyed. Such was the reason behind her bitter decision to leave her daughter at the mansion of the Sword Saint and use herself as a decoy.

The cause that had driven Kalifa to such extremes could be nothing else.

"You ran away with Ilya. I sent my men after you, but you wouldn't return. I didn't think I'd get a chance to ask you why. But now that you're here, tell me."

Doltero's question was cruel to Kalifa, who was clearly unable to speak, and his posture revealed another side of things: the hidden circumstances of the aging Pig King, Doltero.

"Why did you run away? Why did you return with the Sword Saint?"

"Don't blame her for running. She had no choice but to flee. She and her daughter were threatened with death, so she turned to the Astrea family. That's all," Reinhard answered on Kalifa's behalf. He looked across at Ilya's peaceful sleeping face in her mother's arms before stepping forward. "When her life was threatened, she put her trust in us to protect her daughter at the very least. That's why she left you."

“Nonsense. She fled because her life was threatened? Then why rely on you? If something had happened, why not turn to me first? I am…”

“Shut it, big shot. How can she rely on someone who can’t see his own two feet?” Felt mocked provokingly, butting into their conversion. “That’s why the woman and child have given up on you.”

A tremendous rage swelled up in the room at Felt’s words, but it was not Doltero himself who was enraged. “You’d better watch your tone. You are forgetting that this is the headquarters of the Black Silver Coin. I do not recommend that you cross the line, even if you are a guest.”

Felt locked eyes with the source of the cold voice and icy stare with her crimson eyes: Safis. Standing at the back of the room, Safis was the only member of the Black Silver Coin that Doltero allowed to be present. A testament to his level of trust in him.

“Do you think there is no danger just because you have the Sword Saint at your side? If that’s what you believe, then you greatly underestimate us. We have our own way of doing things. You can count on that…”

“Hey, I’m not kidding. Do I look like a coward who can’t fight without a guardian? I don’t care if he’s here or not.” Felt pointed at Reinhard beside her, clicking her tongue in response to the insulting remark. “And don’t you dare speak to me so blatantly, you two-faced snake bastard.”

“What the hell are you talking about? You’re making baseless accusations.”

“Oh really? I applaud your acting ability.” Felt commended the performance of Safis, who had slightly furrowed his brow.

Doltero touched his pig nose with a bony hand amidst the swarthy exchange between his guest and his subordinate.

Old Man Rom opened his mouth in thought, saying, “Well…” The wise old man, who had been quietly observing the proceedings behind Felt and Reinhard, lowered his gaze and spoke. “If this mother and daughter were targeted, Doltero, you couldn’t possibly be unrelated. Anyone hostile to the Black Silver Coin would be drooling over her. And yet, this mother and child did not turn to you. Not simply because they didn’t want to inconvenience you. No, there was a different reason…”

“They didn’t consider the Black Silver Coin an ally, did they?” Absorbing the final part of Old Man Rom’s statement, Doltero’s blue eyes flashed with understanding.

The organization that dominated the underworld of Flanders had bloodthirsty enemies who would seize any opportunity to exploit a weakness that could lead to the downfall of its leader. And the word ‘enemy’ did not always have to refer to those on the outside alone. If the boss were to fall, certain individuals on the inside might reap benefits as well.

“You were the only one I confided in about Ilya being my daughter, Safis.”

Doltero’s deep, rumbling voice bore down on Safis, his confidant. The snake-eyed man took it in stride and returned his superior’s stare. There was no hint of confusion or doubt there, nor anger or pretense.

“If the Black Silver Coin targeted them, Kalifa would have no choice but to flee with her daughter in tow. And you’re the only one who knows that they are my weakness. Do you have anything to say about that?”

It was not an invitation to plead his case, but rather an offer of mercy to leave a last will and testament. Doltero’s heart must have been churning with emotion after the betrayal by his most trusted confidant. Felt watched with bated breath to see how it would all unfold.

Then, in response to the Pig King’s question, Safis ran his hand through his dark green hair and replied, “Everything is true. There is nothing to correct, sir.”

“I’ve had my eye on you,” Doltero said with deep anguish to Safis, who plotted this opposition against him. “You were the man who was most loyal to the organization. That is still true.”

Upon hearing these words, Safis let out a bitter laugh, catching everyone in the room off guard.

“What’s so funny?” Doltero asked.

“Your eyes are not clouded, sir,” he responded. “I am still loyal to the organization…or rather, to you. I have pledged my life to the organization and its head, and I will not lie about my allegiance.”

“Huh? What the hell are you talking about?” Felt was taken aback by Safis’s peculiar response after confessing his betrayal. If he’s tryin’ to reconcile the situation, he’s missing the mark. Confessing his betrayal and then emphasizing his loyalty? He’s just makin’ excuses! “You took advantage of your boss’s weakness and attempted to overthrow the organization by usin’ his daughter and mistress, didn’t ya? And you’re saying this now? Do you really think you can get away with such excuses?”

“Correction. The words you just spoke are only partially accurate. That mother and daughter are a thorn in the Boss’s side. They posed a threat to the security of the organization and the head of the company. That is the truth.”

Felt frowned deeply, trying to process what he had just said. Her head was occupied with question marks, and Old Man Rom nodded on her behalf. “I see. The man I knew was never one who would attempt a rebellion. I wondered how you could have gone to such great lengths, but your loyalty has gone too far, Safis.”

“I was indebted to you and swore allegiance to the organization,” Safis replied, straightening his posture. “I owe my life and pride to this place, and I have nothing else left to call my own. It is my duty to eliminate liabilities for the sake of the peace of the Black Silver Coin.”

Then, Safis took a knee on the spot and with a single wave of his arm, a dagger appeared in his hand as if by magic. For a moment, the air crackled with tension. In its midst, he placed the dagger against his own neck. “Sir! I am prepared to pay for this disloyalty with my life. But once again, I urge you to consider this as you stand over my corpse. What is the meaning of keeping Miss Ilya by your side?!”

“Damn it! Reinha—” Felt cried out for Reinhard to stop Safis in his haste, but before she could, the sharp blade tore through the skin of his slender neck. Immediately after, a gust of wind swept through the room.

A shockwave blasted through the air, followed by the delayed roar of a sharp impact piercing through flesh. When she turned to see what had happened, it was not the lifeless body of Safis in a puddle of blood that she saw. Safis had been struck in the face by a fist and was sprawled against the wall with his eyes rolled back. The one who delivered the fatal blow was none other than…

“The name ‘Pig King’ is very much alive and well, huh?” Old Man Rom remarked.

“If that were the case, he would have never allowed Safis to do anything so stupid,” Doltero responded.

Doltero, with a gigantic frame comparable to that of Old Man Rom from the giant tribe, moved faster than the wind. Casting his eyes down, the Pig King withdrew the fist that had struck his subordinate and slowly turned around to face them. His calm blue eyes fixed on Kalifa and Ilya. The sound of the blow brought a frown to the sleeping Ilya’s face, but she soon returned to peace.

“Nothing fazes her, huh?” Felt commented.

“She’s a heavy sleeper,” Doltero said. “Must take after her father in that sense.”

Doltero’s face relaxed as he lightly mocked himself for his subordinate’s lack of control, but only for a moment.

“Boss! What’s all the commotion?” As the grand doors swung open, the members of the Black Silver Coin who had been waiting outside appeared. They looked around the room, their eyes falling on the unconscious Safis and Doltero withdrawing his fist. They were unable to conceal their shock.

“This is… Boss, what happened… Mr. Safis?”

“Don’t get worked up. You’re before guests. Take Safis with you. I still need to speak with him. Ensure he receives treatment and doesn’t die,” Doltero ordered his perturbed subordinates with no further explanation. Neither did they ask for elaboration, and they quickly left the room carrying the fallen Safis.

After witnessing this, Doltero sat down again in his chair with a heavy thump of his feet. The eyes of Doltero—or rather, those of the Pig King—turned to Felt as he pressed his thick arm into the armrest, hand on cheek. Seeing the color in his eyes, she sensed an unpleasant discomfort, as if someone had rubbed their fingers over her internal organs. The cause of this discomfort was apparent.

“Thank you for coming all the way out here, Royal Selection Candidate. But you’ve wasted your time.”

“What?”

“I have no daughter. Therefore, consider it a wasted trip.”

For a moment, Felt’s mind went blank, trying to comprehend what had just been said.

Seeing the change in Felt’s expression, Doltero asked, “Don’t you get it?”

He continued, “Get the woman and child out of here at once. They are an eyesore.”

The moment she grasped Doltero’s true intentions, Felt bared her fang in anger and shouted, “You’re an eyesore! You’re a pain in the ass!”

Doltero had taken Safis’s advice to heart. He acknowledged that the very existence of Kalifa and Ilya, the mother and daughter, was a thorn in his side. And he sought to cut them out of his life in order to prevent those around him from realizing this weakness.

This man, his mistress, and his daughter—he was a parent on the verge of abandoning his own child.

“I didn’t come here to have you abandon Ilya!” We came to make you pay for what you’ve done! So why’d it have to come to this? “You have a home, you have money, you have power! If you’re a parent, you should at least take care of your kid! You toss ‘em aside so easily once the going gets tough! If that’s the case, then why did you even bother to…?”

“Felt.” Old Man Rom’s large hand gripped Felt’s shoulder from behind as she erupted into a furious rage. He shook his head with a somber expression as her crimson eyes flashed with anger.

The wise old man silently urged Felt, not to give up, but to step back.

Felt’s heart was filled with indignation at this attitude. “…Yeah, you’re right,” she said. “All right, all right!” Her anger quickly subsided, and she stopped fighting back, clicking her tongue in frustration. Once again, there was no anger in her eyes as she glared at Doltero. Only disappointment and contempt. “She’d be better off without a shitty father like you anyway. I’m the same way.”

Kids are better off apart from parents who can’t even be bothered to protect them. As someone who grew up without knowing her parents, Felt sympathized with Ilya who was about to be on the same boat as her. She wanted to get Ilya out of this place as soon as possible. Ilya can’t find happiness in a place like this. She shouldn’t have anything to do with it.

“Lady Felt.”

Felt, who was about to pull back Kalifa’s arm with a snide remark and a snarl, was accosted by Reinhard. Looking up at him in annoyance, her gaze met his clear blue eyes. She waited for his next word, curious about what he wanted to say, but his lips quivered. Nothing could be said. Even the knight among knights, the Sword

Saint, could not speak.

“Let’s go…” Felt said to the silent Reinhard, tilting her chin up. Reinhard lowered his eyebrows at her words and silently stepped forward to follow her.

“I’m very grateful for your help, Royal Selection Candidate.”

“I’m not sure if you’re being sarcastic or not. What do you care, you pig-nosed bastard? I don’t want to see your face again, and I certainly don’t want anything to do with you ever again,” Felt spat at Doltero, who’d left her with that parting remark, without turning around. With a tug on her arm, she turned to escort Kalifa and Ilya out of the room.

Just before leaving the room, Kalifa stopped in her tracks, turned to Doltero, and bowed her head. As if to show him the sleeping face of the baby in her arms, for the very last time.

“…You, too, will regret it someday,” Old Man Rom said to Doltero as they left.

“No, I won’t.” Doltero’s response was firm and demanded nothing more.

With a sigh, Old Man Rom departed the room.

In the empty chamber, after all the guests had taken their leave, Doltero brought his hand to his face. He looked at his wrinkled palms and closed his eyes. “Ilya,” he whispered, in a voice only audible to himself.

11

“In the end, we didn’t get anything for it, did we…?”

After the whole thing was over and they had returned from Flanders to Astrea Manor, Felt scratched her head in the dilapidated garden of the mansion and let out a sigh. As for the mother and child, what transpired at the headquarters of Black Silver Coin became the truth. Doltero and Ilya were not related.

They were complete strangers. Ilya had become a baby without a father.

Thanks to this, both mother and daughter no longer had to fear for their lives, so it was all the better for them. It was safe to say that nothing bad had happened to them, but rather that some connections had simply gone missing from their lives.

“Still, it’s a feeling that I can’t shake.”

Felt was lost in thought, and beside her, Reinhard was equally pensive. They were the only two people in the garden of the mansion at the moment. Normally, Felt disliked having him tag along, but this time, she turned a blind eye to the fact.

Right now, Felt simply wanted someone to talk to, even if it had to be Reinhard.

“It beats talking to a wall,” she huffed.

“I am honored. It is a privilege to have Your Ladyship confide in me.”

“Quit saying such annoying things…! By the way, Reinhard.” Felt frowned and looked up at him. She recalled the last time she had been stopped by him, just before she ended her conversation with Doltero. He couldn’t say anything. And I couldn’t say anything to him, either.

She was unsure whether they couldn’t say anything because there were no right words at that moment, or they simply were unable to find it. Either way, she remembered that there had been nothing she could say to him.

“Well, I don’t have parents, and you have a messy family situation. We just ain’t the family type, so I guess it was too much for us.”

“I don’t know how to respond when you put it so bluntly.” Reinhard laughed at Felt’s comment, revealing that she hit a sore spot.

Felt knew only a little about his complicated relationship with his parents. She knew his mother had an inexplicable illness and had remained in a state of sleep ever since he was a child. As for his father, she regarded him as the worst kind of human being, to put it mildly. In her actual words, he was a scumbag.

Reinhard had grown up in such a family environment, and the orphaned Felt had been brought up by Old Man Rom. As a result, neither of them was very good with this family stuff.

“But despite being a Sword Saint with no formidable enemies, if you find yourself in a situation that can’t be solved by just beatin’ up your opponent, it’d be a stalemate. Shall we reconsider your title as the ‘best knight’?”

“I admit, the results this time were rather disappointing. I could not be of any help to you, and made you feel I was unworthy of the title of ‘best knight’.”

“Don’t take me seriously, moron. It’s a joke, a joke. I’m not saying I’m happy to be with you. It’s not about that. But as far as being a knight goes, I guess you’ll do for now.”

After chewing out Reinhard for not getting the joke, Felt plopped down on the unkempt lawn and crossed her legs. Reinhard, usually quick to nitpick about soiling her clothing, offered no comment. The two of them simply spent their time together in silence, bathed in the grassy breeze, gazing up at the same sky.

“Just as we were thinking about makin’ a move, feels like we were the ones hit with a blow, don’t ya think?”

“What? I, uh… no, Lady Felt, you see…”

“So, it won’t go like this next time,” Felt said emphatically, fists clenched.

“What?” Reinhard asked, taken aback.

Hearing his stunned reaction, Felt arched her neck back, viewing his face upside down. “You just made a stupid noise; did I say something strange?”

“I didn’t say that. I was just thinking that you might be depressed, my lady."

"Me, depressed? Hey, hey, what the…"

Felt's head snapped back up and she turned her hips around to face him directly. Still on her haunches, she looked up at Reinhard's tall figure and stared into his sunlit countenance.

Felt recognized the shadowy look on the knight's face. "You're the one who's depressed, Reinhard, not me."

"Me?"

"The fact that you are unaware of it is a serious matter. Well, you don't have any experience with losing, do you?" Shaking her head in dismay, Felt stood up and dusted off her bottom. Then she directed her fist at Reinhard's chest, wearing a troubled expression, and gave him a light prod. "Oh, I hit you."

"I didn't feel the need to avoid it. Besides, it's your hand."

"Now, was that part really necessary? And remember this. If you're gonna keep following me from here on out, you're going to have to deal with this kind of defeat more than once."

"…"

"What the hell, man? You didn't really expect me to win all the battles and rise to the throne so easily, did you?"

Reinhard was blindsided by Felt's declaration that he could possibly lose.

Even though she framed her question in a sarcastic tone, Felt was only partially convinced. Reinhard had never considered the possibility of losing. It was not so much his trust in her, but rather his immense confidence in the path he himself tread.

He must have carried a sense of omnipotence where he believed we couldn't possibly lose as long as I was with him. However, even with Reinhard's presence, situations could still arise that were beyond his control. In fact, they were hit with such a situation right after the royal selection had just begun. He was forced to face the disparity between his perceived ideals and the reality before him and was subconsciously experiencing a dissonance between these contradicting worldviews.

“You really are like a little kid sometimes, aren’t you? You’re no different from Ilya.”

“That’s…a bit much, isn’t it?”

“No, it’s not too much or too little. I’m sure there’s a lot you don’t realize. Let’s get you into diapers, Reinhard.”

“My lady!” Reinhard got slightly emotional and Felt snorted at his reaction.

She wasn’t necessarily trying to pick a fight; she simply wanted him to be prepared. “Reinhard, what did you want to happen with Ilya?” she asked.

“I…wanted Ilya to be safely reunited with her parents. We believed she had been abandoned by them, but our assumption turned out to be wrong. When it comes to Ilya, both Kalifa…and even Mr. Doltero…”

“Well, Kalifa, sure. But Doltero abandoned Ilya. He tossed her to the side like trash.”

Deep down, Felt herself couldn’t not understand Doltero’s reasoning. His decision to keep the mother and daughter away wasn’t motivated by a desire to protect the Black Silver Coin or his own position.

“But it doesn’t matter to the one who was thrown away whether the reason was protection or abandonment.”

“…”

“He never even said he loved her. Absolutely inexcusable!”

Reinhard fell silent, struck by the anger in Felt’s voice. Despite his complicated family background, he had never experienced abandonment. He was not qualified to interject in the abandoned Felt's words of concern for the similarly abandoned Ilya.

"Ah, shit! This ain't what I wanted to talk about. I'm not saying that not having parents is an instant misfortune. I met Old Man Rom thanks to not having parents," Felt hastily clarified, sounding somewhat embarrassed.

Felt had never known the faces or names of her parents, nor did she particularly care about the reason they abandoned her. If it had been their abandonment that had led to her death, she may have harbored a grudge or two. But fortunately, it was the strongest man in the world who had taken her in.

"If blood is the sole factor that determines familial bonds, then I'd much rather have a family of my own choosing. Even Ilya, whose father is gone, can choose her own family."

If Reinhard's account held any truth, Felt's family may have been part of the royal lineage of the Kingdom of Lugunica. But all the royals were dead. The fact that she could no longer speak to them because of that was no reason for her to deny her blood ties. Even if they had still been alive, she doubted she would have wanted to meet them—not out of ill will, but for entirely positive reasons. She had chosen her family. She was content. There was no need to seek them out. That was all.

"I don't know what that bastard was thinking. Nor do I want Ilya to know."

"But what if Ilya wishes to meet her father someday?"

"Then that's her choice. If she grows up and gets annoyed by my fussing that she shouldn't meet him, then that's her choice too."

She had no intention of embellishing her words by claiming to be an outsider. How Ilya chose to live her life was solely up to Ilya. It was none of Felt's business what Doltero or Kalifa desired for their daughter. Nor was it her business how Ilya would choose to respond. Felt's only concern was ensuring that Ilya could live her life to the fullest from this point forward.

Upon hearing Felt's response, Reinhard once again found himself at a loss for words. Yet, this silence was not born out of surprise or confusion, but rather the result of another emotion. As evidence, he nodded several more times to himself. "Yes, yes," he said. "I am honored, Lady Felt."

"Huh? What? Don't just come outta nowhere with your weird ass comments."

"You just said that what you choose is important."

"Oh, oh, well, yeah. I guess so…"

There was no room for denial. As Felt nodded, Reinhard offered a thin smile and placed his hand over his heart. "It was Your Ladyship who chose me as her knight. I was reflecting on that fact…"

"Eh? Stop making everything about yourself! When the hell did I choose you? You practically forced me into it!"

"I left the decision to you. I am proud to say that, even if it wasn't your true desire at first, it was you, my lady, who chose me."

"Guh, guh, guh…!" Felt grunted, face flushed, at the loquacious knight who responded with such words.

However, Reinhard, haranguing Felt in such a manner, seemed to have returned to his usual demeanor. It appeared he had recovered a bit from his previously despondent state.

"…Hmph. I'm the mistress who declared that you're gonna experience countless defeats from now on. You'll regret becoming my knight soon enough, won't you?"

"I'm confident that will not happen. Based on what occurred with Ilya and Kalifa, I am convinced of that."

Ilya and Kalifa severed ties with Doltero and returned to the mansion with them. Though they were no longer in danger, the life of a single mother with a baby was nonetheless a challenging one. Although it only lasted for a few days, Felt couldn't help but watch their departure down the road, this mother and her baby whom she had reluctantly cared for, as a melancholic dream.

“So,” Reinhard began, “you helped her secure a live-in job at a ranch in Hakuchuri.”

“You’re the one who talked to the ranch,” Felt retorted. “I had no part in it.”

“Then what about the money you gave them?” Reinhard, blocking her escape route with amusement, made Felt give him a genuinely disapproving glance.

It was true that Felt had given Kalifa a sum of money to prepare for her newfound life, as she needed some support to get back on her feet. It just so happened that she possessed a considerable amount of unspent cash on hand, remnants of her plan to climb up the social hierarchy, which terminated upon her unforeseen departure from the slums.

“I hope Ilya finds happiness,” Reinhard expressed to Felt, who turned her face away from him with a pout.

For some reason, it sounded like a fragile hope, and it drove her crazy. “We’re close enough to see them again if we wanted to, jackass,” she huffed.

“Yes, indeed,” Reinhard said, responding to Felt’s profanity with a smile.

After all, this banter was typical of their relationship. Felt, though oblivious to her own feelings, had grown to find comfort in such a relationship. Growing irritated by the silence, she turned her attention to the desolate garden that lay before them. “Not that I care, but look at this garden! Doesn’t it look like crap in such disrepair?”

“Originally, there was a big flower bed here,” Reinhard explained. “My grandmother adored it. However, after the family stopped tending to it, it deteriorated and ended up like this.” Bending down, he parted the patchy grass and revealed the remnants of a brick circle there. It was evident that this space had indeed once been home to a flourishing flower bed, although no trace of its former glory remained.

“Why do flowers die? Why don’t they keep on blooming?” Reinhard mused in a melancholic tone while gazing at the former site of the flower bed.

Felt tilted her head and pondered this, but she quickly recomposed herself. “I don’t know. Isn’t it because they want attention? If they are always blooming beautifully, they will be neglected, right? That’s why they’re always busy blooming and withering. Just like Ilya.”

Reinhard fell silent at Felt’s response.

Felt scratched her cheek absentmindedly, sensing that her words might have unintentionally struck a chord with Reinhard.

“Lady Felt. Do you like flowers?” he asked.

The sudden question caught her off guard. Felt contemplated Reinhard’s question, tracing one of the bricks buried in the ground with her finger. “No, I don’t like them…”

“…”

“Or so I thought, but I never really spent enough time looking at them to say I like or dislike them. So I neither love nor hate them.”

Her response carried an ambivalent tone, in which at that moment, a sudden realization dawned upon her. Before her eyes was a desolate flower bed, devoid of anything save for recollections of the past. So Felt suggested:

“You should make a flower bed here. Then I can decide whether I like flowers or not.”

“Me, flowers?”

“If you want me to like flowers, then grow some beautiful flowers,” Felt selfishly demanded, her posture slightly straight. “Until then, I'm not gonna give you an answer."

It was amusing to picture Reinhard, the gallant knight, tinkering in the dirt at Felt's behest. Such a sight would undoubtedly enhance the landscape of the mansion.

Reinhard was taken aback by the unexpected request.

"What the…? Why do you look so happy?"

"Oh, well… This will be my first attempt at tending a garden, too," Reinhard explained, his restless demeanor indicating newfound possibilities.

Felt widened her eyes at his reaction, followed by a laugh that exposed her fang. "Yeah. Remember to keep that attitude for our next loss," she quipped in response to Reinhard's smiling face, prodding him in the chest. He didn't dodge her fist. "Oh, but I won't give up on winning in the end. Don't make the mistake of thinking that."

"Understood, my lady," he responded. Felt rose from where she sat, noticing Kalifa leaving the mansion. Trailing behind her were the three idiots, carrying large bags and staring adoringly at the nervous Kalifa.

The trio had been assigned to transport the myriads of household goods they had prepared over the past few days for Ilya and Kalifa's new life at the ranch, and they certainly did not seem dissatisfied with their orders.

Flam and Grassis, who had toiled to prepare these goods, cast disheartened glances at the three idiots, while Old Man Rom gently patted the two on the head.

Felt was a little miffed at this sight but quickly set aside her frustration when her eyes met Ilya's, carried on Kalifa's back. Nestled against her mother, Ilya watched Felt and Reinhard standing in the garden with her blue eyes, then broke into a joyous smile as she waved her tiny hand.

Reinhard's words echoed in Felt's mind. "I hope Ilya finds happiness," he'd said. She shared the sentiment and knew precisely how to make that happen. And so, resolving to articulate her thoughts to the baby, this child that she found so similar to herself, she opened her mouth wide, and bellowed with all her might:

"Ilya! Live strong!"

END

Pride and Prejudice and Zombies

1

—A young man raced across the hill with desperation.

Out of breath and his body drenched in sweat, the young man continued to run on the dark path without any regard to his appearance. Even with the branches grazing against his cheek and neck, leaving stinging red scratches, he wasn't bothered by it.

At the moment, he was desperate. He was running faster than he had ever ran in his whole life.

If he didn't, he would be caught. He would be caught. Caught by the things that he saw, caught by what caused him to abandon everything in order to escape. —Caught by the faces he knew, but the things he didn't know.

"Damn it, damn it…!"

Frustration and misery spilled from his lips, and bitter tears surfaced on the corners of his eyes. What crossed through his mind is the scenery of his dear old hometown—memories of the place he had just left behind.

It was a rural area with nothing. He didn't like it. That's why he had left the moment he turned fifteen.

Afterwards, he had wandered around from place to place, gaining experience from persevering in the face of adversity, and eventually became an adult. When he finally obtained a place where he could settle down, the thought of his hometown had suddenly occurred to him.

—His parents, who had been against him leaving his hometown until the end. His sibling, who had secretly given him his help during his escape from home. The girl who was his childhood friend, who had expressed regret when he bade her farewell.

How could I have the nerve to think of that after such a long time, he had thought to himself, but his work was going smoothly. He could assume a defiant attitude and return in a triumphant mood. So, for the first time in years, the young man had set out for his hometown.

—And now, he was running in the mountains in midst of the darkness, whilst tasting blood in the back of his throat.

Why did it turn out like this? What in the world could he do about it?

What he only knew, was that he could not leave that place, that area, that hometown all alone.

He could not leave his family, his sibling, and his childhood friend, in such a sickening state—

“Someone, someone has to…!”

Do something. —Keeping that thought in his heart, he continued to run.

In the direction where the sun peeked in from between the mountains, he continued to run.

As if in pursuit of the sun, he continued to run.

2

—The “Sun Princess” of the Barielle domain.

The reason why Priscilla Barielle was admired by her people as such, was because of her nature and ability, as well as her shining beauty without any exaggeration.

Formerly, the governing of the Barielle domain was one that was oppressive towards its people.

Leip Barielle, Priscilla’s husband and the man who died before the days of the Royal Selection, was not exactly incompetent, but he was a coldhearted elderly man who seemed like he had an utter lack of compassion.

Therefore after his death, Priscilla, having taken over his duty of governing the territory, appeared as a savior to the people who were living in hardship. She was the sun itself, lighting up the darkness that they were shrouded in.

That's why, as an indication of reverence, the people admired Priscilla as the Sun Princess.

"—Personally, in the meaning of lacking compassion, it feels like Princess and Leip jii-sama are about the same."

Leaning against the handrail in the corridor that connected two buildings, the man who gazed down at the mansion's entrance hall muttered to himself.

He was someone who had a very eccentric, distinctive appearance.

Lightly dressed in coarse clothes over his reasonably trained body, wearing a type of unusual footwear known as zori, and missing his left arm from below his shoulder. He was what was called a one-armed man. However, what made him stand out even more than the fact that he was one-armed, would be the jet black steel helmet that covered his entire head.

An eccentric outfit, a missing arm, and a helmet that hid his face—it was the person who Priscilla Barielle kept at her side and appointed as the role of a jester, Al.

It sounded like an insult at one glance, but Al himself was pleased with being given the title of a "jester". He preferred it over the position of being Priscilla's first and foremost knight, a position that would surely be the target of gossiping.

It's not that he doesn't like Priscilla. He simply disliked the title of a knight. Knights were good-for-nothings, after all.

Al: "If anything, Princess is always welcome. She doesn't get angry when I stare at her cleavage, and also forgives me for it."

"—Saying those kinds of things again, are you. I can just tell on Mistress~?"

Al: "Whoops."

Al, having been talking to himself, turned around as he heard a teasing voice. Standing behind him was a girl, dressed in the red and white-themed clothes of a servant—

Al: "Oh, it's just you, Yae. You have bad taste, eavesdropping like that on someone who's talking to himself."

Yae: "Though, I regret listening in because it was vulgar."

Al: "What I'm talking about right now is the problem with the eavesdropper's integrity. The topic of my integrity is for another time."

Yae: "Eeh~? You're being unfair~."

Saying that, the girl that reluctantly twisted about was Yae Tenzen —one of the maids that served Priscilla in the Barielle Mansion, and also someone who would be a colleague to Al.

With fair skin, slender limbs, and long red hair that was tied back, she was a beautiful girl, around twenty years old. Also being mischievous, she had eyes that gave the impression of a cat.

As someone that was designated as the Grand Chamberlain by Priscilla, who took a liking to unusual things, she was one of the odd people. A glimpse of her oddness could be seen from how she quickly was able to accept Al's bizarre appearance, and how she could interact with him in a straightforward manner.

Anyway—

Al: "The fellows down there all came here for Princess, right? They never quit, do they?"

While saying that, Al jerked his chin towards the entrance hall downstairs.

There was the sight that Al had been previously gazing down at, which consisted of the people of the domain crowding around the mansion, with the servants having their hands full as they tried to handle the situation.

Thinking normally, swarming around the the mansion of the domain's lord in such large numbers could be considered as an act of an armed uprising, but,

Yae: "The feelings of the people who bring gifts, and the feelings of the people who ask to see her just so that they could greet her… Because Mistress isn't the type of person to disregard these things, I also admire her as well, you see."

Standing next to Al, Yae bragged as she watched what went on downstairs.

Just as she had said, the people who were gathered at the entrance hall were not there out of ill will, but out of respect for Priscilla. As a matter of fact, the entrance of the mansion was lined with gifts that were delivered from all over the domain, and requests for an audience with Priscilla were flowing in endlessly.

If the mansion of a person in power was accessible to the masses like that, it would inevitably sow the seeds of trouble. That was why the response towards the people who enter the mansion needed to be handled carefully—

Al: "Despite all that, what's you, the Grand Chamberlain's intention of not handling the situation? In the name and for the safety of Princess, who you admire so much, isn't this the part where you should be working your butt off?"

Yae: "But they keep coming one after another, and it doesn't look like there's an end to it. Also, Yae-chan only wants to work for the amount that she gets paid for. Also, it could be a good opportunity for the other maids to grow more professional?"

Al: "Which one's the truth, really? What a cunning maid…"

This was exactly what would be things said in the same breath.

Seeing Yae's unabashed attitude on display as she stuck her tongue out, Al placed his finger on the welded part of his helmet, fiddling with the metal fittings and causing it to clang.

It was a habit of his when he was thinking about something, but he found that he had been touching his helmet more often than he usually did. Al was aware that he was being nervous, as the Royal Selection had officially begun.

Al: "Putting someone off their stride and playing with them is my specialty, but these days it's me who's being put off his stride, and it doesn't feel good."

Yae: "Right, you're quite an honest person aside from his appearance. It's helpful because you're easy to interact with."

Al: "By that, you mean I'm easy to tease, right?"

Yae: "—? Is there a difference between the two?"

Al: "It's scary that you think there's no difference."

As Yae tilted her head to the side to indicate her curiosity, Al shrugged his shoulders with a shake of his head.

However, it was somewhat of a surprise that he had been evaluated as an honest person, aside from his appearance. Keeping the fact that he was serving Priscilla in mind, it was difficult to accept it as a compliment. The parts of a human that the crimson girl saw value in were all ephemeral and ambiguous to the extreme.

She wouldn't necessarily not cut his head off the moment she deemed Al as boring.

Yae: "Even so, I think you're making light of Mistress a little too much."

Al: "For Princess, being scared of her is just about right. —Hm?"

It was right after Yae saw through his inner thoughts despite being unable to see his facial expression, and his response to what she said about it. The area downstairs became abruptly loud, and Al's attention became focused on the entrance hall once again.

As he wondered what the matter was about, the sight of a young man pushing his way through the line of the people caught his eye. Covered in sweat and coated in mud, he could tell that the young man was unclean at a glance.

Since this was the mansion of the lord of the domain, the people were all dressed appropriately. That is the bare minimum of consideration that they are able to show, and the young man doesn't have it. Namely—

Al: "Unless he's a huge idiot or lacks common sense…"

Yae: "It's probably about something urgent that he needs to talk about, if he's in such a hurry~."

Replying in an easygoing manner, Yae stroked her own hair whilst narrowing her coal black eyes. In that moment, seeing that the air of nonchalance around her had vanished, Al unconsciously touched the metal fittings of his helmet.

Then, the ragged-looking young man arrived in front of a maid, and cried out,

Young man: "Please, let me meet the lord of the mansion… My home, my hometown is being swarmed by living corpses!!"

The young man's shout rang across the entire area, and silence instantaneously reigned over the bustling entrance hall. In the midst of it, the young man dropped to his knees, gasping for breath, and the tears that he could not hold back any further started falling onto the floor.

Seeing the young man collapsed on the ground, as well as the droplets that rolled down his cheeks,

Yae: "—It seems like this is the type of request that Mistress is fond of."

Al: "…I'll call Princess over."

Like that, against Yae who had an unreadable smile on her face, Al let the clasp of his helmet make a metallic clang.

3

“It… it was four days ago when I returned to my hometown. At first, because it had been a few years since I’ve returned home, I thought that was why my family was being distant towards me.”

Little by little, the young man, kneeling on the ground, started talking about what had happened to himself.

The place he was currently at was not the entrance hall, but the large hall that was recently being increasingly used for audiences with the people of the domain. Inside the room in which the floor was completely covered by a scarlet carpet, were the members of the Barielle domain’s private army, the Crimson Battlefront. Each of them sported radiantly red equipment, and were lined up by the left and right walls of the room.

“…”

In the hall that was dominated by the color of red, a girl, wearing a blazing red dress, was seated on top of a luxurious chair. It was the person that the color red suited the most in this mansion, Priscilla Barielle herself.

While being exposed to Priscilla’s blood red gaze, the young man who came over to make a request was trying his best to explain the situation, continuing to speak falteringly.

Young man: “What I thought as strange, was the unnaturalness of the responses I got from them. Our conversations were inconsistent, and they were speaking about things that didn’t match up with my memories.”

Al: “So you’re saying that it can’t be dismissed as forgetfulness. But, calling them living corpses because of that seems kinda wild.”

Like that, the one who poked at the young man’s explanation, was the only person concerned with the mansion who wasn’t wearing the color red, Al.

Including the Crimson Battlefront that was standing at attention, the Grand Chamberlain Yae who stood behind Priscilla, and the young attendant who stood next to Priscilla, Schult—whose crimson eyes had gained her favor, every person concerned with the large hall were donning "red" in a characteristic manner.

Among them, Al's existence was an anomaly, having the appearance of a person who didn't belong there. Apparently, the young man had gotten the impression of that from Al, as he directed a questioning look towards him.

Young man: "O-Of course, that isn't just the cause of it. I saw a… crucial moment…"

Al: "Right, a crucial moment. What did you see?"

Young man: "That, is…"

The color draining from his face, the young man's gaze wandered around the hall upon being asked to elaborate. That was the expression of someone who was frightened by the memories in his own head, his body seized up with fear. Gasping out wordless breaths through his dried lips, the young man was unable to deliver his next words.

Or, it was a reaction that was capable of withering his love for his hometown, along with his words.

However—

Priscilla: "—Do not fall silent there, commoner."

Said Priscilla with a glare towards the petrified young man, who came close to stopping himself from speaking. His shoulders were trembling from the callous tone of her voice.

Priscilla: "Shall you lose to your cowardice, your lips shall never move again. Enough of your conceitedness, seeking to depend on my mercy like that is utterly preposterous."

Young man: "Ah…"

Fierce words that were without a speck of kindness burnt the young man's cowering heart with its scorching heat. The next moment, seeing the gale that raged through his heart and the pitiful manifestation of his disappointment, Al harbored a sense of sympathy for the young man.

So, Al shrugged his shoulders towards Priscilla, and called over to her with "Princess,"

Al: "Don't add insult to injury when he's this weakened. You can always put it another way, you know?"

Priscilla: "There is no 'another way' to put it. There is only the truth. —Listen, commoner."

Sniffing disdainfully at Al who tried to advise her on the matter, Priscilla crossed her arms in a way that put emphasis on her bountiful chest. Just like that, as she pierced through the rigid young man with her gaze,

Priscilla: "If you shall keep your silence, the risk you took whilst you ran day and night, and the regret you hold for your hometown that drove you to the point of doing so, shall all come to naught. Ask your heart if that is acceptable."

Young man: "…"

Priscilla: "What, it is the hometown that you had abandoned once. Thinking no more of it for once and for all, and continuing to live your life could be considered as one decision. Whether that is to be referred to as wise, or referred to as cowardly is not my problem."

Keeping the fierceness of her words, Priscilla unhesitatingly scorched the young man's heart into a burnt field. She didn't mind, even if it only left behind a pile of ash as a result.

However, having received her smoldering words, the young man pushed open his eyes.

Priscilla: "—So, what will you do? Are you a coward?"

Young man: "…A coward, I am. I'm not wise, either. But, I won't be a dastard.”

Against the question that was asked, the young man answered as he raised his head. As if she knew the answer from the very beginning, Priscilla showed her acceptance of it with a generous nod.

As a result, Al’s words were used as a stepping stone, and it made him feel like there was an itch in his stomach.

That was why the impish grin that Yae was giving him provoked his annoyance. In comparison, Schult, who stood by Priscilla with a nervous look on his face, appeared more charming than that.

Young man: “During the night on the day I returned home, I couldn’t sleep because the feeling that something was wrong was acting like a sore. Without even having a meal together with my family, I was laying down in my room…then, I noticed someone leaving the house. It was as if they didn’t want to be seen, so I became curious and chased after them, and…”

With an expression that projected his resolve, the young man resumed his explanation. Then, after a brief moment of hesitation, he let out the decisive words that cemented the issue in place.

Young man: “—I saw villagers, with limbs that were falling apart, sewing them back together.”

“…”

Young man: “At first, I thought I had mistaken it for something else, but that wasn’t it. They were trying to stick their rotting arms and feet back on to their bodies, trying to restore it to the way it was before. I… saw it going on.”

Seeing something that shouldn’t have been seen. In a story, there was only one path towards the end that was waiting for a witness like that. However, the young man had gone against the laws of storytelling, and was somehow able to escape from where it had all occurred.

Young man: “I stepped on a twig, and they found me. But, I ran for my life and managed to get away, using the passage that led towards the mountains from the back of my house. Then, I kept running and running…”

And just like that, he had come to ask for Priscilla, the lord of the domain’s help while completely out of breath.

Yae: “Say, where did the topic of living corpses come from? Are you saying that they called themselves that?”

Young man: “…Long ago, there was the story of dead bodies moving around and attacking people near my hometown. Because of that, when parents would scold their children, they warned them that the living corpses were coming. That’s why,”

Yae: “—What you thought was a superstition actually showed up. You came to that conclusion, I see~.”

By calmly pointing out the steps that the young man’s conclusion skipped over, Yae added supplementary information to it. Once that was done, she casted a glance at Priscilla’s face from the side, before closing her mouth. Similarly, Al said nothing.

They understood that Priscilla must be the one to decide on what to do with the young man’s appeal.

Nonetheless, there was someone present in the room, someone that was unable to take on a rational point of view like them.

Schult: “Priscilla-sama…”

Calling for his master with a feeble voice, the one who focused his watering eyes on her was Schult. The young, kind-hearted boy was sympathizing with the words of the sorrowful young man, seeking mercy from Priscilla.

That was a request that could incur Priscilla’s displeasure, and bore the danger of receiving judgement for it.

However, when Priscilla looked at Schult, she slid her fingers in between the locks of his pink hair, caressing him. She caressed him, and said nothing. Just with that one action, a relieved expression appeared on Schult’s face.

Priscilla: "—And then, what do you desire from me? You have informed me that your hometown has been swarmed by living corpses, and have delivered the report of an ongoing crisis. What do you seek in return?"

Young man: "Please, take back my hometown…no,"

Biting his lip, the young man shook his head. He had attempted to seek hope in Priscilla's question, and realized of his own accord that it was a plea that lacked reality.

Priscilla wasn't the type of person who would try to grant a hopeless wish. At the moment, the answer that she was looking for wasn't an intangible pipe dream.

—What already happened can never be changed. No matter what or who, it was an act of pride that could never be forgiven.

So, the young man did not ask for her to save them.

Young man: "Please, destroy the living corpses. My hometown… my family, my sibling, my childhood friend… Please put them to rest. —I ask of you."

Lowering his head, the young man spoke of his wish, one that was sorrowful but required determination in order to be said.

"…"

Hearing it, what sort of answer will Priscilla return? Peeking at his master from the inside of his metal helmet, Al already knew with a single glance. Everyone inside the room who served her understood as well.

It was because Priscilla had sadistically loosened the corners of her red lips, putting on a smile of satisfaction.

4

The young man's hometown, Coffleton, was one of desolate villages that were located at the southernmost area of the Barielle domain.

True to the words of the young man, who had said that he became tired of how empty it was, the village had no distinctive features. The preconditions were also different from Ladrima, another village that Priscilla had visited in the past.

During that time, Priscilla had been after Ladrima's specialty, which were bright red flowers that were known as Kurenai. However, unlike Ladrima, Coffleton didn't have a single alluring aspect to it.

So, as one of the strange incidents that were commonplace within the domain, it could have been easily dealt with just by sending a part of the Crimson Battlefront, but—

Al: "I wonder why it turned into a visit from Princess herself, yet again."

Inside the dragon carriage that was being pulled by a scarlet Earth Dragon, Al grumbled as he looked up at the extravagant interior.

Under the effect of the "Divine Protection of Wind Evasion", the carriage was exceedingly cozy due to it neither feeling the wind, nor shaking from the speed it was running at. Provided that Al wasn't very enthusiastic about the trip, a road with no inconveniences was extremely inconvenient to him.

In front of Al, who had rather strong feelings towards the trip, Priscilla closed one of her eyes with a "What,"

Priscilla: "Are you dissatisfied with my decision? Quite a recklessly daring one you are, Al."

Al: "Why does one complaint make me be treated as a reckless person? Aren't I being treated harshly these days?"

Priscilla: "Fool. My view on everything is always just. If you feel that you are being treated as such, then that is because your services only amount to it. Shifting the blame on to me… Now, that is the height of idiocy."

Elegantly re-crossing her long legs, Priscilla covered her mouth with the fan that she pulled out from her cleavage. Waving his hand at the gesture with a “Sure, sure,”

Al: “Actually, doesn’t having the lord of the domain herself come over, without even bringing her private army seem like a bad move? Well, if we’re against ordinary villagers, then they might grovel in front of your authority. But, from what we’ve heard, we’re against zombies, right? I wonder if exercising power over those sponge-brained people will really work?”

Priscilla: “Once again, you have used words that I do not know of. What do you mean by ‘zombie’ and ‘sponge’?”

Al: “Ah, dead bodies that walk around are called zombies. A sponge is… how to put it, an item you use when washing the dishes. To put it simply, I meant that it’s all dry and crappy.”

Priscilla: “Huh. Setting aside ‘sponge’, I like the sound of ‘zombie’.”

Loosening the corners of her lips in a good mood, Priscilla narrowed her blood red eyes.

Priscilla: “So, you were saying why I opted to visit the place. Can you not imagine why?”

Al: “The only reason I can think of is because you found it interesting. Is there a different reason?”

Priscilla: “Perhaps. Indeed, the reason that comes first is because I found it interesting. —However, that is not the only reason. Until the issue is resolved, you shall gauge my intentions. If you are not able to obtain an answer before it is resolved, expect your treatment to become worse.”

Al: “What’s that, a quiz? If a penalty for it exists, then I would like it if there’s a reward as well.”

Priscilla: “How rapacious. Fine, then. When you have successfully ascertained my intentions, I shall let you lick my feet.”

Al: “Is that your latest trend or something, Princess? I’m starting to wonder if I should really lick your feet.”

Is that a reward or a penalty? It would be a reward for those with peculiar interests, but fundamentally, it would be a type of punishment. Though, if he thought of it as being able to be near Priscilla's feet, then Al could try his best to picture it as a reward.

"Er~, I apologize for having to interrupt the suggestive conversation between you both, but…"

Like that, there was the voice that hesitatingly wedged itself between the exchange between Al and Priscilla. The voice came from Yae, seated next to Priscilla inside of the carriage during the whole time.

Raising her hand slightly, she put on a flippant smile and tilted her head in a blandishing manner.

Yae: "Why have you taken me with you? Usually, you would have a flower on each arm with Schult-chan and Al-sama… One is a carnivorous plant, but it would be like that under normal circumstances."

Al: "A carnivorous plant… No, there's still the possibility that Schult-chan could be that one, although just barely…"

Yae: "Ah, of course you're the carnivorous plant. I gave you a gentle and lenient rating."

Al: "Right…"

While his shoulders were sagging from Yae's merciless evaluation of him, Al inwardly had the same doubts that she held.

This time, Priscilla did not bring Schult with her on the trip to Coffleton. It was a rare thing for her to do, as she usually had him follow her around wherever she went.

It was the first time that she brought Yae from the mansion instead of Schult.

Yae: "To begin with, I was only hired by Master… although he is now deceased, I was hired by him as a waiting maid of the mansion, in order to serve Mistress. My situation right now kind of feels like working outside of what I was contracted to do…?”

Priscilla: “In other words, what? Are you saying that you wish to resign, because you have received treatment that is unfitting of your terms of employment?”

Yae: “I never said that much~. It’s just that I prefer to not work outside of my hours and contract from my standpoint, so if that was to be imposed on me no matter what…”

Priscilla: “You would like to be granted a reward befitting that, yes? Do not be worried. I reward the efforts of the common people. After all, it was my decision to have you accompany me. —You think that I would deceive you?”

“…”

For a moment, the air inside the carriage smelled as if it was being burnt, and Al stiffened his body in response. Intimidated by Priscilla’s low voice, Yae’s cheeks hardened slightly as well.

However, Yae immediately returned to her usual self, placing both of her hands on her cheeks, and,

Yae: “Not at all! No way, no way! Surely not! How foolhardy it is to doubt you! All I did was state my position. If you say so, then there’s no problem. I am your faithful dog. I will gladly water your precious flowers, as well as your carnivorous plants~.”

Al: “Just saying, but if you don’t properly feed bugs to carnivorous plants, there’s research data stating that they’ll be evidently weaker than if you only gave them water…”

Priscilla: “Cease your interference, Al. There is no current need for your knowledge of carnivorous plants. Well then, Yae. If you had a change of heart, you shall show that with your actions. —As for Coffleton, what about it?”

Reproving the grumbling Al, Priscilla threw over a broad question towards Yae. Then, Yae grabbed a bundle of her red hair, and while tickling the ends of it against her lips, Yae: “Eh~, there isn’t information in particular that I can give you. Ah, the man who informed you about the living corpses is Array Denkuts. He’s the second son of Charon Denkuts and Monet Denkuts, and the eldest son is Riddle Denkuts… Hmm, maybe that’s all~. There isn’t anything remarkable about the village, so~?”

“I’m sorry that I could not be of any help to you,” she added as an apology, but what she said was worthy enough of astonishment. Of course, it wasn’t as if she made an arbitrary statement. It was all based on the truth.

In every town and village within the domain, surveys were held in order to grasp the number of residents, as well as their names. Naturally, those records would be delivered to the lord of the domain, Priscilla. However, Yae, the Grand Chamberlain, had readily breathed out the needed information as if she knew it all.

Those that are competent would be used accordingly. —She was a mysterious girl, but that was why Priscilla had given her a position that required responsibility.

Yae: “—Ah, it looks like we arrived~.”

Once the conversation came to an end, the dragon carriage gradually came to a stop. When the driver, who was holding the reins, opened the door of the carriage respectfully, a cool breeze greeted the three’s visitation.

Then, there was nothing else that was decent enough to be called a welcome.

Al: “…As far as I can see, there’s nothing but farms and fields.”

Yae: “Because it’s that kind of place. There’re only eighty-eight villagers, and it’s narrower than the mansion… more like narrower than the grounds of the mansion.”

Gazing down at the village from the top of a hill, Al and Yae exchanged their impressions of the scenery of the rural area.

It sounded nice if it was proclaimed as verdant and pastoral, but a single glance at it was enough for those looking at it to perceive it as a desolate village, a place that was too monotonous for the young people. It was understandable why the young man had abandoned his hometown.

Al: “There are so few houses, and they’re tiny and arranged close to each other. But…”

Pausing mid-sentence, Al observed the village from a distance. It was relatively far, but the village’s activities of daily life could still be seen from where he was. Smoke drifted into the air from where they were cooking their meals, and there were people who were walking around the village.

A rumor such as it being occupied by living corpses, seemed terribly contradictory to what it looked like.

Al: “Though, it looks like a normal village right now. The zombies that I imagine don’t seem like they would cook or do the laundry like that.”

Yae: “Forty years ago, the corpse soldiers that raged through the Kingdom of Lugunica were apparently not in a state where they could live an ordinary life. While their bodies continued to rot, the only thing they did was to keep attacking the living. But, corpse soldiers of strong people were said to have been strong as when they were alive.”

Receiving Al’s words, Yae replied with the knowledge that she had garnered from picking up bits and pieces of it. Either way, being bossed around even after death sounded like a horrifying thing to experience.

Al: “Well, it could be worse, because at least they get to die. If their mind stopped working, then they probably wouldn’t be aware of their misfortune, so.”

Yae: “That’s quite the funny assumption you have there~.”

As Al touched the metal fittings of his helmet while in deep thought, Yae directed a jeer at him. Without answering to it, in order to figure out what they were doing next, Al turned to Priscilla who stayed silent the entire time.

Al: “There’s the possibility that the young man who came to the mansion might’ve been out of his mind. Maybe we should’ve investigated him instead… Princess?”

Priscilla: “…”

There was no response to his call, and Priscilla remained silent as she stared at the desolate village below. However, what dwelled in those blood red eyes was intense loathing, and a rage that had developed into shimmering flames.

Her emotions had been lit ablaze by her convictions, something that was obviously different from what Al and Yae were feeling.

Priscilla: “I could care less about who they are or where they are from, but to induce disorder beneath me in this manner…”

Curling her lip, Priscilla left those words as she promptly started walking. Seeing her walk with an unwavering gait made Al and Yae take a moment to register it, before they hurried to catch up to her.

Al: “Hey, Princess! I understand that you’re flipping mad, but why so sudden?!”

Priscilla: “You shall understand if you look. You shall scent if you smell. If you strain your ears, you shall hear the degenerates that are manipulating their strings, playing with dolls. —All of that, shall I deem as an act of insolence against me.”

Al: “Everything doesn’t make any sense!”

Priscilla’s way of speaking was hard to understand, and it took time for Al to simplify her words inside of his head. And now, Priscilla was walking very quickly, so she wasn’t giving him enough time to do so.

Descending from the hill with a confident air, Priscilla entered Coffleton, the village in question without a single falter in her steps. Noticing Priscilla and her two companions, the man who stood at the entrance of the village raised his brows.

Man: “Oh, how rare it is to have visitors from the outside. With a dress like that, what did you come to the village for—”

Priscilla: “Silence.”

Raising his hand lightly, the man who had spoken to them in a friendly tone opened his eyes wide.

The next moment, with the crimson treasured sword that Priscilla drew out from empty space, the man was cut down diagonally from the shoulder.

Man: “—kh,”

A short cry escaped the man, and his body was enveloped in flames soon after.

—The Yang Sword that Priscilla possessed, was one enhanced sword that incinerated everything it slashed. Remaining alight, the flames of hell would ignite the very existence of those that it came into contact with, until nothing but ashes were left.

As if to prove that, the man’s body was transformed into cinders, and—

Al: “Whoa, whoa, whoa?! What the hell?! Burning the first villager to death?!”

Yae: “To be exact, I think he was slashed to death, but it seems like it doesn’t really matter no matter which one it is. Eeh~.”

Witnessing the act of violence that occurred right in front of them, even Al and Yae were unable to hide their bewilderment. However, without so much as a glance towards the bafflement of her companions, Priscilla sniffed disdainfully at the blackened corpse of the man.

Priscilla: “A ‘zombie’ shall not speak to me so unceremoniously. I grant my protection to the people, however, it is not as cheap for me to grant it to a counterfeit such as yourself. Know your place.”

Al: “But he was talking, and he also had a sociable smile! Is he really a zombie?!”

At the very least, Al viewed the man that was burnt to death as a human. To add to that, he had categorized the man as a friendly human, so it could only be described as a tragedy for him to be killed like that without question.

Yae: “I’m going to repeat that I think he was slashed to death… Ah, the other villagers…”

Next to Al who held his head in his hands, Yae’s cheeks twitched as she looked around. Surrounding the three were the villagers who were murmuring amongst themselves, having shown themselves after noticing the presence of the unfamiliar visitors.

Priscilla had made incredibly quick work of the man, so they hadn’t caught sight of the fate of the first villager. Though, there was a human-shaped chunk of ash lying around, so it was only a matter of time until they comprehended what had gone down.

Yae: “U~h, everyone, this is…”

In order to find a way to say something that would gloss over the situation, Yae racked her brains for an excuse. —However, Al had understood Priscilla more so than her, at least by a small margin of half a step.

Al: “Princ—”

Priscilla: “Hmph.”

Even with half a step, he was unable to come close to Priscilla, who was already far ahead of him.

“…”

The villagers had sealed their fate the moment they came by defenselessly. With a ruthless flash of Priscilla’s Yang Sword, the small elderly man that stood at the front was mowed down, bursting into a blazing fire soon after.

“Ah… AAAAAAAHHH—!!”

Beholding the abrupt display of murder just before their eyes, the villagers plunged into a state of panic. However, the scream immediately quieted down. The man who let it loose had been decapitated, his scream cut off.

Priscilla: “See, Al. The man had given an accurate report.”

Al: “What’s accurate?! Right now in progressive form, I can’t think of this as anything else other than a scene where the higher-up, who made a wrong decision, loses their mind and goes around shutting people up!”

Priscilla: “—For what reason, is there not a single woman nor child present at this place? Where is the reason for us to be encircled by nothing but well-built men?”

Twirling her crimson sword in her hand, Priscilla shoved the tip of the blade against the chest of the headless man. Naturally, with the impact of being pushed backwards focused on its upper area, the body—did not topple over.

The reason why there was no blood coming out of the surface of the severed neck, was because the Yang Sword had cauterized the wounds that it created, but that wasn't all there was to it. — Wriggling a part of itself, the headless body attempted to lay its hands on Priscilla.

Al: "—tch!"

Clicking his tongue, Al forcefully tackled the headless man. Without his head, the man was easily sent flying, but he repositioned himself by landing on the ground with his hands and feet.

Al: "Yuck."

Looking squarely at the surface of the severed neck, Al voiced his disgust at the nauseating sight.

Squirming around at the man's wound, were tentacles that resembled the countless roots of a plant. Like weeds that danced around underwater, the writhing appendages prevented Al from making a move, and lunged at him—not before combusting.

Priscilla: "Do not think that you will remain safe, when you have made physical contact with the edge of the Yang Sword. Burn to ashes, counterfeit."

In front of Priscilla who had spat those words at him, the man let out a muted cry of death as he disintegrated into a pile of cinders. In the meantime, the surrounding villagers did not run away, but were staring at the "foreign enemy" with eyes devoid of human emotion.

Registering that Priscilla's intuition was unquestionably correct, Al unsheathed his Blue Dragon Sword from the back of his waist.

Al: "Dammit, those really are zombies! Stay back, Princess!"

Priscilla: "Hm, I shall leave it to you. I have had enough of these begrimed filth entering my field of vision.”

Al: “Eh? Are you serious?”

While trying to look good, his expectations of Priscilla helping him to get rid of the zombies were tossed out of the window.

Once Priscilla actually put her sword away into the sky, she patted Al on the shoulder and stood behind his back. Like that, Al was dealing with more than thirty expressionless living corpses—.

Al: “I’m gonna die from this, aren’t I?”

Yae: “Hey! Al-sama is so cool! This is where you should show us your manliness! If you were to be extravagantly bitten to death, I’ll tell Schult-chan that you died nobly~!”

Al: “Stop messing around and help me!”

Yae: “Ehh?”

Assuming a stance with his Blue Dragon Sword, Al barked at the Grand Chamberlain that was cheering him on halfheartedly. As if on cue, the man at the front holding a farming tool took a swing at Al with it.

Then, a black blade penetrated straight through the man’s forehead.

“…”

The man halted his steps, his neck rearing backwards from the force. However, his head bounced back like a spring, and he resumed his action of trying to land a hit on Al with his farming tool.

Hacking off both of the man’s arms with the Blue Dragon Sword, Al immediately cleaved through his neck, torso, and knees with a returning strike.

Al: “Finally, one down… after doing this much!”

Yae: “Wah, I’m already feeling overwhelmed. Aren’t my skills too ineffective against these energetic people?”

After Al finally silenced one zombie whilst breathing heavily, Yae directed a pout towards him. A black knife—the same kunai that was sticking up in the man’s forehead, was held firmly in her hand.

Kunai were daggers that were unique to the west, and she had many more weapons that were hidden under her red maid uniform. Hence, her true worth as Priscilla’s maid was her ability to fight.

It couldn’t be helped that one would be complaining over the current circumstances. Yae’s style of fighting consisted of attacking vital spots after ambushing the opponent, which was completely ineffective against zombies, as neither their heads nor hearts served as proper weak points.

Al: “Princess! Hey, Princess!”

Priscilla: “Do not chatter as if you were a bird. You are degrading my preeminence. If you are my attendant, you shall remain dignified.”

Al: “Can’t you see for yourself with those pretty eyes? I’m gonna die from this, hey!”

While vocalizing his complaints, Al went on to cut down one, then two zombies, making his way through in the midst of the enemy whilst being prepared to die.

Trying to pass through the zombified villagers, who were attacking him all at once, felt like he was trying to search for a way out of a fatal situation. Even so, it was only a matter of time until he was overpowered by the difference in numbers.

And yet, Priscilla seemed to enjoy watching Al’s desperate struggle, and—

Yae: “Al-sama, do your be~st. The only thing I can also do is to cheer you on.”

Al: “Shut up!”

For some reason, Yae was throwing words of encouragement at him as if she had nothing to do with it, so Al yelled at her to cut it out.

With two people who weren't facing the situation properly behind his back, Al's unprecedented fierce battle went on.

It was after several tens of seconds that Priscilla drew out her Yang Sword once again, in order to save Al, who was actually about to die.

5

Al: "Still, to think that it was a zombie village for real…"

Muttering to himself, Al used his foot to turn over the corpse of the villager that he had cut down. The face the villager made was far from a peaceful one, but all he could do was pray for him.

Because, unlike regular bodies that fell victim to bladed weapons, the body that laid in front of him was in a gruesome condition, covered in deep gashes and having been hacked into pieces.

The damaging of a corpse to this extent, which one would suspect that a lunatic was responsible for, was definitely not a common sight. Without doubt, Al did not intend to chop the villager up, and he had the excuse that he did it out of necessity.

Al: "To begin with, there's ten times the amount of burnt bodies compared to bodies that were slashed apart, so I don't even need an excuse for that."

Al said, looking around at his surroundings to find that there were piles of burnt bodies all over the place.

While fighting back against the wave of villagers, the body count had eventually climbed up to fifty—but, ninety percent of it were burnt bodies, and the number of villagers that Al cut down ended up amounting to close to nothing. During the middle phase of the battle, Al was only able to cheer for Priscilla's crimson sword dance together with Yae.

That was the most optimal solution, as the villagers that were turned into living corpses had an abnormal amount of vitality, and they were moving around freely even after their weak points, such as their necks and hearts, were crushed. By chance, the zombies were defenseless against the flames of the Yang Sword, and killing them in any other way required the cruelty of chopping them up.

Their abnormal vitality, and how they looked like when they were burnt into a crisp. They were increasingly becoming similar to the zombies that Al knew of, even having similar characteristics. Furthermore, labeling them as parasites sounded like it would fit them more, rather than simply referring to them as zombies, but—

Al: “I’ll call them zombies so that it’s easier to understand… Anyway, true to Princess’s observation, there aren’t any zombies of women and children. Unless they’re secretly made into food inside the village…”

Yae: “Please stop thinking of scary things like that~. Believe it, I went looking for them properly.”

While Al was comparing the faces of the blackened corpses with what was inside of his memories, Yae, who left to check out the village by herself, came back after being done with it. She made a grimace at the words that Al muttered out, then gestured behind her back with a hand.

Standing there were the women and children, who were all likely to be residents of Coffleton.

Yae: “During the day, each one of them were apparently made to stay inside of the sheds and warehouses of their houses. According to them, monsters that looked exactly like their family were forcing them to keep living normally…”

Al: “That’s…”

To be honest, that was a rather disturbing demand to make. Even if the zombies were identical to the family members of the villagers, what was inside them would still be entirely different. To add to that, they had ordered the remaining villagers to act like everything was the same. —Al could only think, “Are you in any position to make those demands?”

However, all the villagers could do was to obey. To make matters worse, because the zombies’ limbs were falling apart, they were also forced to sew them back on.

Al: “I thought I was pretty resistant against these kinds of topics, but yeah.”

Yae: “I can’t see your face because of your helmet, but I can’t work in an environment where my co-workers could look at this without batting an eye, because it’s too scary. So, it’s alright even if you’re afraid, Al-sama.”

Al: “It’s not like I was afraid. Though, it is a horrifying thing.”

Whilst smiling, Yae uttered something that sounded like she was trying to console Al, who cracked his neck in response. Like that, Yae directed a stare at him that said “What do we do?”, indicating the question of how they were going to deal with the villagers.

What Yae was concerned about, was how they were going to inform the villagers of the fates of their family members. On top of being turned into zombies, they were charred into piles of ashes. Did Al and Yae ought to tell them the truth?

Having encountered a difficult problem that he hadn’t really imagined happening in his life, Al wordlessly fiddled with the metal fittings of his helmet, but—

“—I see. So, those are the survivors of the village.”

Priscilla, who had returned to the dragon carriage that was left on top of the hill, came walking in. As she fixed her gaze on the survivors, Al hastily grabbed her shoulder with a “Princess,”

Al: “I know how you feel. But, bear with it. If we tell them that you gleefully disposed of the guys, the women and children will go into a frenzy, and we’re going to end up having around twenty more burnt corpses.”

Priscilla: “Who do you think I am? Do you believe that I, to the wives who have lost their husbands, to the children who have lost their fathers, and to the sisters who have lost their brothers, would thrust the truth in front of them and laugh about it?”

Al: “…”

Truth be told, he really thought that she would, but he swallowed back his words before they came out of his mouth.

In the meantime, Priscilla moved towards the survivors of the village. In front of them was a girl who stood aimlessly, glancing at Priscilla and mustering up the courage to ask,

Girl: “Um… is Array safe?”

Al: “Array…?”

Yae: “He’s the man who came over to the mansion to give a report about this. Array Denkuts.”

As Al tilted his head at the name of the person that the girl asked about, Yae reminded him about it by whispering into his ear. That was the name he had heard while he was in the dragon carriage, still on his way to Coffleton. If the girl was that worried for the safety of the young man, then—

Priscilla: “Certainly. Are you the one who let that one escape from the village?”

Girl: “…All I did was distract the imposters. But, I’m glad that he’s safe.”

Breathing out a sigh, the girl appeared relieved from the bottom of her heart to hear of Array’s safety. She was genuinely worried, to the point that she was willing to tread on dangerous ground for him.

However, as a result, the girl’s actions had ended up informing Priscilla of the surreptitious invasion of the living corpses.

Priscilla: “I shall grant you a reward. Come.”

Girl: “Eh, ah… yes…”

Approving the contributions of the girl, Priscilla beckoned the girl to come closer. While showing her puzzlement from being addressed in such a pontifical manner, the girl took one step towards Priscilla—

Priscilla: “Do not bite down.”

Girl: “—h?!”

The next moment, without hesitating even for a second, Priscilla stole the girl’s lips.

Their first meeting, with no explanation, and between two women —jumping over those factors with a single breath, the villagers at the back were taken aback by Priscilla’s sudden move, one that could be considered as violence if looked at from a different angle. Of course, they weren’t the only ones who were flabbergasted.

Al: “Hey, hey, hey, hey! What the heck is going on?!”

Yae: “—hk! Al-sama!”

Al: “Yeah?! What…wait, whoa?!”

As Al looked to have a debate on what the definition of a reward was, Yae called out to him. Right after he knitted his brows from the call of his name, Priscilla let go of the girl’s lips.

—Whilst biting down on a grotesque tentacle with her teeth.

“…”

Immediately, Priscilla dragged the appendage out of the girl’s body. About one meter long, the tentacle thrashed around, attempting to slam the razor sharp tip of its body against Priscilla—

Al: “Oraaagh!”

But, it was blocked by Al's Blue Dragon Sword. With one strike, the tentacle that appeared as thick as the roots of a tree was halved without difficulty, and it started wildly tossing around on the ground. Like a fish out of water, it seemed as if the tentacle was desperately struggling to survive.

Priscilla: “However, you are not deserving of life.”

With those words, the thrashing tentacle was lit ablaze by her treasured sword. In a similar fashion as the zombified villagers, the appendages fell still the moment it was burnt into a crisp.

Al: “So, this is the essence of the zombies. They're parasites… no, parasitic creatures?”

Al gulped as he saw the ashes of the tentacles that laid on the ground, feeling repulsed by the sight of it.

He recalled the foreign substance that was crawling around on the severed surface of the headless man from earlier. It meant that the same things that were inside the zombified men, were also rooted inside of the women and children.

However, the girl hadn't turned into a zombie. What was the difference between them?

Yae: “It might depend on their constitution, or their blood~. Or, simpler than that, maybe they just can't control the bodies of women and children?”

Priscilla: “Nevertheless, perhaps they prey on them in order to rise up onto land. —Truly hideous.”

Priscilla spat out, narrowing her eyes at Yae, who looked after the girl that was in a coughing fit. She then reversed the position of the Yang Sword in her hand, and took a swing at the cowering villagers.

“—Ah,”

Immediately, the survivors collapsed—and all of them began vomiting onto the ground. While Al was dumbfounded by what was going on in front of him, Priscilla directed a grunt towards him.

After that, when she gently caressed the blade of the scarlet sword that she held,

Priscilla: “My Yang Sword cuts down those that it wishes to cut down, and burns those that it wishes to burn.”

Al: “You mean, you only cut and burnt the tentacles inside their bodies?”

Priscilla: “You are quick to understand. I shall praise you for that.”

Al: “For a second, I thought you also chopped up the survivors, so I was worried stiff.”

Anyhow, if Priscilla’s Yang Sword wasn’t available, they would’ve probably had to do something like that. Even worse, they would have to kiss every single survivor, and drag the parasites out of them.

Al: “Though, the reward was a kiss from Princess, huh. For my reward, instead of making me lick your feet, that kind of thing is fine by me.”

Priscilla: “Fool. It is true that my lips are a glorious treasure. However, what I meant by ‘reward’ were their lives. As a result of that one prioritizing emotion over survival, this entire ordeal was brought to light. It is an undeniably commendable effort.”

Breathing out a sigh at Al’s words, Priscilla gave high praise to the girl’s actions.

Al: “So, a girl’s love managed to stop a tragedy. That sounds too good to be true, but I’m glad that there wasn’t any more damage than this…”

Priscilla: “—No, it is too soon to be feeling relieved.”

Priscilla shook her head at the conclusion that was given to the extent of the damage done against Coffleton, rejecting the idea that it was over. Having caught the note of assertiveness in her voice, Yae momentarily stopped checking up on the villagers and turned around.

Yae: “Does that have something to do with the dragon carriage that left, after Mistress ordered something to the driver?”

Priscilla: “Certainly. —I have directed the dragon carriage towards the Crimson Battlefront at the mansion. They are heavily equipped, and I have given them the command to conduct investigations at three separate villages, near the basin of the Tenrill river.”

While answering the question, Priscilla spread out her scarlet fan, pointing it at the river that flowed beside the village. Realizing the true meaning behind Priscilla’s gesture, Al and Yae shuddered at the implications that were made.

Yae: “So, Mistress believes that the river is the source of infection.”

Al: “From what little I know, it’s a given that those that get bitten by zombies get infected, though?”

Priscilla: “Those did not have the habit of biting its hosts. In addition to that, they were making the effort to blend in, correct?”

Al: “That’s true.”

That was the difference between the zombies that Al knew, and the villagers that were controlled by the parasitic creatures. They weren’t trying to initiate violence, but they were trying to take the place of the original villagers, and were attempting to protect their own territory.

It was as if they were not after the bodies of their victims, but their entire lives instead.

Al: “If that’s what it is, then parasites are not very nice at all.”

Priscilla: “Do make sure that you never drink from the river. If possible, do not even touch it. The crops that were grown using the river water must also be burnt up.”

Al: “You’re being thorough about this. If so, we should also be careful of the bugs at the water’s edge, ‘cause blood-sucking bugs are common around those areas. I often heard about diseases being spread by bugs.”

Priscilla: “—In any case,”

With a low voice, Priscilla narrowed her blood red eyes, then made a pause.

Instantaneously, a chill raced up Al’s spine—no, it was something similar to that, but it was not a chill. It was not cold, it was hot. A scorching heat brushed against his spine as it passed through.

A burning smell flickered across his nostrils, a smell that he recalled catching a whiff of in the dragon carriage. The air that encircled Priscilla Barielle was the telltale sign of her judgement, of her decision of what to do against the ones responsible for wreaking havoc upon her land.

In other words—

Priscilla: “—Whoever it is, they shall pay the price for their act of folly. Indeed, with their lives.”

6

The Crimson Battlefront was quick to act upon Priscilla’s orders.

Just as their master commanded them, the soldiers, all heavily equipped in red, had gathered at the basin of the Tenrill river, in order to proceed with their investigation of three other villages.

As a result, it was discovered that two villages were also affected by the parasitic creatures, and in return for procuring the safety of the women and children, the Crimson Battlefront ended up disposing of the infected men.

Al: “Even with your Yang Sword, you can’t save the men like how you did with the women and children?”

Priscilla: “The Yang Sword is not omnipotent. Even if it is able to eradicate the foreign substance that is inside of a body, it cannot fill in the hole that is left behind. If I were to put this in your words, there is no salvation for a brain that has been turned into ‘sponge’.”

Receiving Priscilla’s answer, Al drew back his chin with an “I see.”

In other words, the parasitic creatures took root in the brains of the men, and had gradually obtained control over their bodies. Since their brains were the first thing that would be taken over, their memories and actions would become more vague and unclear as time passed.

Once again, what was going on matched up with the attestations that the young man had given at the Barielle Mansion.

Al: “So, about the dude who came to the mansion… Without eating anything, he ran out of the village the moment he saw the guys sewing back their limbs, right? …I hope he didn’t drink any water.”

Yae: “The women were being extremely careful about that, because they were focused on getting him out safely~. They gave him boiled water and emergency food… keeping him away from the source of infection.”

Al: “They did a great job. Seems like he’s loved by them.”

Al whistled, impressed by the lengths the women went to keep the young man safe. Thanks to their efforts, he was unharmed, and the girl who risked her life for him was also safe, thanks to Priscilla. The village was in ruins, having lost all its men except for one, but they didn’t lose everything.

Perhaps, it was possible to rebuild it.

Al: “Now, if we were able to avoid an ending with a bad aftertaste because of this and that… What are you thinking, Princess, staring intently at the map like that?”

Priscilla: “—Do you not think that something is strange? There are four villages near the basin of the Tenrill river, however, only three out of four have been affected by ‘zombies’. There is one village that has remained unaffected by it.”

Inside the village chief's house that was now uninhabited, located at the center of Coffleton, Priscilla made a query at Al while gazing down at the map on the table. In response, Al muttered out an "Ah,"

Al: "Maybe they were fasting, without drinking any water as well? I heard that there's a sort of religion that does those things. They say that no eating, no drinking, and no entertainment is a symbol of their belief."

Priscilla: "If that is the reason why they were unaffected, then that shall be a different problem. What I have made speculations on is the water flow… The village that remained unaffected is located upstream."

Pointing at the map, Priscilla divided the upper stream and the lower stream of the river, by how they were unaffected and affected respectively. Water naturally flows downwards, so if someone had poisoned it, the area affected would be below that point, which would be the lower stream.

Yae: "Because of that, I went to investigate the connection between Coffleton and the unaffected village."

Opening the door of the village chief's house, Yae made an appearance, her red hair flowing behind her. Carrying herself with an easygoing attitude, she shoved herself between Al and Priscilla, marking a spot on the map.

Al: "What's the mark for?"

Yae: "It's to show where the watermill is. The forest at the riverside has wood harvested from it, and the wood is brought downstream on a boat. I think the watermill was mainly used for grinding, but something smells fishy."

Priscilla: "—It functions as a cover for their scheme, I see."

With Priscilla's response hitting the nail on its head, Yae gave her a nod.

Seeing that the two had already come to a conclusion on the matter, Al raised his right arm with a “Wait,”

Al: “Sorry to interrupt your excitement, with schemes and covers and whatnot… but, you guys already decided on what this whole thing is? As something like a terrorist attack?”

Priscilla: “Naturally. No matter how slow-witted one could be, what would they think of this, if this is anything other than a man made crisis? Do not lower yourself to an imbecile, Al. Surely you understand the disparity between a jester and a fool?”

Al: “…The one who makes others laugh, and the one who gets laughed at.”

Priscilla: “The former shows great promise. However, the latter will remain worthless to the end, unless it is actively sought after. By no means shall you forget this.”

Despite saying those words in such a forbidding manner, with Priscilla being Priscilla, it was rather thoughtful of her. However, Al had a personal reason for why the current situation didn’t sit well with him.

—The “Zombie Outbreak” that occurred in the Barielle domain, was something he had never even heard of.

Yae: “Al-sama, your face is scary. It’s not a good thing~, so smile!”

Al: “You can’t even see my face.”

Al grunted in response to Yae’s encouragement. It was as if she thought he was sulking from his conversation with Priscilla. After that, he pointed his finger at the map that Priscilla was glaring at, and,

Al: “If the water mill is a cover up, then does that mean you’re suspecting its manager, or the wood traders for being responsible?”

Priscilla: “It is reasonable to start placing down suspicions from there. Yae, who is their representative?”

Yae: “—Edda Rayfast. They say that she’s a heroic woman who unifies the rowdy men~. There's a chance that Mistress can get along with her."

Without having to look back at her memories, Yae answered in a flash.

Priscilla: "Hm. Setting aside the possibility of that one getting along with me, we have 'cleared' the first requirement."

Priscilla replied, closing an eye. Hearing her response, Al and Yae both tilted their heads with a "Requirement?"

Seeing the reaction of her companions, Priscilla loosened the edges of her red lips,

Priscilla: "Yes, every one of those 'zombies' were male. If we consider what was set as a precedent, then there is a low possibility of that heroic woman or whatever being 'sponge'-brained."

Al: "Ah, I see. That's true."

Priscilla: "However—"

There, Priscilla cut herself off mid-sentence and closed her other eye as well. Finding her silence uncomfortable, Al attempted to call out to her, but,

Priscilla: "Forget it. Everything shall come after I see the truth for myself."

"…"

It was very characteristic of Priscilla to decide everything by herself before letting him speak.

She was definitely aware of Al's concerns, but she never gave it a single glance. Despite that, when she realized that Al wasn't following her as she started walking,

Priscilla: "What are you doing, Al?—Follow behind me like a domesticated dog."

She would say something like that as if it was obvious, which Al couldn't help but find irresistible.

Al: "Should I really lick those pale feet like a dog, while breathing heavily?"

Yae: "Wagh~. Al-sama is really off-putting~."

As he tried to follow after Priscilla, who walked ahead with her head high, the red-haired maid next to him expressed her disgust. Touching the metal fittings of his helmet, Al started longing to see the pink-haired, young butler that was not present.

7

—Al's first impression of Edda Rayfast was more of her being "iron-blooded" instead of a "heroic woman".

Under her dark skin, the blood that streamed through her veins could be colored pitch black, instead of the normal red. A plump body, thick limbs, and heavy make up that seemed more fixated on valor more so than beauty, along with a fur coat over an outfit that looked like it could burst apart at any moment.

With one look, it could be garnered that she had a different aesthetic sense compared to the average person.

Edda: "I see that you're Priscilla Barielle-sama."

Edda said, gazing down at Priscilla who was seated on a chair in the reception room. Moreover, the reason why Edda was looking downwards at her was not because of the height of the chair, but their different physiques.

Priscilla was not a short woman, but Edda's was so tall that even Al had to angle his head up to the point that his neck hurt. Though, even Priscilla couldn't possibly become angry at—

Priscilla: "Lower your head. Who do you think I am?"

Al: "You're going to get mad at that?! Even if it's a matter of height?! Isn't there nothing that could be done about this?!"

Priscilla: “What is there to cause an uproar about? Considering that this one has the audacity to look down on me, it shall be solved within a moment if this one becomes half-buried under the floor. My displeasure has been incurred, all because there was not even a single mechanism that opens the floor.”

Al: “People won’t make large-scale preparations on that level, even if they used the ‘maybe driving’[1] mindset! If you aren’t half-buried under the floor, you might make an important guest feel displeased with you… What a tough life!”

Priscilla: “How vociferous. This time, you are being unbearably bothersome about this and that.”

Al: “That’s… I’m worried about you.”

Al felt his words stick in his throat as Priscilla buried herself deeper into the couch, whilst placing her hands over her ears.

If he told her that he was worried, then he was telling the truth. However, Al’s concerns were not enough of a reason for Priscilla to stop in her tracks. Beside him, he could see Yae let out a sigh.

Sure enough, Priscilla sniffed disdainfully with a “Hmph,” then turned back around to face Edda.

Priscilla: “I only came here for one thing. Either your lumber industry, or the watermill that you manage, are being used by someone to orchestrate their heinous scheme. Have you realized?”

Edda: “—A heinous scheme, I see.”

Yae: “Starting with Coffleton, three villages that are located at the basin of the Tenrill river have already been affected by it. Have any of your employees claimed to feel sick, Edda-sama~?”

Edda raised her thick brows upon having the problem brought to attention by Priscilla, and placed a worm-like finger on her lips upon being questioned by Yae. Her reaction was an indication that she knew something about the ordeal.

“That isn’t a good look to make in front of Priscilla,” was what Al would've told her if he was in his usual state of mind, but he was currently not calm enough to be considerate for Edda.

Because of that, he pretended that he wasn't aware that Edda's cloudy eyes would be the cause of Priscilla's irritation.

Priscilla: "You have a face that says that you have an idea of what is happening."

Edda: "—This is between you and me."

Possibly having resigned herself to the fact that she would not be able to escape from Priscilla's investigation, Edda replied immediately. Perhaps that was one of her abilities, to be able to select the most optimal choice for her survival.

If she had played dumb one more time, Priscilla would've unsparingly drawn her Yang Sword against her. And so, the potential of a scene of bloodshed was avoided, and Al was relieved that the situation didn't have to come down to—

—There, it had resulted in his carelessness.

Al: "—Oh."

Al realized that his footing was becoming wobbly, unable to stand firmly. Looking down at his feet, he understood why.

The floor had disappeared. Altogether with the carpet, sofa, and even the reception table, the floor opened downwards. Al's body began falling down into the underground area, pulled by the force of gravity.

Al: "Princ—"

Yae: "I'm sorry, Al-sama!"

The moment he started falling, Al attempted to call out to Priscilla, but was flipped over by a force that struck his shoulder. Glancing at what hit him, Al saw that the person who had kicked his shoulder in order to grab on to the ceiling was Yae. Being put in the same predicament as him, she narrowly avoided plummeting down into the pitch black space by grabbing hold of the lights on the ceiling.

In return, Al lost his balance, and it became clear that he wouldn't be able to circumvent his fall. So, he instead searched for the figure that he had to check up on out of the corner of his eyes—

"…"

His line of sight intermingling with the red, crimson girl's gaze, Al then started to fall.

Falling, falling, falling down. —Falling below the surface with his body turned upside down.

Letting out a soundless cry, Al remained helpless as he plunged down into the deep, dense shadows.

8

"…"

Under the floor was a vast, fathomless darkness.

The floor that had opened without any warning had engulfed everything into its chasm, which should be referred to as an abyss.

Into the darkness went the red carpet, large sofa, reception table, the cups that still had tea in them, and one man with a jet black helmet whose delayed judgement made him unable to react in time.

Watching the man disappear into the bottom of the void with a lasting cry, the scarlet woman who had been plotted against—Priscilla Barielle, narrowed her beautiful eyes that were equal to the exquisiteness of a jewel.

Edda: "Careless, you were."

Priscilla: "…Careless, you say?"

Behind her, a voice called out towards the nape of Priscilla's neck as her gaze lingered on the abyss, and she turned around to face the owner of the voice.

Curling her blood-colored lips was Edda, the person who had conspired against Priscilla and her companions. Priscilla stared unflinchingly at her ugly smile without a single change to her expression,

Priscilla: "—Directing your hostility towards me in such a straightforward manner is something that I cannot imagine as the act of a sane being."

Edda: "Really?"

Priscilla: "On top of that, you have weighed that I was careless with your capacity. You are deserving of ten thousand deaths."

Edda: "Reaaally?"

Even with Priscilla confirming her culpability, Edda's body trembled with a delight that was out of place. Her dark skin continuing to quiver with every passing moment, it only served to heighten Priscilla's displeasure.

Unhesitatingly, Priscilla reached out her hand towards empty space, aiming to draw out her crimson, treasured sword that utilized the "sky" as its sheath. However—

"—Mistress!"

At the same time with the exclamation, obsidian blades whizzed through the air, and the sound of gouged flesh rang across the room.

What flew across the room were kunai, knives that originated from the west, and the one who threw it was Yae, who had evaded her fall by borrowing Al's shoulder as a platform. The kunai she threw had penetrated the foreheads of the enemy—the two men who appeared from the hidden door on the wall behind Edda.

The length of the blades weren't long, but it was enough to seize their lives by impaling their heads and stirring up their brain matter,

As Edda received one of the blades on the center of her neck, she wasn't an exception either.

Yae: "Oops~. Mistress, I'm sorry. I carelessly did it out of reflex."

Nimbly landing on her feet next to Priscilla, Yae apologized for bringing down the three using her knives. Hearing those words, Priscilla lowered her arm, and,

Priscilla: "I do not mind. Although I would have preferred to execute them myself, it does not hold enough value for me to slight the loyalty of my chamberlain. More importantly…"

Yae: "Eeh, from this height, Al-sama might… wow, I can't even see the bottom of it~"

With Priscilla crossing her arms beside her, Yae frowned as she peered into the abyss.

It was no wonder she made that face, since the bottom of the dark chasm was completely imperceptible. Yae dropped one of her kunai down the hole to test the depth, but there was no sound of it hitting the ground. Considering how deep it was, and the fact that it was a trap made specifically to lure in enemies, there was no telling what other traps were lying around the very bottom.

All in all, there was no other option but to believe that Al's chances of surviving were close to non-existent.

Yae: "Mistress, this is extremely hard to say, but I believe that Al-sama passed~…"

Priscilla: "—Hm. What was it that made you think of launching an ambush against me?"

Yae: "Mistress?"

Having finished analyzing the trap and giving the mournful news of Al, Yae tilted her head questioningly.

Priscilla stared ahead at the kunai-impaled Edda and her subordinates, concentrating on their bodies as if she was studying their intent, with not a single hint of concern for Al's wellbeing.

She was being indifferent to the point that it was as if Al's entire existence had been consigned to oblivion.

Yae: "Mistress, I don't think Al-sama would be able to rest in peace, being treated like that~"

Priscilla: "Fool. Neither I nor you have the time to spare on such trifles. To begin with, do you not think that it is strange?"

Yae: "Strange?"

Priscilla: "—If the objective was to bring harm upon me, then why was the trap activated when I moved away from the abyss? Their aim would have been off the mark. If so, that is illogical."

Yae tightened her cheeks, picking up on the feeling that something was wrong after hearing Priscilla's indication.

She was correct. Priscilla was originally standing above the abyss. If the Priscilla Camp—no, the heart of the camp, Priscilla, had been targeted, there would be no meaning to the trap if she wasn't the one who fell in.

Despite that, the enemy had purposely triggered the trap in a way that wouldn't drag Priscilla into it—

"—That's, you know, because I didn't wanna leave any injuries on your body."

"—h,"

Priscilla and Yae raised their heads upon hearing the low, reverberating voice.

In their line of sight, a gigantic figure was slowly getting back on her feet, with the kunai still stuck in her neck. Her thick, worm-like fingers grabbed on to the hilt of the blade, and pulled it out roughly. She acted as if she had no regard for the human body, but strangely, there was no blood flowing out of the wound.

—The reason for that could be easily deduced, in light of everything that happened so far.

Yae: “Do you happen to be a living corpse?”

Edda: “I take offense to being called something like that. I’m just moving around in a bloodless body.”

Edda—or Edda the living corpse widened her grisly smile, answering Yae’s question in an annoyingly nonchalant manner.

There was no hint of pain in her expression, and she would be no different than a living human with a monstrous face if she didn’t have the wound on her neck. However, a gaping hole in her neck was in plain sight, and looking at it would make one doubt their sense of reality.

“…”

Facing the living corpse, Yae casually moved in front of Priscilla to defend her, but without acknowledging her chamberlain’s thoughtfulness, Priscilla directed a scornful sniff at Edda.

Priscilla: “I have the same opinion as you. ‘Living corpse’ does not sound appealing to me. You shall call yourself a ‘zombie’ from now on.”

Yae: “Wait, Mistress, is now the time for that~?!”

Priscilla: “No matter the time or situation, I shall always be who I am. If that shall be bent, then that is not me. Although, I suppose this is an unforeseen situation.”

Priscilla usually spoke as if she was all-seeing, but this time, she made it clear that she was unable to foresee what was currently going on. When Yae expressed her surprise against that, Priscilla shrugged her pale, thin shoulders.

Priscilla: “It could be simply put as ‘hideous’ if those were creatures that are only able to mimic a human, as well as to speak. However, the state of these ‘zombies’ are undoubtedly not limited to that. —You said that you did not want to leave any injuries on my body, correct?”

Edda: “Yep, I did.”

Priscilla: “I see. —In other words, your next objective is my body.”

Edda’s dark red lips twisted further into a more sinister smile.

The next moment, the two dead men on the ground sprung up, and they immediately threw themselves at Yae and Priscilla.

Obviously, the men were also living corpses.

Yae used her long legs to kick out at one man who made a move to grab her, and she took hold of the other man’s collar, skillfully throwing him over her back. As a result of her endeavor, the two living corpses vanished into the bottom of the abyss.

Despite that—

Edda: “I still have more men, you know. You thought you could run from me?”

Yae: “Ugh~!”

The moment Edda let out a roar of laughter, every door in the room slammed open at all once.

Reinforcements appeared from the entrance and hidden doors, and more dropped down from the attic of the open ceiling. Yae strained her cheeks as she counted her remaining kunai, noting the overwhelming number of men that stood before her.

Yae: “We seem to be at a laughably big disadvantage~. Mistress, do you have any good ideas for what to do?”

Priscilla: “The chamberlain is the one that must present their ideas to me. Is depending on me the first thing you must do? How shameful.”

Yae: “But, Mistress~!”

Yae struck the approaching living corpses with her kunai, slicing through their arms, legs, and necks as she cut down enemy after enemy, piling up dead bodies that carried a rotten smell. However, no matter how many times she knocked them down, the bodies would continue to stand back up.

Seeing Yae being gradually driven into a corner, Priscilla sighed.

Priscilla: “—Yae, leave me and draw back. Then, you may search for Al.”

Yae: “Eh?! Mistress, I thought you had forgotten about Al-sama’s existence?”

Priscilla: “All I said was I had no time to spare on such trifles. Do not grumble about such a foolish thing. If it is for your escape, then I shall wrench open the opportunity to do so. You ought to be honored. You shall kneel.”

Yae: “Kneel…? Eek!”

Right after Priscilla’s display of arrogance, a crimson flash swept across horizontally.

Yae instinctively kneeled down, Priscilla’s treasured sword ruthlessly sailing above her head in a wide arc. Fire erupted from the red gleam of the sword, and the living corpses that were in its trajectory floundered around as they turned into ash.

Priscilla: “You shall go.”

Yae: “Mistress, please stay safe~!”

Having already made her way to the ceiling with a leap, Yae slid into the attic. Like that, she quickly withdrew from the reception room that became a battlefield, and Priscilla was left alone in the area.

Priscilla: “Hm.”

After seeing Yae’s escape through, Priscilla swung her crimson sword three more times, enveloping the unscrupulous fellows that attempted to come close in flames. However—

Edda: “Seems like the end’s drawing near.”

Priscilla: “Indeed.”

Edda sneered, having watched her men’s desperate fight earlier in a relaxed manner. She was looking at the treasured sword in Priscilla’s hand, its brilliance having clouded over and there being no remaining traces of the force of its shimmering flames.

Priscilla: “The sun has been obscured, it seems. As usual, this sword does not abide by my will.”

Having said that, Priscilla carelessly tossed her sword in the air. The sword decapitated a living corpse that stood behind her, and dematerialized as if it had been sucked in by the sky. The sword that had the “sky” as its sheath had returned to the “sky”.

The living corpses surrounded Priscilla, who was now empty-handed.

Edda: “I don’t mean to hurt you. Will you behave well and follow us?”

Priscilla: “Do not let those filth lay a finger on me. Also, you shall entertain me courteously.”

Crossing her arms, Priscilla lifted her bountiful chest as if she was showing it off, and made such demands. Hearing that, Edda raised her brows, and her face broke into a grin.

The “heroic woman” continued whilst grinning,

Edda: “I don’t dislike your haughtiness. —It’s most suitable for the paradise’s administrator.”

9

At the bottom of the deep, dark abyss, Al was losing hope in his sewage-covered self.

Al: “Is this for real…? I sure did a good job surviving, hey.”

Grimacing at the unsteady ground, as well as the lukewarm feel of the ground against his hands, Al wiped his dirtied hands against his pants and scraped out the mud that got into the gaps in his helmet.

While he was doing that, Al clicked his tongue at the unlit darkness as he glanced at his surroundings. He momentarily paused the removal of mud from his helmet, taking out a white stone from one of the pouches near his stomach.

—It was a lagmite ore, which was a special stone that emitted a glow upon being subjected to external impact.

It had different characteristics compared to mana stones, and it was a convenient object due to being able to act as a light source without any fire. Knocking the lagmite against his helmet, a dim, white glow illuminated the area.

Then, looking at the first thing that entered his sight, Al uttered an "Yuck,"

Al: "It wasn't like I thought I was lucky for not dying, but…"

He was at the bottom of the abyss, which was the trap in the reception room of the Rayfast Mansion, laid out below the floors with a mechanism that allowed them to be opened. The enemy's aim was obviously the deaths of those who fell into the trap, but Al had managed to avoid the worst outcome.

That didn't mean that he dodged the trap cooly and put himself out of harm's way. Al only survived because he landed right on top of a cushion, the impact of his fall being absorbed by it.

However, the cushion was—

Al: "…A mountain of rotting bodies, huh. What an awful smell."

Hoping that what was clogging the gaps and metal fittings on his helmet was actually "mud", Al made a face at the fates of the humans that had acted as a cushion for him.

The number of bodies did not fall within ten, nor twenty.

They were most likely a part of the workers of the lumber industry that Edda managed. Each of the bodies had their clothes on them, and none of their accessories had been taken, so they were definitely not killed for money. The bodies were crudely dealt with, but the reason why the corpses were corpses was probably not a simple matter.

Al: “That means, the fact that living corpses don’t last for long is a flaw. If it’s like this, then the living corpse business will probably not succeed. It’s full of elements that the high-so[2] upper class would hate, anyway.”

Since she made the first move, it was guaranteed that Edda Rayfast was connected with the living corpses. Considering her influence and financial assets, there was also a good chance that she was the mastermind.

If that was the case, then the safety of Priscilla, who had been left above, would be a cause for concern—

“That Yae… she made sure to stay there even if it meant kicking me down, so she’s probably doing her job properly. Even without any help, Princess might figure it out on her own, but… ah?”

As Al observed his surroundings, relying on the light of the lagmite ore, he sensed a strange presence that came from the direction of the mountain of bodies. Turning his face, Al tilted his light source.

—Immediately, his gaze met with hollow eye sockets, and he took an intuitive step back.

Al: “Uwoh?!”

“Aa, aaAAaAaAaagh!”

With a long, drawn out moan of the dead, the mangled body squirmed around. It stretched out its arms, revealing raw bone underneath its stripped flesh, and lunged at Al to drag him down into the pit of hell.

Al gulped in a breath with a momentary delay to his reaction. Unable to meet the attack in time, the corpse extended its fingers to puncture his skin—

"—bh,"

Al: "Eh?"

The next moment, a kunai fell from above, pitilessly boring through the dead man's rotten head.

—At that time, Al had no way of knowing that the kunai was the one that Yae had dropped from the reception room, in order to measure the depth of the abyss.

Saved by an incomprehensible streak of luck, Al had accomplished a narrow escape from death.

Perhaps even the moving corpses differed in quality, as the body became motionless once its head was broken through. Its rotten arm dropped back to its side, and the body collapsed without a single cry, falling completely silent.

However, Al had only gotten away from the plight that the first body had put him in.

Al: "…You're kidding me."

In front of the murmuring Al, the mountain of bodies convulsed, and he could tell that its putrid meat and rotten fluids were soaking through the muddy ground. Wondering about the true identity of the "muddy ground", Al backed off slowly as an acrid stench filled his nostrils. He was trying to prevent himself from drawing the attention of "that" as much as he could.

Despite his attempts in the face of death, it was thwarted by intruders that appeared in an unexpected way.

Al: "Wagh?!"

As if making a fool out of Al's effort to make sure he didn't provoke the corpses, the intruders crashed right on top of the mountain of bodies, splattering their surroundings with an enormous amount of rotten flesh. What was shown in the white light of the lagmite was something foreign that fell from above, yet again, but it was two humans this time.

If Al had seen it correctly, one of the bodies had a kunai sticking out from its head.

That meant their killer was Yae. It was evidence that she was having a hard battle on the floor above, but it was also poor timing.

Al: “Wo, woaaaaahh—!”

Impacted by the falling men, larger movements started to form within the mountain of bodies that had been convulsing earlier. Its motions were rightly increasing in size, and it was as if the mountain itself was beginning to move.

—Masses of human bodies that far exceeded the numbers of ten and twenty melded into each other, forming a single entity that was grotesque to the point that it no longer looked like a human. Having assembled into a huge lump of living corpses, it started rolling towards Al.

Al: “This… this has gotta be a joke—!!”

Turning his back on the impending cluster of corpses, Al started running with all of his might.

Out of everything he had experienced in his life, the unsteadiness of the ground and the low visibility of this place was among the worst experiences that he ever had. Running desperately for his life to this extent, was something he hadn’t done since he had escaped from the Colosseum of the Gladiator Island during the night—but back then, his pursuers were humans no matter how terrifying they were, yet what was chasing him right now was of a completely different nature.

Al: “ The sewers? A wastewater treatment plant?! Does this place have an exit?!”

Zori were not compatible with filthy water, but Al was able to carry on running without tripping on his feet. Since the wide passage continued straight ahead, there were no other passages he could swerve into in order to let the combination of bodies pass by. Such a strategy was unusable in this place.

It was probably not very pragmatic to keep being on the run without a map, nor a sliver of knowledge about where the exit was.

Running away was worth it if the mess of corpses were able to be out of breath, but Al had no chance of winning a stamina showdown against a bunch of dead bodies that already ended their activities of life.

To add to that—

Al: “Guh, is this for real?!”

In front of him, multiple silhouettes came into sight. They stuck their hands out, staggering on their feet in the orthodox style of zombies. Thinking that perhaps the speaking zombies he saw back at Coffleton were a rare type, Al ground his teeth upon seeing the unintelligent zombies make their entry.

Of course, there was no way that the zombies that blocked off the passage wouldn’t notice Al and the mishmash of bodies, as they were scattering the rotten smell as they went, while their feet splashed against the muddy ground.

Zombies at the front gate, a cluster of corpses at the back gate.[3]

Being grabbed by one of the zombies would put him at the risk of death, but before that, being crushed underneath the mass of bodies would also put his life in danger. —In this place, there wasn’t a single reliable ally that could come to rescue Al from his crsis.

To save his own life, he had to exert himself to the best of his ability. —Using everything that he had.

Al: “Shit, I don’t know the width or the length of this place! I’m at a disadvantage, but can I wrap it in…?!”

The encounter with the jumble of corpses that were closing in on him, and the zombies that were approaching him before his eyes. Al desperately paid attention to the surrounding terrain, biting down on his lip underneath his helmet.

Then, along with his determination, he barked out, Al: “—Goddammit! Expand, domain!!”

The moment he shouted, the space around Al briefly contorted as if it was twisted off, curling and sagging.

As if receiving the intervention of an inconceivable being, like the disproportionate feeling of looking into the world through bubbles that floated on the water’s surface, a bizarre scene such as that seeped through the area that was filled to the brim with a thick fetidness.

Then,

Then, then,

Then—.

10

Edda: “Right here, we’re planning to create our maker’s paradise.”

Saying that, Edda peered into Priscilla’s face from where she was sitting on the floor, right in front of the crimson girl. Receiving her gaze, Priscilla rested her chin on her hand whilst crossing her legs in an elegant fashion, murmuring out a “Huh,”

Priscilla: “Your colloquy fails to capture my interest in any way. How are you going to regain lost ground from here?”

Edda: “How cold. But, the consistency in your attitude’s valuable. You’re arrogant towards everyone no matter who they are, and you also have the necessary power and position… definitely ideal, I’d say.”

Priscilla: “—I see. I am able to discern this conspiracy for the most part.”

Edda: “Ohh, really?”

Seemingly unaware of leaking any information of the sort, Edda tilted her thick neck to the side. Directing a wary look at the action that lacked a single speck of charmingness, Priscilla quietly glanced outside of the window.

Inside Edda Rayfast’s mansion, Priscilla was confined to the furthermost room.

Her hands were unshackled, and it was also possible for her to walk around the room freely. She was on the third floor, but she also had the option of escaping out of the window. However, there were watchful eyes stationed outside of the room, and she could see more than ten living corpses guarding the area just by taking one look at the window.

The sun had already been obscured once. After it had gone down, it would take time for it to rise up again.

Even Priscilla didn’t think that she would be able to escape from the crowd of corpses while she was empty-handed. To start with, she absolutely refused the idea of trying to escape from the mass of the deceased by the sweat of her brow.

Priscilla: “When the time shall come for me to exit this mansion, I have already decided that I will be triumphantly walking out from the front.”

Edda: “Such bold words. But, you might be able to grant that wish, because…”

Priscilla: “Because you are scheming to take over my head as well as my body, using those vile, parasitic creatures?”

Edda: “—Fufu.”

Receiving an incinerating gaze through narrowed, crimson eyes, Edda’s large body trembled. With fingers that were too big for the transparent glass she held, she set it down on the table.

Poured inside of the glass was an amber liquid. Judging by its faint fragrance, Priscilla could tell that it was an alcoholic beverage of excellent quality. However, it did not entice her tongue.

The glass was put there after their conversation. Considering what they had spoken about, there was no way that it was just an ordinary drink.

Edda: “You’re clever. So you don’t need any explanations, right?”

Priscilla: “The villages that surround the Tenrill river have been dirtied by the asinine poison that you have sprinkled into it. Perhaps the liquor over here is tainted by the same substance, am I correct? What a dull, uninteresting lot.”

Edda: “I’m sorry. To make up for it, I made your drink a special one.”

A special drink. It was rare for the preliminary mark to ring hollow in such a way against Priscilla.

Thinking about the villages that used the water from the Tenrill river, as well as the grave situation where the villagers from said villages turned into living corpses one by one, there was no room left to doubt the idea that the parasites—the cause of the fiasco, entered the body through water that had been ingested from the river.

Priscilla had been aware of that since her time at Coffleton Village, but there was only one problem.

Previously, it was believed that the parasitic creatures’ sole targets were adult men, and that they were also harmless against women and children.

The reason for why it was controlling Edda Rayfast, being after Priscilla’s body as its next objective was because—

Priscilla: “—Among specific breeds of insects and rats, there are certain species that prefer to build a nest as a group. What is required to maintain order within the nest? The answer is clear, even if they are wild animals that only have a miniscule dot of a brain.”

Edda: “…Huh. What’s it?”

Priscilla: “A queen.”

Considering the current situation as entertaining, Priscilla smiled for the first time since she entered the mansion.

Creatures that make their nests in groups, prioritizing reproduction and the expansion of their nests, will put a queen at the very top of their society. The idea that females were essential to breeding children seemed to be invariable logic, no matter the size of the living creatures.

Not a king, but a queen. It was an odd way of existing, but it coincided with the current situation.

That meant—

Priscilla: "—Apparently, you hideous parasites are able to establish the logic of a queen, despite there being no life in your bodies. For all of you, reproduction should be a dream within a dream."

Edda: "Ah, who knows. The speed of our growth is very fast. At first, we may be corpses that are only able to move once the brains are rotted, but that leaves hosts that have their intellect and thought process intact… If that goes on, we'll be able to attain control over our hosts while they're fully alive."

Priscilla: "Are you saying that sometime in the future, you would create natural-born 'zombies'? What a repulsive era of millenarianism that you are scheming, really. That is the paradise that you all desire, and you are telling me to become its administrator?"

Edda: "I won't let you refuse. You know it's no use even if you did, right? The maid you let escape isn't caught yet, but that's just a matter of time, too."

Yae was having a difficult time making her escape even as of now, but the corpses that were stationed around the mansion and its surroundings were guarding the area strictly. The forest that circled the mansion was especially a field where Edda's subordinates, who worked for her lumber industry, were able to move around as they pleased. Even with Yae's swiftness, she would be at a disadvantage.

As Priscilla analyzed the situation calmly, Edda laughed at her.

Edda: “Mufufu. You don’t have to be so unwilling. Even as I’m saying this, it’s not like I’m a completely different person. —It’s just that I changed the order of my priorities.”

Priscilla: “Do not spout such nonsense. Death, that is what it is called.”

Edda: “—Gufu,”

Blowing out a raw-smelling breath from her thick lips, Edda produced a low, guttural sound as she laughed. Hearing the ugly noise, Priscilla knitted her shapely eyebrows.

After that, she gently reached for the glass with her thin, pale fingers—

Priscilla: “—Nn.”

Edda: “You gulped it down, without even trying to drink it secretly. Obedient, aren’t you?”

As Priscilla tipped the amber-colored glass of liquor over, licking her lips, a look of surprise crossed Edda’s face. Perhaps, she had a hard time believing that Priscilla had complied with her orders without putting up a fight.

However, there were no indications of any cheap tricks that had been played. Priscilla didn’t splash the contents of the glass against the floor, but she drank the whole thing instead.

That meant that the same parasites that were in Edda had also entered Priscilla’s body.

Edda: “Sooner or later, the effects will start to appear slowly. Once it does, we should be able to have a more friendly chat. Let’s also talk about our maker.”

Priscilla: “That name again, huh. It seems that you are quite devoted to them.”

Edda: “Well, that’s because our maker is our maker. Our real parents… to be exact, our maker is the incentive that allowed us to be reborn. To make a paradise where our maker could be at peace —that is the mission that has been bestowed upon us.”

Priscilla: “Building a paradise for your maker, I see. —How boundlessly dull.”

Priscilla shrugged her shoulders at Edda, who spoke with a sinister tone of reverence in her voice, whilst bending down to face the crimson girl. Hostility briefly flitted across Edda’s eyes upon hearing Priscilla’s choice of words, but it disappeared as soon as it came.

As Priscilla rested her chin on her hand once again, Edda stood up in front of her, staring down at her beautiful face,

Edda: “No matter what you say, it doesn’t sound convincing at all after you ran from us, scared of how we would treat you. It’ll be quite the sight, seeing someone as arrogant as you being committed to serving our maker.”

Priscilla: “Hum, that sadistic taste of yours is not so bad for an unsightly woman such as yourself. I have finally found a point of compromise for Yae’s nonsense. —There is a chance that I am able to get along with you, is what that one had said.”

Edda: “Ahh, really? Well then, does it mean that you feel like making friends with me now?”

Priscilla: “Do not utter such foolish things. —I shall execute you by my hand. It will be worth seeing you quiver your fattened, bulging body, begging for your life to be spared whilst shedding those tears. So, how is that? If I am able to derive pleasure from that, surely you will agree with my previous words?”

Priscilla loosened her lips with a graceful smile. —To be exceptionally beautiful, that was her true essence.

For the first time, Edda shivered as if she had been terror-stricken by Priscilla's existence. Almost as if she couldn't believe that she was actually scared of her, she gave her own palm a glance.

Edda's body had already been reformed, setting her free from the suffering and hardships of this world. Despite that, what was the tremor that passed through her body just now?

Through narrowed eyes, Priscilla gazed up at Edda, who was supposed to be at an advantage compared to her. She pulled out her fan from her cleavage, using it to cover her mouth.

Then, she said it. Her signature phrase, as well as the rationale that was absolute, one that she believed without a doubt.

That is—

Priscilla: "You shall keep this in mind. —This world is made to be convenient to myself."

Edda: "…"

Priscilla: "Therefore, no matter how much effort is put into your endeavors, you will meet your end, scorched into mere cinders. In the meantime, you shall spend your time wisely at the most. —Until the performance of my jester arrives."

Saying that, Priscilla directed the tip of her fan at the floor, and said nothing more.

There was no need to say anything more than that.

11

When Yae Tenzen stepped into the underground area, it was after everything was over.

Yae: "Hyah∼, the smell is going to twist my nose."

Rotten flesh blended together with wastewater, creating a putrid stench that made Yae grimace. It was as if her consciousness was growing faint just by taking a whiff of the smell.

Since she was able to see in the dark quite well, Yae didn't have any light sources with her. However, the sight that emerged within the darkness looked like a painting from hell, something that made Yae regret receiving her training to improve her night vision.

Dead bodies, dead bodies, and more dead bodies. Looking towards her left, and looking towards her right, the area was full of piles of corpses, corpses, and more corpses.

Reflecting back on her life, seeing dead bodies was hardly a rare occurrence for her, but looking at this many bodies with their dignity as people stripped from them was a sight that wasn't seen often. Unlike torture and humiliation, as if they were judged as worthless and tossed aside, the mountains of piteous lives that met their tragic ends were strewn about on the ground.

Yae: "Aren't I quite loyal, obeying Mistress's orders in this situation~? But, rare possibilities only occur once in ten thousand times, so…"[4]

Yae came here to look for her co-worker who fell in, but nevertheless, the chances of his survival were probably slim. She already had a difficult time coming to the underground space, but she had gotten fed up with its depth once she had actually climbed down the abyss.

Stretching down from the mansion's floor for dozens of meters, it was at a height that even Yae could fall to her death from.

Creating such an area underneath the floor was an idea that made Yae harbor a strong dislike for it, just by thinking about it. The bodies that laid all over the place were most likely precious labor forces, those who were involved with the hard work it took to build the trap. Living corpses wouldn't ever complain about anything, so it could be said that they were the right people in the right place, in the meaning of digging their own graves.

Yae: "Well~, as a co-worker, I guess he fails in terms of his attentiveness to his appearance. In that sense, Al-sama was equal to the living corpses, but his cleanliness was a wee bit better than them~."

Because of that, the scales would barely tip in favor of how much Yae liked Al as a co-worker. To be honest, however, she was unimpressed with the fair match that was going on between the comparison between Al and the living corpses—

"…Putting me side by side with zombies results in a fair match, huh. I won't be happy even if I win a match like that."

Yae: "Woah."

Walking along the edge of the passage in order to keep the damage from the rotten fluid to a minimum to her very best, Yae raised her face, startled upon hearing the voice that came out of nowhere, and was further surprised by the figure that came into view in the darkness.

With a gait that was like that of a ghost, the one whose feet made disgusting splashes along the floor as he came was—

Yae: "—Al-sama, is that you? Is it alright for you to come near me? Have you accidentally turned into a living corpse?"

Al: "I've been bitten and scratched all over. There's no symptoms right now that I'm aware of, but I can't just say that it's nothing. I know that there are a lot of cases that go: one scratch, and it's over."

Yae: "Based on what me and Mistress's worked out, you won't be infected through your wounds. Unless you didn't drink any water… To be honest, I wouldn't want to associate with anyone who would drink any sort of water from this environment, even if they were a living corpse~."

Al: "I'm also the type that survived on muddy water, but if I'm given the option to drink the water here, then it's a no thank you."

Saying that, the one-armed man who wore a jet-black helmet slipped out of the darkness. He was in an appalling state, being covered by filth from head to toe, but one glance at him was enough to tell that none of his wounds were fatal. Neither did he have any wounds that resulted from his fall.

Yae: “Can Al-sama like, fly? I heard that the Margrave of the west is good at doing that~.”

Al: “I guess I’m also called a jester, but it’s a different type compared to that kind of jester. I just happened to be lucky. Right as I fell, there was a cushion made out of a mountain of bodies…”

Yae: “Ughh~, do you really call that ‘being lucky’?”

Al: “It’s cheap as long as you don’t die. That’s a way to justify things, coming from my hometown.”

Once they had their conversation, Al leaned against the wall and flumped down onto the ground.

“…”

They were exchanging banter, but Yae could see that Al was deeply exhausted. Several hours had passed since he fell into the abyss, and if he was continuously moving around, uncertain of whether he would live or die, that was only natural.

First and foremost—

Yae: “These… heaps of bodies around us that were living corpses… Did you—?”

If her speculation was correct, then some of the bodies were the labor force that existed to create this underground area, and they were sacrifices as well. However, there were also quite a few bodies that seemed to be used in other ways, making Yae feel like there was a large difference between the conditions of the bodies.

Long story short, it appeared that the intellect-possessing living corpses at the mansion on the surface and Coffleton Village, and the walking corpses that didn’t possess the same intellect, were mingling with one another.

What those corpses had in common, were lacerations that they received from a blade that was large in width.

Al: “Ahh, I’m tired. Good job surviving, me. Really, good job, and thanks to god…”

Yae: “…”

Looking at the helmeted Al letting out a long, weary sigh from the side, Yae narrowed her eyes.

Assuming that the disastrous spectacle in this underground area was what Al had carried out on his own, then Yae would word it as “unexpected”.

If Yae would appraise Al honestly, then he was a man who wasn’t that skilled. He was second-rate as a swordsman, but since one of his arms was lost, he would be second-rate-and-a-half at best even as a warrior. It was also hard to think that he excelled in continuous battles, so she had a hard time finding what he was the best at doing. In reality, she perceived him to be a moodmaker.

Yae thought that the most she could expect from him, was for him to be Priscilla’s shield when push came to shove. —To think that he was able to annihilate a horde of living corpses, even if they weren’t in the best condition.

Yae: “The power of love, is it~?”

Al: “Don’t say something so scary. …Ah, so, how’s Princess? Is she safe?”

Yae: “It’s about that, but things aren’t looking too good~.”

Al: “Aah?”

Shrugging her shoulders against Al’s voice of skepticism, Yae explained the events that had occurred after he had fallen into the abyss.

Edda Rayfast’s conspiracy, and the entire area that was controlled by a swarm of living corpses. About how Priscilla had been captured by the enemy, and how Yae and Al were the only ones who were in the position to move freely—.

Yae: “We’re outnumbered nonetheless. If it’s just me, then there’s a possibility that I can do my best to escape~, but, by the time I return with reinforcements…”

Al: “There’s a high chance that the parasites have already gone inside Princess, you’re saying.”

Yae: “If that happens, then there’s no use in doing that… is what I think~.”

“What should we do?” she added, asking for Al’s opinion.

However, there weren’t many measures that they were able to take. Against the horde of living corpses, they only had two cards in their deck. Al’s survival was a fortunate occasion, but it was hard to think that it was a move that would change the situation drastically, and Yae’s attention was focused outside the mansion—on the red-adorned Crimson Battlefront, who were patrolling the villages near the Tenrill river, stamping out the living corpses that were there.

If they were called over, then some living corpses would equal to nothing in their eyes. The problem was the likelihood of Priscilla turning into a puppet, with her consciousness seized by the parasites while the Crimson Battlefront was still making their way towards them.

Against that, Yae could only think of a baseless countermeasure that consisted of counting on Priscilla’s aberrantly strong sense of self. Relying on that in order to make their move, was something that Yae felt more reluctant to do than actually doing it.

Ignoring Yae’s complicated feelings within her mind—

Al: “Why did you come to look for me? If you were planning to save Princess, then your best bet would be to sneak out and call the Crimson Battlefront.”

Yae: “—. I had the same thought at first. To be honest, I couldn’t count on you being alive after that fall, so~. But, Mistress,”

Al: “Princess did what?”

Yae: “Told me to look for you. She said that she had no time to spare on such trifles, so I thought she had quite a lot of faith in you… Al-sama?”

Yae remembered Priscilla’s bold order that was given to her, right as she withdrew from the battlefield. Honestly, it was a bad move that she would see no value in obeying if it wasn’t Priscilla’s idea.

All in all, it didn’t turn out to be in vain because Al was alive, but Yae had no idea of how this was going to connect to whatever would happen in the future.

Having that kind of view on the situation, Yae glanced at Al, sensing a shift in the air around him.

Yae: “Al-sama?”

Al: “…”

Slowly getting up from his previous position where he was slumped down on the ground with his head lowered, Al fiddled with the metal fittings on his helmet and made them clang. It was a small and weak metallic sound.

The gesture was something that Al showed often, but, just for this one moment, it gave Yae a different impression than usual—

Al: “—She really did it, that woman.”

His murmur contained an echo of enjoyment, and it added further to Yae’s puzzlement. Then, in front of the bewildered Yae, Al began walking in a way that seemed like he was dragging his feet.

Where he was headed for was the direction in which Yae came from, which was the pathway that led back to the mansion on the surface.

Yae: “Al-sama, there are a lot of enemy-sans up there~!”

Al: “Yae, don’t you realize it?”

Yae: “Huh? Realize what…”

Al: “Do you think that Princess would make a boring move that’ll turn out to be fruitless? A stupid move that people like you and me can recognize as a bad move… I don’t think she would take any measures like that.”

Yae: “That’s…”

Her words becoming stuck in her throat from what Al pointed out, Yae started to question her own actions. He was right. She herself had thought that looking for Al wasn’t worth it.

Despite that, why did she follow Priscilla’s orders? That is because—

Al: “—After all, the world operates in a way that makes it convenient for Princess.”

So, if Priscilla had chosen Al for the occasion, then it was the best move that one could make in this situation.

“…”

Drawing out his Blue Dragon Sword from the back of his waist, Al began walking on the path that led to the surface, with traces of irritation in his steps. Behind him, Yae followed along hurriedly, asking him, “What are you planning to do?”

Yae: “There are loads of enemy-sans out there, you know? Al-sama, are you planning to win against them hundred-on-one?”

Al: “Worse than hundred-on-one, it’s dangerous for me even if it’s two-on-one. I know what you’re capable of. But, I’ve been in plenty of circumstances like that.”

Yae: “Plenty of hundred-on-ones, you’re saying?”

Al: “Circumstances where I’m outnumbered, I’m saying. Fighting hundred-on-one and there being a hundred enemies are two different things, Yae.”

Yae: “…”

Al: “There’s no chance of winning if it’s a hundred-on-one, but what if it’s a hundred one-on-ones?” Of course, I’ll be at a disadvantage, but don’t you think that there might be a small chance, like one out of ten thousand?”

That was the correct way to attack when the enemy had greater numbers, but it was a preposterous pipe dream, considering the difference in strength between the two and the living corpses.

However, the man in front of Yae was speaking with an air of confidence, almost as if he had the experience of having shot down a star in the past, about the possibility that was tiny as a hole that was made by a needle.

Yae: “One out of ten thousand is as good as nothing… To add to that, if it’s that possibility, then I’ve already used it up. I thought that the possibility of Al-sama’s survival was one out of ten thousand, so~.”

Al: “If it comes to that, then it means that I have to draw out a possibility that’s one out of twenty thousand. I’m a boy, too, so this fires me up. —As long as the possibility isn’t zero, I’ll wrench it open.”

In front of the conversing two, a spiral staircase that connects to the surface came into view. They would be at the surface if they climbed up the stairs, but what was waiting for them was a hell of hordes of living corpses that was worse than hell—.

Al: “While I’m being loud, you should slip out of the mansion and go and pick up the Crimson Battlefront. Either way, the parasitized people all gotta be eradicated.”

Yae: “…Are you serious about doing this?”

Al: “Don’t make me repeat myself. I don’t want to be out of breath during my signature phrase.”

Saying that, Al took his first step on the spiral staircase. Knowing that making any more attempts to stop him would be tactless, Yae gave him a respectful bow, Yae: “I was quite fond of you and Mistress.”

Al: “Don’t say something like you’re bidding us farewell. It’ll bring bad luck.”

Finishing their brief exchange, Yae quickly passed by Al as she began running.

It was unknown what kind of hidden trick Al had up his sleeve, Yae decided that she would consider his feelings, even if what he put up was simply a life-risking act of bravado. —Calling over the Crimson Battlefront, she would let them wipe out the living corpses.

In order to exterminate the source of the stench that was twisting her nose, without letting them out of the dirty garden that they were in.

Like that, behind her, Yae caught the last traces of Al’s murmuring voice as she ran ahead.

Those were words that Yae could not grasp the meaning of at all—

“—Expand domain, begin thought experiment.”

12

Decapitating the living corpse in front of him, without turning around, he thrust his sword into the torso of the enemy that appeared behind him. Forcefully twisting his sword around, the rotten body’s torso was torn off easily, and it rolled out onto the floor.

“…”

Next, and then next, Al continued to cut down the bodies one after one. Some time had passed since he started doing that, as the mansion was overflowing with dead bodies.

The bodies were only walking around in the first place, so he could claim that all he did was remove the abnormality out of the normality.

In one way or another, a corpse was a corpse, and that was how it should be.

However, if it came down to that, then Al would start to become unsure of what he was doing.

Al: “It’s not like I’m exorcizing them, and it’s also not like I’m putting their souls to rest either. It’s an operation where every single corpse that went into the blind alley of fate is mowed down. …It’s way too ironic, considering that it’s me who’s doing that.”

Or, perhaps even that was something that Priscilla had expected to happen, all in the palm of her hand. The holder of crimson eyes that seemed as if they saw through everything—even Al couldn’t possibly fathom the inner feelings within her bountiful chest.

Yet, Priscilla, who would never weigh her own destiny on anything else but her own scales, had chosen Al to shift the ongoing deadlock on the board, and there was no way to change the truth that she indeed chose him to do that.

There was also no way to change the truth of Al’s stupidity, as he was putting in his utmost effort all because of that.

Al: “Now, killing and killing, I got a hundred and thirty-four of them… that Yae, she only made a rough estimation, didn’t she. This is way more than a hundred-on-one. But, soon…”

“—Our patience is going to reach our limit.”

Al: “…”

Wiping the rotten fluid that was smeared against his Blue Dragon Sword on the curtains, Al turned around to see a giant shadow that stood at the end of the passage. A humongous frame that was hard to refer as human-sized, ugly facial features, and reaching his eardrums was a voice that got on his nerves—

Al: “This is between you and me, but shouldn’t you rename yourself from ‘heroic woman’ to ‘filth’?”

Edda: “How dare you do this. Do you know how much trouble I went through to ready this number of corpses? Everyone was a part of the precious labor force for the paradise.”

Al: “Trouble? All you did was make them drink water. Don’t make a face like you’ve gone through the same hardships as a marathon runner, when you were only standing at the water supply station.”

Building a paradise, or whatever it was, Al had no interest in what the kingpin of the living corpses had to say. Unfortunately, he didn’t remember being disciplined to listen to the villain’s speech quietly.

Because of that—

Al: “I’ll kill you, and take Princess back home. Soon, in all seriousness, I’m gonna lick those pale, long feet.”

Edda: “A vulgar person, aren’t you. I won’t let you get in the way of our mission.”

Edda laughed malevolently at Al, who pointed his Blue Dragon Sword at her whilst speaking about his obscene wishes.

The next moment, Edda’s steely oil-colored skin swelled up, and aberrant bumps began thrashing around underneath her tight, stretched out clothes. Just like that, her clothes were torn apart, revealing skin that Al wasn’t happy to see—and gruesome abominations made their appearance.

“…”

That—was an aggregation of multiple living corpses that Edda had taken into her heavy build. Hands and feet were sticking out all over her body in an unnatural fashion, and the faces of the dead that were letting out silent screams were attached to places such as her stomach and back.

Feeling repulsed at the abnormal, anomalous presence that she gave off, Al curled his lip inside of his helmet, clicking his tongue.

Al: “Gross.”

Edda: “I’ll also make you a part of me, and use you as an ingredient to take that woman down a peg or two. After that’s done, with that woman’s status and beauty, a paradise is going to be built on the ground—h!”

Al: “—hk?!”

Bouncing her body with great force, Edda’s gigantic frame closed in on Al with a jump that ignored her heavyweightedness. What made that possible, was perhaps because she was reusing the unnatural muscular strength of the bodies that she had taken in. Flying through the air while showering her surroundings with fetid fluids that were pouring out from all over her body—she was undoubtedly the worst enemy to face.

If one free-willed mind was attached to the cluster of corpses that he came across underground, it was going to turn out like that, was what Al had discovered just now.

Against the monster that had piled up disaster upon disaster, turning into what would be the definition of ‘hideous’, Al made a massive leap that propelled himself backwards.

Then, in his mind, what he envisioned was not the approaching enemy, but the damsel in distress, who was at a place beyond where Al and Edda were standing.

—Aah, for crying out loud, why do I have to go through a terrible experience like this?

That was unmistakably because he was unfortunate enough to come across her.

Therefore—

Edda: “DIIIIIIIIEEEEEEEEEEE—!!”

Sailing through the air, the giant corpse advanced on Al as it flung its foul spit around and scattered the acrid stench that was coming from it, reaching out towards him with its countless hands.

Seeing that with his very own eyes, Al gave a light shrug of his shoulders, and,

Al: “—For me and you, the stars were not in our favor.”

13

Priscilla: “You are late, Al. How long must you make me wait? Even irreverence has its limits.”

Al: “…Are those really the words to say to the brave, laudable me, who finally arrived here after finishing a fierce battle?”

Having opened the door with a muddy, slush-covered appearance, Al’s shoulders sagged upon receiving an unkind welcome.

Staring at Al, the girl who was re-crossing her legs in an elegant fashion was Priscilla, who had been taking on the role of the damsel in distress at the innermost place of the mansion. However, she gave no sign of being affected by the insecure position she was put in, undeviating from her usual arrogance, which was very much like Priscilla Barielle.

Al: “I’m an utter idiot, too, being relieved by that rather than getting fed up…”

Priscilla: “It is inevitable for men to kneel down before me. There is no need to feel ashamed about that. If anything, you ought to understand the logic that it is only natural. So, what about that discourteous, insolent ringleader of the living corpses?”

Al: “I had a hard time fighting it, as if I seriously only had a chance to win with a possibility of one in ten thousand, but… well, I thought that you would want to do it yourself. I made sure that it couldn’t move and left it there.”

Priscilla: “Hm, that is good. I shall praise you for that.”

Priscilla said, leisurely standing up from her seat and passing by Al with a confident air. Tilting his neck at her gallant form, he let out a small sigh and chased after her back.

Leaving the furthermost room in the mansion, after moving ahead for a while, they arrived at—

"…uh, aah, uhh…"

Priscilla: "Hmph. Really, you have been reduced to a laughable state."

Below Priscilla's feet laid what was once Edda Rayfast, left on the ground.

It was in a condition that could be described with one word: horrendous. The body that was a mishmash of corpses was already not a pretty sight, but the rotten flesh that was all over its body had been shaved off, and it was similar in appearance to a caterpillar with its torn off limbs.

Al had described Edda's thick fingers as caterpillars, but it wasn't even a funny story if the main body was turned into that.

Priscilla: "I was planning to watch you sob disgracefully as you pleaded for your life, and satisfy myself with that, however… That is not going to happen with this wretched state that you are in."

Edda: "You… what, was… that. Everything… just, like, that…"

Becoming a living corpse, she had separated the hardships of this world from herself. That was Edda had boasted, but she was shaking her head, the roots of her teeth chattering out of the fear that she felt towards the things that had happened to her.

Knowing that Edda's words were directed towards Al, who had reduced her to that state, Priscilla didn't answer her, drawing out her beautiful, crimson sword from midair.

Unchanging from when it had been put away once, the bright red brilliance hadn't returned to its blade, but,

Priscilla: "Even supposing that the sun is obscured, the smoldering heat will not die out. Your death will not be a painless one, but I have said that I will scorch you into mere cinders. I shall not go back on my word. —Here, you shall dream of your paradise and turn into ashes."

Edda: “At… any rate… you will… same, as me…”

Perhaps something was on her mind, as she was about to voice her refusal to accept her defeat, until the tip of the sword sank into the face. Forced into the choice of silence, Edda’s wide-eyed face began glowing a weak red color, and she eventually combusted into flames.

Just like that, the flames that made Edda its starting point spread across the floor and the walls, its range continuing to expand as it begged for wood to make into fuel, in order to become a great fire that would incinerate the mansion itself.

Al: “—Princess, is nothing happening to your body?”

Staring at the growing fire, Al made his question towards Priscilla’s back.

It was difficult to imagine that Edda and the living corpses did nothing to her while she was being held prisoner by them. As far as he saw, there were no traces of her being physically harmed, and her attitude was also that of the usual her.

Because of that, he didn’t want to think that the living corpse-creating parasites had made their way even inside of Priscilla, but—

Al: “They did something to you, didn’t they? For example…”

Priscilla: “Is it about the boorish treatment that exists to modify my impeccable body into a ‘zombie’?”

Al: “…”

Receiving Priscilla’s gaze, Al instinctively fell silent. It was still alright if her scarlet eyes contained anger. However, what dwelled within her gaze was the emotion of a lull in the sea that he couldn’t read the details of.

Towards Al, perplexed by her windless stare, Priscilla loosened her lips with a breath of air.

Priscilla: “Do not worry. Supposing that the foreign matter is eroding me from within, surely you are aware of the method that is used to remove it?"

Al: "What do you mean by a method to remove… ah."

Faced by the smiling Priscilla, Al recalled what had happened back in Coffleton Village.

Priscilla had kissed a girl who had been infected by the same parasite, forcefully dragging the parasitic tentacle out of her body. If it was that method, then it would be possible to remove the parasite that had taken root in the host's body.

However—

Al: "Ne-Neither Yae or Schult-chan are here, though? You also burnt the only person of the same gender that was left as well…"

Priscilla: "Fool. Even if a portion remained unburnt, for instance, who would entrust my lips to lips that are rotten in two meanings? Enough is enough, you shall prepare yourself. Is it none of your concern, no matter what will happen to me?"

Al: "No, that's…"

Al took a step back as Priscilla fixed him with a glare. Despite that, the distance that was created between them was easily closed by Priscilla's confident strides, and soon, Al found himself cornered into a wall.

Al: "Wai… wait, Princess! See, the mansion's burning right now, so now's not the time for…"

Priscilla: "You have gallantly risked your life for me. I shall grant you your reward for that. —Do not move."

Al shook his head slowly, but Priscilla acted like his refusal meant nothing to her. Touching him, who was covered in head to toe in filth that was disgusting to even brush against, her pale fingers hooked the rim of his helmet.

And then—

Priscilla: “—No matter how many times I see it, you have an unsightly look in your eyes.”

Continuing her words, the shrill sound of a black helmet hitting the floor echoed throughout the burning mansion.

14

Yae: “As expected of Mistress~. Mistress herself is safe, as well as her ally. It’s quite fantastic!”

Priscilla: “That is to be expected. However, words of praise are pleasant. You shall praise me as much as you would like.”

Yae: “Haha~.”

Back at Priscilla’s private room in the Barielle Mansion, Yae was prostrating before Priscilla, having been ordered to take care of her nails.

Already, the scheme of Edda Rayfast—the person who had been in the command of the living corpses, was broken, so all they had to do was to sweep up the living corpses that remained in the surrounding area, and settle the situation for once and for all.

From the beginning until the end, Priscilla had resolved nearly every tale with her own strength. Of course, even Yae prided herself on how she had given a small handful of her assistance for that, but it was really only a small handful.

Everything had played out in the palm of Priscilla’s hand, and had ended without being able to get out of there. Everything, including Edda and the living corpses, as well as Yae and Al’s fierce struggle. —That, was just a little frightening.

Priscilla: “Your hands are idle, Yae.”

Yae: “…Oops, I’m sorry, Mistress. I was just thinking about things for a little while.”

Priscilla: “I see. It is irreverent to be absorbed in thought while you are taking care of me. What have you thought about?”

Yae: “E~h, you see, it’s that. It was when I brought back the Crimson Battlefront, and met up with Mistress and Al-sama in front of the burning mansion. At that time, didn’t Al-sama seem rather restless? No, if it’s said that he’s always restless, then that’s true, but~.”

Of course, it could be thought that the exhilaration from making it out alive from a life-or-death crisis still remained inside of him. He had survived against an enormous number of living corpses, after all. Really, he had passed through the narrow possibility of one out of ten thousand.

Truth be told, when she found the two in front of the mansion, Yae was confident that it was a moment that surprised her the most in her whole life. She almost wanted to compliment herself for not showing that on her face.

It was just that Yae had the feeling that Al was perceiving something incomprehensible, something that couldn't be defined as 'exhilaration'.

Priscilla: "That is because that one is an idiotic man."

Priscilla's reply seemed like an answer to Yae's suspicions, but it actually wasn't. It was an airy answer that didn't pry into the core of the topic, but it didn't seem like she would be speaking about it any further.

Yae: "—There, Mistress. I'm done with your treatment. As usual, your nails are unbelievably beautiful."

With the feeling that she was wrapped in smoke, without any way to voice her suspicions any further, Yae finished working on Priscilla's nails. Her words weren't flattery, as Priscilla's innate beauty really did shine through even her fingertips.

Her whole body, no matter which part, was the personification of beauty. It was to the extent that it was unbelievable, even as a fellow woman.

Yae: "Should I call for Schult-chan right now? He could share your bed as always…"

Priscilla: "Not tonight. Perhaps I am doing this just in case, but I will wait and see how it will go for the night. I had burnt up the foreign matter that had gone inside me from the glass of liquor, however, there is no need to terrorize him.”

Yae: “I see. …The living corpses were too ambitious, trying to steal your body like that~.”

With the power of the crimson sword, Priscilla was able to burn whatever she wanted to burn at her will. It was only natural that whatever substance that entered her body was immediately dealt with. It wasn’t hard to imagine her promptly setting the parasite ablaze, right after she had put the glass that she had been given to her lips in an ostentatious display.

Yae: “Well then, Mistress, you must be tired, so I will be leaving now. Even Al-sama looked exhausted, so please rest well.”

Priscilla: “Mhm. —Yae, you have done well.”

Right as Yae was about to leave the room after performing a bow, Priscilla spoke her words of acknowledgement. Receiving that, Yae lowered her head even further, and disappeared in front of her master without leaving behind a single footstep.

Afterwards, Yae realized with a sudden jolt that this was the first time that Priscilla had acknowledged her efforts in such a natural manner.

It meant that Priscilla had recognized what Yae did today as a large, difficult task. Even Yae, having been demanded to take up a role that was unworthy for a simple chamberlain, had fatigue and the sense of fulfillment piling up on her at an equal rate.

If she were to put it honestly, today was the worst day—but it wasn’t… bad. Since the day she began working at the Barielle Mansion under Priscilla, Yae thought that today was the most interesting day that she ever had.

Yae: “Really, I have an unlucky nature, don’t I~. But…”

Opening and closing her palms, Yae blew out a small sigh.

It was fun. It wasn’t bad. It wasn’t as if she didn’t think, “If things continued to go like this.”

That was why—

"—That's enough."

In the midst of the depths of night, where the moon was concealed by the clouds and the insects' songs could not be heard, someone called out to Yae from behind.

"…"

Halting in her tracks, holding her breath, and stopping the trembling within her heart, Yae turned around.

She recognized the voice. Yet, she didn't remember the voice sounding so frigid.

Along with that, feeling apprehensive of the current situation to begin with, Yae put on her usual smile.

Yae: "Is it Al-sama~? What are you doing outside during midnight?"

Al: "…"

Yae: "I'm sure you're tired today, so I thought you were taking a rest. Or, is it that you couldn't sleep because you were overwrought, since you cut down too many people? If that's so, I think you shouldn't be there. If it's the other chamberlains, then you'll be forgiven even if you did some things with them, but any further than that…"

Al: "Is Princess's room. Yeah, I know."

Interrupted by a quiet tone of voice, Yae shut her mouth for a moment. Then, she put up the same smile.

Not yet. It wasn't over yet. He didn't know yet. She could still save the situation.

She could still make sure that these memorable days wouldn't end yet.

Yae: “Even more so if you understand. Of course~, if you would sneak into a woman’s bedroom, she’ll be a beautiful one, but doing that to Mistress is really difficult, as you would expect. If you’d like, then should I accompany you~? You see, with your hard work today, maybe you look a little more handsome to me, just a bit…”

Al: “You talk a lot when you’re troubled. But, that’s no use. I’ll create no openings.”

Yae: “…”

Al: “I’ll say it just once more. Beyond this area is Princess’s room. What are you going there for during a night like this?”

Receiving the words of Al, who seemed convinced about the matter, Yae dropped her shoulders with bated breath. With a slow shake of her head, her tied red hair swayed callously in the night.

So, this was it, was the conclusion that the determined Yae had drawn from her heart.

Her attempt to deceive him had no effect, so he probably wouldn’t listen to her excuses either. Al knew everything.

Yae: “I thought I was quite perfect at hiding it, so how did you find out?”

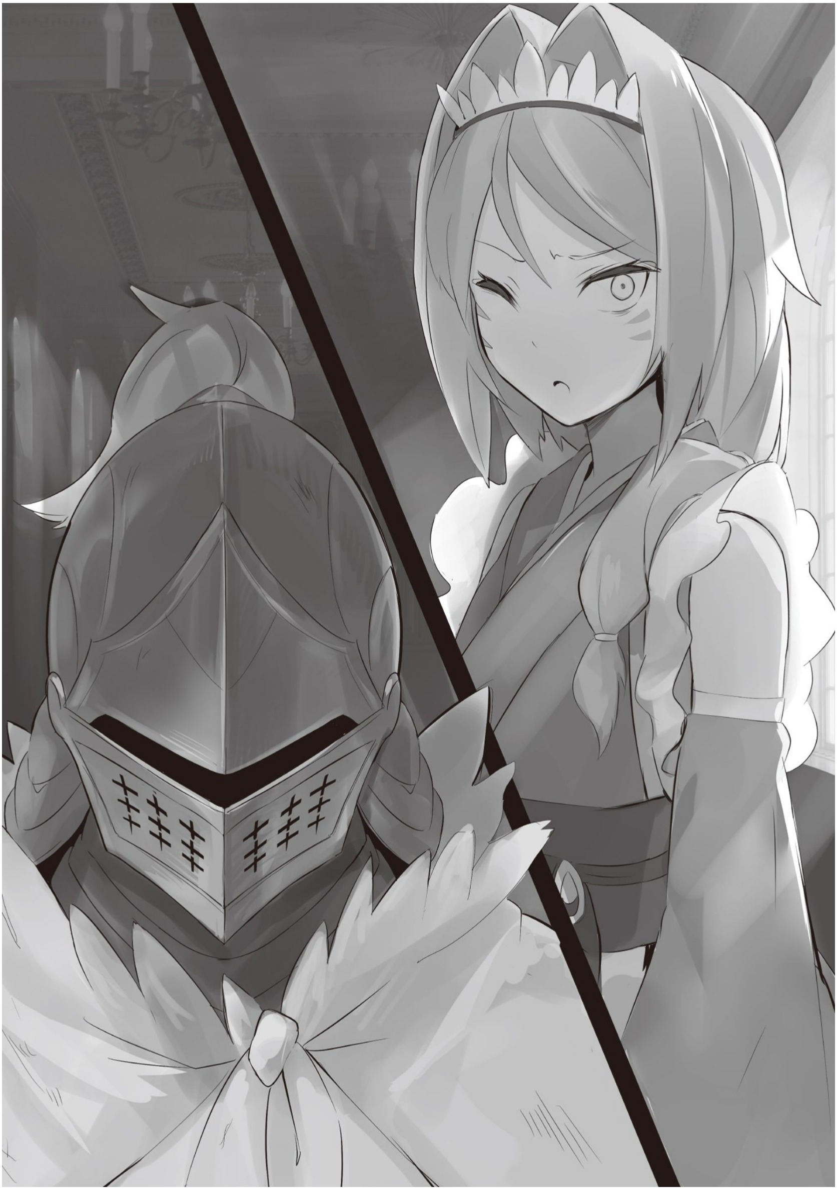
Al: “Don’t worry, you were perfect at it. It’s just that I’m the one who’s cheating, playing foul a little and all. …Though, it was an answer that I didn’t want to believe.”

Yae: “As ever, your words are difficult, and they’re not understandable to an uneducated person like me~.”

With a carefree attitude, Al was the man that acted like a jester, and he always positioned himself by Priscilla as if he was keeping her safe. Yae thought of it as him being cautious of her at all times, as well as being considerate towards her.

Whether that was hostility that came from deducing Yae’s aim, or whether it came from something else, was what Yae didn’t know herself. With the reason remaining unclear, the relationship between Yae and Al would come to an end.

Yae: “…If you could overlook this situation, I won’t cause any harm to you, Al-sama~?”



Al: “Maybe I would’ve listened to that, if there wasn’t anything that would be taken in return.”

Yae: “Is that so~. Yes, that’s a shame. But, if you say so—”

Lifting down the corners of her eyebrows, Yae acted as if she was going to talk about a different topic while lashing out her arm. Instantaneously, the thrown blade flew straight towards Al, stabbing him in the chest.

Al: “Guh,”

Yae: “I didn’t hate you, Al-sama.”

As Al let out a grunt of pain as he collapsed, the blade having gouged itself into his heart, Yae spoke to him with words that failed to serve as consolation.

Seeing Al’s death to the end, caused by the unfaltering strike that she had hit him with, Yae exhaled a short breath and turned her back on him, attempting to get back to her advancement towards Priscilla’s room.

Priscilla was extremely intuitive, so there wasn’t a chance that she would sleep through the whole ordeal. The possibility of her waking up from the dispute between Al and Yae was still there. Yae was ashamed to say it, but she would be out of moves to make if Priscilla did wake up. That’s why, before that—

Yae: “—I wanted to carry out my task, though~.”

With the Blue Dragon Sword held against the back of her neck from behind, Yae dropped her kunai in a low-spirited manner. Giving a fleeting glance backwards, she could see the man of the jet black helmet standing behind her.

The kunai that was supposed to have been stabbed into his chest fell onto the ground, and Yae saw that the tip of the blade had buried itself into the piece of wood that Al had hidden in the chest area of his clothes.

That was as if he knew where Yae was aiming for when she had thrown the kunai.

Al: “Didn’t I tell you? I cheated. The timing where you’ll kill me, too, and everything.”

Yae: “I don’t understand. …If I said that I would give up, will you stop?”

Al: “…In case you were really planning to come over to our side, then I’ve considered it. Until this morning.”

Yae knew that she was asking for too much when she directed the question at him, but what Al returned to her while sounding pained, was a strange answer.

He said that he would’ve arrived at a different conclusion if it was until this morning. He said that he might’ve considered Yae’s suggestion.

However, there was nothing to be troubled about now. What triggered it was—

Al: “On top of the rotten, muddy mountain of corpses, Priscilla chose me. That’s why I will choose her back. —Yae Tenzen. You are the woman who will kill Priscilla. I won’t let you kill her twice.”

Yae: “…I haven’t succeeded even once, though?”

Al: “Yeah, you’re right. To set that in stone, I’ll nip what is uncertain in the bud.”

Hearing Al’s words that were beyond her comprehension, Yae felt fear settle into her skin. That wasn’t towards the hostility that would make one imagine their death. The feeling was directed towards the abnormal fixation that Al harbored, something that was unfathomable to other people.

It was not because of her sense of duty, nor was it because it was her job. Trusting her own instinct and skill, Yae thought that she needed to kill this man.

Al: “Sorry. Me and you, were just unlu…no,”

Yae: “Sshhh—!”

In an instant, Yae twisted her body, aiming to strike her opponent’s windpipe with the blade that jumped out of her sleeve.

During that moment, right as the glimmering, black blade was about to reach its target, a voice was heard.

A voice.

Al: “—the stars were not in our favor.”

—The next day, one chamberlain from the Barielle Mansion resigned from their job because of familial matters.

It was an extremely rude way to quit their job, as the chamberlain hadn’t spoken a single word to her master, Priscilla, about it. However, when Priscilla had received the report, all she said was, “I see.”, and she said no more than that.

The chamberlain who quit was distressed by the emergency that had occurred a day before in the Barielle Domain, was what the steel-helmeted man who served Priscilla had been gossiping about.

The other chamberlains who were all her colleagues had sympathized strongly with her, but as they were buried under the work that their busy days brought forth, their interest in their former colleague had started fading away.

—Only the young, pink-haired butler would continue to regret being unable to say farewell.

As a matter that was settled as that, her existence would be continued to be hidden by the shadows of history.

—The unusual event in Barielle Domain that had occurred, and had been settled. This, was something such as a superfluous addition to that.

"…"

At the bottom of the dark, humid area, there existed a small silhouette. The silhouette was a single girl who looked child-like in appearance, having been held captive in rigid restraints.

In the midst of the darkness, the girl didn't move a single muscle, waiting quietly for the passing of time.

Before long, mice began congregating under her, their scuffling faintly audible as they went. Although they were mice, if there were only one or two, then they were still cute. However, the number of mice in this area was out of the question.

Exceeding the likes of a hundred, two hundred, a thousand, and two thousand, the mice that surrounded the captive girl in the dark were tremendous in numbers, standing still without letting out a single cry.

If this amount of mice gathered together, then they would be able to devour the likes of a young, little girl within minutes, without leaving any bones behind. However, the purpose of the mices' gathering was by no means because they viewed her as prey.

If anything, it was the opposite. —The mice did not view her as prey, but they were venerating her as something special.

That was the loyalty that was directed towards a queen, what could only be established by the dominance of their instinct, which was an impossible evil that was brought to fruition. The mice, having lost their free will, gazed at the girl with eyes that were identical to a corpse.

Describing their devotion as something that was directed towards a queen, paled in comparison to what it actually was. Instead of it being aimed at a queen, it was more of something that was pointed towards a god—towards the "maker" that had created them.

Taking control over everything, using everything that we could use, and creating a paradise, we will welcome our maker.

Understanding the unexpected chaoticness of her dear children such as that, however, the girl continued to wait in silence for the passing of time.

Until then—

“—Deliberation is required.”

END

Otto’s Bittersweet Peddling Trade Log

1

‘—Laddie, don’t you feel like it’s way too noisy?’

“Oh, is it?”

When he heard that familiar voice slide into his eardrum, the young man that was in the cargo wagon tilted his head.

He was a delicate, grey-haired man. He gave off a slight aura of passivity, yet his countenance was excellently kempt, and his attire was carefully selected, preventing him from giving other people a negative impression.

Rather than being liked, not being disliked was what he put more emphasis on. —A device with the purpose to avoid provoking anybody’s sensitivity in a bad way; that was how the youth saw his attire.

However, his desire to not stand out was not due to the need of sheltering himself from the world. The traveling merchant did all this for the sake of trading—the job that had become his livelihood, and wherein the impressions others had of him mattered.

The youth’s name was Otto Suwen. Somebody like him, who acted as an independent merchant as he traveled across every land, accompanied solely by his beloved dragon, was what one would call a wandering dreamer.

And now, Otto was in the middle of securing his freight inside the wagon of his dragon carriage.

He would transport his procured goods to another land, where he would make a profit by exchanging them for money or other goods. That was the simple way peddling worked, and Otto’s business was no exception to this rule.

Otto stopping by this city in the mountains this time, too, had been with the purpose of promoting the alcohol and other luxury items he had most recently procured. Now, with his business having ended peacefully and his sales having been a huge success, all he could find the will to do was departing, but—

‘Even so, laddie, aren’t you acting terribly absent-minded? Your transactions seem to have gone well in the end, but not even the hay is of good quality.’

“You are pretending to worry about me so that I get you delicious herb? You have become quite glib.”

‘I won’t pretend I don’t have any hidden motives, laddie, but it’s also true that I’m worried about you, you know? Though, of course, there’s nothing better than some good hay.’

“Yes, yes, I get it. Still, that seems to be caused by the crop failure that has been happening lately, so the toasts and luxurious banquets will have to wait for when we are back at the bigger city.”

‘And that’s the reason why you’re so anxious to depart? Suspicious, huh.’

The voice that spoke to Otto doubted his answer. Since they had been together for a long time, she was able to perceive trivial anomalies in him, which made her a reliable, but on the other hand problematic, partner.

In an attempt to not let her notice his internal impatience, Otto raised his voice deliberately,

“There is nothing wrong, really! Anyway, business here is over! ‘Time is money,’ like the Hoshin proverb…”

“—Mister merchant! Are you there, Mister traveling merchant?!”

“…”

Otto’s pretext was effortlessly eclipsed by the resounding, throaty voice of a man.

In both terms of volume and terms of intention, effortlessly.

‘Laddie, that.’

“I know, you do not have to say it, Frufoo.”

With despondency added into his voice, Otto covered his face with his hands as he squatted. If only he could get overlooked by staying huddled here. Without that fleeting hope coming true,

“Oooh! I have found you, Mister traveling merchant! This is good news! A sign of hope!”

Tearing off the wagon’s cover, the other man peeked inside, found Otto, and broke into a smile. The latter did not even get the energy to put into words how wrong it was to peek into someone else’s dragon carriage without permission.

Otto breathed out a sigh of resignation as he stood up reluctantly,

“Uuuh, if I remember correctly, you are…”

“Colin! Colin Lavril! I am the representative of Guineb!”

In contrast with Otto’s apathy, the man who introduced himself as Colin was quite intense.

Judging by his hair that was becoming thin, and his tidy mustache that had a white tint, his age was probably already around sixty; and despite this, his brimming spirit was so healthy that his saliva reached Otto, who was in the deepest part of the wagon.

“Well, Colin-san, what is it that you want from a humble traveling merchant like me…?”

“That is it! To tell the truth, I have a very urgent consultation to make, which is why I was searching for a traveling merchant!”

As he wiped his face with a hand towel, Colin replied avidly to the question that Otto made timidly. However, the fact that he was searching for him had already reached Otto’s ears a while ago.

“His voice could be heard from every part of the city anyway, though…”

“Did you say something?!”

“No, nothing really. Could you have misheard?”

“I see, mishearing! But if we interpret this as a divine omen, it turns out to be an excellent presage, indeed!”

Bringing it to a pretty forced positive conclusion, Colin clenched his fist with immense strength. Then he used his free hand to make a sign towards Otto, who was standing still.

“Well then! It would be of no use to talk in a place as cramped as this one! Let us go to my residence instead! There is an important matter I need to discuss with you there, Mister traveling merchant!”

The option to refuse seemed to no longer exist for Otto. Also, he wanted to avoid having his favorite dragon carriage dirtied by Colin’s saliva during the interrogation. Because, no matter who made fun of it for being cramped, to Otto, it was still the important dragon carriage which he had been moving with for many years.

“My condolences, laddie.”

When he was about to follow after the jubilant Colin, his partner spoke those words to him. The pity in that voice being genuine, Otto sighed deeply.

“And this is why I wanted to depart quickly…”

‘Doing it a few seconds earlier would’ve changed nothing. The problem is that you’ve got pretty bad timing, laddie.’

Without even complaining, Otto raised both hands in resignation.

“Hmm? Mister traveling merchant, may I ask who were you talking to?”

Suddenly, Colin, who had stopped walking, thoroughly surveyed his surroundings with his eyes, and tilted his head. In his eyes, Otto did not seem to be talking to anybody. And his understanding was not actually incorrect.

Because, in Otto's surroundings, there was no 'human' to whom one could talk.

Unfortunately, Otto had no reason to explain the details behind that. So, "No," Otto shrugged his shoulders in response to Colin's doubt.

"I was not talking to anyone. Could it be that you have misheard again?"

"Hmph, so I keep mishearing things… These omens of good luck are non-stop! I can feel hope surging as if from a fountain! Everything looks so promising, Mister traveling merchant!"

Otto thought of prolonged mishearing not as a good omen, but as a sign of an illness or something of the like; but, without particularly getting into the topic, "It seems so," Otto adorned his tired face with a vague smile.

'Good grief…'

Only the light blue-skinned land dragon observed Otto's insincere smile as if lamenting it.

2

'Guineb' was a city located in an inconspicuous area, hidden within the mountains of the southern lands of the Kingdom of Lugunica.

It was said that, originally, it was close to a mine from which magic minerals were extracted, and its urban development was caused by the workers who operated there and their families building their homes. And after that, people had started gathering in that small, which had gradually evolved into the city that it was now.

"However, by the time the city was done developing, the essential veins were already exhausted! My grandfather moved here hoping that it would become the second Costuul, but it seems he ended up disappointed!"

"The Mining City 'Costuul,' right? The everlasting ores there account for a huge part of the kingdom's magic stone industry. As one would expect from the city that is rumored to have been the Dragon's nest."

"Oooh! I see that you are knowledgeable! Just like any man who survives through business ought to be!"

Sitting in front of him was Colin, hurling eulogies at him one by one with his loud voice and saliva. Otto, sitting on the reception sofa, was in the process of dodging both the chatter and his saliva with an insincere smile.

The place where he had been brought to after having his departure interrupted was the best mansion in the city—although its scale was nothing compared to an actual mansion like the ones found in the Capital, it was certainly the best residence in Guineb.

It seemed like Colin had not lied when calling himself the city's representative.

Normally, Otto would have been pretty welcoming of a chance to become close to an influential person in that land; but in this one case, the circumstances were a little different. Therefore, now that he had had enough participation in his small talk, Otto raised his eyebrows and broached the main subject.

"I think that is enough, Colin-san. What is that business you have called me for?"

"Hm."

"As you know, I am a traveling merchant… I am the sort of person who hates, more than anything, to stay in one place for too long without earning a single coin. My negotiations in Guineb are already over. If possible, I would like to cross the mountains as soon as I can, so…"

"—That is it."

When he was already choosing his words at great speed in a desperate attempt to flee from the scene, Otto shut his mouth. Because Colin interrupted his pretext, and the palm of the man's hand was shoved in front of his face.

When Otto fell silent at his rudeness, “That is it,” Colin repeated,

“The consultation I wish to make, Mister traveling merchant, is precisely about mountain-crossing!”

Finally, thought Otto as he tried to keep Colin from discerning the tension in his own mind.

Mountain-crossing—that was, as of now, an inevitable part of the path that one needed to take to arrive in Guineb.

“…”

To travel back and forth to Guineb, which was within the mountains, one had to use the passage that stretched out from the mountain’s base. And on the way there, it was also necessary to cross through the bridge above the river that was on the valley floor; but the condition said bridge was currently in made its utilization impossible. And that meant—

“I guess that you are already aware, Mister traveling merchant, but the latest spell of rain has made the river on the valley floor overflow. Thanks to that, the bridge towards the mountain’s foot drifted away, leaving no method to arrive in the city other than crossing the intricate mountain road!”

Like Colin said, the bridge above the river had drifted away, leaving Guineb in the state of a solitary island.

Still, it was not completely isolated from the outside world either. If one gave up on crossing the river and used the harsh, twisted mountain road, it was possible to travel from the mountain’s base to the city and vice versa.

However, there was no doubt that it would take way more time than crossing the bridge, and that the path was too dangerous. Not many would go to such extents just to attempt to do business at Guineb, where there were no particularly impressing profits to be made.

Having developed within the mountains, Guineb had a certain degree of self-sustainability. Traveling merchants not visiting for a few months would be no matter of life or death. For that reason, it could be concluded that traveling merchants would not be appearing in the city for a while. —And that is where Otto had come in.

“I thought that I would be forced to endure this until the bridge was fixed, but you, Mister traveling merchant, have come with truly perfect timing! You see, although we are completely fine with what we have here, to get luxury items we have no choice other than to request them!”

“This is pretty good luck for both of us, then. Thanks to that, I can feel my pockets full after a long time, so…”

“It sure is! However, Mister traveling merchant, you are a special case! The bridge fell a few days ago, and you were already at Guineb when it happened, which means you took that troublesome mountain road before the bridge fell! Such a meaningless detour for a traveling merchant who hates to waste his own time!”

“…”

“Or could it be that you indeed know it, Mister traveling merchant? The ‘mountain-crossing’ method to arrive in Guineb! Regardless of how precipitous the mountain road is! And without any magic to cross the now bridge-less river!”

With Colin leaning towards him and looking at him with bloodshot eyes as he let his saliva fly, Otto gave a sigh of grief.

—Although his behavior lacked grace, Colin’s inference was, for the most part, correct.

In fact, Otto had decided to trade at Guineb after finding out the bridge had fallen. He had assumed that, in the situation Guineb was right now, the demand for luxury items would be high, and so he had gathered them up with great haste.

And unless Otto had broken through the river that had overflowed because of the rain, then he could not have wasted several days crossing through the precipitous mountain road on foot.

His most recent negotiations had been led to success by some method impossible for everybody but Otto.

“That method is a business secret of mine… Sorry, I cannot reveal it. If this strength is meaningful, it is because only I know it. If I were to disclose it…”

“Understandable! Very understandable! But there is a certain circumstance which makes me need it desperately!”

“Circumstance?”

Otto’s eyes widened, and Colin nodded several times with great intensity.

Then he turned back to look at the parlor’s entrance, and spoke, “Come!” in an unnecessarily loud voice. After that, the door opened, and a man with a pale and slender face timidly made his appearance.

His age seemed to be around five years older than Otto. The man, characterized by a mole next to his nose, gave off an impression of faintheartedness. Then he greeted Otto with a “H-Hello,” barely taking his eyes off the floor.

“This is my son, Arhim! The matter we were discussing is related to him! Hey! Use that mouth of yours and talk to Mister traveling merchant!”

“U-Uuh…”

Grabbing his son by the shoulders, Colin firmly made him sit next to himself. Shrunk in fear of his father’s vigor, Arhim kept alternately looking at Otto and averting his gaze.

An unnecessarily passionate father, and a son who lacked even the necessary energy; the two were each other’s exact opposite.

“So, Arhim-san, I have been told that you have something… a consultation for me.”

“S-So you see… er, at the mountain, uh, Marone is… so, uuuh…”

"—?"

"I have a daughter named Marone! Well, actually, she is my son's fiancée!"

In the end, as Colin could stand this no longer, he began the explanation in Arhim's stead. Since this also brought visible relief to his son's mind, Otto quietly lent an ear to the father's explanation.

The explanation included some derailments, but once it was concisely summarized—

"Arhim-san's fiancée, Miss Marone, was kidnapped by the ruffians settled in the mountain. And you wanted to get aid in order to bring her back…"

"That is right! Of course! Because we could not afford to rely on outsiders, I made an appeal in the city to see if any brave hero volunteered to help with the rescue… but the only result is that now I know that this place is full of cowards! How deplorable!"

"Cowards, you say…"

"Those men took a youthful damsel away! Back when I was young, such a crime would have never been forgiven! We would have gathered the citizens and torn those ruffians to pieces!"

In response to Otto's summary, Colin's face reddened as he called the citizens cowards with disdain.

He felt like the biggest one out of those cowards was the one shrinking next to Colin, but Otto sympathized with his wish to not blame the frightened Arhim or the citizens.

Stories of broke people who took weapons and degraded themselves to become bandits were quite common.

And between people who chose to steal to survive and people who had a home and a job, the readiness to wield a sword was extremely different. Cowardice, too, was a quality necessary to live.

Otto did not think that it was shameful to lead a modest life.

Therefore, he sympathized more with all those people Colin labeled as cowards.

“Even so…”

Otto put his hand on his chin and brooded over the misfortune that the ruffians had brought into Guineb.

Of course, it was indeed an unlucky incident, but Guineb’s contact with the outside world had always been pretty limited, which would make it a perfect hunting ground for bandits. The fact that problems like this one had not arisen until now felt rather miraculous.

Consequently, it would be indispensable to establish countermeasures to deal with these situations in the future.

“Mister traveling merchant! Are you listening?!”

“Eh? Oh, yes, pardon me. I was just thinking about something…”

Otto had no obligation to trouble himself with the defense of a city he did not even live in, but whenever he saw a hole so conspicuous, he could not help but feel the urge to cover it.

He thought of that as his own way to remind himself that, in life, self-preservation was of crucial importance.

“Anyway! This is a huge emergence! Miss Marone was kidnapped two nights ago! If she does not get help as soon as possible, her life will be in danger… and that is where you appeared, Mister traveling merchant, with some unknown method to cross the mountains! If that is not fate, then I do not know what it is!”

“A simple coincidence…”

“If it is not fate, then what is it?!”

His insistence was strong. His face was annoying. Otto shut his mouth at Colin’s force.

Still, leaving aside his animosity towards the coercive Colin, he was genuinely worried about the safety of the woman that had been kidnapped by the ruffians. Otto was not insensitive enough to use self-preservation as an excuse to ignore the suffering of a helpless woman. Colin's plan to form a rescue team was definitely more humane than giving up and leaving her to her own devices.

"…Uuuh."

"So, what do you say, Mister traveling merchant?!"

As Otto oscillated between his sensibility as a person and his instinct as a merchant, that question was thrown at him. However, from the moment he had been called to this mansion, he did not have any choice left as Otto.

If he rejected Colin's proposal, Otto would be remembered as the one who forsook the fiancée of the city representative's son, and he would not be able to do business normally in Guineb ever again.

But if he agreed to Colin's proposal and disclosed everything, he would forsake the advantage that only he had, and that would be a huge loss too.

Therefore, there was only one choice that Otto could make here.

"The method I used to come here, I cannot tell you that."

"Hoh! Mister traveling merchant, will you forsake my innocent daughter…?!"

"But listen to this!"

When Colin's expression turned grim, Otto shoved his hand towards the man's face as if getting his revenge, thoroughly interrupting his noisy voice.

When he saw Colin's surprise, he donned a small smile in an attempt to not give off that impression,

"I will personally send the rescue appeal to the outside. Meanwhile, the citizens will begin the bridge's repair as soon as possible."

And just like that, he corrected the proposal, in order to end up not with huge losses, but with minimum losses.

3

‘Laddie… Come on, you know the one who got manipulated back there was you.’

“Excuse me? I would say it was the best choice I could make if I wanted to keep the damage at the minimum. Even I am aware of how excessive this new baggage I have taken is, you see.”

Sat on the driver’s seat as he held the reins, Otto protested, with visible annoyance on his lips, towards his partner. But to his proposal, ‘Yeah, sure,’ his partner gave an exasperated answer, sounding as if she was already used to this.

“Muu…”

As much as he attempted to look displeased, deep down Otto acknowledged that his partner was right.

Honestly, it was indeed true that he had been thoroughly manipulated. Both as a merchant and in the humanitarian aspect, Otto had been fully duped by Colin; it was that simple.

“I knew it, I should have pretended to not hear anything and departed at once. And thanks to that miscalculation, I got into this trouble… But there is a woman in danger, so, well, you know.”

‘Now that you know that, you can’t just pretend you don’t see it. Laddie, there’s no way you can be a bad person.’

“Well, you see. Even I have an order for what is important to me. And if someone tries to alter that, I will respond. You are also one of those things after all, Frufoo.”

‘Yeah, thank you very much.’

When he heard her apathetic reply, “Muuu…” he complained once again, but the only thing that his partner did was chuckle.

—Right now, just as Colin had requested, Otto was heading towards the closest city to Guineb.

He could collaborate to save a woman, but he could not disclose the information that he had. That was the conclusion, or rather, desperate measure, that the afflicted Otto had reached at the interstice between his human self and merchant self.

Of course, his collaboration was not entirely out of goodwill either. It turned out that he had made the Lavril family promise, in written form, that he would receive preferential treatment whenever he came to do business in Guineb in the future.

So, if one looked at the solid facts, he had closed a deal that, on top of helping somebody else, would also be lucrative for his business. Him still feeling defeated despite all this was probably due to his own lack of generosity.

'Meh, I don't think it's that, I think it's just that they've got you tied by the neck.'

Otto's partner read his mind, making Otto breathe out a sigh.

Behind him, inside the moving carriage's wagon, there was a silhouette that did not belong to his cargo. It was a man cowering and holding his own knees, the one who had had his fiancée stolen, the poor Arhim.

When making the deal with Otto, the one thing Colin had not allowed Otto to reject was this man's company during the journey.

"From the moment your fiancée gets stolen, you're already a failure as the Lavril heir! And if it turned out that, on top of that, you just sat the whole time watching my daughter get rescued, there'll be no way to get your sunken honor back!!"

That was what Colin had stated as he pushed his son from behind.

It was not like he thought that it was not reasonable, but Otto was the one in charge of supervising Arhim during his redemption journey. Despite his strong opposition, in the end, the pressure had left him with no choice other than accepting Arhim's company.

Thanks to that, the ambiance in the dragon carriage was drearier than ever.

Arhim had seldom opened his mouth ever since the journey's beginning. Considering the 'Divine Protection of Wind Break' was active in the carriage, it was most likely not a matter of physical comfort, but of feelings.

"I see that when family matters and woman problems get mixed, the only result is literally always going to be a disaster."

'Now that's quite deep when you say it, laddie. I wonder, laddie, is that girl still anxious for you to return to your hometown so she can burn you at the stake?'

"Just the thought of it makes me feel depressed, so I would rather not think about it."

When he heard her speak of the problem he had left behind in his hometown, Otto grimaced and shook his head sideways.

He was a traveling merchant, obviously, but it was for a different reason that, years ago, he had become unable to go back to the city where his old home was. If he went back, he would cause trouble for his family. And his own life would be at risk too.

"Such absurd circumstances, seriously. But I'm used to it. …It's horrible to get used to these things, isn't it."

"—Who, who are you talking to?"

When that voice suddenly reached him, Otto's shoulders rose, and he turned back. He did and saw Arhim leaning from the wagon into the driver's seat, even though he was holding his own knees a while ago.

"I heard you talking, but there's no here… and, uh, I found that creepy."

Arhim restlessly looked around, puzzlement showing on his face after confirming that there was no one there indeed.

“Aaah, yes; to tell the truth, I have a habit of mumbling quite large monologues.”

“I-Is that so…?”

“You see, when you are a traveling merchant, a big part of life is traveling alone with nobody to have a conversation with. I guess it is just natural for a lot of us to get the habit of talking to the air, like me.”

“…That’s pitiful. Good thing I’m not a merchant or anything.”

His words of compassion made Otto feel the strong blood link between Arhim and Colin. A father and son whose attitudes and behaviors were as different as their natures were similar.

“What is the matter, though? We are still pretty far from the city…”

“I-I need to pee. Can’t we stop over there for a moment?”

“Aaah, I see. That is certainly a problem.”

When it came to bodily functions, it was reasonable even for Arhim to muster his almost nil courage. Being soiled by the father’s saliva and then also being wet by the son would be way too miserable for both the carriage and Otto.

Pulling the rains immediately, Otto parked the carriage at an edge of the mountain road. He saw Arhim descend from the carriage, after saying his thanks, and then head towards a thicket that was away from their path.

‘That’s something he should’ve taken care of before departure.’

“He is not used to traveling. Just let him off, please.”

Showing his exasperated partner a bitter smile, Otto quietly waited for Arhim to come back from that. They still had a long way to go, and it made him heavy-hearted to think that this silent journey would continue for a long while, but—

“H-Hey! Come here for a bit!”

"Hm?"

Interrupting Otto as he was deep in thought, Arhim called. Wondering what was wrong, Otto looked around the forest, from the driver's seat, with strained eyes, but he could not detect Arhim's silhouette.

"Arhim-san? What happened?"

"C-Come here! A bug I've never seen before… b-bit me in a weird place!"

"What do you mean, a weird place… Please give me a break…"

When that distasteful sentence reached his ears, Otto jumped off the driver's seat as he scratched his head. He pushed through the thicket and advanced into its depths, and there, in a location completely separated from the carriage, he could see Arhim's back.

Wondering why anyone would choose a place like that to pee, Otto dropped his shoulders. Getting bit by insects was nothing uncommon when traveling, but getting bit in weird places was, by itself, a huge problem.

"Arhim-san, the place where it bit you… never mind, you do not have to show me. It can become quite serious if it swells, though, so the sooner you tell me—."

It was possible to treat, for now, with the medicine that was packed in the carriage. That was what he tried to tell him.

The next instant.

"—Guh?!"

Otto's sight got greatly blurry when he received that impact. Right after he felt what he thought was grass under his feet, the back of his head was hit by a hard, heavy object.

He let a cry escape and tried to stay firm, but it was of no use. Shook and unable to support the weight of his head, his body tottered. Without even getting the chance to take a defensive stance, he plummeted to the ground.

He hit his face. The pain. The taste of dirt inside his mouth.

“…”

His consciousness faded away. While it faded, Otto thought vaguely.

—I sure hope the place where I fell isn’t near to where Arhim peed.

4

“—You’re awake?”

“…Ueh?”

With his face rubbing against cold fabric, Otto made an inane sound and opened his eyes.

His sight was blurry. After blinking several times, his eyes’ focus gradually lined up with the world, finally allowing Otto to see the person who was in front of him, looking at his face—a red-haired woman.

A woman with bright red hair tied behind her head. Her eyes had an intense brilliance to them, and her pretty face gave off an air of tenacity, but her beauty was clouded by the faint signs of fatigue and the dirtiness of her clothes.

“Wh-Where…?”

“Sh. Be quiet. I don’t want those guys up there to notice.”

The first thing that came out of his thirsty mouth was a hoarse voice.

In response to that sound, the woman put a finger to her lips, and then pulled a water bucket, which was right beside her, towards her. She proceeded to take some water out with her hands and let it dampen Otto's lips as he panted. Thanks to the liquid, which tasted like he was literally absorbing the woman's kindness, Otto slowly came to his senses.

"Thank you, very much. Uh, you are…"

"Slave Number One. Or Captive Princess Number One. You're Number Two. Choose whichever you want."

Even while they were having such a trivial exchange, it was obvious just how desperate their situation was. Hearing Otto reply like that despite said situation made the woman's lips break into a small smile.

"I wasn't expecting a guy with a face like yours to be that tough. I'm Marone. Allow me to welcome you, my esteemed junior slave."

"Such a welcome is not very pleasant to hear upon entrance, senior… Wait, did you just say you are Marone-san?"

"Yeah, that's what I just said."

In front of the puzzled woman, Marone, Otto tried to hold his own head. But sadly, his right arm, which was inconveniently linked to the wall, did not allow him to do so.

Otto turned to look at his right arm, only to find it linked to the wall by a chain, its freedom stolen.

"…This is bad."

"Is it? Don't you think it's better than a collar? After a long time of complaining I got them to treat me better."

"I'm not sure if this is actually a treatment improvement, or a mere stopgap to distract you, Miss… I mean, you're Marone-san, and I'm in this situation, so…"

The fact that his brain worked so ordinarily in a moment like this made him feel bitter.

Inside Otto's mind, the story he had heard from Colin at Guineb and his current situation connected instantly.

Marone being captive, and Otto becoming captive after getting beaten. A situation in which he was anchored to the wall and was called Slave Number Two or Junior Slave. —This was, unmistakably, the ruffians' hideout.

"Now that I look at it in this new perspective… Yes, it's a horrible scene."

After he observed his surroundings with strained eyes, there was a sudden drop in Otto's mood. And that was to be expected, for the place where they were being kept was a prison furnished with metal bars and stone walls.

Dirty fabric, fragments of fine porcelain, and other things of the like were scattered on the cold stone floor. Although a passage stretched out from the other side of the bars, the faded lighting made its end invisible. Still, judging from how cold the air was, he felt like they were trapped in some place below the ground, like a cave or something similar.

"Could it be a passage made to facilitate mining at a now disused mine?"

"Wow, you're smart. So you're just an unlucky guy who got involved with them by pure chance?"

"Aaah, no idea. I really cannot deny that 'unlucky' bit, though."

Feeling his cheeks stiffen at Marone's question, Otto confirmed that there were no human silhouettes in the prison, except for her and himself. For reasons of space, it was hard to imagine that were was another prison nearby, but,

"Excuse me, was I the only one brought here? Or did I come with someone else?"

"It was only you, yeah… Did you come with a friend?"

"Well, we were not close enough for me to call him a friend, but he was not someone I would feel good abandoning, either. …He was a spindly man, taller and older than me.”

“Spindly, older… Any other characteristic?”

While Marone pondered, “Oh, yes,” Otto put his free left hand on his chin.

“Now that I think of it, he had a big mole next to the nose. Also, he looked unhealthy, and that is all I…”

“…Okay, that’s enough. That’s enough, really.”

“—?”

“So that coward came to drop someone who didn’t even know a thing about all this, didn’t he—!!”

“Huuuh—?!”

Marone’s reddened, angry face and loud bellow made Otto widen his eyes in shock.

Otto was witnessing such insanity from the same person who, a while ago, had told him to stay silent. Otto’s consequent surprise was considerably big too, so their voices ended up producing a colossal echo in the passage.

“Hey, don’t you think your impulsivity could have caused us a lot of trouble?!”

“Haaah, haaah… Sorry. I should learn to manage my anger. I’m still a novice at this senior slave thing, okay?”

“I am sure your aptitude as a slave is not the problem! Wait, what the…?”

Marone apologized for her blunder with her eyes cast downward, and Otto tried to inquire about the meaning of her words. However, he was interrupted by the sound of multiple footsteps that came close—which belonged to the men of vulgar appearance who appeared on the other side of the prison.

Coarse smiles showed on their faces as they clapped when they saw Otto awake.

“So you’re finally awake, lil’ slave Number Two.”

“…That nickname was not some prank by Marone-san?”

“It’s the tradition or something, you see. Though it’d be great if it could just quickly rot and go extinct along with these scums.”

“That’s our Number One, as full of life as always.”

As they whistled, the men laughed Marone’s invective off. They were a group of bandits, every single one of them having a slovenly appearance and an unrefined attitude, so simple that they could very well be characters from a picture book.

There was no doubt that they were the bandits he had heard about in Guineb. A disused tunnel getting made into their hideout was, considering the way the city of Guineb had developed, very ironic.

“If we ignore the lack of sunlight, living here might not actually be that bad, right?”

“You heard that?! It’s a good thing Number Two doesn’t know when to shut up! ‘Cause you know, it’s too hard to get any information out of them when they’re tight-lipped. And those guys ain’t even fun to torture.”

“What happened to my land dragon and my carriage? I think they were parked nearby.”

Paying no attention to the bandits’ mockery, Otto voiced what was currently his biggest concern.

It would have been absurd for them not to notice that Otto’s dragon carriage was parked near the mountain road. Of course, he would also expect his carriage and cargo to be seized. He did not think they had any reason to kill a land dragon that was docile towards people, though.

“Relax. Your business tools, your fortune, everything’s safe with us.

As for your land dragon, it looks like she doesn't love you anymore now that you're a slave. She turned her back on you just like that, and now she's workin' for us. I've always wanted a dragon helper, so it's all perfect."

"Is that so? That's what matters…"

He bit his lip in frustration as he cast his eyes downward, and the men laughed, making fun of his bad loser attitude.

On the receiving end of that, Otto masked the strong ache in his chest. The situation had already gotten pretty bad by now, but there was still something that he needed to verify. So he asked—

"—What happened to the man I was with?"

"Oh?"

"I refuse to believe you were so absorbed in me and my carriage you did not notice him."

He wanted to confirm Arhim's safety, since he was not here. However, Otto was having very pessimistic thoughts about this. He could not be seen inside the prison. If he had been caught alive, he should have been here, regardless of whether he would be treated as a slave or not. And yet, he was not.

But the men looked at each other and, with incredible ease, disproved Otto's worst guess.

"Aaah, that dude. The man you were with! If you're talkin' 'bout him, we just let him go. By this time he's probably back at the city as if nothin' happened, and gettin' comforted by his noisy father."

"…You let him go?"

"Yeah, since he gave us a present. He was so scared. Even we can be merciful sometimes, you know? Ain't that right, guys?!"

In response to the man's dramatic expression, the surrounding others cheered in approval.

But Otto was not feeling it. The men had freed Arhim, that was what they said. They had simply freed a person who had seen their faces and knew of their crimes.

What was the meaning of that?—When he arrived at that conclusion, Otto was aghast.

“…Arhim-san was your accomplice?”

“Don’t call him our accomplice! Be a little more elegant and call it a cooperative relationship, slave Number Two!”

The affirmation that supported Otto’s guess overlapped with the sublime burst of laughter coming from the men.

He had accompanied him during the journey in the carriage, made him stop the carriage halfway, pretending he was going to pee, and then he had lured him into the thicket; everything had been done for two purposes: sealing a hindrance’s mouth and acquiring a new slave.

That man had artfully manipulated him. His biggest miscalculation had been to think of Arhim as nothing more than a timid coward. Now he could not laugh at Colin anymore.

“Well, stay like that for a while. We think our time around here’s already runnin’ out. For now, just enjoy everything your temporary slave lives have to offer until then.”

As if he could see the silent Otto’s stupefaction, the man mocked him as he rang the metal bars.

“Enjoy what? Next time you get close, I’ll bite your fingers or whatever into a thousand pieces!”

“Oh, Number One, you’re sooooo scary. I guess you’re still hurt ‘cause of that man ditchin’ you.”

Leaving behind those frivolous words, the men left the two slaves behind as they moved away from their cell.

Until the sound of their footsteps became inaudible, Otto and Marone said nothing.

During that time, the passage's lighting faded, letting the faint darkness spread over the cold prison once again.

5

"First of all, that man and I weren't engaged or anything."

"Oh, I see, what else…?"

To the disproportionate disclosure of facts, Otto reacted weakly, with a pitiful expression and voice.

A while after being mocked by the bandits, Otto had talked to Marone inside the faint darkness, thus beginning a mutual information exchange with the purpose of getting to know their circumstances.

Over the course of it, they had talked about the request Otto had received at Guineb, and they eventually brought up the topic of Arhim and Marone's relationship; but the revelation she suddenly dropped was way too much for Otto to process.

Just what was the truth and what was a lie, and how dark was the city of Guineb?

"So, is Colin-san conspiring with Arhim too? Are both father and son collaborating with the ruffians near the city and preying upon the residents?"

"Hey, I don't think the situation is as hopeless as you put it. Colin-san may not realize he has a distasteful habit of never listening to others, but he's not one to get involved in twisted stuff."

"Well, he certainly did not seem to be a very good actor…"

That person, put in kind words, was not hypocritical; and put in harsh words, he was like a fair of malicious sincerity.

Now that Marone herself denied Colin's involvement, Otto wondered if Arhim's individual crime—which was actually not individual because he collaborated with the ruffians, was truly one.

“But, in that case, how do you explain the contradiction between Colin-san’s statements and the facts?”

“Hmm. Well, this is gonna sound weird, but look, aren’t I a beauty?”

“I find it annoying when people praise themselves with such incredible frankness, but it is true. You are a beauty.”

“So, what if Arhim thought having a beauty as his fiancée would help him avoid his father’s mockery? Considering what kind of father-son relationship they have, it makes sense.”

“No, no, that can’t be…”

When he said that, Otto remembered what he had seen of their relationship and shut his mouth.

Colin took every chance he had to steal his son’s right to make decisions. Maybe that had become unbearable, even for somebody as submissive as Arhim. However, him sacrificing Otto and Marone to keep his pretensions was probably something Colin wanted to avoid.

“You see, some days ago, Arhim took me to the forest saying he had something to tell me. I knew the bandits were in the mountain, and more than two girls had been kidnapped already, so I didn’t want to…”

“Hey, hey, hey, wait. Please wait.”

Information Otto could not afford to let slide came up, and thus, Marone replied to Otto’s interruption with a “What?” and a displeased face.

“Uh, Marone-san, you were not the first one to be kidnapped by the bandits?”

“Of course not. There were a lot more people. When I got here, I was slave Number Two. …Do you get what that means?”

“Th-The numbers have advanced…?”

It was not hard to imagine what had happened to the previous Number One and the rest. Once a young woman was caught by the ruffians, her fate was either to become a plaything or to be sold off as a slave.

“Don’t worry. They haven’t laid a single finger on me. …I’m high-quality, so they can sell me at an equally high price, they say.”

“…”

“Also, it seems those guys have something to ask you. That’s what I heard when they brought you here. They need your collaboration to cross the mountains safely, I think.”

“…Colin-san and Arhim were the only ones supposed to know about that, though.”

“My condolences.”

Producing a loud sound with the chains that restrained her as she spoke, Marone made Otto’s bad luck reach the limit. Still, thanks to that, he was able to make out the whole situation.

At first, he had found it suspicious. Despite the fact that it had everything that a scoundrel would feel attracted to, Guineb had, miraculously, never met with misfortune until now—and the reason was no miracle. It was just that, until now, everyone in the city had been closing their eyes to the outrage and pretending that everything was fine.

“But Colin-san actually took action this time. —Could it be that the fact that his son’s fiancée was kidnapped by the bandits made his patience give out?”

“To begin with, it was that very same son who handed his fiancée over to the bandits, but whatever. Was he that scared of his father seeing through his pretensions or something? …And now even you’re pretty deep into this embroil, Number Two.”

“It is the same embroil you are in, Marone-san.”

Everything had originated from the discord between a father and a son, the latter, who had a hoard of immature grudges inside him, using the city's most beautiful woman as a convenient lie for the sake of his own pretensions. And then there was Otto, a poor victim of the circumstances.

"…Is this seriously the pinnacle of my bad luck?"

Seeing Marone in this embroil was pitiful too, but it would never be the same degree of pitiful that his own case was.

When he thought he had found a sales plan that was perfect and exclusive for him, all of his earnings, including his dragon carriage, had been taken from him, and now the only thing awaiting him was a life crisis and a slave status—

"Hey, chill, no need to be so pessimistic. I'm sure there's good things in life too. Who knows, maybe we'll get lucky and someone'll come to help us."

"Help us, the unfortunate ones who ended up dragged into a problem caused by someone else's pretensions? Who would?"

"Uh, a traveling knight that happens to pass by?"

A rather wonderful thought, yes, thought Otto, admiring the strength of Marone's heart.

Marone, whose time in this prison had surely been way longer and more severe than Otto's, had not lost a single fragment of the spirit she had back when chains were not binding her.

That was a virtue. A precious virtue that shone as brightly as a miracle in a city like Guineb.

"But I am a merchant."

—Pessimism, that was all he needed. In business there was neither 'absolute' or 'relief.'

Therefore, Otto, pessimistic as he was, kept thinking about the worst of the worst one time after another.

Somebody coming to help them, something so convenient was not going to happen. Because what a traveling merchant ought to trust was not fate, but the fortune that they held firmly in hand, and nothing more.

6

“Still, we were also pretty damn lucky to have caught a ‘protege’ in the end!”

Before Otto, who was tied in the dragon carriage’s wagon, one of the bandits spoke as he laughed loudly.

The morning after that conversation at the prison, Otto had been loaded into his own carriage as cargo, and now he was being threatened by the men to guide them safely across the mountains.

Even though he had only spent one day captive, the sunlight and air from the outside felt extremely yearned for. —But he did not even have time to fully experience that pleasure.

Satiated with their misdeeds in Guineb, the bandits planned to cross the mountains and move to their next hideout before Colin sent an advanced subjugation team out. For that purpose they were using Otto’s carriage and land dragon, with him and Marone being treated as booty.

“Hey, Number Two. Can’t you do something about this situation with your divine protection?”

Inside the wagon, Marone asked in a low voice. From the bandits’ perspective, their treatment of Marone, who was the best article in their booty, was not bad. At least, it was a thousand times better compared to Otto’s, for he had been sloppily tied and thrown into the wagon. However, that was just another facet of their difference in luck.

“I guess it depends on the definition of ‘something.’ Do you have any rough expectations?”

Borrowing Marone’s hand, Otto put his back against the wall as he tried everything he could to sit. When she heard Otto’s words, “Let’s see," Marone pondered,

"The next instant, all the villains will be utterly smashed to bits… Something like that."

"What kind of things are you expecting from my divine protection?!"

"Don't get me wrong. I'm not expecting things from your divine protection, I'm expecting things from you, Number Two."

"From someone whose name you don't even know?! How?!"

Otto raised his voice in response to Marone's words. Marone looked at him and donned a small smile, but that smile was ephemeral and their exchange was hollow.

The hope Marone put into words did not represent any serious expectation about Otto's divine protection either. She was simply resisting to keep the despair before her eyes from gnawing at her heart.

"Number Two, your divine protection is the 'Divine Protection of Guidance,' right? That's what you said, I think."

"—Yes, that is right. Unfortunately, my divine protection is not powerful enough to smash my opponents to bits."

The 'Divine Protection of Guidance'—that was the trump card Otto had shown the bandits.

A way to cross the mountains that was not using the fallen bridge nor the steep mountain road—since Arhim had told the bandits that Otto happened to know that, he would not be able to feign ignorance. Therefore, before they resorted to torture, Otto himself had decided to reveal that he was a 'protege.'

Divine protections were blessings bestowed upon people at birth—in general, they were the kind of superpowers one could call blessings.

Having one of those rare powers that were bestowed upon one person in a thousand was like having a special talent that nobody else had. Their effects functioned in a way different from how magic did, and a lot of them had effects that surpassed the limits of human understanding.

The divine protection that Otto had exposed was also irrefutably an ability outside human understanding.

“It is quite difficult to use. This divine protection is not as omnipotent as its name might suggest.”

“But it’s thanks to that divine protection that you were able to go from the prison to the exit while blindfolded, isn’t it? That’s impressive.”

Whether his words were humility or self-deprecation, Marone hurriedly advocated for Otto.

Marone was talking about the moment when Otto had demonstrated his divine protection in front of the bandits.

Otto had to prove that his presence would be necessary for the bandits’ escape when crossing the mountains. There, Otto had explained his divine protection, and, in order to demonstrate the effects of the ‘Divine Protection of Guidance,’ he had traversed an entire intricate tunnel, blindfolded all the way through.

“The shortcut we will take is not the mountain road you know, but I will let you be the judge of its effectiveness.”

“Besides, now that they know you’re a ‘protege,’ they aren’t gonna kill you. They were rejoicing because ‘proteges’ sell well, actually.”

“Yaaaay, I’m so glad to have been born as a ‘protege’—is not what I would say! To begin with, if I did not have a divine protection, I would not have been caught in this.”

Although popular belief stated that divine protections were always convenient, there were a lot of hardships that only ‘proteges’ understood. And the nature of those hardships could not be understood even by fellow ‘proteges.’

—The holder of a divine protection for hearing too much and the holder of a divine protection for seeing too much had very different tribulations.

Therefore, Otto decided to dodge Marone's words with nothing more than a vague smile. She did not say that out of malice, and it was true that he was still alive thanks to his divine protection.

"If I did not have a divine protection, huh…?"

"Hm? You said something, Number Two?"

"No, just something trivial. Leaving that aside, may I ask for one thing?"

History had no records of a situation being solved by complaining. So Otto hid what he murmured earlier behind a bitter smile and asked a single favor of Marone.

"…"

When she heard the petition, Marone's eyes widened, and she tried to ask about Otto's intentions, but,

"Come on, time to go! Make way, slaves! We can't all fit in there if it's too cramped!"

As saliva flew, the bandits got into the wagon. In that instant, Otto and Marone were separated, and the wagon was dominated by the turbulent men's presence and stink.

One of the bandits got onto the driver's seat, took the reins and ordered the land dragon to start running. The land dragon showed signs of hesitation for an instant, but soon the carriage started moving slowly.

"Well, you're in charge of guidin' us, Number Two. You're the only one we can rely on. And if you can't, Number One's gonna have a very bad time."

Thrusting a knife towards Marone, he threatened him with a coarse smile and barbaric attitude. In response, Otto obeyed, using his divine protection to direct the carriage's course towards a shortcut.

"Good thing you're cooperative. Thanks to that we didn't have to go thru any complicated process."

"Complicated process, you mean…"

"I'm talkin' 'bout some light torture. Pacifist meetings make my heart hurt, don't you see?"

The man beside him said casually as he brought a stained club to the palm of his hand. When he looked at it, the club's tip was tinted dark red, giving him a rough idea of what their pacifism was like. Anyway—

"Head to the right from here, please. After advancing a little, we will enter a path that looks quite narrow, but it is just wide enough for the carriage to barely pass, so you can go ahead without stopping."

Before he was called from the driver's seat, Otto contributed showing them the way by own initiative. When they heard Otto point several paths hidden in nature, the bandits, who were a bit doubtful at first, finally comprehended the power of the 'Divine Protection of Guidance,' and started recognizing him as a 'protege.'

"Damn tho, this guy really turned out to be a great find. That coward finally did somethin' useful."

Maybe because calm surged up within his mind, one of the men spoke contentedly. Otto easily guessed who the word 'coward' in that phrase was referring to.

"What was the cooperative relationship you all had with Arhim-san like?"

"What? You wanna know 'bout the guy who sold you? I'll tell you then."

Seeing negative emotions in Otto's gaze, the man continued as he chuckled to himself.

"After we messed with that city a few times, the guy came to our hideout along with a woman. Then he said he could bring us women regularly in exchange for us not doing stuff in the city."

"…So you accepted that offer?"

"No, idiot. As if women were enough. We told him to send alcohol and food too. And that's how things with that guy started. Looks like we actually made his old man angry this time, tho."

To summarize, Arhim's dealings with the bandits were a choice made by him, and they were going fairly well until the problem with Marone.

—To have peace in exchange for the citizens' sensibility, that was basically it.

"That is all I wanted to know."

When he showed his understanding through a nod, "Oh, yeah?" the man ceased his boasting. Thanking him for that, Otto took a glance at the side, where Marone was.

"…"

Marone's face, after lending an ear to the talk and finding out the truth behind the town she had grown in, looked pale.

Now she knew the truth, but that was not necessarily comforting. Furthermore, the emotion called comfort only meant something for those who remained after the tragedy. For Otto and Marone, there was no future.

But the condition for that ending to arrive was that things continued as they were currently.

'—'

The bandits around Otto did not have any reaction in particular to the strange sound that came out of his lips. They had been informed that this was an absolutely necessary process for Otto to use the 'Divine Protection of Guidance.' It was a necessary ritual for Otto to get information from his divine protection. —That was the lie that he had told them.

"—Number One."

Immediately after the strange voice ceased, Otto spoke with human words. When she heard that call, Marone's shoulders went up. There was a promise they had previously made.

This road was the designated place, and 'Number One' was the key word—

"—Gh."

Clenching her teeth, Marone grabbed the chain linked to her arm and clung to the wall. Her behavior surprised the bandits, but Otto strongly coiled the chain that linked him to the wall around his wrist.

And before the bandits could grow suspicious of such behavior—

'—Laddie, don't you dare die, please!'

Right after the balanced mix of trust and recklessness that was his partner's voice, a violent impact rocked the carriage, knocking it over and throwing out, along with the men's screams, everything that was not secured inside the wagon.

—In that rift of the forest, all of them fell to the bottom of the valley, heads facing downwards.

7

"How did we get saved in the end…?"

In the treatment center's waiting room, Marone wondered, a bandage around her head.

Her confusion was justified. However, Otto—severely wounded, with bandages coiled around his head and neck, and one of his arms hanging from a sling, shrugged his unharmed shoulder.

“Well, I think we do not need to worry about such trivial things. There wasn’t any traveling knight making a gallant entrance, but we’re alive, so not everything is bad.”

“I don’t know, Number Two, I kinda get the feeling you’re messing around…”

“By chance, since we were linked to the wagon, we stayed there, but the people who weren’t were unfortunately thrown out. And right next to a precipice, too. They definitely had no luck.”

“I think I remember that, everything was spinning, right? But, hmmm…”

Seeing the incomprehension on Marone’s face, Otto donned a bitter smile.

The two were at a treatment center located in the city in the mountain’s foot, their place of destination. Like Otto declared, he had successfully guided them across the mountain. However, in that place, none of the people who supposedly accompanied him during the mountain crossing were present; the only one there was the woman who joined him midway, the senior slave—Marone, who was not a slave anymore.

“Marone-san, while you were receiving treatment, I went to do some small reports on my own. I reported that the bandits were using the tunnel, and also that Arhim was secretly collaborating with them.”

“…So, will they send the kingdom’s army to Guineb?”

“I do not think it will become a large-scale thing, but an official investigation will be done. Arhim will not be able to make any excuses, so he should get arrested, no doubt about it.”

As soon as the broken bridge was fixed, an investigation would begin in Guineb. It was possible for Arhim to flee before that if he used the steep mountain road, but he probably did not have the courage nor the willpower to do so.

Although Arhim was the one directly responsible for the slave trading, the origin of his deviation had been the discord between him and Colin. The Lavril house was in a desperate position in Guineb. Even if that was not the case, it was still the city that had allowed its own women to become sacrifices. A mere apology would never be enough to fix everything.

“By the way, Marone-san, you also have the choice to join the investigation and return to Guineb…”

“Ufufufu, hell no.”

“Exactly what I thought.”

It was a fact that, whether Arhim was arrested or not, not many in the city would want to get involved with her. Not wanting any part in such a situation, Marone firmly stretched her back as she stood up.

“It’s all right. I don’t have any relatives, nor a family that’d get sad because of me not being there. This was an excellent chance… a new beginning.”

“Now that optimism is too impressive coming from a person who almost got sold against her will by some insignificant men.”

“I know, right? Number Two and junior slave, you really should respect your senior a bit more.”

“Yes, sure. Well, there is something I would like to gift my Number One and senior.”

In response to the surprised Marone’s “Eh?” Otto showed the leather bag that he had been hiding behind his back. Taking it instantly, Marone peeked into that heavy bag, and when she saw what was inside, she was rendered speechless.

“This is…”

“To tell the truth, it seems like there was a huge bounty on the bandits we were with. Their identities were discovered thanks to a few utensils that remained in the wagon. So, basically, even though it was an accident, we contributed to their annihilation… and this is the reward money from that.”

“…”

“Oh, but considering the individual merits, it cannot be split in equal halves! I reserved the right to take a slightly bigger part. My carriage needs repairs, too, so I need enough money for that.”

Talking fast, Otto gave a justification for his injustice. Regardless of whether his words were true, the quantity that he gave Marone sufficed, it was enough for a woman to find a new life.

“That was very terrible, the worst experience… but both you and I earned something. Do you see it, Marone-san? I was able to elude a deficit, and you, Marone-san, have completed your preparations for a new start. Furthermore, despite everything, we’re alive!”

“…That’s right, we’re alive. We were saved. That alone should be enough.”

“Indeed, or, in economic terms, this is what I’d call a surplus… uh.”

When he was joking with an eye closed, Otto’s throat was blocked by surprise.

The cause was the arms that surrounded his neck and back. In front of Otto, with her face red from an intense emotion, Marone surrounded him with her arms, and then she pulled Otto towards her plump body, embracing him.

He felt a little disconcerted. But Otto immediately noticed that she was trembling.

“Please take very good care of yourself. I shall be praying for your prosperity in the future, senior.”

“Thank you, Number Two… No.”

Separating her face from him, Marone shook her head sideways, a few tears on her eyes. And then, she asked a question.

“What’s your real name?”

To that question, Otto smiled, and answered.

“—Just call me Number Two, senior.”

8

With a piercing sound, the dragon carriage, which had been previously applied makeshift repairs, slowly advanced on the highway.

‘Still, laddie, that was a terrible way to show off.’

“Do not say it, please. I know that, and I am reflecting on it a lot too…”

From the driver’s seat, Otto hung his head and sighed. The one who sighed too when she saw Otto was his partner: his land dragon, Frufoo, whose evident exasperation was visible on her usually inexpressive face.

As always, Frufoo looked in a pitying way at his master, who had just gone through a series of misfortunes and calamities,

‘What do you mean you got reward money? Every single one of those guys fell down the valley, and I’m pretty sure there’s nothing that can reveal their identities. How do you even get a single coin from that?’

“Uuuuh…”

“And as if that wasn’t enough, you’re fully aware your latest profits and your cargo have all gone down the drain, but somehow that doesn’t stop you from giving half of the savings hidden under the wagon to some girl you probably won’t see again… Laddie, are you an idiot?”

“I do not believe I am an idiot, but… am I an idiot?”

“You’re a huge idiot.”

While he conversed with the merciless Frufoo using his ‘Divine Protection of Soul of Language,’ Otto looked up at the sky.

A big part of the story he had told Marone at the treatment center was an invention of his. Of course, it was true that an investigation about the bandits and Arhim's case was going to be made in Guineb, but that one part about his profits and the reward money was a bunch of lies.

All the profits he had made in Guineb had fallen down the valley along with his cargo and the bandits, and their recovery had been impossible. He had not lost the savings he used to hide under the wagon's floor out of stinginess, but he had gifted a good part of it to Marone, so he was not that far from going bust.

"But, wouldn't I have nightmares if I forsook a person who has done nothing wrong…?"

'Laddie, that's exactly what you said when we got involved in this.'

He had said that, indeed. That he would have nightmares was what he said as he got dragged into embroils, and that he would have nightmares was also what he said as he suffered great losses at the last moment. Consistent from the very beginning to the very end, it was due to this tendency that Otto kept suffering losses.

From the moment he had exposed the Lavril house's defects, it was guaranteed that his business would no longer receive any special treatment in Guineb. This time, Otto had certainly done nothing more than letting his time, business opportunities, and profits go to waste.

"Could it be that my only profit was being thanked by Marone-san for helping her?"

'Hahaha, laddie. Being satisfied with that sounds so knightly.'

"You are joking! Don't you see that I am a pure merchant from head to toe?!"

With unpleasantness showing on his face, Otto directly denied Frufoo's remark.

Otto did not comprehend those creatures known as knights, at all. Nor would he ever be able to.

“I feel like meeting one would be problematic. Plus, I do not feel like associating with them, either.”

‘Aaah, you said it. Now we know soon you’re going to get involved with a knight or something and have a very bad time.’

“Could you stop making my future out to be so dark?!”

His partner’s unpleasant prediction made Otto’s voice crack. He was not joking. Otto wanted to be successful as a pure merchant. And for that reason, he wanted to avoid trouble as much as possible.

“Isn’t there some place where we can find a strategy to make huge profits, with guaranteed safety and no risk factors?”

Aware that such a thing was not only oneiric, but straight up fantasy, Otto said it. Hearing that, Frufoo expressed her tiredness by lowering her head,

‘Laddie, as long as you’re you, something that wonderful won’t happen. —But I think you’re fine just the way you are, laddie.’

“What does that mean?”

‘After all, in any case, laddie, when you get your own store, you won’t have a reason to travel anymore, and you won’t have a job either. Please realize your dream as calmly as you can, laddie.’

“What does that even mean?!”

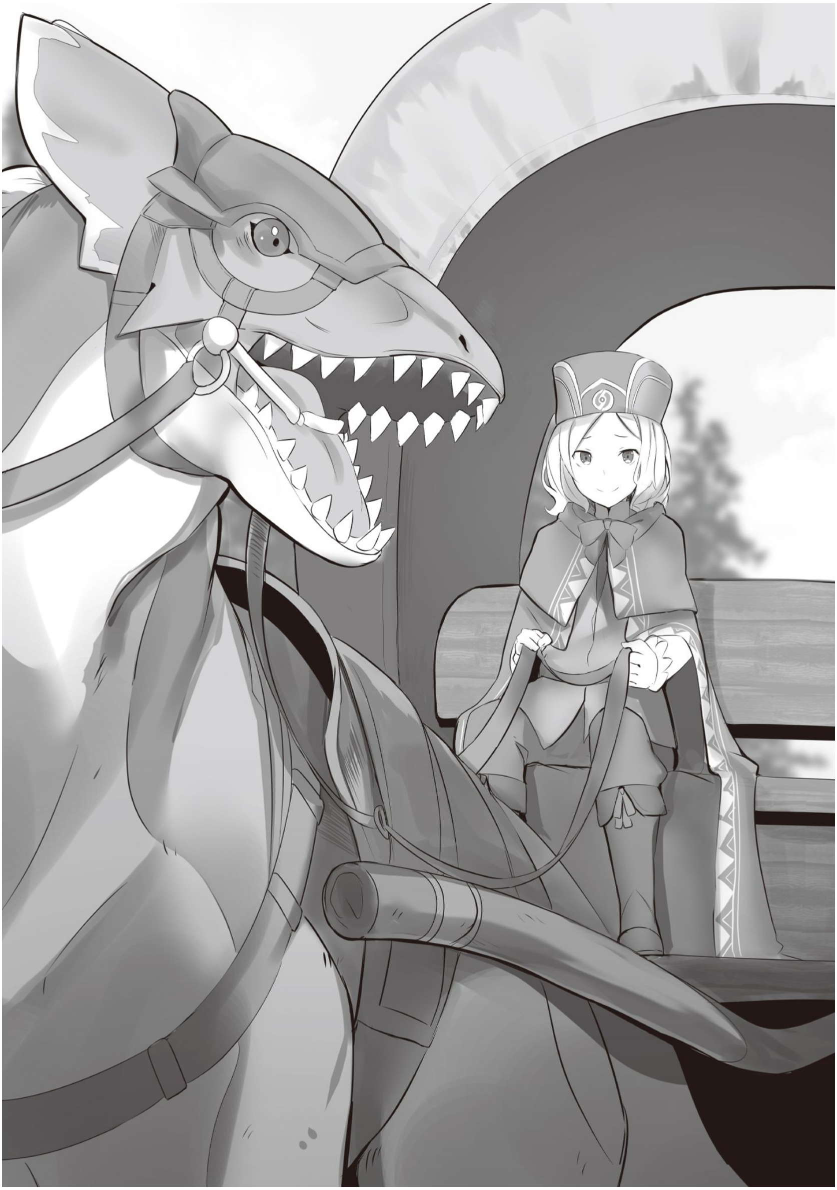
Higher and higher, his cry kept on echoing until it reached the sky.

Hearing that, Otto’s beloved dragon’s thick throat vibrated with a grandiose laugh.

With that laugh, she said.

‘Well then, let’s keep trying to make your dream come true until the end of time, laddie.’

END



Bonus Short Stories

A Foolish Teatime in April

“So, back where I’m from, once a year there’s a day when you’re allowed to tell lies.”

“There you go again, Subaru, you’re always making up things like that.”

As Subaru noted that with a raised finger, Emilia brought a hand to her mouth and smiled.

It was a scene in the early afternoon, on a day at Roswaal manor.

With most of the servant work finished up, everyone but Roswaal (who was too busy) gathered together for a little break before preparing for the evening, and exchanged pleasant conversation.

As they sat, the subject of Subaru’s hometown (the world he was originally from) was brought up…

“Nah, nah, that part actually isn’t a lie. It really exists, it’s called ‘April Fool’s’. It’s a day for plotting when, just for this one day, anyone can say this, that, or the other thing to try and trick someone else.”

“I don’t see the meaning, you know. I can’t imagine a reason it would be necessary to do that, I suppose.”

Sampling her tea at the edge of the dining hall’s main table, Beatrice was terribly unwilling to accept the idea.

Perhaps as a result of Subaru’s persistent invitations, she had recently begun to show up quite often for these break time snacks, but even then the little girl worked to maintain a subtle sense of distance.

Regardless, Subaru wagged a finger left and right with a “Tsk, tsk, tsk” in response to what she pointed out.

“Don’t stop thinking, Beako. Now see, this kind of event always has a hidden meaning. For example, by creating a single day where you tolerate lies, you're more likely to value the honest time you spend with the people who matter to you, or some kind of moral of the story like that…"

"If they're important to you, shouldn't you value them every day, anyways?"

"You should, but if I don't disprove that point here, that's the end of the conversation, isn't it?!"

What Emilia said as she tilted her head was certainly true, but if he agreed then the topic ended there. It wasn't that he'd become addicted to it after the snow festival, but Subaru was actually fairly enthusiastic about importing events from his old world into the new one. …He was fairly sure it wasn't just a lingering attachment to his old world.

In response to Subaru, a girl raised her hand with an enthusiastic "Yes!".

"Oh, Rem, I can count on you to believe what I'm saying, right?"

"Of course. If it's Subaru-kun's words, Rem can believe any out-of-the-blue words, even if they seem like a dream. Even if everyone else in the world were to abandon you!"

"That means you don't believe in April Fool's itself, doesn't it?!"

As the girl, Rem, strongly affirmed her support for him, Subaru's shoulders sagged in frustration at her words. When he did that, Rem's older sister Ram asked "And so" with an icy tone.

"What is it you're trying to say, Barusu? If there's a day when it's alright to lie, then that would be Barusu the Liar's time to shine?"

"Barusu the Liar… that sounds like words from the title of a children's story… But, it's not like that; maybe we should give April Fools a try?"

"'April Fools'… We should try telling lies, you mean?"

“Yeah, yeah! It’s like you have to try things out, or like a try-before-you-buy, or like a two-week free trial, or something.”

“I’m sorry, I’m not really sure what you’re saying.”

As Subaru’s words piled up rapidly, Emilia didn’t seem to be ready to go along with it. Showing her agreement with Emilia, Ram snorted with a ‘Ha!’.

“As expected, that ridiculous suggestion is so very you, Barusu. By the way, Ram and Rem are actually triplets.”

“Now you’re getting into the rhythm of it and telling lies, nee-sama. Triplets, there’s no way that could…”

“…”

“What?! Why aren’t you saying anything? It’s a lie, right? C’mon, Rem, it’s a lie, right?”

Shaken by Ram holding her silence with a serious look, Subaru was flustered and looked to Rem for confirmation. In response to his query, Rem touched a finger to her lips.

“Rem isn’t sure. The possibility that Rem has a sister besides nee-sama… aagh!”

“R, Rem, what’s wrong?!”

“Nothing, it’s just, the moment Rem thought she might have a sister besides nee-sama, her heart ached…”

“Hey, hey, there’s no way you need to worry about…agah!”

Seeing Rem hold her hands to her chest, Subaru ran to be by her side, but was blown away by Ram. Then, gently holding her little sister’s shaking shoulders, Ram gently stroked Rem’s head.

“It’s alright, Rem. Ram has only one cute little sister. She only lost sight of things for a moment due to Barusu’s cunning trap… he absolutely will not be forgiven for that.”

“That’s quite a stray bullet there!”

“I’m sorry, nee-sama, for making you worry. …It’s just that the privilege of being your little sister is something that Rem wants all to herself. Sorry for being selfish.”

“It’s fine. You’re cute, Rem, the cutest in the world.”

“Nee-sama…”

With the sisters hugging each other close, while it wasn’t much fun to be pushed to the side, Subaru praised himself for at least contributing to the beautiful sisterly love.

“Hoho, those two really do care for each other. Oh, but I’m glad. When I was wondering if the two of them actually were triplets, I was rea~lly surprised.”

“That’s for sure. If they were, I guess she’d be named Rim or Rum? I already know a Rom so I’d like to stay away from that one.”

“I don’t think that names are something that you can change that easily, though…”

As Subaru sat with his arms folded, Emilia gave him a wry smile, but soon she let out an ‘Ah’, and her eyes shone. Then, with a somehow mischievous air, she stared at Subaru.

“…? What’s up, Emilia-tan? You’re so cute when your eyes sparkle.”

“To tell the truth, Subaru… I’m a quadruplet.”

“Mmmm~! You’ve learned from your predecessors and added improvements, but it’s lacking in originality!”

He wasn’t that concerned about whether it was original or not, but the part of Emilia that was overly-honest was showing up too much in her lie, so it would be nice if she gave it more of a twist.

A twist that wasn’t just thinking small, like changing triplets to quadruplets.

After Subaru's comment, Emilia realized her mistake and her head drooped.

"I see, that's too bad… Ah! I've got it! Puck! It's Puck! Puck is a quadruplet!"

"Mmmm~! What you're thinking is just a little bit off from what I was trying to point out! But I'll commend your effort…"

"Tha, that's something I can't just overlook, you know! Is that true, I suppose?"

"Someone fell for it that I hadn't expected to."

As Emilia achieved progress at a dizzying tempo that one might compare to a turtle's pace, the plausible-sounding lie that was woven by the sound of her silver-bell voice caught Beatrice hook, line, and sinker.

For someone who usually seemed so intelligent, she was a girl who's cuteness was immediately visible at times like this.

"Hoho, were you tricked? That was actually a lie. There's only one Puck, not four of them."

"Ack, to think you were deceiving Betty… It seems underestimating this girl would be more unwise that I thought, you know…!"

"It's a battle of wits between young girls."

For both Emilia, who was gloating victoriously, and Beatrice, who was wallowing in defeat, in truth, it was a battle that neither side understood properly.

Cutting to the heart of it, both of the young girls—strictly speaking, it probably wasn't accurate to call Emilia a young girl, but still, at any rate, one couldn't help but smile at how the two of them looked.

"You know, it seems like April Fools is getting more results than I'd expected."

“…Lia and Betty are getting along well, and the maid girls are getting along too, after all. Mhmm, mhmm, following on the heels of the snow festival, you’ve got quite a way with things, don’t you, Subaru.”

“Oh, hey, Puck.”

As Subaru whispered to himself, Puck, a grey-furred cat spirit, plopped down on his shoulder.

Puck, too, looked back and forth over the same scene that Subaru was seeing.

“But, I wouldn’t want you to be teaching her too many bad habits. I want Lia to grow up healthy and adorable, forthright and graceful, after all.”

“It’s not like I’m teaching her to just tell lies at random, without looking at the situation. Also, it’s kinda cute when she’s tricking and being tricked by the people who are close to her, isn’t it? Not to mention, you need to think about the kind of battlefield Emilia-tan will find herself on in the future.”

The Royal Selection—that was the title of the trouble that was certain to rain down on Emilia in the near future.

There, where it was said that the race for the kingdom’s throne would be held, Emilia would have to jump into the chaos of a political dispute swirling with schemes and conspiracies.

“And that with the sort of honesty where she thought someone would be tricked by the lie that Puck is a quadruplet.”

“I’m not sure why, but when you put it that way, I’m getting a little worried, too. There’s no mistaking that I raised her to be cute, but maybe I was overprotective?”

“Hmmm, but if you’d neglected your responsibilities, I get the feeling that would be something to be uneasy about, too, so it’s hard to say…”

It was mostly related to her own innate nature, so one couldn’t just blame it all on Puck. It wasn't a bad thing to be honest to begin with. It's just that being sly would make it easier to go on fighting.

As well, Emilia had already made up her mind to walk a path that wasn't easy.

"All I can do is support the path that Emilia-tan walks, then."

"…? Subaru, were you saying something to me just now?"

"Nah, it's nothing. It's just this Royal Selection thing; I'm half hopeful and half worried about how it'll go."

"Oh, the Royal Selection…"

As Subaru shrugged to cover it up, Emilia lowered her amethyst eyes slightly. Suddenly, he regretted his careless words, worried that he had perhaps caused her needless concern.

"Now that you mention it, you know nothing at all about the Royal Selection; isn't that right, Barusu?. Naturally, you know nothing about the other candidates as well."

"Hm? I guess that's right, don't know a thing. I did hear that there's five of them, including Emilia, but…"

"Yes, that's correct. Emilia-sama is the candidate that Roswaal-sama found, and in terms of order that they were reported to the royal castle in, she was the fourth."

"So, when the final fifth candidate is found, we're off to a sunny start at the Royal Selection."

Both Ram and Rem came to join in the conversation, and Subaru followed along with the new topic of an overview of the Royal Selection that awaited them. The April Fool's atmosphere faded away, as the content of the new topic was very close to the core of things.

Subaru decided to take the opportunity for serious information gathering about the upcoming Royal Selection.

“So, what kind of people are the other candidates that we know about?”

“To begin with, the first one is called the ‘War Maiden’, has single-handedly cut down many enemies on the battlefield, is rumored to preserve her beauty by bathing in their blood, and leads an upper-class noble house.”

“An amazing one right at the start!!”

Hearing a flavor of introduction quite different from what he’d been imagining, Subaru couldn’t hide his surprise.

She was one of four people that would stand alongside Emilia. Of course, he had imagined she would be an opponent who would have no less of a presence, but still…

“So, with the top batter being the War Maiden of Freshly Drawn Blood, that’s a little too much impact, isn’t it…?”

“Oh my, Barusu, if that’s all it takes to make you back away, I can just imagine how you’ll react to the rest of what’s coming. This is still only the opening act. When you hear what’s next, your heart will freeze. Rem, tell him.”

“Eh, Rem should do that?”

Rem was surprised to have her older sister call her name. Seeing Rem’s reaction, Subaru snorted at Ram as though to say “There you go again” at her exaggeration.

“You have to admit, treating that as an introduction like that makes it seem like you’re just blowing things out of proportion, right?”

“Hm, not at all. The next candidate is called the ‘Sun Princess’…”

“Oho, the ‘Sun Princess’. Somehow, that sounds quite wonderful…”

“When she walks, her surroundings become a sea of fire, leaving not even a blade of grass.”

“Princess Prominence?!”

It wasn’t her glowing smile that was her selling point, or anything like that, but the name of one who caused physical burning, then. As Subaru sat astonished, Rem puffed up her chest and nodded, “That’s correct.”.

“She’s a very menacing individual. Subaru-kun, if you ever happen to meet her, for your own safety, you must make sure to hold on tightly to Rem’s hand.”

“Ah, yeah, I will. So, besides the Fresh Blood Maiden and the Burning Princess, there’s also…”

Seeking information about the next savage… or rather, candidate, Subaru glanced over at Emilia. Noticing his line of sight, Emilia narrowed her amethyst eyes suspiciously…

“Hoho, try to control your amazement, Subaru. The truth is, the third candidate is…”

“gulp”

“…a quintuplet!”

“Mmm! After coming this far, an unfortunate mistake in the batting order! Or wait, everything up to now was a lie?!”

“Ah! How could you tell it was a lie?”

Looking at Subaru holding his head in his hands, Emilia brought a hand to her mouth in amazement. Behind Emilia, placing their hands together, Ram and Rem spoke in unison.

“Nee-sama, nee-sama, Subaru-kun is entirely crestfallen. He’s cute.”

“Rem, Rem, seeing Barusu drowned by his own plan is truly pitiful. How pathetic.”

“Seeing you two pull that kind of coordination really brings back some memories! Damn it, you got me!”

Entirely convinced the topic of April Fool’s Day had faded away, he ended up being completely taken in. How frustrating. Seeing the strategist experience first-hand being drowned by his own strategy, Beatrice sniffed with her well-shaped nose.

“Good grief, what an entirely silly bunch you are, I suppose. Going on and on about lies and this and that, I just can’t be bothered to go along with it, you know. Isn’t that right, Bubby…”

“““““Mhmm, that’s right, Betty.”““““

“Eh?”

Surprised by a voice that sounded overdubbed, Beatrice turned around, and the unmistakable pattern in her eyes was more easily visible as they widened. As her field of view came about, she saw that the number of Pucks lounging on the table had increased to four.

“Nga~h! Bubby actually has become quadruplets, I suppose?!”

Jumping in surprise, Beatrice pulled on Subaru’s arm. When Subaru reacted to that with a ‘Wha?’ and turned around, there was only a single Puck lounging on the table.

“Hey, what’s up, Subaru?”

“Whaha?! Bubby, I was positive there were four of you just a moment ago, I suppose!”

“Ah, I get it, I get it. I can tell that you want to join in, but you shouldn’t be trying to draw attention with a weak lie like that. Honestly, Beako, you’re so…”

“I wasn’t! I wasn’t, you know! I wasn’t, I suppose! Bubby? Bubby?!”

With her face gone bright red, Beatrice desperately defended her intentions. However, Subaru gazed at her warmly, and Emilia and the others looked at her as though they were seeing something amusing.

“Hmf! Who, who cares about April Fool’s, you know! I hate it, I suppose!”

Beatrice's indignant voice reverberated magnificently through the Roswaal manor, where lies were being permitted.

Perhaps that would leave them with a stronger sense of how precious it was to be sincere to the people who were important to them.

As he smiled, Subaru wasn't confident in whether or not it had been that sort of teaching moment.

END

Volume 19

Chapters 49-60

Chapter 49:
Thus Opens the Crusade Against Greed

Emilia: “—Subaru!”

There came a voice which seemed to summon Subaru, who had crashed through the entrance of the church and sprinted inside.

It belonged to Emilia, who stood in front of the altar, clad in a white wedding dress.

Dressed in a snow-white dress, her long hair coiled in a braid on her head, she was simply too beautiful, lovely to a truly dazzling degree. In the right circumstance, Subaru, more than anyone else, would have wanted to admire Emilia’s bridal attire, but—

Subaru: “I’ll sort out my thoughts on EMT later. Seems like we crashed this wedding here.”

Reinhard: “The ceremony was already going awry, it seems. Though we will still be regarded as the intruders here.”

From a ways away, Reinhard snuck a glance at Emilia and Regulus, as those two glared at each other, and agreed with Subaru’s mutters. The ceremony seemed to be on the verge of a complete breakdown, offering them a perfect opportunity to intrude.

Upon hearing their words, Regulus’s already sour face reddened with rage. He yanked at the front of his suit as his mouth twisted in a vicious pout.

Regulus: “Sorry, though I feel for uninvited guests such as yourselves, this wedding will soon become a funeral anyway. The emotional preparation for such a joyous event to become one of lament… Ah, right, you needn’t consider such matters anyway. Since you’ll soon go from the ones bidding farewell to the ones who should be bid farewell to.”

Subaru: “Hey now, what are you going on about when you were rejected right before the wedding? And the bride is so fed up with you that she's about to take a Narita divorce. "1" Show me a little shame here. Besides, didn't you hear me when I introduced this guy beside me?"

Regarding Regulus's murderous rambling, Subaru taunted him as he eyed Reinhard. Surprised, Regulus exhaled an "ah" between his teeth.

Regulus: "What, the Sword Saint? I think I've heard of him once. Isn't that the moniker of some guy who knows of nothing but swinging a sword? What are you planning to do with that kind of guy? Could it be that you thought of him as some trump card? Hahaha, that's rich. Whether it be reputation from history or glory from the bloodline or whatnot, all that's nothing but old-fashioned traditionalism. Notions like that, when struck by a wave of progress, should crumble to ash. Isn't that just nature at work? You two, are you here to demonstrate?"

Reinhard: "Funny that you say I know of nothing but swinging a sword, huh. In truth, many of the expectations that fall upon me stem from that one role. But there is one slight problem here."

Even faced with such arrogance, Reinhard showed not a trace of annoyance. As he spoke, his hand crept quietly toward his waist.

Sheathed there was a celestial sword, with engravings traced by the claws of the Dragon itself, which Reinhard always carried. However, as he clenched his palm around the hilt, he shook his head.

Subaru: "What's wrong, Reinhard?"

Reinhard: "The Dragon Sword Reid is an unparalleled blade, which has been passed down since the first generation of the Astrea family, but it does have one flaw. It refuses to be unsheathed in the presence of any enemy it deems unworthy."

Subaru: "Which means?"

Reinhard: "It seems that the sword has concluded that this enemy is not worthy of being drawn against.”

Subaru: “—Hk!”

Regardless of whether Reinhard had the intention of doing so, Regulus had received a rather humiliating evaluation. But Subaru had personally witnessed how the sword had not made its appearance during a confrontation with Elsa, and so he understood what Reinhard had meant.

However, even with that in mind, Regulus’s unflattering appraisal remained.

Regulus: “What can a Sword Saint who can’t even draw his sword do against me? Know your place, scum. In the first place, I’m not even on the same level as you. You fools, who can only ascertain their own worth by comparing themselves to others. Don’t you dare think less of me.”

Subaru: “Sounds like you really do think you’re all that.”

Facing the burning obscenity in Regulus’s eyes, Subaru found himself genuinely surprised. Ignoring all his threats, and listening to only the heart of his speech—

Subaru: “Hypocrisy is your forte, isn’t it? Claiming to have achieved perfection, you’re the one who prattles on about being superior to others.”

Regulus: “—Hk! You lowlife, don’t you condescend to preach to my satisfied self!”

Infuriated by Subaru’s jeers, Regulus finally put his threats into action.

With murderous intent, he kicked the ground in front of the altar; instantly, the paved floor shattered with astonishing force. The torrent of destruction pummeled straight ahead towards Subaru, sweeping shards of wood and stone into its overwhelming embrace and shattering them into fine dust.

Subaru: “—Whoa?!”

Reinhard: “Subaru, over here.”

Just as the destructive wave neared him, someone caught him by the neck and yanked him to safety. A sudden gust of wind freed Subaru from the shackles of that torrent—this was Reinhard’s doing. With one hand, he had pulled Subaru and evaded the attack.

Gently depositing Subaru back on the ground, Reinhard spun around, bending his knees, preparing to face Regulus. However—

Regulus: “Don’t move! Dare to try anything, and they’ll all be dead in an instant.”

Reinhard: “…”

Glaring at Reinhard, who remained with his knees lightly bent, Regulus placed his hands on the walls of the church.

Rows of elaborately dressed women watched him impassively, as the guests of the wedding. Clearly, they recognized the intent of his actions and the severity of the situation, but they only stood in place, indifferently accepting the surrounding chaos.

Subaru: “On that note, though I’d rather not look too far into it, who are these women?”

Regulus: “All of them are my dear beloved wives. Lovely princesses who cherish me and are in turn cherished by me. Could you bear to allow such innocent girls to die? How could you be so cruel?!”

Subaru: “Goddamn, I had a slight suspicion, but I can’t establish a conversation at all.”

Had there ever been any impression that he could? Regulus’s rhetoric was completely incoherent.

To hold these women hostage, and yet to declare that they were his beloved wives, was a line of thought outside the realm of reason. The worst of it was that both the proclamation of innocence and the notion that Regulus would kill them were undoubtedly true.

This illogical hostage situation was indeed an extremely effective tactic against Subaru's group.

Regulus: "It's not like I want them to die, or anything like that. Even so, if you still resist further, I'll have no choice. I'll start at the beginning and go in order. Isn't forcing me to do something so awful just heartless?"

Subaru: "Not like that makes any sense at all, but I don't remember pushing you to that point?"

Regulus: "Don't make excuses! Maybe I'd be the one directly killing them, but you're the one triggering the event. Your murderous intent would be the true weapon. You're using me as the weapon. You're the real murderers! Don't try to escape that responsibility. You heartless wife-murderers…!"

Hatred burned in Regulus's eyes as he gnashed his teeth and glared at Subaru. The murderer who spouted his twisted rhetoric seemed not disturbed in the least by his own revolting statements.

While trying to buy time with dialogue, Subaru snuck a meaningful glance at Reinhard. However, their volatile opponent held about fifty hostages in his grasp. If both walls collapsed at the same time, even Reinhard would not be able to prevent any casualties.

Subaru: "…"

If it went on like this, they would be stuck in stalemate—No, this was developing exactly the way Regulus hoped it would. However, the moment he thought so,

???: "Have you forgotten about me already?"

Regulus: "Huh?"

Celestial lights began to dance beside Regulus. In one instant, the light enveloped the entire cathedral, in the next, a sharp sound was born, interfering with the world. The light and sound chained into each other, intertwined and resonating, a simple, clear melody filling the temple.

In the blink of an eye, a grand barrier of ice shone in the center of the room. That sanctuary of ice spread throughout the cathedral, with Emilia in front of the altar as its center, and created a thick barrier around the women in attendance, who Regulus had taken hostage.

In addition, the ice had frozen Regulus's legs to the ground, and a frozen sword pressed itself against his bare nape—a sword which extended from Emilia's hand.

Emilia: "You were far too careless there. Even I can't expect to just jump into a fight with you, so I prepared long and hard to freeze you like that. You lost."

Regulus: "…I say, you're truly incapable of reading the atmosphere, aren't you? Right now, aren't I about to force them to back down? This is an important scene, showing that I'm righteously capable of facing despicable enemies with resolve. And my wives too, everyone clearly believes in me and prays for my victory… Who do you think you are?"

Emilia: "Free all of us this instant. Although no one's said it, some of them only stay with you because they're afraid. Even so, you should cherish them, since they're the ones who go out of their way to help you…"

Regulus: "—Really, who do you think you're talking to? Looks like not making you a wife was wise indeed."

Emilia: "Eh?"

Subaru: "Emilia, no! It's not enough to stop him!"

Normally, this would be the finale of the act. Emilia's judgement was not off.

However, if there was something different about the situation, was that her opponent simply exceeded the limits of humanity.

Emilia: "—Kh!"

With a sigh, Regulus began twisting his frozen limbs. With that slight motion alone, the ice encasing his lower half began to disintegrate.

The frozen prison shattered to dust, an action so easy that it was like the ice had melted. Faced with this reversal, Emilia had nary the time to even draw breath before Regulus seized her by the neck, and allowed her to dangle, suspended by only his hand.

Regulus: “Such violence, without even knowing how to keep yourself decent for a man. It doesn’t matter that you’re physically and mentally a virgin if you’re cheating on someone mentally. You whore. You filthy slut. As if toying with my innocent heart weren’t enough, you took it a step further, and tried to threaten it. Never have I seen such an unforgivable woman.”

Emilia: “Kuu, huu… uuu…”

Regulus: “How many men have you seduced with your pretty face? Just a brief smile, and every man would be kind to you? Just a small sound, and every man would be ecstatic? Just a gentle touch, and every man would pour gift upon gift onto you? Ah, ah, you dirty bitch.”

Subaru: “Stop! Take your hands off her, you fucker!”

Sighing to himself, Regulus’s voice was filled with disdain as he spoke to Emilia, still caught in his grasp. His eyes, cold and inhuman, cut through Subaru’s outrage at those unspeakable words.

Regulus: “How stupid are you, that you can’t work this situation out? Or are you one of those fools who’ve already given up on understanding? Here am I, ceaselessly trying to explain. but people like you, who hold thoughts of self-improvement and abandon all conscious thought, don’t you think you’re too wasteful of my generosity? Do your best to stand in someone else’s shoes, can’t you even do that? Still playing cards like that, isn’t your skill in interaction just too poor?”

Reinhard: “Let Emilia-sama go, and I’ll hear out your requests.”

From beside Subaru, who found himself speechless with rage, Reinhard spoke to Regulus.

Hearing that, the savage raised his eyebrows. Seemingly judging that conversation could come to flow more smoothly with Reinhard than with Subaru, Regulus redirected his words.

Regulus: “Not bad, not bad, that modest attitude. Precisely because people have all sorts of means of communication, if they want a topic to flow in the direction they desire, they have to learn to use those methods effectively. Those who don’t understand this, the majority, can only rely on brute force to realize what they strive for. How off-putting. Shouldn’t it be clear that matters can be settled through negotiation, without requiring a show of strength? Well, people like that aren’t impressive in the least. Fellows like those stand no chance against a pacifist like me, isn’t that just nature?”

Reinhard: “No need to spin it so dramatically. Instead, allow me to listen to your request. Witnessing Emilia-sama’s suffering is painful for both me and my friend.”

Regulus: “Alright. Then I’ll say it straightforwardly—Remove the sword from your waist and come stand in front of the altar.”

As Emilia’s face turned pale, Regulus, in a deliberate motion, hoisted her higher. Her feet dangled in midair, and her sword of ice clattered to the ground.

Faced with that display, Reinhard hesitated no longer. He freed the Dragon Sword from his waist and handed it to Subaru.

Subaru: “…In case of emergency, I will draw this sword and cut down that bastard.”

Reinhard: “That is quite the idea, but, regrettably, I doubt you would be able to unsheathe it either. Rest assured, I will rescue Emilia-sama.”

Concluding their whispered conversation, Reinhard complied with Regulus’s orders.

The Sword Saint stood, unarmed, in the middle of the temple, stopping when Regulus commanded, “Stop here”. There were only about five meters left between the two, but to Reinhard, that distance could be traversed in an instant.

And yet, the issue lay in how Regulus currently held Emilia in his hands, and would break her neck the second Reinhard drew near. And they had yet to grasp the true nature of Regulus's invincible Authority.

Freeing himself from Emilia's prison, and setting off a path of destruction with unknown means. Somewhere in those actions lay the principle behind his invincibility.

Subaru: "…"

Holding his breath, Subaru monitored Reinhard's movements carefully.

At this moment, unable to find an opportunity to break the stalemate, he could only rely on Reinhard. Eager as he was to leap into action, he knew that nothing he did would solve anything.

Reinhard: "As you wish, I will stop here. What next?"

Regulus: "Let me kill you. Isn't it easy? It's a little cliché, I think so too. I can't feel any sincerity in your idea to step forward for the sake of my wives or this slut? It's not that I want to force you to be unreasonable. I just don't want to be misunderstood as a selfish and self-centered person. I'm just a normal man, satisfied with the simple joys of my everyday life. I do hope you fully understand."

Reinhard: "…"

Regulus: "So, there's only one condition for me to free the hostages. You stand in this place, and bear one strike from me. No defending yourself, and no evasion. As long as you do this, I'll free all the hostages. Only then will I forgive that cowardly two-on-one attack you set on me."

Reinhard: "One strike, yes?"

Faced with Regulus's proposal, Reinhard stroked his chin as he mediated upon it.

Watching his thoughtful figure, Subaru mentally shook his head desperately at the absurdity of the proposal. Regardless of how Regulus appeared, the power behind his attacks were obvious.

An obscene power which could disintegrate even the building's materials, such that even Reinhard would not be able to withstand such a strike. Even if he clung to his life, if he were rendered unable to fight, it was impossible to even think about continuing the battle.

Reinhard: "I understand. I accept."

However, contrary to Subaru's internal fracas, Reinhard accepted the condition like it were nothing. Stunned, Subaru watched Regulus nod with approval.

Regulus: "A wise epiphany, I see. You've got my respect. Although you're an enemy who tried to kill my wives, you seem to have at least some basic human humility."

Subaru: "Hanging onto hostages even as some invincible person, and he doesn't feel as if he's in the wrong…"

At a glimpse, Regulus and his mellifluous, flowery words were truly disgusting. However, it seemed that Regulus had not heard Subaru's spite, for he kept his hand laid on Emilia's neck as he turned his right hand to face Reinhard.

Subaru: "R-Reinhard, you… What are you thinking?"

Reinhard: "Subaru, as promised. Where I'm lacking, you'll find a way to fill in the gaps, right?"

Subaru: "Quit being so discouraging…"

"Even the hardest battle has a chance of being won", that was the sort of answer that Subaru had been hoping to hear. However, before he had time to respond, Regulus waved an arm at Reinhard.

He was incapable of seeing it. Fingertips sliced through the air, as if tossing something at Reinhard. However, the destruction was invisible. That attack might well very have been something like an Unseen Hand.

But, whether that speculation was true or false, it was left unanswered.

Reinhard: “…”

Reinhard’s figure, which had been standing in front of Subaru, collapsed into a splatter of blood. His bisected body toppled to the ground, as if stuck by an oblique sniping shot, completely absent of its usual fearless temperament.

Subaru: “Eh—?”

Large volumes of blood flowed forth from Reinhard’s fallen corpse, dying the crimson carpet a shade darker. His body trembled like a spring, convulsing in its death throes. Finally, the moment came where even those movements subsided, and the corpse entered the realm of true death.

This was Reinhard van Astrea’s unquestionable demise.

Regulus: “No matter how a person acted in life, death’s a simple matter. Those who’ve accomplished great feats, those who’ve committed great sins, death treats them equally, reaping their lives in the same manner. In this world filled with inequality, it’s one of the few truly just parts of life.”

Having killed Reinhard with only a wave of his hand, Regulus simply shook his head. The murderer wore a serene look, as if this had nothing to do with his own actions.

Regulus: “Precisely because they know that the end will inevitably come, the living must pursue happiness while they live. Therefore, I’m extremely satisfied with the low threshold of my happiness. And if I were Greed, it’s only because I’m always eager to appreciate what I do have. If I were never satisfied with the amount I have, instead wanting everything, I would never be happy in my life. But fortunately, I was born with a unique gift, the sensibility of finding satisfaction in simple joys.”

Holding the arm which had killed Reinhard to his chest, Regulus began to laugh. Then—

Regulus: “My satisfied self wants to hear it. Did you die satisfied? If so, congratulations on your death. If not, then I’m sorry for your loss.”

Subaru: “AAAAAAAAAAAAAAUGH—”

Before the echo of Regulus’s mocking words had even faded, Subaru sprang into action with a roar.

He grabbed a chair and flung it at Regulus. Faced with that projectile, Regulus slammed it away with a single swipe, as if it were a mere insect. To say that the impact shattered the chair would be an understatement; having pulverized it, Regulus stepped away wearing an expression showing his displeasure.

Regulus: “Compared to that graceful one, you’re really both noisy and crude.”

Subaru: “Being a Knight without a trace of knightliness happens to be my specialty!”

Treading on the carpet stained with Reinhard’s blood, Subaru drew his whip from his waist, and directed the tip toward Regulus.

In response, Regulus simply made a show of tightening his grip on Emilia’s neck as he lifted her.

Regulus: “Are your eyes just for decoration? Can’t you see that I have leverage here?”

???: “—This is all very strange. According to what you promised, you should have liberated the hostages.”

Regulus: “—Eh?!”

The instant he heard that sound, Regulus’s face became stricken with horror.

Tearing his gaze away from the center of the church, Subaru witnessed a slender figure rising from the pool of blood, and felt his throat close with shock.

Regulus: “Wha—?!”

Reinhard: “—Divine Protection of the Phoenix.”

With brevity, Reinhard responded to Regulus’s astonishment, and three figures moved as one.

Subaru swung his whip to yank a blonde-haired woman, who was hiding behind the altar, to safety. Even as her throat was being choked, Emilia kicked her sword of ice over to Reinhard. Reinhard, who had appeared out of nowhere, caught the sword and swung it towards Regulus.

With the woman shielded from the line of fire, the Sword Saint, holding the blade of frost, hesitated no longer.

In the next instant, sound vanished from the world—a brilliant blue light accompanied the shockwave that engulfed the church.

Chapter 50:
The Shackles of Love

1

—When the aurora faded and Subaru's vision returned to him, the state of the cathedral had completely changed.

Subaru: "Though I know I've said this before…"

Witnessing that scene with his own eyes, Subaru took a soft breath.

In order to avoid inhaling the scattered dust particles and wood chips, he covered his mouth with his sleeve. Standing inside the church, now exposed to the air outside, bathed in the evening breeze, Subaru stomped on the floor and jabbed a finger at the man in front of him.

Subaru: "Sure enough, this guy's a damn monster!"

Reinhard: "Though I have said this before, how depressing. Even my heart would be hurt by such words."

Subaru: "Is this really an occasion to complain about heartache?! Your physical wounds are obviously the bigger issue here! The hell do you think this is?!"

In the face of Reinhard's apparent aberrance, Subaru could not help but frustratedly bury his face in his hands.

Reinhard returned him a wry smile, as the sword of ice in his right hand shattered and dissipated. Although it had only been swung once, being able to withstand the Sword Saint's might indicated that its durability was deserving of praise.

The one who had made that sword, Emilia, was currently being embraced by Reinhard's left arm.

In that instant, he had freed Emilia's neck from Regulus's grasp, keeping her safe. As a result, Regulus was the only one who had suffered that bombardment.

Aside from that initial blow, everything seemed to have worked out—

Subaru: "On that note, what a close call we had. Hey, are you okay?"

No. 184: "…"

The object of his concern was the woman he had yanked out of danger, just as Reinhard had, before chaos had fallen. Although the golden-haired woman was rather beautiful, her empty eyes and expressionless face gave off a foreboding air.

Sure enough, the shock of the situation had gotten to her, was Subaru's thought, and so he met the eyes of the woman as she sat.

Subaru: "Sorry if we surprised you, but in order to take advantage of his weaknesses, we didn't really have any other choice. If you're hurt anywhere, tell us and we can help fix you up."

No. 184: "…"

Although Subaru called out to her, she still gave no reaction.

Although this situation was worrying indeed, he could not worry about just her and her alone. Leaving the woman sitting still on the spot, he strode toward the altar—Or, rather, where the altar had once stood.

This place, which strongly resembled what Subaru knew as a church, had been completely desecrated by Reinhard.

The front of the building—where the altar and the corridor leading to a side room had been located, had all been demolished in the wake of the supernova. All that had barely survived were the very edges and the back of the building. Fortunately, due to the protection of Emilia's wall of ice, the seated women had remained untouched.

Subaru ran where Emilia and Reinhard were standing near the crumbling altar. Stepping out of Reinhard's arms, Emilia immediately gave a pained cough.

Subaru: "Emilia-tan, are you okay?"

Emilia: "—Coughcough… Ah, I'm fine. It's just that my throat feels itchy…"

Subaru: "How are you? Did anything strange happen? Did that creep lick your face or anything? And this wedding dress is spectacular… Did he put it on you? Damn, that fucker, I won't let him go. But this dress truly is amazing. No matter what you wear, you look cute, Emilia-tan."

Emilia: "Subaru, calm down a bit. I can't quite figure out what you want to say."

Faced with the frantically concerned Subaru, Emilia retreated gently.

Looking at his distressed appearance as he carefully ascertained that she was safe and sound, Emilia sighed with a smile.

Emilia: "Right, thank you for coming to save me. I knew all along that you'd come."

Subaru: "I also knew that Emilia-tan'd believe in me and wait for rescue. But if I'd crashed the wedding even a little later, who knows what could've…"

Emilia: "It doesn't matter. I wouldn't have married him. If I were to marry, it would have to be someone I like."

Subaru: "That, that's great! Really reassuring. Then, this person you like…"

Emilia: "Ah! Reinhard! Your injury, how is it?!"

Just as Subaru prepared to go on an offensive strike, Emilia caught sight of Reinhard and cried out at him. Seeing Emilia's interest in Reinhard where it mattered, Subaru paused and scowled.

Reinhard, who had saved Emilia—unexpectedly, he had sustained quite the heavy injury.

The front of the white clothes had been almost exaggeratedly torn and stained entirely with red. Witnessing this explosive scene, Emilia sucked in a cold breath.

Subaru: “Ack, how brutal! Are you sure this is fine?!”

Emilia: “Yes, what a grievous wound! Let me take a look, I’ll heal you!”

Reinhard: “Thank you. But do not worry about it. The wound has begun to heal.”

Responding to the fretting, flustered pair with a smile, Reinhard wiped at the blood with his own white sleeves. And on his clean chest, the traces of the injury were indeed disappearing. In moments the wound was completely gone, leaving only Reinhard’s pristine skin.

Subaru: “The wound’s… vanished… Hey, what happened just now? You hid it even from me. Did you sneakily hide some blood packets on your person or something?”

Reinhard: “And by ‘just now’, you mean…”

Subaru: “Stop putting on airs, or are you being for real right now…? Just now with Regulus’s hostage situation, I didn’t know how you planned to deal with it, so I just watched silently. But how did you survive? Ah, just tell me already!”

Reinhard: “Let me put it this way, watching silently was a huge help. Thanks for taking care not to set him off.”

Even faced with Subaru’s impatience, Reinhard responded in an even tone. Thinking that he was just trying to maintain a lighter atmosphere, Subaru sighed.

Subaru: “I just thought that since it’s you, there must have been some trick up your sleeve. But seeing you fall in that shower of blood had me thinking you really were dead, how terrifying…”

Reinhard: “Even so, you reacted in time. I am very happy you had such faith in me.”

Subaru: “Who told you to give this dramatic speech on shortcomings and whatnot?”

He lightly knocked Reinhard’s shoulders, responding to that guilelessness with coarse words. Listening to their conversation, Emilia’s eyes widened with surprise.

Emilia: “Only with those words, you worked that entire scheme out?”

Subaru: “Emilia-tan, you passed Reinhard the ice sword to Reinhard too, didn’t you?”

Reinhard: “That really was a huge help. Not having a weapon on hand and having to strike his body directly was an uneasy notion, for some reason. But I am glad that it worked out.”

Subaru: “Yep, it ended with half the building collapsing. Please take responsibility for that. Well, this also counts as a survival flag.”

Having had numerous encounter with Elsa in the past, Subaru could not be too optimistic. Now, while talking like this, his Regulus alarm was not slacking around.

Subaru: “So, Reinhard, the correct answer to the mystery of that scene is…? Did you use an avatar? It could not be some kind of cloning technique. Please don’t tell me that in addition to being a Knight, you’re a Ninja as well.”

Reinhard: “Although I do not know what an Ninja is, I am sure it is not such a huge mystery. This Divine Protection of the Phoenix is just a blessing that can be used to revive the dead. So, your observation that I looked like I was dead was correct, I was just a little bit dead.”

Subaru: “Just a little bit dead, my ass! Did that mess you up, or are you just an idiot?”

Being met with such an unexpected answer sent Subaru into another frenzy.

Dying under the Divine Protection of the Phoenix or whatnot, wasn't that just making a mockery of death? Those were words better left unsaid to Subaru—Or, rather, perhaps it was better to say that only Subaru could speak like that.

Subaru: "What are you doing, stealing my niche and all that…"

Reinhard: "—? My apologies, but at the time, I felt that it was the most effective way to deal with the Sin Archbishop. And it did in fact work rather smoothly. Ah, but, if possible, I would prefer to avoid dying again."

Emilia: "Dying in order to save only me, I can't help but feel guilty…"

Subaru: "—Guh."

Emilia: "Subaru? What's with that painful expression?"

Struck by the force of her reply, the psychological burden of those words was quite something. Moreover, it seems that this dialogue could continue no further.

Reinhard: "—Subaru."

Subaru: "Understood."

Narrowing his blue eyes, Reinhard called for Subaru. The latter raised his head at the call, and Emilia glanced towards the place Reinhard was looking.

—The predator, emitting an ominous aura, filled their line of sight.

He stood atop the collapsed remains of the church, overlooking the other three. White hair, white clothes, and a blank expression; this predator, made of white, snorted and spoke,

Regulus: "Leaving me out, and just bantering and laughing in a place like this. Speaking of which, how can you stand to maintain an air of normalcy, isn't that too inhumane? Unless, you felt like you've just stepped on an ant or something? Is blowing me away no different from stepping on a bug? What's up with that?!"

As he fanned the flames of his own exaggerated outrage, Regulus leapt from the smoldering wreckage to the remains of the cathedral. As he landed, he straightened out the coat of his white suit, brushed at the sleeves of his shirt, and readjusted the legs of his matching trousers, before turning his narrowed gaze upon them.

His body was unchanged from Reinhard's blow. Whether injury or filthiness, neither showed even a trace on his form.

Reinhard: "I see. As I had heard from Subaru, you truly are a strange opponent."

Emilia: "Just now, the Sin Archbishop that had you mentioned, Subaru… he's the one?"

Regarding him, Reinhard and Emilia each offered their own input. Hearing this, Regulus turned a spiteful glare upon Emilia.

Regulus: "Ah, that's right. I'm a Sin Archbishop of the Witch Cult, representing Greed, Regulus Corneas… Speaking of which, you tried to go through a wedding ceremony without knowing even the identity of the one you're marrying. This is a problem that precedes not having an awareness of being a wife. Impudent, immoral, incompetent! Really, your deficiency as a woman knows no bounds, honestly!"

Emilia: "Incompetent and whatnot, you didn't tell me anything at all. Impudent and immoral are also groundless. And you're from the Witch Cult… Witch Cult, Witch Cult…"

Faced with the resentfully cursing Regulus, Emilia was about to refute his points before she suddenly sank into silence. Her hand on her head, Emilia's eyebrows lifted as if she were thinking hard.

Emilia: "A Sin Archbishop of the Witch Cult… You, have you met me before?"

Regulus: "Huh? How would I know? Although, right now, if you were to say that our meeting was fate, that would just be a ridiculous farce. Such a face of rare sweetness, but in spirit you're such a degenerate woman who cheats on her man in her mind, how endlessly infuriating… Uwah!"

Subaru: "The hell are you rambling on about aimlessly, you moron?"

Aiming at the face of Regulus, endlessly-ranting, Subaru flicked his whip. Under that impact, Regulus's face snapped to the side, and he snarled with fury.

Unsurprisingly, his face bore no trace of the blow.

Subaru: "At this point, for real, if we can't solve the mystery of his invincibility, we won't be able to win this…"

Reinhard: "Whether at close range or from afar, every attack is negated. Even Emilia-sama's magic does nothing to stop him. There has to be some kind of trick to defeating him… Subaru, watch out for yourself, alright?"

Subaru: "Why does it sound like you're saying something messed up…?!"

Reinhard patted that confused Subaru's shoulder briefly—Then, he vanished.

In the next moment, Reinhard slammed directly into the predator's torso, sending him sprawling backward.

Regulus: "Huh, ah—?!"

With a cry, Regulus, who had had no time to brace himself, flew backward and slammed into a mountain of debris, causing it to collapse further and disintegrate.

Reinhard: "His opponent will be me. Hopefully you can solve the mystery of his invincibility as quickly as you can. I shall buy time for you."

Subaru: "Right, buying time's nice and all… But wouldn't it be better to just defeat him in one fell swoop?"

Reinhard: “If I could, I would have done so already. Take these women to safety. If they remain here, they will be dragged into the battlefield.”

Emilia: “Wait, Reinhard. Although you might not be able to use it a lot, take this.”

Calling out to stop Reinhard in his tracks was Emilia, holding a sword of ice, freshly shaped by magic.

Emilia: “I’ve been concentrating reaaally hard to make this, so it should be a little more durable than the last one.”

Reinhard: “My thanks are inexpressible.”

Accepting her proffered blade, Reinhard offered her his ceremonious gratitude in return.

Then he turned and leapt away from the ruins of the church, following Regulus. In a single step, he vanished from Subaru’s field of vision, crossing an impossible distance. Immediately following his disappearance, a shock wave slammed into Subaru’s skin.

As he bathed in this feeling, he turned to look at Emilia.

Subaru: “Emilia-tan! So they avoid getting caught up in Reinhard’s battle, for the time being, please help get these women somewhere safe. They all have to leave… speaking of which, are they all Regulus’s wives?”

Both now and before, the uniformity of the women trapped in the wall of ice felt unnatural.

Did their status as Regulus’s wives make all of them members of the Witch Cult? At a glance, there were more or less fifty of them. If they attacked as one, how could Subaru handle them without Beatrice’s help? Only now had he begun to worry.

However, Emilia shook her head, denying Subaru’s anxiety.

Emilia: “It’s fine. Although they’re his wives, I think most of them are only here through force and coercion. So don’t worry.”

Subaru: “Yeah, that’s alright then. If they were a threat, Reinhard wouldn’t have overlooked… Gah, watch out! Just now, flying missiles have started attacking us! How dangerous!”

Outside the cathedral, Reinhard and Regulus had engaged in a battle that resided far beyond the limits of humanity. The wreckage and stone fragments, swept away by various impacts, flew with the momentum of a bullet. If he were to be struck by one, there was no guarantee that he would stay intact.

Although Reinhard had an overwhelming advantage when it came to offense, as long as the nature of Regulus’s Authority remained a mystery, that advantage would amount to naught. Subaru needed to come up with a countermeasure before the villain changed aims—

Emilia: “Hey, are you okay? You’re not injured anywhere, are you?”

During his moment of reflection, Emilia had started shaking the blonde woman by the shoulders.

That was the same woman Subaru had rescued earlier using his whip. Based on her position in front of the altar, she seemed to have a unique status among the others. However, her expression was just as blank, bearing not even the faintest trace of emotion.

Looking up at Emilia, the woman shook her head slowly.

No. 184: “I… We must stay here. If you want to escape, please take care.”

Emilia: “Stay, why? Are your legs injured? Then I’ll heal you right away. Just this wall of ice isn’t enough to keep you all safe. We have to leave soon!”

No. 184: “Please allow me to refuse. Only you can leave this place.”

Emilia: “Why?! You’ll be caught in the battle if you stay here! Regulus will attack anything he wants to, regardless of your presence. Please, hurry and come with us…”

No. 184: “—Husband-sama did not instruct us to leave.”

Emilia’s desperate persuasion was interrupted by the woman’s cold voice, conveying her feelings, equally devoid of warmth. Her cold, frozen gaze met Emilia’s own amethyst eyes.

No. 184: “Not listening to Husband-sama will make him angry. If that happens, there will be only one possible result.”

Emilia: “That’s… not…”

Subaru shared Emilia’s exasperation.

To call the woman determined would be wrong, for she had no selfhood. To call the woman unwavering would be wrong, for she had no resolve. Her speech and attitude spoke of a resignation that had long become inescapable.

She—or rather, they, had given up long ago.

Those hearts, shattered by Regulus, could no longer consider anything other than him. This was a cursed brutality which no longer required words or actions.

Subaru: “Regulus’s opponent is the Sword Saint Reinhard. I know you’re terrified of Regulus, but Reinhard’s not going to have any issue killing him. So, don’t stay here. There’s no need to endanger your lives.”

No. 184: “It does not matter who the opponent is. Sword Saint? Please, do not make me laugh. How could anyone match Husband-sama… match Regulus Corneas?”

The woman dismissed Subaru’s reassurances with naught but contempt.

That was the first time she had shown any sort of genuine emotion. The scornful dismissal of an adult, looking down upon a child’s ignorant delusion.

—Only then, did Subaru understand the true nature of this distorted relationship.

The wives of Regulus Corneas had absolute faith in their husband’s strength. The shackles of a curse that no one and no thing could remove, that unwavering trust. Even the knowledge that his opponent was the Sword Saint Reinhard did nothing.

The unparalleled, overwhelming power Regulus possessed held complete dominion over the hearts of his wives.

The wife trusted her husband, and the husband maintained a firm grip on his wife's heart. In a sense, it was the ideal state of a relationship. But that serene surface gave way to permanent distortions of the deeper aspects.

Subaru: "Damnit…"

Subaru came to the painful realization that mere words would not move them.

The women before him all unanimously believed this; the lack of dissent and dead silence only served to prove so. To force them to leave would take nothing less thorough than knocking all of them out and moving them one-by-one, but they could not afford to undertake those actions.

Subaru: "—Reinhard! Change of plans! Execute Operation S!"

Dispelling the idea of persuading the women, Subaru climbed atop the collapsed altar and called out to Reinhard, who was currently defying the law of gravity as he dashed across the side of a building, in the streets of the city where night had begun to fall. He flicked his eyes to the side, towards Subaru.

Reinhard: 9Doing Operation S first? Subaru, have you ensured the women's safety?0

Subaru: "—?! The hell?! Where's this sound coming from?!"

Reinhard: "This is the Divine Protection of Telepathy, which can spread my voice to allies within a certain range."

Subaru: "Could you stop being so superhuman?!"

To Subaru, who could not conceal the shivers it provoked in him, Reinhard's behavior seemed beyond human understanding.

Running and kicking off from a wall, Reinhard flew into the air and spun rapidly. The instant before he landed, he allowed his clothing to spread, slowing down his momentum, and swung his slender legs to send a blade of wind slicing towards the ground.

Sweeping up both dust and bricks from the pavement, the wave slammed directly into the predator waiting at its destination—Regulus's figure, unable to stay standing, was blown away again.

Subaru: "That murder circus just now, what was it?"

Reinhard: "He attacks by throwing stones or sand. There is no gap of safety between the particles being scattered around, so I have to pass between them."

Subaru: "To me, that sounds more like dodging rain—More importantly, move the battlefield! Those women won't move! They're so terrified of Regulus, they don't dare to!"

Reinhard: "I see, understood—Then, allow me to try."

Lowering his voice, Reinhard approached Regulus with a light jump.

Climbing to his feet once again, Regulus stomped on the ground, sending pieces of wood and grains of sand flying. However, with the most minimum of movements, Reinhard evaded and drew Emilia's ice sword, using it to send Regulus's body flying to the skies above once more.

The screaming of the villain and the crisp sound of the shattering ice blade overlapped.

Emilia: "Subaru! Wait, what are you planning to do?"

Subaru: "Lead that bastard away from here… Wow, Emilia-tan is bold."

Emilia: "This dress is pretty, but really inconvenient…"

Standing in Subaru's line of sight was Emilia, who had yanked away part of her dress.

The restrictive parts of the white wedding dress had been daringly torn open, revealing more of Emilia's white thighs than should have been visible in an enticing sight. However, the difficulty of moving in that clothing had been lowered.

Emilia: "It doesn't matter! Anyway, what do you want Reinhard to do?"

Subaru: "A plan we thought of before the battle, since we don't know what the true extent of Regulus's Authority is—We'll have to test possible weaknesses one by one."

Emilia nodded as Subaru retrieved Reinhard's beloved sword from one corner of the cathedral. Then, he and Emilia rushed straight towards Reinhard's battlefield.

2

Regulus: "Gah! Bastard, quit jumping up and down!"

Cursing loudly, Regulus waved both his arms up and down. His target was Reinhard, who zigzagged rapidly back and forth, and his weapon was the plentiful gravel laying about.

Normally, bits of gravel could only serve to blind an opponent and the character of those who used it as a weapon was unworthy of praise—but if Regulus were the wielder, the power of this despicable tactic would skyrocket.

Buildings began to crumble where the gravel came into contact with them, and the surrounding scenery fell into ruination.

Reinhard: "—Tch."

Watching the cataclysmic destruction unfolding in front of him, Reinhard launched into a dramatic evasion.

He lowered his body as if he were planning to drop into a crawl and sped into motion. Contrary to his seemingly unsightly appearance, he was moving so fast that he had ventured beyond the reach of ordinary people.

And thus, Regulus, who was no different from an ordinary person, had no way of catching up to Reinhard.

Regulus: "Damn… Hey! Where'd you run off to, looking like a bug?!"

Faced with the thread of losing his target, Regulus attacked all directions indiscriminately.

The rising of goosebumps on skin was a sure sign that whatever was approaching would be terribly dangerous—a survival instinct everyone was born with, warning against enemies close at hand.

In actuality, that had little to do with the presence of a clear threat. Any living creature was susceptible to this feeling. Regulus was no exception; the tingling of his nerves, all throughout his body, tipped him off that something was wrong.

—Only, this incredible threat was approaching from all directions, an oppressive ring of menace.

Regulus: "You bastard, what in the world areeee—?!"

Reinhard: "I am but a Knight to Felt-sama, a Royal Candidate. Please also be sure to give her all your support."

Regulus: "—?!"

A voice so steady, that might or might not have been a joke.

The shocked Regulus took a sharp impact on his head—perhaps it was smashed by steel. The weapon had been bent completely out of shape, and a squeaking sound indicated that it had been cast aside.

Humiliated, Regulus glared at the ground as he bit his lip. With crisp footwork that prevented ease of attack, Reinhard assumed his stance.

The offensive and defensive abilities of both the Sword Saint and

Greed, their superiority were clear to both parties in the confrontation.

Exerting conventional combat power, the strength of Reinhard, which could toy with even the deadliest of Sin Archbishops, could not be said to be of this world. But even so—

Regulus: “The one to win will be me, can’t you understand? Although I have no clue how well you’ve been doing with this violent power that can only think of oppressing others, you, whose happiness is built upon the sacrifice of others, will be stopped here! With this power, how many people’s lives have you trampled upon? That greed really is despicable.”

Reinhard: “—That really is distressing to hear. It is true that, because of me, some have lost sight of their happiness. Without question, the reason why I do what I do is none other than for the sake of atonement.”

In the face of Regulus’s ridiculous rhetoric, Reinhard’s eyes narrowed slightly. Seeing the Sword Saint’s responsive movement, Regulus widened his own.

Regulus: “The hell is this? Some kind of ‘you don’t need to say it because I already know’ ploy? “I’m aware of my own sins. I’m aware so I’m trying to fix my bad qualities, I tell you”, so it’s an attempt to let it all be water under the bridge? Jokes can only go so far. No one’s holding any expectations to what you’ll do in the future. All that matters is what you’ve done in the past. Your feet were trampling the ground, where someone licked your soles. To such a person, whether you help tens of thousands or hundreds of millions of people, it’s all meaningless. Sinner, just die. You, able only to beg of others, stop pretending to be a good person already.”

Reinhard: “I really do get the feeling of being shown a mirror when talking to you. This must be the reason why Subaru told me to avoid seriously lending an ear to you.”

Regulus: “Speaking of which… that guy over there, is that this Subaru? The rapist bastard who snatched my bride from me… Even if she ended up being a dirty whore, his transgression can never be forgiven. To those who try to take what belongs to others, due punishment is—Wha?!”

Halfway through his tirade, Regulus’s world suddenly spun upside down.

At that moment, Reinhard had dropped his stance and grabbed Regulus’s left ankle, spinning him around. A rotating field of violent destruction, Regulus’s back hit a wall.

Under that impact, a shower of dust scattered as Regulus’s body, still being spun around by his momentum, crashed through and collapsed a building.

Reinhard: “Although direct contact with you feels rather dangerous, I’ll try to get it over with as soon as possible.”

Regulus: “What, are you doing this so you can call him a friend? What a nauseating fake show of hypocrisy… Your debased self naturally has no decent friends. With someone known as a rapist, sharing a friendship is—”

Reinhard: “Dealing with you really is unbearable—doubly so when you slander my friends.”

The wind suddenly wrapped around their bodies, and the sense of rapid rising followed closely.

If you were to take a glimpse, the figures of the two would be suspended in the midst of the night sky, and right next to them, the full moon shone brightly. At that place, where the light of the moon lay within reach, Regulus clicked his tongue.

Regulus: “So, it’s not a matter of strength at all—Dropping me from such a height will end this, you can’t be truly naive enough to believe that. Are you playing me for a fool?”

Reinhard: “Indeed, I could try slamming you down with force and lodging you in the earth… but you will have to deal with something else.”

Regulus: “What are you…”

In midair, without any foothold, Reinhard alternated between drifting up and down by shifting his body slightly. Regulus, still being gripped by his foot, was subjected to centrifugal force and, still being swung by Reinhard, his eyes widened as he glanced downward.

Regulus: "No way…"

Reinhard: "What's coming seems to be known as 'the first wave'—I hope that I will not see you again afterwards."

It was a rare sarcastic line from Reinhard, but Regulus had no leeway to pay attention to it.

Reinhard, with all his might, swung Regulus downward at once. Whipping through the air, Regulus's dense form sped into the canal directly beneath him with the momentum of a bullet—Regulus, bathed by the wind, could only watch as the surface of the canal approached.

Regulus: "The only threat is the water…!"

Rotating as he sailed downward, Regulus stretched out his hands, intending for them to slam into the water. The unprepared Reinhard, hovering defenselessly in the sky, would follow in a moment.

Then, that calm face of his could be shattered in a single blow. The idea was—

Subaru: "—Emilia, do it!"

Emilia: "Ul Huma—!"

Hearing the voices of that hateful man and woman, the corner of his eye barely caught a sight of that detestable pair. A black-haired boy gesturing with a finger, and a silver-haired girl who chanted quietly.

In the next moment, falling from above Regulus, were icicles shooting forward at a speed which matched his momentum.

The icicles caught his limb by way of the sleeves of his suit, accelerating his fall. Further, the last one slammed directly into Regulus's back, freezing his body solid.

A total of five icicles restrained Regulus's extremities, using his body as a freezing point as it plummeted into the canal. Immediately, a magical, freezing hand stretched forward, centering on where Regulus had fallen, tracing the flow of the water—The canal was turned into an icy tomb, without so much as a single opening.

3

Subaru: "—Operation Splash, nicknamed Operation S, was a complete success!"

Reinhard: "I hope this was effective."

Next to Subaru, who gazed into the frozen waterway, landed Reinhard, cloaked in moonlight.

After having thrown Regulus from the sky, the trajectory of that fall should have meant that he would not be able to avoid the falling water, but in fact even a droplet brushing him would have been a miracle. That Reinhard could move so well in midair was hardly even surprising.

Emilia: "Sealing his range of movement and tossing him into water, freezing it afterward. There's no way he'll ever surface again, is there…"

From Reinhard's other side, Emilia stared into the water.

The one who had drawn up the battle plans had been Subaru, and the one who had facilitated them had been Reinhard. However, Emilia had been the one who had pushed Regulus the most. Even if the other party had been an unreasonable murderer, Emilia still wore a rather timid expression.

If everything proceeded smoothly, he soon would be naught but a drowned corpse. Emilia felt that she had gone too far, and this feeling was not without reason.

Subaru: "…"

Gazing to his side at Emilia, Subaru crossed his arms in consideration. Though he felt rather sorry for her, to have Regulus drown was the best outcome. If that were not possible, leaving him in a state mirroring death would be best.

However, the worst possibility must also be expected. For example —

Subaru: "Reinhard!"

Reinhard: "—Tsk!"

—When, right in front of their eyes, the ice's surface cracked. And immediately after, a jet of water spouted up, blasting straight towards them.

At the sight of gushing water, Reinhard grabbed both Emilia and Subaru as the jet of water closed in on them. His arms wrapped around their waists, he jumped backwards in one leap—after they were well out of the reach of the droplets of water, Reinhard narrowed his eyes.

Reinhard: "It seems that it has yet to be settled."

Subaru: "Right. On that note, this guy, he's really bad news."

Reinhard and Subaru had each fixated on something different.

Reinhard was watching the figure standing atop a drifting piece of ice, whereas Subaru was looking at the outcome that had been caused by the jet of water which that figure had capriciously unleashed.

Water droplets flew about, pouring down near where Subaru and the others were standing.

The outcome was nothing so charming as the pitter-patter stopping and just dampening the earth below; each part of the spray bored thoroughly into the earth, carving through the ground as if biting with the force of a gigantic beast.

Their destructive power was not inferior to that of the stones and sand thrown by Regulus. Which was to say, whether wielding solid or liquid, Regulus's attack power stayed constant.

Emilia: "…His body, it's not frozen at all. Just like what happened at the church."

Muttering this, Emilia looked at Regulus, still perched atop that piece of drifting ice.

Subaru had entrusted her with the task of freezing his body and limbs using magic. As per Subaru's instructions to show no mercy, the icicle pierced right through Regulus's limbs and the center of his body. Such an act should have left him more than half-dead.

However, when he had fallen into the water, the tip of the icicle had not penetrated his body, and so Regulus had been merely frozen on the surface, just as he had been in the church.

To Regulus, neither freezing nor magic was effective. Like slashes and blunt force blows, he could also invalidate those types of attacks.

Subaru: "Although, when he shrugged off Wrath's flames, I did suspect this a little… I guess that basic idea of his invincibility being specialized in either physical or magical damage is out of the window, then."

Emilia: "Were you able to confirm what you wanted with Operation S?"

Reinhard: "I will have to get a little closer for that…?!"

The moment Reinhard responded, there was a change in the surface of the canal.

A vortex appeared on the water's frozen surface, a distance from where the crack was. Gradually, its momentum increased, pulling in the drifting ice which Regulus occupied. And then—

Subaru: "A water dragon—!"

Leaping from the heart of the maelstrom, the dragon bared its fangs at Regulus, who was standing on top of the ice.

Domesticated water dragons usually swam in the waterways surrounding the city. The water dragon, who should have been trained to not attack people, opened its jaws wide, aiming to lunge at Regulus's slender back.

Perhaps, even that water dragon had been influenced by Wrath in no small measure, a tragedy that never should have taken place—However, its jaws did not have a chance to close.

Subaru: "—Hk."

Subaru's throat involuntarily clogged up at the gruesome spectacle unfolding before him. What happened in this moment, how could it even be described?

—The water dragon's maw jerked out of place at the very moment it had clamped down onto Regulus.

As if in a game of Daruma Otoshi "1", the water dragon's lower jaw was dislocated. Keeping its momentum as it flew toward Regulus, its mandible was displaced. A maw which should have dragged Regulus into the canal, unable to correct the dislocation, was split in two with a great shudder.

The halves of the bisected water dragon poured blood into the water as they were submerged. After a moment, an exaggerated amount of blood and viscera that had once been a water dragon floated to the surface. This had been its gruesome demise.

Reinhard: "Emilia-sama. If possible, could you make me a spear?"

Emilia: "…Eh?"

Reinhard: "A spear. A spear of ice, please. I have troubled you."

Faced with the same sight, Reinhard muttered this to the befuddled Emilia. Connecting the dots, Emilia hurriedly focused her Mana. After several unsuccessful attempts, eventually Emilia created an ice spear, and handed it over to Reinhard. After testing the feel of the weapon he had received,

Reinhard: “Excuse me.”

Grasping the ice spear, he drew his wrist back to aim Regulus, and let the missile fly.

The spear flew true— however, it was not the sharp tip that had been pointed at Regulus. As it turned to its side, its shaft scored a direct hit. But what had happened, was that when the shaft of the spear crashed against Regulus, it fell straight into the waterway, broken into two.

Emilia: “What is the meaning of this…?”

Subaru: “I see… I get it, Reinhard.”

Seeing the state of the broken spear, Emilia tilted her head in confusion. From beside her, Subaru grasped the meaning behind why Reinhard had done this, shuddering at its outcome.

Hearing Subaru’s acknowledgement, Reinhard nodded and said,

Reinhard: “Emilia-sama, did you see what happened to the spear upon hitting him?”

Emilia: “It broke, right? A spear of ice is different from a real one, so it’s natural for it to have broken in two after it struck with that sort of force…”

Reinhard: “Not quite, the spear did not break. The part of the spear that hit him is missing. The part that hit him is missing, separated. The spear was broken not into two, but three.”

Reinhard’s explanation served as an answer to what had happened to the spear and with the water dragon.

Neither object, upon contact with Regulus, had managed to penetrate his body. With an ordinary barrier, the collision would have caused a projectile to bounce off or shatter from the impact, but neither had happened. Regulus’s body literally rejected anything that collided with it.

Regulus: “—What cluelessly naive expressions you’re all wearing. This is just how it is.”

Just as the three reached a consensus, Regulus’s voice suddenly reached them, from the ice.

That calm voice made it sound as if he were just whispering to himself. The instant Subaru thought that, an unpleasant shock hit him in the back.

Regulus: “Ununderstanding, ununderstandingununderstandingununderstanding. All of you, really, reallyreally understand nothing. It’s useless. You have no chance. No matter what you do, you can’t win. No matter how much you strain and struggle, you can’t reach me. Why can’t you understand that? I’ll say it to you, show it to you, force you to see… you could never understand.”

Regulus whispered to himself as he leapt from the ice. Having jumped forward only slightly, his body plummeted into the canal; for a moment, his figure vanished. However, with one hand on the edge of the canal, he pulled himself from the water, climbing back onto the street. Then, once again, he squared his gaze at those who were watching him.

Reinhard: “—His body isn’t wet in the slightest. His breathing remains unchanged. Naturally, the fragments of ice need not even a mention, nor has a single a drop of blood splashed onto him. His clothes are completely clean, and no water drips from him.”

Observing Regulus, Reinhard gave Subaru a quick report.

Upon hearing that, Subaru nodded and tried to think, even as he suppressed his horror. It seemed that everything he had intended to confirm with Operation S had been checked.

However, there was not a trace of good news. It was the worst forecast possible.

Reinhard: “Subaru, my sword.”

Subaru: “Oh, ah, right…”

At Reinhard's request, Subaru quickly handed over the sword that he had been holding all along. As Reinhard gently tested the handle of his beloved sword, Emilia looked on from the side, wondering timidly,

Emilia: "Can the sword be unsheathed?"

Reinhard: "No, the handle is still fixed. It seems that it will not indulge me… but there is no other weapon that can be used to confront him."

Emilia: "Since your sword can't be drawn, what are you going to do? Attack him directly with the sheath?"

Reinhard: "Not exactly. But that's not too far off."

With nary a trace of tenseness in his voice, Reinhard stepped forward. He placed himself in front of Subaru and Emilia, shielding them from Regulus's line of sight.

Reinhard: "Subaru, please allow the task of buying time to be handed over to me. You can continue to decipher his Authority."

Subaru: "Feels like the difficulty just rose a level. But I'll do my best."

Emilia: "I-I'll also do my best!"

Reinhard: "Then, I will also do my utmost—Go!"

As soon as the sound of his voice fell, Reinhard flew forward. Regulus, who had been kept waiting, met him with only calmness.

Regulus: "I say, did you not see? If not the fate of that lizard, then the spear… Is your imagination truly so lacking?"

Reinhard: "Only paying attention to a coin by your foot will draw your attention away from what is important—as my master once said."

Regulus: "Is that so?"

Regulus's sigh, deep and uninterested, overlapped with Reinhard's opening strike.

The sound of muscles and bones being penetrated by something sharp reverberated through the air, and Subaru's throat could not help but stiffen. He watched as Reinhard gripped the scabbard, slamming the hilt of the sword into Regulus.

Regulus: "—Oh, seems that you don't even have a strategy."

The sound of these blows was different from the fate of the water dragon and the ice spear. At least Reinhard's beloved sword would not break upon hitting Regulus, no matter what he did. However, it did not seem that damage had been inflicted on Regulus. Reinhard's previous attacks, although dealing no damage, had at least been enough to send him flying, but now, even that effect was lost.

Reinhard: "Feel free to brag. You are the second person to force me to use Dragon Sword Reid."

Regulus: "I can't hear anything but belittlement, you are making a complete fool of me, aren't you? That isn't what using a sword is supposed to mean? Such a denigrating gaze, such disparaging words, it's only natural that much is obvious to those who understand!"

Reinhard: "That's all rather—Kh!"

As he provoked Regulus, Reinhard weaved in and out of super-close combat. Faced with those murderous fingertips, Reinhard evaded with even greater movements.

Suddenly, his legs stopped moving. No, they were kept from moving.

Reinhard collapsed onto his knees, kneeling in place. His right calf split open, spilling forth copious amounts of blood.

Subaru: "Were you hit?! What happened?!"

Subaru cried out, and Reinhard frowned through his confusion.

Neither Subaru, observing from a distance, nor Reinhard, the party concerned, could discern what had happened. The solution came from the other fighter, giving a failing mark.

Regulus: “With your inhuman eyesight and reactions, you were able to escape the bits of gravel and water. But you’re too naive, aren’t you? If you truly want to confront me, prevent me from sighing. You can’t, can you? Just now, I sighed.”

Reinhard: “Even breaths…”

Regulus’s relentless kick approached Reinhard, who had fallen to the ground.

A direct hit would be an attack enough to rend Reinhard’s torso into pieces. Faced with that attack, Reinhard no longer had any time to dodge. Hastily, he quickly lifted the sword in his arms, blocking the blow with its jet-black scabbard—

Reinhard: “Ugh…!”

Regulus: “Just what do you think you can do, with that annoying scabbard in the way? Clinging to something that you’re unworthy of, why do people like you do such things? I can’t understand at all.”

With this defensive action, Reinhard’s body was sent flying as if it were a toy ball.

Although protected from the fatal power of the kick, he crashed through the side of a building nearby, eventually rolling on the pavement. As Reinhard’s body rolled and rolled, the destruction only continued.

In that moment, Reinhard’s form, sent flying by a kick, became nothing but a bullet.

Regulus: “Right, and now—”

Subaru: “—!”

Seeing Reinhard off well into the distance, Regulus seemed to remember something as he turned around. Being firmly fixed by that gaze, Subaru immediately tensed. Emilia, from beside him, immediately chanted magic, and in an instant the sky was covered with a multitude of icicles, which ruthlessly flew toward Regulus.

However, the results spoke for themselves.

Regulus: “A woman who can’t read the situation is just the worst. Having to spend time on disciplining them is a lot of work. However, because women are just ignorant creatures, they must first be taught. That’s just how it is. They’re much better after they’ve been tamed, though.”

Slamming into his body and shattering into shards, those icicles were unable to even make him budge. Languidly, Regulus approached them.

Subaru: “Emilia! Trying to fight is useless right now! Anything we do before figuring out his trick won’t have any effect!”

Emilia: “But…!”

Subaru: “Right, for now, let’s just get the hell out of here!”

Seizing Emilia’s wrist as she tried to remain stubbornly, Subaru tried to pull her away from Regulus. But Subaru’s actions only served to excite Regulus further—

Regulus: “Haha, are you trying to flee? Well, that doesn’t surprise me. Now that the situation is like this, where you stand no chance against me, though you should have understood that well before you childishly knocked upon my door… If you want to flee, then flee.”

Just what was he thinking? Regulus watched Subaru and Emilia flee with nothing but smiles. However, given this chance to escape, they needed to capitalize on it. No matter what, right now, they had no time to even stop and think—

Regulus: “—But, you’d have to get away first.”

As he spoke, Regulus approached the canal. Leaning over, he grabbed and hoisted half of the water dragon's corpse out of the surface of the water. Grabbing its tail, he looked back with a ferocious smile.

Emilia: "H-Hey, Subaru… I have this feeling of foreboding."

Subaru: "What a coincidence, so do I."

As for what would Regulus do, neither had any clue. However, every unremarkable action he took had completely extraordinary results, that much was plain as day.

Therefore, Subaru and Emilia's pace increased rapidly.

Taking his time, Regulus smiled pleasantly as he raised his head, before leaping into motion. He set foot on the roof of an adjacent building, then jumped over its upper floors, landing on another, taller structure, until he finally reached a building the height of a clock tower.

After that period, both parties now stood so far apart each other's faces were the size of beans. However, despite the distance they had gained, Subaru could still make out Regulus's face.

—He could see that murderous smirk so clearly.

Regulus: "Come, if you want to try to hide, see if you can—Whore undeserving of becoming a bride, and the mentally-raping bastard that cherishes such a woman. For posterity, I'll deliver to you a rain of blood!"

Regulus lifted the half of the water dragon with both hands, and squeezed the corpse mercilessly.

The dragon's flesh split with an unpleasant squelch, all of its blood gushing forth, and Regulus swung the blood-soaked remains with glee from his perch up high.

He held the corpse's tail, still drenched in blood, as if waving a wet towel. It rotated over his head, endlessly scattering blood in a halo.

Farther, farther, until its momentum brought it to where Subaru and Emilia had ran away to. Then, the result was—

Emilia: “—Subaru!”

Subaru: “Run run run runrunrun!”

The downpour of blood became a rain of destruction, further blighting the city, this carpet bombing chasing the pair’s figures, forcing them to flee further.

Chapter 51:
Malice in Trickery

1

Ricardo: “Why’re ya makin’ that face. Somethin’ botherin’ ya?”

Just before reaching the control tower, Ricardo spoke to the knight, who wore a stiff expression.

Halting in his step, Julius raised his brows in surprise.

Julius: “How surprising, Ricardo. I never expected you to be concerned about others’ worries.”

Ricardo: “Don’t mistake that phrase for somethin’ else. The one with ya’s just me. Even if ya say somethin’, it’ll be a secret from miss too.”

Julius: “…You’re not wrong, huh.”

Though it was rare, Ricardo often made correct observations of people.

If not for that, he wouldn’t have been able to take up his role as the head of the Iron Fang, hearing only fragments of his splendid career would lead tell so. Looking at only one’s self and ignoring surroundings was no way to stay alive. Slave, mercenary, this applied to both roles.

Ricardo: “Now that’s quite the brutal brat. Even so, I’ll play the role I’m supposed to, so ya can depend on me. I’ll also take son-in-law’s consultation.”

Julius: “That ‘son-in-law’ is scary. I do not hold any such strange feelings for Anastasia-sama.”

Ricardo: “What’s that, ‘s miss’ affair huh. Maybe it’s about Mimi. Besides, she hasn’t managed to convince miss yet.”

"…"

Julius smiled bitterly. This gesture of quietly shaking his head was graceful as always, but this time he lacked precision when choosing appropriate words.

And at that gesture,

Ricardo: "Somethin's off 'bout the recapture of City Hall. Miss agrees too. Miss hasn't heard much 'bout it, but I'll force it all out."

Julius: "It seems you are rather unforgiving."

Ricardo: "Of course, it's life-threatening. Don't want t' leave my back to someone who's in th' dark. 'Re ya goin' t' fabricate some kinda excuse as a rebuttal?"

Julius: "…No, it is indeed as you say. It was I who was mistaken. Certainly, I am increasing our risk by hesitating to speak."

Julius earnestly nodded to the pursuing Ricardo, and curved his brows with elegance.

However, no more words came out of the mouth of his troubled self. Facing that attitude, Ricardo got out of his own numbness and let out a sullen voice.

Ricardo: "Why're ya stoppin' there? It's sad that you're so lost. Just let it out of yer mouth and frankly speak it all out, can't ya do that? Jus' what's stoppin' ya?"

"…"

Ricardo: "Julius."

Julius: "I apologize. I am unable to decide which words would be appropriate to express what I want to say. —The reason for my worry is just as you guessed, the Sin Archbishop that was encountered in the City Government Building. Roy Alphard of Gluttony, was that person, unmistakably. Unmistakably, but…"

Julius confusedly cut off his words halfway as uncertainty wavered in his yellow eyes.

Julius: “Similar to the other Sin Archbishops, perhaps Gluttony also possesses an inexplicable ability. The power of eating memories, eating names, was noticeable back at the time of the battle with the White Whale. However…”

Ricardo: “Julius—!”

Ricardo called out the moment he felt unease touching his very core. And Julius instantly recognized the meaning behind it.

—The atmosphere trembled, all sounds disappeared from the world, and a light rose into the sky.

There could be only one situation in which that extraordinary light would pierce the night sky. It must be the aftermath of a slash by the strongest individual in this world.

Ricardo: “Such a fancy move. I’m correct to assume it’s the Sword Saint, huh?”

Julius: “Ah, Reinhard, isn’t it. It seems that Subaru and the others have already come in contact with Greed. We cannot afford to make any delays either. We must also hurry.”

When one Sin Archbishop was attacked, the other Sin Archbishops did not come together in defense and retaliation.

Julius and Ricardo sped up their pace, aiming for the approaching control tower.

Ricardo: “So, what’s so strange ‘bout that Gluttony? Did ya say he’s an extraordinary monster?!”

Ricardo tapped on his shoulder in hopes of hearing Julius’ story to its conclusion and interrupted Julius’ forward momentum. Julius turned his head and looked back, with a gaze which denied what he had just said.

Julius: “No. Although it does seem like he was not completely serious, the skill of Gluttony does not seem to exceed human knowledge itself. If we both are his opponents, then that may just be enough for him, however, the enemy's creepiness is a totally different subject."

"…"

His unavoidable worry itself was because of the fact that Julius himself did not know the extent of its true creepiness. And it was Julius' unusual selfishness which made him avoid mentioning this argument in the previous strategy meeting.

Julius considered Gluttony to be an unfathomable and eerie opponent, but still believed that he must cross swords with him.

Ricardo did not know the reason behind it.

It could not be said that even Julius clearly knew, either.

"…"

They kicked the stone pavement and passed the curve of the street to its exit. There lied one of four control towers, colored differently compared to the other buildings, and in front of that was—

???: "A~h, we thought that you'd come. We expected that you'd come. That's right, that's exactly right, that's completely right, perhaps that's right, maybe that's right, probably that's right, isn't that right, isn't that probably right, because that's right ~tsu! The wait was well worth it ~tsu!"

—Before the entrance of the control tower, a lone boy stood on the cobblestone square.

Dressed in dirty rags, dark brown hair left to grow for a long time till it reached great length. His crazy eyes twinkling and shining with happiness, sharp canine teeth and a dripping tongue hung from his mouth.

With both arms slouched down, he was a young boy. No matter how you looked at him, he barely seemed to have any power and looked like simply a vagrant child—but an aura of dreadfulness emanated from his body.

Ricardo: “One more thing, jus’ to confirm… It’s him, right?”

There wasn’t any need to ask, whether it was. There was no doubt, it was completely convincing.

As a response to Ricardo, Julius only lowered his jaw quietly.

There was no possible doubt, no possible mistake, that it was the Sin Archbishop of Gluttony standing there.

The worst kind of blasphemer who chewed on the names and memories of others.

Julius: “Roy Alphard—”

Roy: “Yes, correct answer. That’s our name. We’re happy that you remember it. Quite happy. Pretty happy. Really happy. As we’re happy. Because we’re happy, drinking ~tsu! Gluttony ~tsu! It would be worthwhile to eat, and dri~nk. And also…”

Declaring his name, Alphard laughed with terrible brutality. His eyes glared directly at Ricardo standing right next to Julius.

He opened his mouth and rings his nose as his eyes filled with ecstasy.

Roy: “This time it seems that we will be even getting a puppy-chan. That makes us unbelievably happy. After all, our stomach might have had gotten a bit troubled if it was ju~st Julius Juukulius-kun. Whatever you say, it would have had been completely tasteless, won’t it.”

Julius: “It seems I have gotten rather bored by your words of insult. Henceforth to settle this quickly, I asked my friend to accompany me this time. Though it is definitely inelegant to have more than one person…”

Roy: “A~h, it’s nice, that way of starting. Doing that to raise self-consciousness may be nice and it is typical of Julius-kun bu~t, it’s rather weak. We are gourmands so tasting that is a bit problematic, but still, we are intrigued as Julius-kun is one of the top-class we have seen till now! Tidy a~nd consistent.”

Julius: “Well, well… in addition to the big welcome we received, I am grateful for those words as well.”

Roy: “Well that cannot be helped ~tsu! Our, our honesty is something that gets overlooked. What we want you to overlook right now is this slight mismatch of characters.”

Waving his hands, Alphard did not bend his posture till the end. Provocatively, Julius kept his calm, but Ricardo was unable to hide his feeling of unpleasantness. He clicked his tongue and cracked the bones of his neck.

Ricardo: “O~h, say what ya wanna say, boy. It’ll be mistake to overlook you as just some brat. What ye’ll get for your sins won’t be very pretty. I’ll even travel across dimensions just to beat your ass. Because, boy will I break that.”

Roy: “Oh, scaryscary. Don’t stare at us with that scary face. We apologize if you got offe~nded that we called you a puppy, Ricardo Welkin. But still, we still longed for you a bit, you know? Don’t scare us, in that rough loud voice of yo~urs!”

“—?”

Calling Ricardo by his name, he shouted, as Julius frowned. Seeing his eyes, Julius shook his head. Strange. Alphard’s remarks were merely a madman’s delusion, but the enormous sense of discomfort could not be easily wiped away. For example—when did he, learn Ricardo’s name?

Ricardo: “Damn spooky brat… From where, and when, did ya learn our names.”

Roy: “It wouldn’t be ve~ry wise to try and investigate. It’s just that, it’s obvious that we would know your name. Isn’t that true, Julius-ku~n?”

Julius: “No matter how much you consent, I cannot respond to you. You too, I am completely ignorant regarding you. If this is the way you will do it, I will break the flow just as much.”

Roy: “Look, there’s that boring conclusion again. Even though we care about it quite much, it's uneasy it's uneasy it's unpleasant ~tsu! Hiding it in the chest, putting aside thinking about oneself for later ~tsu! It's pretty virtuous as a knight, but it's pretty boring as a person."

Pulling out his knight sword, Julius's lips silently whisper something.

And immediately afterwards, six extremely brilliant lights surrounded Julius.

They were the six quasi-spirits Julius is always accompanied by.

This mix of swordsmanship and spirit-arts was what made Julius the Knight Impeccable.

Roy: "Neither the aroma of the feeling of inferiority, nor the rich texture of experiencing frustration, even the sweetness of a strong desire, or the rare taste of a sense of satisfaction after you've aged, you have no~ne of them ~tsu!"

Julius: "—Ricardo. Give it your everything from the very beginning. Let's work together."

Ricardo: "Yeah, leave it to me."

Shaking his arms, Alphard revealed the daggers attached on his wrists. Wielding two daggers was Gluttony's fighting style, but it did not seem to be enough to stop Julius' magic or prevent Ricardo's blows.

As long as the battle wasn't an ambush, their respective victory and defeat were already in sight.

Regardless, in Ricardo's eyes, Alphard did not seem an opponent that could provide a rich and challenging battle experience.

Julius: "Spirit Knight, Julius Juukulius."

As per his manners, Julius gave his name ahead of the fight.

However, Ricardo, who was standing next to him, had no such obligations to follow. They fixed their eyes, waiting for Gluttony to give his identity.

Seeing Ricardo's line of sight, Alphard shouted.

Roy: "How nice, quite nice, perhaps it is nice, isn't it nice , maybe it is nice, possibly it is nice, probably it is nice, because it is probably nice ~tsu! Gluttonous drinking ~tsu! Gluttony ~tsu! Gourmet, bizarre eating, satiation, overeating ~tsu! Spiciness, blandness, deliciousness, delicacy ~tsu! We will eat everything up ~tsu! Even a life without taste, is also a taste that's new to us ~tsu!"

Julius: "—El Clausel."

The vibrance of the six colors draw a circle in front of Julius's eyes, and an extremely bright light emanates from the tip of his sword that aimed to stab through Alphard's center.

Multiple affinities mixed, that destructive power develops into a rainbow-colored blow that could swallow up everything.

Ricardo stepped on ahead with momentum that crushed the cobblestone, just behind the dazzling light. As if in an attempt to have Ricardo push Alphard aside, right into the extremely vibrant light. Against the heavy slashes and the rainbow-colored extremely vibrant light, Alphard uncovers his fangs.

Roy: "—Truly, nii-sama is as magnificent as imagined. We will be enchanted, geez ~tsu."

2

Beneath the moon, flashes of silver sliced through wind, as sparks spilled forth from a symphony of swordplay.

The first musician was a Sword Demon who swung a pair of blades with crisp notes.

His partner welcomed him; a swordswoman whose movements flowed reminiscent the path of a gentle stream.

Flashes of metal danced through the air; the clash of steel should have sounded cruel, and yet, somehow, this symphony was wistfully melancholic. The ringing of sharp, precise collisions resembled the gentle caresses of a pair of lovers.

The reason for this was simple; these two swordsmen complemented each other on a level beyond perfection.

Wilhelm: “Haaah—!”

The Sword Demon steeled his breath as he let loose a flurry of elliptical blows.

Those precise arcs were practically a form of art, their clean movements the ideal standard for all aspiring swordsmen.

His sheer skill was so overwhelming that anyone who was worthy of calling themself a knight would have been so captivated that their battle would be guaranteed a loss, and yet he merely, almost casually, unleashed flurry after flurry.

Theresia: “…”

One single, light blow would have been more than fatal, in this rain of unending death.

However, meeting this peerless hurricane was a longsword whose owner was truly extraordinary.

Moreover, that longsword had an odd quality.

The length of the blade, as tall as its owner, was too unwieldy to make a proper weapon; and yet, the slender swordswoman swung the huge blade with ease, as if it were weightless.

Although the longsword’s owner was draped from head to toe in a black cloak, impeding on her vision, the tip of her sword flowed as if dancing through water.

Whether it be in terms of speed or polish, the twin blades greatly outstripped the longsword. Even so, each and every one of the Sword Demon’s piercing attacks were, without fail, absorbed and deflected.

Between the sparks and sharp clangs, with an almost pitying hiss toward the Sword Demon, the swordswoman leapt backward. A beat too slow to react to the unexpected move, just as he was about to push forward, the gleam of a blade pierced his forehead.

Wilhelm: "—hk"

Flashing before him, was a blow that he couldn't allow to make contact.

This was a specialized killing blow that flashed faster than the blink of an eye, which disguised the approaching blade. If not for his extensive experience in dueling her, he would have been unable to see through the imminent death he'd nearly been dealt, and glem would have passed through the brain and killed him.

The skin between his brows burned at the close call. In an instant, the Sword Demon cast off his misgivings, and began to pursue to woman who'd frozen in her stinging pose.

Wilhelm: "huu, kuu"

Theresia: "…"

Before he'd even gathered himself enough to act, the woman had driven her toes into his flesh.

Her slender feet pierced between his well-exercised abdominal muscles and jolted his organs; the weight of her kick bent his body double, as a silver flash drew an arc, which hung over his head.

The glittering sword flew straight as true, as if meaning to cut down the moon.

Having reached the peak of its flight, the sword began to glide back to earth, and slicing straight through the atmosphere, meaning to bisect the sword demon.

The power behind that attack was incomparable to any previous ones; both the deadliness of the blade itself and its owner's skill were more than capable of slicing through any human body.

Approaching in the briefest of flashes, was this certain death.

Wilhelm: “Stop looking down on me!”

Still bent double, he immediately swung both his arms upward, staggering as they met the crushing force overhead.

The Sword Demon’s own blades overlapped as they caught the weapon bearing down on him, as his jaws clenched from its sheer power. Unable to fend it off entirely, his arms began to fall; shallowly, the blade pierced his forehead.

Blood spurted forth, splattering his field of vision red. However, he hadn’t fallen to knees, not had his own swords been broken.

Wilhelm: “kuuuu”

The arms holding the sword back strained upward, pushing the fallen sword back again.

Sweeping the heavy blade aside, the residual aftershocks shook the form of the swordswoman before him; taking advantage of the moment, he kicked forward.

The force that should have slammed back into the ground was instead redirected into the woman’s airborne form.

The combination of the force from the falling blade and the kick slammed the woman’s body into the distance. The aging Sword Demon lunged into the slender body that had nowhere left to flee.

—An opening.

Against the swordswoman who had flown into the air, with no escape route, the Sword Demon lowered his shoulder and unleashed an attack.

Catching up to her fleeing form, the attack came simultaneously from top and bottom. As one, the two blades drew an arc, tearing toward her slender form with the bite of a wild beast.

In midair, with her back turned toward him, she could make no counterattack.

Even so, that clarity of that attack found itself shaken.

Theresia: “…”

The hood that had covered the swordswoman’s head, unable to withstand the tug of gravity as she flipped her body, swished back, revealing what had once been hidden,

Cascading down was long hair the color of a beautiful, raging flame.

Theresia: “…”

At the time of its entry into her field of vision, the swordsman's attack carried a flaw which existed for briefer than a single instant.

A incredibly subtle, slight deviation from perfection, was this mistake. Even so, no one else would be able to parry this attack.

However, considering the Sword Demon's current opponent, this mistake was fatal. To an existence which had once won the favor of the god of swords, that turbid blade could not reach at all.

Theresia: "…"

At the scene in front of him, the Sword Demon's throat was frozen by a shudder.

That certain blow had been interrupted midway.

It hadn't been anything special. The woman merely drew her sword in midair, and wedged it between the swords that came from above and below. As easy as sliding a brace between a pair of fangs.

The blade and the pommel of her longsword completely caught the advance of the two swords right in their tracks. What had the Sword Demon shudder was that bite of steel on steel rang out only once.

Catching the two blades with only one crisp sound, meant that she had calculated the timing of both of them colliding with her own weapon down to the millisecond.

What was truly horrifying was the necessary clarity of vision, skill, and sheer nerve to even attempt such an act.

Wilhelm: "—kuu"

The stunt, so far beyond what common sense dictated was possible, drew a sigh from the Sword Demon's throat.

At that moment, the leg of the woman who was still caught between the swords flew in a wide arc, kicking away the Sword

Demon's hands, which still rested where his attack had stalled.

The impact jolted his weapons from the hands which wielded them, and, in that moment, he found himself completely defenseless.

Then, with a flash of steel, the longsword made a cross.

The combination of the speed at which the blade approached, and the range that couldn't have been shorter.

Even with a little time and distance, the empty-handed swordsman had no way to block.

The longsword pierced his thin skin and continued drive into his organs and sever his spine, driving through his left side in one single motion and splitting his body into halves—coughing up blood and internal organs, the body already shackled by old age breaking with blow. That was the unavoidable fate that awaited him.

That was the end that could not be evaded, and the conclusion of the matter.

After the end of his life, having lost everything, he couldn't even cling to a chance at redemption.

—That kind of conclusion was simply impossible to accept.

Wilhelm: "RAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAAH—!"

He rebelled against the bloody end that flashed through his mind.

The throat of the sword ghost burned with the final scene of the illusion, the vitality of his twilight years erupting forth. Breaking the limits concentration so that even passage of time stalled, only he and his opponent existed in that moment, the sounds and colors of the world fading from focus.

The impending blade traced an unexpected orbit to stab into his body.

Slowly feeling the touch of the blade piercing through his fragile skin, as well the heat and pain of bleeding, whilst feeling as if the natural force of gravity had increased tenfold, he planted all his the power into his two feet.

Digging his heels in hard enough to shatter stone, he redirected the force of swinging his arms to the right into a reactive motion.

Reversing his body with the shortest distance and best angle, turning to the side as if approaching the blade that brushed his body, a form of evasion which allowed him to roll along the blade that slid across his side.

Theresia: "…"

Having been thwarted in her attack, the swordswoman's follow up attack was delayed by but a brief moment.

In that time, the Sword Demon retreated several paces, plucking his twin swords from midair. With a sigh, he placed the palm of his hand onto his side, checking the depth of the wound.

This was certainly no minor scratch.

He'd turned while a blade had been invading his body, after all. Spinning while being pierced, he'd naturally draw a wound on his own body.

Fortunately, by a hair's breadth, he'd kept the blade from plunging into his organs, but the amount of blood dripping from the wound mere centimeters away from his innards was by no means a small amount.

To ordinary people, this was a serious injury. Although that was natural—

Wilhelm: "…From the very start, I didn't feel that I could persist in this battle for long."

He'd already been running on a time limit, it had only grown shorter.

The Sword Demon—Wilhelm rolled off his shirt and violently staunched the bleeding from his waist; exposing his healthy flesh during this emergency treatment, he was not pursued.

The woman opposing him merely watched quietly, her gaze devoid of emotion.

At his own anticipation of any swaying or subtle changes in those eyes, Wilhelm gave a bitter smile. Pressing on his open the wound, he awoke himself with the pain.

Wilhelm: "Such weakness is useless. Stop dreaming, this sacred reunion, you will one day be able to indulge in as much as you want, in the heavens."

Theresia: "…"

Wilhelm: "I don't think I'm hallucinating. Nor do I expect miracles. My wife was a woman who was reluctant to follow the way of the sword, but pushing the responsibility of wielding the sword onto others, was something she never once did."

An emotionless corpse, a revived construct.

Crimson hair silky and flowing, smooth skin snowy and transparent, eyes bijous of precious gems; closing his own, he recalled that cute face that he would never tire of.

All this was before him, and all this shouldn't have been before him.

Wilhelm: "Theresia, how lovely you are. —Therefore, you can't remain here."

Wilhelm tightened his grip on his swords, taking up fighting a stance again.

At this moment, standing here, was not the husband of Theresia van Astrea. The one who prayed to stand here was not Wilhelm van Astrea.

Who stood here at this moment was Sword Demon Wilhelm.

—Facing his dead wife, Wilhelm steeled his spirit, his gaze becoming clear and clean.

Even if his blood were boiling, he wouldn’t allow his anger at the sinister presence to come to a breaking point.

But, right now, at this moment, at this time, anything else was superfluous.

His old friend, his comrade-in-arms, his wife, had said to Wilhelm.

Don’t allow heat to besmirch the blade, don’t allow your blood boil, you must learn to love the coldness of steel.

How about now? Was it growing hot?

Wilhelm: “No, it’s frigid. Like the blade of a knife.”

Under the moon, the Sword Demon pierced his opponent with a gaze of steel.

The talent swordswoman who was his opponent, also waved the tip of the her longsword again, without any flaws.

In an instant, their swords once again flashed again toward each other.

The sounds of steel intertwined with each other was a wail, a plea, a courtship.

The expectation of an end, and the hope that it would never come to an end.

As if exchanging endless dialogue without a single word. The sound of swordplay played ceaselessly, echoing.

3

Garfiel: “Ah, damn it! No response ‘t all, what a joke!”

Kicking off the ground, kicking off a wall, kicked off a roof, and soaring up.

Flying diagonally in the air, his short blond hair fluttering as it bathed in the wind fluttering, exposing his teeth, a picture of desperation.

Time and time again, gnashing his fangs, fighting the burning sensation in his body and chest.

Garfiel: “Bastard! What’s up, hello!”

His clothes fluttering, he broke into a run the instant he touched the ground again.

This was a feat that only those of exceptional strength and endurance, far beyond a human level, could achieve. However, the one who flew over the city with only his own body expressed no pride in his abilities.

Instead, he kept roaring into an unresponsive hand mirror.

The one sprinting was Garfiel, who was howling into the magic device in his hand—the conversation mirror.

The conversation mirror, which should have been able to link him to others who possessed one, remained silent. No one picked up Garfiel’s call, even though, clearly, there were two groups of people capable of responding.

Garfiel: “City Hall guys, or Wrath fightin’ guys! Th’ hell’re ya not replyin’ for!”

The conversation mirrors were supposed to have been assigned so that everyone could stay in contact during their respective battles.

In fact, they’d been working perfectly fine just after he’d left City Hall. But now, when contact was necessary, the function of the dialogue mirror had fallen silent.

—This needed to be communicated immediately.

Garfiel: “Gotta tell ‘em that they’ve to evacuate City Hall now, damn it!”

As he said so, he leapt upward, skipping the street in front of him as he took a shortcut.

Although his rough landing shattered the roof he landed on, Garfiel had no attention to spare. Compared to damage to the city, ensuring the safety of his companions was far more important.

The goal of his rapid travel was City Hall.

Garfiel was rushing back to the place he'd left only dozens of minutes ago. Leaving behind Wilhelm, his comrade-in-arms, he desperately called to the conversation mirror.

There was no other reason.

Danger was quickly approaching City Hall that was serving as their base.

—Wilhelm and Garfiel had arrived at the control tower occupied by the Lust, at about the same time that Reinhard began to engage with Greed.

Having witnessed the distant aurora, the two entered the control tower.

None of the witch cultists nor the troublesome people who they'd expected had appeared to intercept their path. As expected, the Witch Cult minions in the city seemed to only consist of insignificant opponents.

Everything had been smooth sailing until then, and hadn't been any other rooms worth checking out aside from the water gate control room.

So, the pair naturally headed to the top floor to prepare for a decisive battle with Lust. In the imagination, the proportion of the power of the Lust camp is the most dangerous. In addition to Lust, there were two outstanding fighters, which meant that the two would have to face three enemies—naturally, they were both engulfed in tension.

Wilhelm: "If possible, I'd appreciate the swordswoman being left to me."

Garfiel: "Th' cap'n also told me so. Seems like there's something between ya. But, my amazin' self also has a bone t' pick with that woman. Can't let ya have 'er so easily."

Wilhelm: "That is my wife. Those bastards made a mockery of my wife's death, trampled upon her soul, and forced her to point a sword that which she'd sworn to protect."

Garfiel: "…"

Wilhelm: "No matter what, this is impermissible."

On the way, Wilhelm had revealed his reason for wanting to fight.

That was a reason that Garfiel, who should have had no basis to give up, couldn't help but keep his mouth shut against. And his inability to form reply in that moment, may have been just what decided the most fitting opponent of the swordswoman.

Garfiel: "…"

Although he'd said nothing, Garfiel conceded the opponent to Wilhelm. Wilhelm also indicated his understanding of this, silently bowing his head to express his gratitude.

So, when he stepped into the control tower, Garfiel felt his the cold sensation of his hair sticking straight up.

If Wilhelm is going to fight the female swordsman, then he'd have to deal with the remaining two by himself. The swordswoman went without mention, and the giant accompanying her was no less powerful than she was.

Although Lust was seeming lacking in terms of combat effectiveness, Subaru had repeatedly emphasized that what was fearsome about the Witch Cult was its direct combat ability.

Silent tension and pervasive fighting spirit.

As his sense of smell caught an increasingly strong scent of blood, Garfiel equipped the silver shields which had been strapped legs, and rushed into the room.

There, he saw it.

“Why the hell would I just be obediently waiting here? Fool.”

Words scrawled in blood, occupying an entire wall of the room.

When he realized what they meant, Garfiel’s head seethed.

Fleeing from a battle as if it were a matter of course, a type of personality which could straightforwardly say that there was no obligation to wait.

Wilhelm: “—Neglectful. Those bastards are exactly the type to pull this kind of trick.”

Wilhelm lowered his voice and retrieved the conversation mirror from his sleeves. The reason for trying to get in touch with City Hall so immediately was because Wilhelm had thought of the notion first.

Wilhelm: “If our forces are sent out in raids, then our base’s combat power will naturally diminish. These guys won’t have any shame in exploiting this gap.”

Before the pale-faced Garfiel, Wilhelm grimaced at the unresponsive mirror.

At the same time, along the roof of the control tower, emerged a deep, oppressive hostility.

A feeling that his back was being stroked by a blade, was what tipped Garfiel off about the existence of the enemy.

Wilhelm had also felt the hostile presence.

Wilhelm: “Garfiel-sama, I’ll entrust City Hall to you.”

Garfiel: “‘F it comes down t’ it, my amazin’ self can get there faster.”

They exchanged ideas in a flash.

The enemy was as a razor-sharp, clandestine blade. Exposing their backs as they tried to flee would only result in the both of them being cut down from behind.

Between them, one of them needed to stay.

Then, one of them needed to return to City Hall.

Wilhelm: “Please, continue to try to establish contact. —My master, I entrust her to you.”

Garfiel: “Goes without sayin’. ‘S a ‘Libre’s voice rouses the blood of soldiers’.”

Garfiel caught the thrown conversation mirror and sped out of the control tower.

Like so, he flew across the city, crossed the waterway, and continued into the mirror that offered no response. —Wilhelm’s battle was also probably starting.

Garfiel: “Damn it! All that, for nothin’…!”

If Lust launched a surprise attack on City Hall, there would be very little forces capable of greeting her.

Anastasia and Ferris had no combat power, and Crusch had collapsed from her injuries. Although several members of the Iron Fang stood on guard, their combat power wasn’t enough to compare with Mimi.

The instant that he thought of Mimi, Garfiel’s chest grew sore.

The girl who, even now, hovered in the abyss of death, who he’d rescued, saved, protected.

Keep her alive, saving her, clearly should have been his duty.

That duty had been conceded to another due to sentiment, and his chance at vengeance grew further by the second. However, even the work that was taken as an alternative could not be completed satisfactorily.

What was he doing? Looking as he did, what was he doing?

To Mimi, Subaru, his sister, Ram, or anyone, he couldn't lift his head to face them.

Garfiel: "My amazin' self, once again—!"

Can't do anything?

The unresponsive conversation mirror reflected such an unpromising face. In the moment that he cursed himself,

Garfiel: "—?!"

As he smashed the roof whilst leaping, he was a beat too slow in reacting to the shadow flying in from the side.

That form, far more massive than his own, met him with a horizontal impact.

The reason why he couldn't even issue a cry of pain was because his throat was hooked under an elbow. Blood and oxygen unable to circulate through his brain, maintaining his consciousness grew steadily more difficult.

Pulling him back into gradual consciousness was the force of the impact over his whole body.

The body that had greeted his obliquely from the air and slammed into a nearby building. Breaking the wall with his entire body, Garfiel tossed up a cloud of dust.

The dull pain and broken bones drew a groan from Garfiel, as he felt himself being liberated from the restraint. Using his body's elasticity, Garfiel slammed the ground as hard as he could, pulling himself upright again.

He found himself in a structure with no lighting. The smog that filled the room had become a white smoke under the moonlight, and, before his own blood-coughing figure, he could detect another presence.

That was undoubtedly the culprit who'd sniped him and landed them in here.

Garfiel: “Ya bastard, y' really know how t'-”

The instant when he'd taken a battle stance, a fist slammed into his stomach.

Garfiel's entire abdominal area took the force of his opponent's huge fists, and his body flew upward. Then, he was smashed by the fist that had been swung from above, and the already decrepit floor broke beneath him and he fell another level.

Garfiel: “Kuu, what… guu?!”

The sole of a foot slammed into his downward falling body.

The damage caused by both the momentum and the mass caused him to spit blood, and his body, stomped on once again, crashed fiercely and directly through to the entrance to the building, where it was smashed into the street.

From this striking impact, Garfiel continued to cough and he climbed to his feet. At the same time, he applied simple healing magic himself, knitting broken bones as he raised his head.

The one who'd chased Garfiel from the top of the building to here was a hulking figure who he needed to crane his head to see.

Although covered head to toe in black robes, even that could not disguise the thickness of his arms and legs. Rather than saying he was muscular, it would be no exaggeration to say that he wore an armor of muscle.

To Garfiel, this would be the third time facing that enemy.

That name was already known as well.

Garfiel: “Kurgan of Eight Arms…”

He was one of the Vollachia Empire's sword swinging heroes.

Although he was said to have died in battle while defending an imperial city ten and some years prior, for him to be here right now, could he have suffered the same humiliation in death that Wilhelm's wife had?

Kurgan: "…"

When Garfiel spoke that name, the giant, Kurgan, extended his arms.

At that moment, the clasp of his robes gave way, revealing his figure. That is to say, the hero Kurgan revealed his expertise in close-range battle.

As expected, his strong body was covered by a thick armor of muscle.

A powerful physique which could rival the giants, and face on a neck which could be described as demonic, filled with the domineering expression of a war god.

And what made this war god a war god, were the eight arms which enabled those strange fighting techniques.

In addition to the two arms that usually grew from the shoulders, two more arms sprouted from the same place. Move down his body revealed two more arms using his shoulders as the starting point, and the rest stretched their palms forward from behind.

That was in accordance with Kurgan's name Eight Arms. Someone capable of sapping his enemy's will to fight with just his natural body.

Kurgan: "…"

Facing Garfiel, who'd swallowed a deep breath, Kurgan kept his silence as he drew his weapon.

Strapped to his thick legs, coincidentally mounted in the same style as Garfiel's shield, were a pair of thick, long, distorted blades—the Ghost Cleavers that this war god swung.

This war god drew two other Ghost Cleavers from his back, for a total of four. Although the remaining four arms are still unarmed, Garfiel would nonetheless be completely overwhelmed.

He had no leisure to underestimate the enemy in the slightest.

Garfiel: "…"

His body trembled.

In front of this real hero, Garfiel's body trembled from his core.

Garfiel stared at the hero, the legendary figure, the great man who'd made a mark in history.

To not know the name of the Kurgan of Eight Arms was impossible for him.

Garfiel indeed took great interest in his myriad legends coming from every which way.

And today, he stood in front of his very own eyes, as an enemy.

This was a nightmare. A ongoing nightmare that had begun yesterday.

What else could it be, malicious as it was?

Garfiel: "…ha, ah, huh."

Garfiel's breath quickened as he reached toward his legs.

Mounted there in the same way as Kurgan's Ghost Cleavers were silver shields. Unaware of how many times his fingers slipped, finally, the straps came undone.

Placing his shields on his arms as if to cover his fists, he knocked them together for confirmation, creating a sharp note which echoed in the night sky.

His equipment is ready, and his injuries had healed enough to not be debilitating.

However, his mind was still, at the moment, frazzled.

Garfiel: "'S no time t' say stupid shit—!"

Clenching his fangs, Garfiel hit himself in the face.

Shaking his head from the dizzying pain and shock, he turned his gaze forward again. Assuming his stance again, he bared his fangs at the war god before him.

Garfiel: "'F you're jus' standing there, th' hell's my amazin' self for! Whether 's th' cap'n! Or the other guys too! They're all fightin'! Obviously, all yer good for 's fightin', so th' fuck're ya stallin' for?"

Kurgan: "…"

Against the screaming Garfiel, Kurgan remained impassive.

The silent war god that Garfiel was facing would only watch him quietly. With a pout, he broke the line of the street, then rushed forward with a single step.

Through the soles of his shoes, he absorbed the power of the earth, allowing his Divine Protection of Earth Spirits to redirect all that energy into a blow.

His fist was truly infused with the power to shatter a stone building.

His silver shield reinforced the fist's blow, one strong enough to break even a hero.

His arm flew straight and true into Kurgan's waist—

Garfiel: "—How's this?"

Kurgan: "…"

Using the full force of his body, Garfiel's attack was blocked by Kurgan's Demon Cleaver.

The Demon Cleaver, blocking the direct attack to Kurgan's abdomen, withstood the power of Garfiel's blow. He did not evade, nor did he flinch.

With only a hard block, a full-bodied attack was dispelled. The hero of Eight Arms had used only a single arm.

Garfiel: “—kuu”

Garfiel’s stiff expression ushered in a punch from the shoulder. The body that turned backwards was caught by the arm that protruded from a side, and, unable to escape, he could only take a wild beating.

His cheekbones were broken in an instant, and his fundus was crushed. The field of view of his right eye was stained bright red. A razor fang shattered and blew away. His body still caught, he was thrown to the ground, kicked down the street by a powerful leg, and rolled, rolled, rolled, rolled into the nearby waterway.

Garfiel: “—aa”

Everything went in a flash, and he stared at the moon that floated so high above him.

That moon seemed to laugh at him. Afterward, Garfiel’s body sank into the waterway.

—The surface of the water was slowly dyed crimson.

Chapter 52:
The Stars and Sin Archbishops

1

The collapse was pushing in.

That shower of fresh blood, each drop and every drop, like a malevolent hand grasping gallant destruction, trampled over the city.

Wherever the droplets touched, more so than striking a sheet of paper with the edge of a blade, it unresistingly lost its cohesion. The destructive propagation demolished buildings, and the aftermath, in turn, spread further collapse around it.

Subaru: “Aaaaaaaaaa!!”

Emilia: “—Tsk!”

Fully aware that he was being unreasonable, yet wringing out breath from his lungs, Subaru continued powering through his sprint. Jogging alongside him was Emilia, her gleaming silver hair fluttering through the air and her mouth tightly shut, similarly mid-stride.

However, the scenic water city’s specialty canals stretched out from them in all directions.

Simply put, finding a straight path to properly escape on was proving difficult. In front of the dashing pair spread waterways, while destruction from the rear threatened to swallow them both.

Subaru: “Watch out!”

Emilia: “We’re sailing close to the wind, but…Subaru, grab on!”

As their escape route cutting off caused Subaru to raise his voice, Emilia instantly conceived of a different notion. He grabbed onto her outstretched arm without hesitation, and in that same moment, a chill came over the surrounding air.

It was the effect of both magic borne of the spirits' borrowed strength and the power of Emilia herself, acting together.

Emilia: "—Please, everyone!"

Once Emilia commanded them so, from each luminous point blue light surged downwards.

In the next instant, the ground beneath was instantly soaked with white, and in the blink of an eye a whole world of frost had spread.

Subaru: "Oouh?! Emilia-tan is amazing! So clever!"

Emilia: "Control is difficult, so don't let go of my hand!"

Subaru looked up, his right hand still linked with Emilia's own. Tightly grasped in the half-elf's raised left fist, was an icicle directed ahead which had shot forward moments before.

Freezing the ground and thrusting from it an icicle, her borrowing of the propulsive force from her magic had thus hastened their escape. Even more surprising was the course of ice formed by the spirits in the air.

On the edge of the waterway in front of them, something like a ski jump had been formed, and the Subaru and Emilia pair, gliding with their built-up momentum, had sailed over the channel.

Subaru: "Eee-yahaa!"

On the other side of the waterway, another course of ice had been created. While she was touching down and skating over it, Subaru honestly praised Emilia's skill.

Subaru: "Nice, Emilia-tan! I fell for you all over again!"

Emilia: "But, I can't think of a way to stop! What should we do?"

Subaru: "Eeh."

Emilia had already released the icicle, but the leftover momentum was still plenty to cause unavoidably high damage once they hit an obstacle. Using only her ice magic, conveniently making something like a cushion for two to absorb the heavy impact wasn't a possibility.

In the meantime, the pair was drawing closer and closer to a wall. Moments before impact, feeling Emilia's hand tightly squeezing his, Subaru made a snap judgement.

Subaru: "Emilia-tan! Install curve!"

Emilia: "Cu, cur—ve?"

Subaru: "A gently-bending kind of wall! In a circle!"

Hearing Subaru's desperate call, Emilia with her magic meekly obeyed.

Right in front of their sliding forms, a gentle curve formed, and following along it while turning widely, those two avoided impact.

Subaru: "Just like that, don't let the curves cut off! Twirl—! Twirl—!"

Emilia: "T, twirl—! Twirl—!"

Just so, turning widely like that, as to not cut off at a wall, more curves of ice formed.

Viewed from above, an ice wall shaped like mosquito-repellent coil was created, and the two bodies reaching the midpoint just barely lost enough speed to safely come to a stop.

Subaru: "Huuh, after wasting a bunch of Emilia-tan's magic, we did it somehow."

Emilia: "More importantly, the attack from earlier."

As the stopped Subaru let out a sigh, Emilia whacked her ice formation with her hand and shattered it. Watching the crushed ice returning to mana particles, and turning to see the traces of the destruction they fled from, a shiver ran up Subaru's spine.

Centered around the tower on which Regulus' attack had originated, the scenery of the city had changed.

Especially near the center, where the impacts of blood had been strongly felt, the destruction was severe. Further outwards in the perimeter of destruction, deviations in its traces formed. But even then, few buildings still held their original shape. In other words, it was an attack with an abnormally high area of effect.

At Subaru's location, the attack had crossed the waterway and reached over. That it had barely failed to reach Subaru was the result of chance and a desperate escape—not.

Subaru: "Reinhard."

On the building Regulus had stood up to this moment, there was now no one.

Instead, in its vicinity thick smoke was rising, and the sound of tremendous destruction was echoing.

2

Regulus sent the Water Dragon to its death by tearing it apart, smirking while it sprayed blood.

In that moment, he could already see two small figures desperately trying to escape down an alley.

How puny, how very petty, how truly trivial.

Laughing mockingly as his scattered blood trampled on the city, he eagerly awaited the moment that destruction would catch up to the fleeing duo.

A Prostitute and a Rapist. For them, death in a hail of blood was fitting.

Regulus: "Scatter! Scatter away! You heinous fiends who trampled on my heart!"

Reinhard: "—My apologies, but I can't let you do that."

Immediately after declaring his rage and victory with those words, he was startled by a voice speaking close to his ear.

As he turned around, a head of red hair with the appearance of flames fanned by the wind came into view.

Regulus: "How foolish you look! Getting in the way of someone's love with such zeal!"

Reinhard: "If your method was proper and respectful of rights, if once rejected you could promise to pull away cleanly, then I would not even hesitate to cheer for you."

At Regulus' infuriated voice, Reinhard responded with a laugh and a tease.

While that ever-so-composed posture was indeed hateful, what now took hold of Regulus' feelings was an inexplicable suspicion. —Then, leaping in a single burst, came Reinhard's leg.

Certainly, that right leg, on its shin it had suffered a serious injury.

Though not entirely torn off, to say it was held to the ankle with a mere strip of leather was no exaggeration. Far from battle-worthy, it was in no state to bear walking on. That it had left that state meant,

Regulus: "That is so dumb, it's not just swordsmanship, is healing magic your specialty, too? With all those talents of yours that better than others, just how much did you trample over their hearts on the way here? Shattering the hearts of others without even trying filthy does that feel good huh?!"

Reinhard: "Among your misconceptions—In one respect, I will definitely correct you."

Reinhard twisted, the wind shrieking as it shrouded his body.

His released spinning kick blew through the air, landing directly on the water dragon's body wielded by Regulus. That corpse which had already become a simple mass of meat now shattered—,

Regulus: “Wha!”

Reinhard: “I cannot use any kind of magic, let alone healing magic. It was simply the spirits in the air that came to my aid, hastily healing the wounds on my foot.”

As the force from his leg demolished the body, with a twist of his ankle he rescued it from Regulus’ grasp. Through that very skillful footwork, the water dragon’s remains was not excessively ill-treated, and was then gently tossed onto the roof of a partially-wrecked building.

Then,

Reinhard: “Perfect. —Next on the checklist, Tactic J will commence.”

Regulus: “Kuaa!”

At the same moment he begrudged Reinhard’s hypocritical act, his sword’s pommel knocked him upside the head. Smacked away, Regulus’ body rolled down the slope of the roof.

Askew over the ground and headed straight downwards, in his ear again was,

Reinhard: “I’ll put it to the test.”

Regulus: “—?!”

Leaping at the same angle with a bullet’s speed, Reinhard drew close, grasping Regulus’ leg as he inverted mid-fall, and with a shake his form was swallowed up by Reinhard’s actions. Now Reinhard, while carrying Regulus, leapt in the direction of the fleeing Subaru with an awesome storm, accelerating quickly enough to tear off the leg of any ordinary person.

Regulus: “Just whaaat the—”

Reinhard: “Nothing particularly special.”

Claiming so, Reinhard lifted up Regulus' body as he stopped.

With the attitude of a child grasping a doll's leg and playing roughly—While Regulus' temper at that treatment was exploding, he came to understand the finer details of Reinhard's plan.

Wielding Regulus's body, Reinhard flung him into the falling droplets of blood.

Even demolishing buildings formed from stone, that shower of blood imbued with force by Regulus.

If it had such power, then that attack made by Regulus' ability may even be effective against whatever protection he had on his own body.

If that had been the idea, it proved a foolish one.

Regulus: "If it's my own strike then it must work on me? I don't know just how naturally gifted you were born but don't viciously look down on others so much I say. There's no way I myself would be done in with some stupid method like that?"

Reinhard: "This too was ineffective—"

Those droplets of blood, touching Regulus' body, became simple droplets on the spot and splashed off of his form. Obviously, the priority was different.

At that same moment, Reinhard suddenly released his grip on Regulus' leg.

He was an intelligent fellow. If he had let the droplets reach him as such, his palm would have turned into a mess which couldn't possibly grasp a sword again.

The force of the swing disappeared. Landing there onto the street, Regulus once again faced Reinhard. He narrowed his eyes in warning.

Reinhard: "Somehow, it no longer seems possible to touch him again."

Regulus: “It seems you have a keen nose, do you want to get hurt again like you did a while ago.”

Reinhard: “From now on, I will be wary of your breath and vision both. If there are any other precautions to take, I would be glad to hear them.”

Regulus: “Get out of my sight, right now!”

Stepping forth with both hands raised, Regulus ran at Reinhard.

With unbelievable speed, Reinhard turned in a broad arc to dodge, giving him a wide berth. Using the pommel of the dragon sword, he rained blows down on Regulus from a distance.

Regulus: “You just love to run, no matter where you go…!”

Reinhard: “Being unable to solve the problem with sword strikes, how impotent. Truly, I am ashamed of myself.”

Regulus: “You haven’t even drawn that sword of yours yet!”

Facing Reinhard as he weaved back and forth, Regulus made a relatively unseen motion of reaching out his hand.

However, such a flippant attack could never reach a hero like Reinhard. Not only that, Reinhard’s bright blue eyes were still wary of the heavily breathing Regulus’s petty tricks.

Regulus: “Ah?”

But then, a spear suddenly flew straight forward.

Aiming at Regulus, who faced the straight-backed Reinhard, an icicle speared through the ground at his feet.

However, the ice under his feet, after he’d taken a single step, shattered before the image could even become concrete.

Flippantly, Regulus cast his gaze about, settling on the silver-haired maiden who stood at the other end of the canal, hand outstretched. Undoubtedly, the ice magic had been one of her little tricks.

Disgusting, was this visceral feeling of tumbling and boiling.

Regulus: “Each and every one of you, what can’t you understand already?! The fact that we’re different! What we have from the moment of our birth is different! You all can’t reach or compete with my completed self. Accept that you’re lackluster, be satisfied with it, and die!”

Nomatterwhatnomatterwhat, enough of the relentless opposing evildoers.

Such an absolute gap could not be reduced. Why, was this so hard to grasp.

Reinhard: “Tactic A has also failed. What next?”

Regulus stomped his feet, splitting the alleyway, no space left in his ears to listen to Reinhard’s mumbling.

3

Emilia: “No good! As expected, that attack was ineffective!”

Subaru: “It didn’t! Which is to say, the possibility of his feet being an achilles heel is also gone…”

Emilia, as per her instructions, had attacked the soles of Regulus’s feet- however, they’d rent the ice without any trace of injury.

Reinhard: “Tactic J failed as well. Apologies, my capabilities are lacking.”

In an instant, Reinhard had also used the Divine Protection of Telepathy to send a psychic message, and Subaru no longer found himself thrown off balance by these superhuman idiosyncrasies. Closely examining the injury on his right foot revealed that it had stopped bleeding, but even if it had been entirely shredded, this wouldn’t have been the least bit surprising.

Besides, the implications of a shredded foot, Subaru had already experienced.

Subaru: “If his invincibility is a barrier, it may not extend to where his feet come in contact with the ground, so I came up with Tactic A (Soles of Feet)…”

The grounded parts of him had to have disabled the power, or he’d just sink into the ground. Subaru had thought this might be the case, but he’d turned out to have been wrong.

According to Reinhard’s report of Tactic J (Self-Destruct), the idea that Regulus would have to disable his invincibility to launch his invincible attacks was also off.

In that case, Tactic I (Ball in Pool) was also a no-go. It seemed that reality denied the notion that there would be a weakness in his invincibility.

Subaru: “Is, is there anything else? An invincible enemy’s weakness, weakness…!”

Covering his mouth, Subaru furiously ordered his mind to spin.

Before encountering and even after having met Regulus, what he’d often been troubled by, was the means of defeating someone with an ultimate shield, and whatever other ways there may be.

Flying through Subaru’s mind were answers from a variety of subcultures, as though he’d almost figured it out, but there was no clean-cut answer.

Subaru: “Is the way I’m thinking about this off? Is the direction wrong?”

What was needed, was perhaps not a way to break through the invincibility.

Rather, something more fundamental- Regulus’s authority, what was its nature?

Emilia: “Subaru, what else is there? I, what should I do?”

Emilia questioned Subaru, who’d fallen deep into thought.

Before them, across a large canal, the fierce battle between Reinhard and Regulus continued, but she was unable to offer any help, which left her feeling discomfited.

Whether Emilia or Reinhard, both trusted in Subaru, both had expectations of Subaru.

And not just the two of them. The allies stationed elsewhere, and the citizens of Priestella he'd called with his broadcast, all shared those sentiments.

"…"

Thinking, thinking, thinkingthinkingthinkingthinkingthinking.

Although those memories were distasteful, Subaru began to think back to everything since his first encounter with Regulus, up until this instant, his actions and words, the attacks and schemes he'd tried to pull.

There should have been something. There should have been some reason. Not just Regulus was fine. Including the other Sin Archbishops, there should have been something. They were all scum. That much was already clear. It wasn't that-

Subaru: "The names of, the stars."

Emilia: "Subaru?"

Suddenly, Subaru realized it.

Before, he'd thought of the same thing, and now he cast aside the joke to think of it seriously.

Now that things had reached this point, he began to consider an abandoned idea anew.

Regulus, Capella, Alphard, Sirius, Petelgeuse.

These star-related names gathered in one place, could he really treat them so casually as a coincidence?

In retrospect, the Water Plumage Pavilion, the customs of Kararagi, Hoshin of the Wastes.

In this world, so many places had been touched by the influence of Subaru's original world, that he couldn't simply treat it as a joke. Why had he only realized just now, that the Witch Cult did not originate from here?

Petelgeuse, was Betelgeuse. The hand of Orion, Unseen Hand.

Regulus was Leo, Little King. Thus, he had a title.

This Little King, was truly a title commensurate with him-.

Subaru: "Emilia. I have something to ask you."

Subaru spoke quietly, and Emilia opened her eyes to nod.

Subaru could feel the attention radiating from her snow white face, and closed one eye.

Subaru: "That man grabbed you about by the neck once, right? It's about that time."

Emilia: "Mmm."

Subaru: "Regulus's hand, was it warm? Or was it cold?"

Emilia: "…"

At Subaru's inquiry, Emilia widened her eyes.

And so, she touched a hand to her slender neck, with a tap, and replied.

Emilia: "No. Thinking back on it… I couldn't feel anything. Neither heat nor cold, there was no temperature."

Hearing Emilia's response, Subaru held his breath.

From when he'd been cast into the canal, his undisturbed breathing and unsoaked body. The ineffectiveness of attacking the soles of his feet, the ineffectiveness of the cancellation of his own attacks.

Impeccable in both offense and defense.

If this was no simple, mere Invincibility-.

Subaru: “Reinhard!”

He called across the canal, the name of the hero doing battle against the evil.

In relentless battle, Reinhard determinedly looked toward Subaru.

In order for him to hear, Subaru raised his voice high.

Subaru: “-That man, check if his heart is beating!”

Subaru’s loud words had Emilia, had Reinhard widening their eyes.

So, Regulus, he-

Regulus-.

4

Otto also left City Hall for fulfilling the duty imposed on him after he confirmed the simultaneous raids on the four control places had been carried out, and after each of the parties had departed to conduct them.

Anastasia: “I don’t think it’s strange to think that he should be stopped… but it is also true that right now, we have to reconfirm where the Book of Wisdom, that the Witch Cult had requested, is. Pitiful, isn’t he, that Otto-kun.”

Was what Anastasia said at Otto’s departure.

It seemed to be true that Anastasia wanted Otto to remain in City Hall as well. It was the place where Subaru and the other camps had already clashed with a Sin Archbishop.

Though City Hall is expected to function as the headquarters, there were not many brains that could scout for information from several different places at the moment.

However, leaving the Book of Wisdom in the hands of others was not something that could be done either.

You can establish a relationship of cooperation with the opposing Sin Archbishop, but once out of that situation, they will return to being an enemy. When that happens, the effectiveness of the Book of Wisdom being watched over by others was something that should be avoided.

Truthfully, it was about the Book of Wisdom being completely away from the situation in which it would be negotiated over—but Subaru and Garfiel were fine with that.

Otto wanted to sigh as he felt his own personality was at fault here.

Otto: "I wonder, when did I become someone who ran around for others like this…"

Hitting his grey hair with his hand, Otto worried over the question that had come to his mind several times in the past year.

The position he stood in was unexpected, his relationship with people was unexpected, his current emotions were unexpected.

What will his family think when they get to know that he is doing all this?

Otto: "If I am fine and successful, I'll try writing a letter…"

If Subaru was here, he would definitely point out a death flag, saying something strange, as Otto stepped onto the city's third avenue.

The Sin Archbishops should be concentrated in the control towers, and considering that, they should not be in the city. They should not, be.

Otto: "Ha~a… ha ~tsk"

Grabbing his chest tightly, Otto felt his heartbeat quicken.

Witch Cult, Sin Archbishop, Witch Cultists—Otto had bad memories of them.

A year ago, Otto recalled his first encounter with Subaru. He couldn't forget how scared he was of the Sin Archbishop back then.

The eyes of a madman who wouldn't think twice before taking away one's life. That madman, the figure of fanatics, who would dedicate their blood and flesh by his own will.

When he truly hoped for help, only the silence and loneliness had dominated.

He had never been as scared at any other time. He had never felt so empty in any other moment.

Comparing the fear of then to fighting Garfiel, facing the bowel-hunter, encountering herds of witch beasts, that was nothing.

The encounter with the Witch Cult dropped an immensely dark shadow on Otto's heart. Even though he knew how horrible that thing was, it was not something that could be erased so easily.

Emilia, who, due to her similarity with the Witch of Envy, could not escape prejudice due to the witch.

Subaru, who was fated to become her knight and fight for her, and aim for the devils of the Witch Cult.

Beatrice, who fought along with Subaru, and spent all the strength she had in that small body.

Garfiel, who put his everything to his fist in order to protect his family.

Ram, with sweetness that cannot be ignored, but on the flip side, with a stinging tongue.

Frederica, who lived in negative feelings for her brother, and has a sense of responsibility for her position.

Petra, who acted with a clear smiling face with everyone while being treated as a child.

I love everyone.

Though he had not intended to stay in one place too long, unfortunately, it was too comfortable.

Even though he knew to stay away from scary things, he was unable to avoid them.

In order to save this place, I would like to stand by their side and support them; even in my fear, I want to help them where their hands cannot reach. That's why–,

Otto: "Somehow, I must fulfill my role."

Saying this, he stepped onto Third Avenue. There stood a small figure in front of him.

Beyond the stone bridge on the waterway there was a square, and that was where the shadow was.

Besides that shadow, several more figures could be seen.

But right now, Otto's eyes were fixed on only one small phantom.

Sound disappeared. Everything went terribly quiet, and nothing could be heard. A situation where living beings sucked in their breath and held it, trying desperately to conceal their existence, Otto Suwen knew this situation well.

Subsequently, the figure in front his eyes gently clapped its hands and, as it disheveled its long hair, raised its face. But still, his heartbeats were surprisingly calm.

???: "Welcome, onii-san."

"…"

Lye: "Welcome to the Witch Cult's Sin Archbishop, representing Gluttony… Lye Batenkaitos' dinner banquet ~tsu."

Opening his mouth, full of fangs, the Sin Archbishop who shouldn't have been there, laughed gruesomely.

Chapter 53:
A City of Strife

1

Subaru: "—Check if his heart is still beating!"

Intuition was the instinct that had aroused Subaru's awareness.

He wasn't absolutely convinced, nor did he have a basis for thinking so. All he could think was that that thought was not without meaning.

The Sin Archbishops, the names of the stars, the Kararagi which bore influences from his original world, and those other than Subaru who found themselves summoned here.

The world still bore the marks of their claws. If the Witch Cult were also engraved with this etching, then the names of the stars Subaru had thought of didn't necessarily have only a passing relationship with them.

If Regulus Corneas's power could not be treated as straightforward Invincibility, then, he'd need to think outside the box; and thus an idea emerged in his heart.

Hoping that there would be no connection, Subaru had already said a sort of prayer asking thus.

And, in the next moment.

Subaru: "…"

A noxious sense of oppression came, casting an illusion that had Subaru feeling as if the sun had been blotted out.

The air hung thick with pollution. He'd be hard pressed to find words with which to express this discomfort, this disgust.

The disgust of the peeling of a scab, the discomfort of a stench exhaled to the face, the aversion of a sticky tongue over bare skin.

The origin of this turbid air, was the evil which had turned his head to look back.

The instant that he met its gaze, Subaru's body began to tremble involuntarily.

Expressionless and empty, those eyes, like a curse, plunged deep into his soul. As if pierced by a rusted needle, even his lungs and heart were frozen by terror.

However, even as Subaru found himself immobile, overcome by such feelings—

Reinhard: "Don't look anywhere unnecessary. Your opponent should be me!"

Turning to regard this Subaru, meant turning his back to the Sword Saint.

Raising his hands high, Reinhard had clasped in his hands what could only be described as broken signposts and scrap metal. Such materials which were only ever destined to be waste, but in Reinhard's hands, they were no inferior to a treasured blade.

A long blade slanted through the air struck the back of Regulus's suit.

The bursting shockwave expanded in midair, leaving a sorrowful wail from the assailed atmosphere in its wake, raising vortexes in the large canals where thin sheets of ice floated.

This was the aftermath of that sword's strike. Had the force of evil been shattered to pieces, it would have come as no surprise.

However, before he could take a single step.

Regulus: "Don't get me wrong, Sword Saint. I've been entertaining you because my heart is obliging and considerate. But even my gracious self has limits."

Reinhard: “…”

Lightly, Regulus patted the place where he’d been struck by the sword, and tilted his head.

Reinhard, alerted by this motion, tossed aside the scraps in his hands and made to leap backward at a wide angle—just as he prepared to jump, his feet froze in place.

Reinhard’s superhuman intuition.

It informed him of dire, imminent threats to his self, and preemptively detecting incoming attacks. His keen instincts told him that he could not dodge to the rear. He immediately straightened and began to search for alternative routes.

Regulus: “The air there, has already been touched by me.”

Due to the sharpening of his senses locking him into place, at that moment, Reinhard had been left unprepared.

His opponent had him trapped in an invisible yet present envelope. Reinhard’s judgment told him to slip by the force of evil’s side, but, in order to do so, he’d be forced to make a defensive strike.

Reinhard: “Haa!”

The blow that he dealt had enough force to shear through stone.

The hilt of the Dragon Sword pierced into Regulus’s chest, but the force of evil grasped it easily.

Regulus: “Futile effort, thanks for your trouble. Just pray that you won’t be hurt too badly.”

Reinhard: “Just as Subaru said, your heart doesn’t seem to be beating.”

Regulus: “—!”

Regulus’s relaxed smile hardened, as he glanced down at his chest.

The hilt that was buried in it, and the Reinhard who was straining his sharp senses; he wouldn't have missed any movement of life, no matter how subtle.

Having taken that blow, Regulus leapt high in the air, agitated.

Directly, as if reproducing the scene from earlier.

Reinhard blocked the kick with the sheath of the Dragon Sword, his body was sent flying from the impact. However, what unfolded next was different.

Subaru: "Reinhard!"

As declared, the air behind Reinhard had filled with countless traps of breath set by Regulus.

Shot into them in his unguarded state, the results weren't difficult to imagine.

His white clothes stained with blood, Reinhard's entire body was torn. He leapt up, but how much that could mitigate his wounds was uncertain. Buried in rubble again, Reinhard amplified the collapse of the city, making it impossible to estimate his condition.

But what could be determined for certain was Reinhard's answer.

Subaru: "Not bad, Reinhard…!"

Emilia: "Subaru!"

Subaru: "It's okay. Reinhard, he should be fine! So worry about him later!"

Emilia: "I understand! I, what do you need me to do?"

He'd thought that Emilia would be concerned foremost with Reinhard's safety, and was taken aback by her response. The Emilia looking at Subaru was attentive, and fully understood where she needed to stand on this battlefield.

There was both a strong reliance on Reinhard and perhaps a trust in

Subaru.

Emilia: “Reinhard too, he went through all that hassle because he trusted you. What should I have realized about Regulus? Tell me.”

Heavy trust. Heavy expectations. The reality of that belief was too heavy, enough to stir up his fighting spirit.

He’d certainly need to give Reinhard proper gratitude as well. Later, he’d definitely go and help retrieve his remains.

Regulus: “The two of you, always rambling on, but acting in simplicity in your desperation, wouldn’t that be easier? Your despicable and evil behavior has angered me, so it follows that you should be punished, doesn’t it? Yes? Isn’t this right? Impoliteness, infidelity, no matter which, are rebellious acts worthy of ten thousand executions.”

Having kicked Reinhard away, Regulus sneered at the inconvenience.

Across the canal, a spirit of evil began to swell forth, and, in truth, Subaru almost couldn’t bear to bring himself to face it.

However, running away right now would be meaningless.

Natsuki Subaru would be unable to repay Emilia and Reinhard van Astrea.

Subaru: “A pure heroine, yet unseen of this century, suspecting her of infidelity makes you the slut, idiot.”

Regulus: “Ah?”

Subaru: “Isn’t it uncouth to list all the reasons we should be afraid here? Try in the slightest to redirect that empty mind of yours.”

Hearing the sudden strength of his speech, Regulus widened his eyes.

Subaru knocked his own head, as if boasting.

Subaru: “Just how much of a lovely, smooth life you’ve had until now, I don’t know, nor do I want to know… but have you noticed yet? The you of right now, is in checkmate.”

Regulus: “Checked? You’re so vague that I can’t even laugh. What are you trying to say. No, you’re incapable of explaining yourself in comprehensible language, is also a possibility. Well, there’s no need to force yourself to say irrelevant things, isn’t that right?”

Subaru: “Eh, don’t say that, after all you have the right to listen, your favorite right.”

Regulus: “My right…?”

Regulus frowned, and Subaru, with a light, ridiculing smile, continued “Yes, after all—”

Subaru: “Losing without even knowing how your regret came about, would certainly leave you with regrets.”

Regulus: “—Enough of you! Just disappear!”

This movement shrinking in on himself becoming a fuse, Regulus leapt from the edge of the canal. Lacking sufficient jumping power, his body plunged into the water; however, his movements were unaffected by the flood, and he found himself with no water resistance.

Before him, Subaru confirmed patted Emilia’s shoulders.

Subaru: “Emilia, right now!”

Emilia: “Ul Huma!”

Receiving Subaru’s instruction, Emilia gathered magic to release the icicles.

So enormous that they needed to be gazed up at to seen fully, the spears of ice were aimed directly at Regulus, formed an overhanging railing of ice to surround him as he surfaced.

Regulus: “I’d actually thought you’d try something, but no matter what you do, it's futile, looks like no matter how many times you're taught, you'll never learn! What, are you planning to stick with your mistakes? Without even that degree of wisdom, repeating the same thing over and over. Do you always treat others with such futility while despising them? Don't get carried away, how incomplete!"

Regulus bared his teeth, cut down the railing of the ice, smashed it, and, with overwhelming force, shattered it. The barrier collapsed with ease, and despite her best efforts, Emilia's magic couldn't sustain the cage of ice.

But it was enough. This was fine.

Emilia: "I can't, I couldn't even buy time properly."

Subaru: "That's not right, Emilia-tan."

Seeing the ineffectiveness of her power, Emilia wore a gloomy face, but Subaru shook his head.

A look from a different angle. This had been enough to accomplish Subaru's purpose.

Subaru: "That man's character is insidious. He can't help but crush what he despises. Even if it's unnecessary to destroy whatever obstacle he's facing, he can't feel that he's won without shattering it completely."

Singing ballads to fulfillment, spouting his self-satisfying rhetoric, was Regulus.

The pitiable nature of his heart, the scarcity of his tolerance, and the volume of his vanity were plain to see.

Subaru: "In the first place, there was no need for him to break through the obstacle. But he took that superfluous action. Even a second, even a millisecond, is the result."

Emilia: "With that one second, can you defeat Regulus?"

Subaru: "As long as I accumulate them, I'll definitely show him the victory. I’ll pare that monster’s skin from his body.”

For this, Reinhard had laid the foundation.

Testing Regulus’s heartbeat, conveying that it had no movement to Subaru.

There was no heat, no heartbeat, no breath, and no outside influence from his surroundings.

Although this is undoubtedly an Invincibility, its essence was not undefeatable.

Subaru: “Emilia, over here!”

Subaru took Emilia’s wrist and crossed the dented alleyways with her. Emilia kept pace with Subaru, as she turned back to attack Regulus with an icicle.

Regulus, seeing the two flee, pursed with rage brewing in his chest.

Regulus: “Even after all that boasting, why the hell are you running? Calling someone stupid, proclaiming that you’ll kill them, just how much do you plan on making fun of me? Who the hell do you think you are? You coward!”

Since his physical abilities were no superior, the speed pursuing Regulus was little different from the speed of the escapees. Rather, it could be said that he was slower than Subaru.

However, since he was blessed with his unrelenting composition, the ceaselessly pursuing evil would eventually catch up.

Emilia: “Subaru! Where are you running to?”

Subaru: “Our destination is the church! Our target is, Regulus’s wives! In between…”

Hearing Emilia’s inquiry, he replied back.

Suddenly, halfway through his words, he noticed from behind—

Regulus: “—Stop paying attention to extraneous things, you!”

Subaru: “Uwaaaaa?!”

The distance that had existed until now vanished without a trace, turning his head, Regulus had already appeared in front of him.

Forcing an approach to only one step away, Regulus waved his hand toward them, and Subaru barely jerked his head out of the way. He felt that his opponent was already on his heels, so he swept up Emilia and approached a nearby wall, stepping on and along it in one motion.

Emilia: “Wawawa, Subaru’s amazing.”

Subaru: “Emilia-tan, hold tight to me!”

Emilia, stunned by Subaru’s acrobatics, hugged his neck and wrapped her feet around his waist. Soft and fragrant, she filled Subaru with a fresh wave of energy. Kicking hard on the edge of the wall, he flew across it.

The results of his practice in parkour were revealed. Just gaining distance like this—

Regulus: “I’ve said already, that your commoners’ efforts are futile.”

Saying so, Regulus touched the lower part of the wall Subaru was climbing with his palm.

There was the sound of rock grinding, and the stone wall collapsed as if it were tofu. The wall lost its support and fell. Needless to say, the same happened to those climbing on the wall.

Subaru: “Uwah!”

In the process of falling, he yanked out his whip and flicked it without any real direction. The front end hooked onto something, and Subaru forcefully pulled his body upward.

With a swing of his foot, he gave a hard kick the moment he touched the wall. Combined with the force of the reaction, the centrifugal force generated by the whip allows his body to be thrown further and further, achieving an amazing climb with Emilia still on his back.

At a closer glance, the two of them had arrived at a warehouse that had already lost almost half of its volume.

Subaru crashed onto the balcony that protruded from the eaves and looked at his palm.

Subaru: “Wow, I didn’t expect to achieve a brute force escape…!”

Emilia: “Subaru! In short, we just have to get to the church! The direction is?!”

No longer gazing at his palm split open with faint pain, he followed Emilia’s voice to see the surroundings. Fortunately, the height of the balcony, in addition to Regulus’s, allowed everything to be easily seen.

Far, far in the distance, he could see the church that collapsed from Reinhard’s first attack. Somehow, at some point, it had grown quite distant.

Subaru: “No! We fled in the opposite direction! What now?!”

Emilia: “Is that it, there?”

Subaru: “It’s right there, what’s that matter…”

Emilia: “Let’s travel like this!”

Emilia, upon hearing Subaru’s response, clapped, and a bridge formed on the balcony.

The mysterious blue-and-white bridge began from the balcony and connected through the alleys all the way to the church, imitating a large road in midair.

Regulus: “What?!”

Gazing up at the bridge made of frost, Regulus, who had expected the pair to drop down, was also taken aback. Quickly responding to Emilia's decision to solve their conundrum with a brute force method, Subaru stood up, clapping his hands on his thighs, then going up the stairs leading to the icy path.

Regulus: "I'm not letting you go, you know!"

Walking under the new icy construct, Regulus picked up a stone from the ground, and tossed it at the bridge. The hastily built path received a critical hit, cracks immediately spreading across its entirety.

The terrible collapse spread, shattering the bridge and transforming it into a tragic display of crystal light. Witnessing this, Regulus laughed devilishly. But,

Emilia: "We're the ones who are going to win, so it doesn't matter if you destroy the bridge!"

Regulus: "Wha—?!"

Scattering every which way were brilliant shards of ice, as Subaru slid forward on an ice structure created by Emilia.

Using the slope of the bridge as a launchpad, using the principles of a ski jump, it leapt over the alley, and flew over Regulus toward the church.

Subaru: "Emilia-tan, you became so witty!"

Emilia: "Maybe Subaru led me astray."

Subaru: "That statement shouldn't be used in response to praise!"

Although he had a means of long-range attack, Regulus could only touch what was in reach of his arms' length.

They kept well away from his figure, delirious with rage. Staring at the approaching church, Subaru's eyes narrowed.

Emilia: "What should we do, when we meet the women in the church?"

Subaru: “I don’t know if they’ve been threatened, or if they really do admire him…”

At Emilia’s question, Subaru lowered his chin into his palm, interrupting himself.

What emerged in his mind were the women, shocked by the Regulus’s actions in the church. The fear he’d seen then, if only it were genuine, thus he prayed.

But, if it really had been an act—

Subaru: “Forget the mind, it may be that even their hearts were stolen away. —Heart in the literal sense, that is.”

Greeting his face were burst of wind blowing on the head, and the height of the ice structure began to fall, as it approached the church.

Behind, was Regulus giving chase. Reinhard’s life hung in uncertainty. The chances of victory were slim, but the dilemma still steadily approached—

Was everyone else doing fine?

Clearly, he had no room to even ponder such questions, but couldn’t help but think of them.

2

To take over the charge of the Control Tower from Gluttony, this was the battle between Julius, Ricardo, and Alphard.

Julius: “—El Clausel”

With the power of the six-colored quasi spirits, a rainbow-colored radiance emanated from the tip of the knight sword.

What rolled out was a preemptive strike aiming straight for its opponent’s death.

Clausel was a magical technique of the same type as Clarista which had managed to damage even Petelgeuse's body, however, unlike Clarista which had the destructive bright light stick to the sword itself, Clausel was a long-range attack.

The impression of the Sin Archbishops was still strong in Julius' mind thanks to Petelgeuse.

The feeling which Julius got while fighting the madman, the Sin Archbishop of Sloth, a huge sinner and someone who had given great suffering to the world for a long time, was completely different from the current situation—that is, the fight with the current enemy is completely different.

Julius Juukulius, who had gotten the title of Greatest Knight, often misunderstands people due to their behavior, but he believes in this so-called theory that all human nature is ultimately good.

He believes that all human action is up to interpretation, but there are some things which humanity must think about, like the influence of one party's actions over the others.

Then, for Julius, the Sin Archbishop named Petelgeuse Romanée Conti and his self-conscious dolls, the Witch Cultists, were all too overwhelming.

Someone who can't understand that, who disregards hard work and efforts of others will inevitably become an enemy for him.

For Julius, the worst done by the Witch Cult to him was to harm his knightliness.

No hidden tricks, no trump cards saved for the last.

From the very beginning, Julius did not hesitate to cut down those devils.

An extraordinary technique that simultaneously handled all six colors of magic with the help of six quasi-spirits.

Not even the slightest of mismatch of magical power was allowed. This was established only after the bonding of the quasi-spirits, thanks to the efforts and talent of the genius spirit user named

Julius.

This was not the exact same thing as what Roswaal L. Mathers could do, who sat at the pinnacle of magic. This had been created by Julius and was unique to Julius.

At the first look, the magic doesn't feel too scary, and the opponent gets scattered away without an opportunity to rethink subsequently.

Julius had one belief in his chest—that he must prioritize blowing away the enemy rather than investigating the incompatibility between them.

The extremely bright destructive light shatters the stone pavement and preys upon both the arms of a small shadow.

Long dark brown hair, dirty rags, dulled shining daggers, get swallowed up by the shine of the rainbow light—

Roy: "This is surely something nii-sama didn't expect, he has a weakness of turning away your eyes from what he doesn't want to see, doesn't he?"

Ricardo: "—What?!"

As he collapsed onto the ground, Alphard's muttering voice could be heard. The blasphemer, with his long tongue hanging outside, kicked the ground with a posture low enough that it could almost be said that he was lying on the ground.

The speed of the bright light will never be late enough to not reach its opponent. In order to avoid this approaching arrow, you would need a physical ability comparable to that of Reinhard or—

Roy: "We admired you, nii-sama. Nii-sama, who hates to show his hard work to others, would use such devilish skills in desperation, how would we not know that ~tsu."

Julius: "What are you saying!"

Roy: "Thinking we wouldn't know, Julius nii-sama is truly innocent. But, we love that part of you ~tsu! Gyahahahaha ~tsu!"

Alphard jumps around the ground and avoids the magic, with a movement that suggested that he already knew that trump card would be used. Ricardo subsequently runs to strike Alphard, who had escaped the magic, but that pursuit too was a move which he had anticipated.

Ricardo plunges into him in front of the river, as daggers collide and sparks scatter. Ricardo was overwhelmingly superior in strength. Alphard countered the strength difference with unimaginably skilled sword handling. The cobblestone breaks and rains beside the blasphemer.

At the same time, Ricardo cried out as Alphard slashed into his shaggy torso.

Roy: “Lo~ok, a stub of dog meat ~tsu! Hard and luscious meat, should be made sticky and soft to make it easier to eat to make it easier to bite to make it easier to digest to make it easier to shit out to make it easier to decompose to make it easier to fertilize vegetables and after it makes all that so easy the meat should be eaten to start the cycle cycle cycle cycle of the food chain ~tsu! A~h, how wonderful ~tsu!!”

Ricardo: “Ngh, gh, ghk?!”

The speed of Alphard, who had given that quick speech and has daggers attached on both of his arms, was not something extraordinary. His growth period had not ended yet, and his body has still not toughened, however, his physical ability had contradicted those looks till now, as he rips into Ricardo’s body, who was all defensive.

Julius: “Ricardo!!”

Fur like wires and thick muscles. Ricardo’s body, which was like an armor itself compared to the normal human body, had suffered no wound by any technique till now with the exception of Alphard’s attack.

With eyes wide open, Julius was stunned by looking at Ricardo’s bleeding wound.

Alphard attacks with high speed moves, each move targeting and aiming precisely at the joints and thin parts of the fur. Regardless of the qualities of Ricardo's body, if you get attacked at the key areas, you will get hurt, you will shed blood, and you will lose your life.

Julius: "—hk."

At the moment Julius saw the bombardment of blows, Julius summoned the quasi-spirit once again. The slashes of wind mixed with the flames of a fire, the sword commanded the quasi-spirits of two colors—Ia of Fire and Aro of Wind. From the side, a slash with a reddish flame heads towards Alphard.

Roy: "Yes, we knew that pattern already too ~tsu!"

Julius: "Wha?!"

Roy: "That surprise is completely honest ~tsu! Our stomach will not have any difficulty either ~tsu!"

However, Alphard was ridiculously unaffected by it, with one arm precisely attacking and with eyes at the back, to see whether what he thought would happen, as he kicked into his empty torso.

His heel penetrates into the abdominal muscles, as if he broke into Julius, who was working extremely hard in this situation, just like the person he is. At the front, just when Ricardo started his counterattack, his toe launched itself right into his lower jaw.

Roy: "How nice how nice, this has become fun ~tsu! That nii-sama is! That Ricardo-san is! They both are fighting this great battle and we are their opponent! Even though us, with our weak bodies, absolutely can't do it, can't reach it, can't see it, can't understand it, should have already had given up in this position ~tsu! A~h! To make it so fun, ho~w unfair unfair unfair ~tsu!"

Julius and Ricardo fell to their knees at the same time. Alphard, who stops their pursuit, repeatedly somersaults on the stone pavement, as if to keep the two under pressure.

They must take his incredible skill and childlike brutality under consideration.

Ricardo: “This is, much more than what I heard. Even so, the hell is that guy, pisses me off. The way he walks, the way he talks, everything ’bout him’s jus’ so creepy!”

Ricardo, who barely ever gets hurt and barely had any older scratches, said that with a foggy voice while licking the wounds on his arms. Julius rises, taking heavy breaths, and also agreed with Ricardo’s anger.

Julius: “It’s the same as City Hall… no, just his behavior is still equally incomprehensible. It may be an attempt to mock us, but it’s counterproductive and nothing else.”

Roy: “Even if you say that, it’s always the human nii-sama hiding his feelings of worry from the non-human Ricardo-san, no? We said that we~ already know about that ~tsu!”

Julius: “You bastard…”

Clasping his hands, Alphard laughs uncontrollably, and Julius sends the quasi-spirit of Water, Qua, under Ricardo to heal his wounds as he stepped ahead.

Ricardo: “Ah! Hey, Julius! Don’t go out there!”

Julius: “You just quietly stay here, till your wounds heal enough that the bleeding stops!”

Pointing his knight sword forward, Julius dashes towards Alphard. However, the movement now was clearly not the same as the one before.

In the sharp steps and slashes, Alphard, who received the first attack, felt his eyebrow get slightly slashed.

Roy: “This is…”

Julius: “The power of the quasi-spirit of Yang, In, and at the same time,”

Roy: “Oh?”

Alphard's question overlapped with the responding voice.

Julius' long legs jump up and kick down Alphard's head, pushing down the blasphemer's cheeks into defeat. This time, his defense wouldn't make it in time. His hanging arms lag behind, and rolling his eyes, Alphard turns and desperately attempts to dodge.

Roy: "Uwa kyya! The one right now, was?"

Julius: "My quasi-spirit of Yang. The one with my sword is the quasi-spirit of Yin. It is a mutual partnership that improves physical ability. This, was a first timer for you, isn't it?"

Roy: "…Oh, hehe, as you'd expe~ct! Julius-sama is wonderful! Still loaded with charm that neither we nor us knew about, isn't it ~tsu!"

Julius: "–?!"

With his cheeks dyed red, Alphard looks at Julius with flushed eyes.

At the moment Julius frowned at that warm gaze, Alphard removed and threw away the dagger attached to his arm. A shrill sound echoed as it pounded on the cobblestone.

Immediately afterwards, his heel breaks the cobblestone.

Roy: "As it seems like you cannot surprise us with swords, this time we intend to see it by using fists ~tsu."

Julius: "Gh—~hk!"

Alphard closed the distance in the blink of an eye, as he launched the bottom of his palm while twisting his waist. Julius countered it with his empty left hand, but the shock penetrated right through his arm into his chest.

Unimaginably, the forceful lurch from the ground and the twisting of the waist had increased the destructive force of his palm strike, and Julius, with no time lag, was sent flying.

If Subaru would have had witnessed this sight, he would have had thought of a car accident.

Roy: “Our fists that have taken down more than eighty-eight people… we suppose they shook up nii-sama down to his bones’ medullas, no?”

This was also an equally violent sight, like a car unable to stop runs over and sends the defenseless human beings flying.

Julius could not afford to respond to Alphard’s crazed smile.

His chest bones, his internal organs all got crushed, blood floods onto his clothes and his tall body gets blown away. Ricardo, who was being treated, quickly responds to the situation.

Ricardo: “Julius, watch out!!”

Ricardo hugs and defends Julius, who was unexpectedly going to crash into the wall straight from his head. Even the enormous dog got swallowed into the impact and got knocked into the building, crushing the stones.

Ricardo, who had rushed to help Julius, shakes his head as a plume of dirt rose. The blood in his head concentrates in one side, and he spat out the blood in his throat to prevent choking.

Ricardo: “Spirits! Don’t know if ya can hear me, but yer master’s in trouble! Get to work! Think ‘bout me later!”

Whether it was thanks to Ricardo’s call or not, the blue light pours its power into Julius’ dying body. When he was at least made safe from dying, Ricardo jumped out in frustration into the brisk situation after a good amount of break he had taken from the fight.

Roy: “Welcome back! Would you like to have a meal? Would you like to have a treat? Or perhaps, di-n-n-er?”

Ricardo: “Get yer tongue back inside your damn mouth, damn brat… I’ll teach you what happens when ya make fun of adults jus’ like the brats at our place.”

Roy: “Ohwellohwell, let’s not take it any further. We don’t want a dog as a meal anyway. If you don't want to play with swords or fists… are you fine with this?"

Alphard, with a smile, spreads his hands, and Ricardo immediately increased his alertness. Ricardo chews his teeth fiercely, and was unable to take off his eyes from that.

—In the waterway behind Alphard, a stream of water rises with a whirlpool which looked like the neck of a water dragon to Ricardo.

Ricardo: "Sword skill, martial arts, and this time, magic. Jus' what the hell are ya?"

Roy: "We are anonymous non-practicing magicians, who couldn't even be looked at with pride by our family. Something like that ~tsu!"

Immediately after Alphard rolled his tongue outside, the head of the water stream heads towards Ricardo.

Although that's just water, it's momentum and mass was enough to crush a living being's body. On top of that, there was Julius behind him, so he couldn't choose to avoid it either.

Ricardo: "Ya've done it now. Hah, hah—haa!!"

Opening his large mouth and his body clamped onto the ground, Ricardo released a roar wave.

Out of the three deputy commanders of the Iron Fang, two of them had already shown their ability to cooperate their attack of this roar wave. However, originally, Mimi had developed this technique by imitating Ricardo, and Ricardo argues that it is originally his.

However, compared to Mimi who reduces the burden by dispersing it, roar wave used by a single person is a huge burden to the body.

The destructive roar bursts out of Ricardo's throat as he felt muddy water fall on his body which was clinging onto the ground.

Roy: "Wow, amazing ~tsu."

Unable to hear the voice of admiration, Ricardo's roar wave crashes into the stream of muddy water.

The wave collides right from the front, and splashes the water away, and the water with a mass of several tons scatters and evaporates into mist. After a few seconds, the destroyed muddy stream hits the plaza like rain, flooding the stone pavement, and sends the leaning Ricardo crashing down.

Ricardo: "That, sure was somethin' … even the edge of my mouth, got a bit cut, huh."

The residual damage itself left Ricardo blank for a long time, which further burdened him after the roar wave. Breathing on his shoulder, Ricardo, however, still managed to get up because of his feelings.

Alphard was completely unaffected, without showing any signs of exhaustion, he was just dancing there.

Roy: "Amazingamazing ~tsu! It's been a while since we have seen someone endure that. So long that there is not a trace of it in either ours or our memory. How nice, quite nice, pretty nice, maybe it is nice, isn't it nice, possibly it is nice, perhaps it is nice, probably it is nice, because it is probably nice ~tsu!"

???: "Your repetitive speech ends here."

Roy: "Welp, it's nii-sama's grand return. Scarily, cutely, enviably."

In front of Alphard, who shook his head, Julius was standing next to Ricardo.

His face was pale, and his knight uniform was dyed in blood. His breath was even faintly stuttering, and it was completely impossible to say that he was in his top shape. Although that cannot be said,

Julius: "Thanks for the help, Ricardo."

Ricardo: "I sure did help ya. I'll have ya report my efforts properly to miss so that I get that temporary bonus."

Julius: “About that, I assure you that you can feel absolutely unworried about that from my side.”

Grabbing his knight sword, Julius tapped on Ricardo’s shoulder and subsequently glanced at Alphard. Sensing that gaze, the blasphemer smiled, with dyed cheeks, and twisted his lips irritatingly.

His facial expressions, actions, even his way of fighting, were all packed with a sense of creepiness and spook.

Or perhaps, that itself was related to his Authority of Gluttony.

Julius: “With such prowess in using swords, martial arts, and even magic, why did you align with evil. That power could have had been put to use for something else, something better.”

Roy: “Somewhere else huh. Giving some examples, what would nii-sama consider in that?”

Nii-sama, even his way of addressing was unsettling.

Every time Alphard’s tongue touches it, every time he says that with a flamboyant tone and stuck-up attitude, that word loses its value for Julius.

—Even though he has no family members that call him that.

Julius: “For example, a knight. For example, a mercenary. For example, a hero. Unkempt power easily falls into the hands of evil, and strength turns into forceful violence. That’s why…”

Roy: “We thought you’d say so ~tsu! We thought you’d say that, anii-sama! We thought that the nii-sama we know, that the nii-sama we trust, would say that. We thought so ~tsu!”

Abruptly putting a halt onto the conversation, Alphard jumps and approaches Julius.

He holds his knight sword vertically and slashes down that kick. As if he had plates of iron attached onto his heels, the slash fails to do any damage.

Alphard sharply turns and continues his barrage of kicks from a low angle, as he swings and dances on the spot, as he further pushes Julius to make him crash into the scaffold.

At his intense and strong moves, even Ricardo loses the track of his timing and becomes unable to interrupt.

Roy: “Do you remember, when we were kids! When we had gotten sick and broken down, we had asked nii-sama whether we could bring an Appa from the tree in the garden ~tsu!”

Julius: “Saying things on your own accord…! Why would I remember. Stop enforcing your own arbitrary delusions onto others!”

Roy: “Us and nii-sama were still small, and nii-sama first said that it was impossible, told us to give up ~tsu! Do you remember? Don’t you remember? But we, just because nii-sama had tried to stop us, ended up wanting that appa even more ~tsu! When we had done what nii-sama said was impossible, we thought that we did an amazing job! Our confidence increased! We really thought tha~t!”

Julius: “What are you, what are you saying?! I am unaware of any such thing… unaware!”

Julius accepts his kicks, his heel, his round kick, his straight kick, his high-jump kick, his somersault, his back-spin kick with his knight sword.

His arms were numb, his internal organs were scarred with pain, and he could feel the taste of blood in his mouth. No, it was different from the taste of pure blood, as this was his blood mixed with vomit. He bit his lips. He, just now, for some reason.

He could not help but listen carefully to Alphard’s delusion.

Roy: “Because of what happened afterwards, we are ~tsu! We are ~tsu! Nii-sama is ~tsu!”

Julius: “—hk!”

Roy: “We always, always thought about it ~tsu! We always, always felt it ~tsu! That it was different! That it was just some luggage ~tsu! How that used to be! How's that now! What a nice feeling! So it was such a feeling! A~h, this feels so nice! We finally get it!"

Julius: "I know absolutely nothing, nothing about you!"

Julius got pushed into becoming more and more violent.

Holding back his knight sword with immense strength, he tries to attack whenever he found a gap in Alphard's position. Striking down, piercing into, kicking in, pounding, entangling, dodging.

A slash dyed with anger and hostility cuts through the air, and Alphard's hair, which were too late to avoid it, get slashed off and fall to the ground. Even still, it was not just the slash which should be paid attention to.

Julius: "Ia! Qua! Aro! Ik! Nes! In!"

With the names of the quasi-spirits called out, they started spinning like a magical cast, and they were the spirits contracted with the Spirit Knight.

With their names called out, the six colors of the quasi-spirits increase in radiance, turning the mere affirmation of their existence into a powerful force and pouring it all onto the opponent of their knight.

—The six colored lights surround Alphard from all six directions, blocking any path to escape.

Julius: "With this, it ends—!"

Julius had firm belief in his victory as Alphard could no longer escape.

The power pushes straight through the middle of Alphard's chest,

Roy: "Ultimate Palm."

The dark palm in front of his chest collides with the knight sword in between and crushes it into pieces.

Debris scatters, and the deadly stab loses its effectiveness.

However, there was still the magic that was left—

Roy: “Twilight Mage.”

An unexpected and confusing magical power swells up behind Alphard and slashes down all six of the approaching magic.

The magic of one color clashes with the magic of that same color, and all magic gets cancelled out.

Finally, the eyes of Julius, who had supposedly sealed this attack’s victory, open.

Roy: “Snake of the Twin Swords.”

Alphard’s toes toss up a dagger which he was supposed to have had thrown away.

It got pushed into this place by Julius’ attack. Receiving the spinning blades with both of his hands, Alphard’s body rotates.

A storm of slashes blew up, and Julius used just his broken knight sword.

“…”

Roy: “Nii-sama threw that appa out. That’s why we hate nii-sama.”

An arm sharply cut from the elbow swings into the air and fell onto the cobblestone, making a sound.

Chapter 54:
The Combat Power of Non-Combatants

1

???: “Gluttony… ~tsu.”

Before the nightmare that stood in front, Otto could not help but have cold sweat run down his back.

The opponent who identified as a Sin Archbishop—the name of Gluttony had already been heard by Otto. However, that name was.

Otto: “From what I heard, the name of the Sin Archbishop of Gluttony was supposed to be Roy Alphard though.”

???: “Arere, you have already met us before meeting us? If so, then, onii-san, to be left uneaten and coming out normally is quite impressive indeed. Especially when a~nything is a treat for Roy of Bizarre Eating.”

The boy, who claimed to be Lye Batenkaitos, smiled and laughed at Otto’s question. Hearing that laughter, Otto knew that his terrible idea was affirmed.

—There are two, Sin Archbishops of Gluttony.

Otto: “No, to be accurate, at least two of them…”

Lye and Roy, rather, the duo of Batenkaitos and Alphard? At worst, it may be necessary to assume that they were a nightmare like the great rabbit of the myriads.

Julius and Ricardo were supposed to go and capture Gluttony’s control tower, but if the one waiting there wasn’t alone, then, rather than a tough struggle, it would be an inevitable defeat.

???: “Hey! Is this the time to talk and get along with that bastard?! This isn’t the time for all that!”

Otto had the nerves of his guts seemingly sharpened accompanying a burning sensation on his forehead. What interrupted his thoughts at that moment was an extremely feminine voice.

Of course, Otto also noticed the owner of that voice. Because he had noticed that there were puzzles as well.

Otto: “Why is Felt-sama here? I’m sure Reinhard-san told you to stay quietly in an evacuation center!”

Felt: “When the city is in this condition, as if I would ignore that and go and sit in a small corner of the evacuation center!”

The girl with blonde hair and red eyes said bravely. A person who stood out, with there being no possibility of mistaking her for someone else, that’s who Felt was.

Otto: “With that restlessness, what you first see after jumping out is an encounter with a Sin Archbishop, huh. Now that that has happened, my defeat is inevitable because of my bad luck…”

Lye: “You don’t need to be so pessimistic, onii-san. Fo~r us, any encounter is a spice to gourmet. We are supposed to be Gluttony but, we co~mpletely understand the importance of preparation ~tsu.”

Batenkaitos was at the center, with Otto and Felt standing in a position that made a triangle. On the remaining vertice, stood another figure, with whom Otto seemed to be familiar.

Otto: “I am happy to see you again, Kiritaka-san…”

Kiritaka: “Quiet voice with dead eyes and unable to take things obediently, -kun! I don’t understand the feeling though!”

The figure of Kiritaka, who was covered in thin bandages and was in pain, stood in front of Otto. Despite his presence, Otto was not rejoicing at seeing him.

When Otto escaped the headquarters of Muse company, he ran into Gluttony, making his fate uncertain. He is happy to have had survived that, but the actors on the current stage still made things uncertain.

“…”

And that is, Otto, along with Felt and Kiritaka, got the same thought at the same time. —Proper combatants were needed here.

Otto: “There are three groups, all of which are non-combatants, who have encountered a main force among the enemy. What a bad joke this is. Please just stop.”

Felt: “I don’t think that my allies, would be coming anytime soon. Right back at you nii-chan, you rely on just yourself too much.”

Felt told Otto. Otto, as well, could not make any excuses at this point. Behind Felt is a humongous-looking servant who wore a tough appearance. Kiritaka also had some members of the White Dragon’s Scales with him. It was only Otto who was alone.

Lye: “We’re saying that it will be the same no matter how many people you gather. If it’s you guys, then this thirst of ours can never be healed ~tsu! A~h, where are you, we’re looking for you, we want to meet you, we want to meet you, let us meet you.”

Otto and the others were surrounded by pessimism regarding their fighting strength, but Batenkaitos arbitrarily displayed his selfish attitude.

Otto: “Want to meet? Just, what on earth are you saying.”

Otto tried to continue the conversation by picking up his words. On the margin of Batenkaitos’ reasonability.

If it came down to it, Otto could be knocked down in a moment. Buying even the slightest of time—there was a need to create that gap, at all costs.

Lye: “It would indeed be troublesome to explain it so many times, huh. We can’t afford to have our mouths broken by others either ~tsu. That’d be the worst, won’t that be the worst, it would be the absolute worst, wouldn’t that be the worst, isn’t that the worst is what we’re saying.”

“…”

With steep expressions, Felt and Kiritaka shook their heads at Batenkaitos’ words. Rather than being answered, it seemed as if they were being questioned by multiple people. And, as that conversation got unexpectedly established, Otto continued to stare as he was unable to talk to Gluttony.

But still, Otto, with his Divine Protection of Soul Language, could talk to even those beings which could not possibly have a human’s will.

Let’s negotiate. No matter what the challenge may be, it would still be better than the problem Subaru was surrounded by.

—Please, lend me your strength, Natsuki-san.

Otto: “By saying that, I might actually become stronger. Please, try and talk to me. The one which was mentioned in the request, could it perhaps be that you are talking about the Artificial Spirit?”

Quite a dangerous step. That choice of words, that stubborn tone could easily ignite Batenkaitos’ fuse. But, Batenkaitos swung his head.

When the young boy received Otto’s words with the intention of responding to the conversation, he laughed joyfully,

Lye: “Who we want to know is only one… the one, who did the broadcast from earlier. The hero who did it, is the one we are searching for.”

“…”

I take back those words.

After all, Subaru did not lend me his power, and neither do I want to lend away his name.

Lye: “That beloved, beloved hero seems to have come to cast his judgement upon us. This small chest, is hurting in search of hi~m ~tsu.”

Otto: “…The coming of a person of such a troublesome nature, can he even manage to do anything at all, that person.”

If he was really here, “keep on dre~aming!” is what he would have had said, but there is no point in citing curses on part those who aren’t present here in the first place.

At Otto’s reaction, Felt frowned,

Felt: “I told you that you will only waste time by talking! Who is going to sell away their family anyway. Even for my merciless self, there are no doubts in that, except for Reinhard, I’m not sure about him.”

Otto: “I am sorry to hear such an evaluation, but I won’t say anything because I saw Felt-sama captured in that descent!”

The rough Felt, did not say a word which answered Batenkaitos' query. The same went for Kiritaka.

Both of them immediately knew that Batenkaitos' request was Subaru, and immediately discarded it.

"…"

That judgment was good as a person, but was undoubtedly too hasty in this situation.

With this rapid exchange, Subaru ended up not being sold away.

Otto: "This person messed it up. This girl and the others are just impatient, and by hearing the speech of the hero you are looking for, got excited and jumped out of the evacuation center, it's all just mere impatience."

Felt: "Hu~h?!"

Kiritaka: "Shh—"

Otto's story made Felt float on the blue line. And, the one who quietened her was Kiritaka.

As expected of the head merchant of the Muse company, he immediately understood Otto's judgment. At the same time, their gaze and line of sight match.

On his gaze, Otto drew in his chin.

Otto: "If you don't want to answer any questions, then I shall guide you to the hero. I also want my life. I demand its security, however."

Lye: "Really! You know? You know it? The place where our hero is! The figure of our beloved hero! That weak and fragile, unable to help anything unless he is supported, that person!"

Otto: "—? Yes, uh, yes."

Otto nods, as he recognizes the sense of incongruity in the spirit of Batenkaitos’ words.

As if he knew a lot about Subaru. Calling out for his hero, and also taking such deep notice of the person named Natsuki Subaru.

Otto: “No, I will guide you.”

However, Otto got confused about it. It was regarding Subaru. It would not be surprising if two or three Sin Archbishops already knew about his face. Maybe all the members should not be included after all, Greed, Gluttony, Lust, Wrath—they were all of them. But that was all of them in the first place.

Lye: “You have a face that is frowning badly, onii-san hu~h.”

Otto: “There is no need for you to care so much. Rather than that, what will you do. Killing every one of us at this place, or guaranteeing the lives of everyone here and encountering the hero in return. —What do you choose to do?”

Lye: “What a nasty way of talking, you are a dealer, aren’t you? Such kinds of things in which you have to use your brains, neither we nor us are good at it.”

Otto: “If that’s the case, then choosing what is recommended and seeing it for yourself isn’t so bad either. That is a saying among the merchants though.”

Lye: “…Hmm.”

There was initiative in the conversation. Batenkaitos was really obedient for a Sin Archbishop. It felt just like he was simply a child, and a distorted imbalance made him project himself as a monster. Maybe, he is just a pitiable young boy after all—.

Lye: “—Just now, you pitied us, didn’t you?”

Just when such feelings gathered inside the inner part of Otto’s heart, Batenkaitos said that with a brisk voice in a low tone.

Otto: “huh?”

Lye: “Those eyes, we remember them. Those are eyes which look down upon. Those are eyes which are scornful. With those eyes, thinking that we are some product… A~h, is that so. We were getting a nasty feeling since earlier.”

Otto continued to watch as Batenkaitos’ eyes became filled with complete disgust and hostility.

Lye: “You, are a merchant, right? Putting price tags on things, they are people who sell them to line their own pockets. Human values and opinions too, everything, everything! They are dead people who put them on a scale and calculate, aren’t they?”

Otto: “That is… somewhat, I think there is a little difference in opinions here.”

As clouds of doubt began to form, Otto, whose mind was already tightroped, also got blindfolded. Did he manage to get his message across—that was a question whose answer was clearly visible on the expressions of Felt and Kiritaka, who had done nothing but witness the discussion.

Lye: “Who the hell will listen to what you guys are saying ~tsu! After all, this world is gluttonous drinking ~tsu! Gluttony ~tsu! Until we have eaten it, licked it, swallowed it, we will not trust it!”

Batenkaitos shouted while stepping ahead, displaying his fangs.

The crisis could not be stopped. No explosion or word could get close to this explosive.

Felt: “So it did end up like this in the end, didn’t it.”

Saying this with dissatisfaction, Felt held her knife in her hand. Strangely enough, what Batenkaitos had were also short knives attached on both his hands.

Nonetheless, there would be a huge difference in the skill-level.

Kiritaka: “If it has come to this, the ones to rely on are everyone of the White Dragon’s Scales.”

???: “Heyhey! For once, I’m saying we’re also here!”

The fellow who was next to Felt raised his voice, but Felt swung her head. Which means, it will be quite a lively show.

Someone like Subaru would only prove to be useless in this scene.

Otto: “Just by thinking that, the value of that person gets significantly reduced, huh…”

Lye: “Is your talking, do~ne?”

Batenkaitos, slowly, looked at the faces of Otto and the rest. An expression of fighting was on everyone’s face. Looking at that, Batenkaitos nodded with satisfaction.

Lye: “In gourmet, preparations and ingredients are important. Starting from assembling the good ingredients available, only then will the virtue of the dish be eatable ~tsu!”

Otto: “I sort of get it, I sort of don’t get it…”

Lye: “It’s fine even if you don’t understand ~tsu! Neither have we ever thought, that our aesthetics can be understood by anyone except us ~tsu! No~w, well then, about time. —Let’s eat!”

The conversation cemented the fate. Batenkaitos, opening his large mouth, approached Otto with a tremendously powerful jump. Otto, who was standing next to water, pointed his finger towards the blasphemer.

Otto: “I am glad that the assurance has been given!”

Lye: “—Hu~h?”

Otto: “This is how it is—!”

Otto makes a high sound twice with his shoes in front of the doubtful Batenkaitos.

Hearing that sound, something was drawn closer–.

Lye: “—~Tsu!!”

Behind Otto, a flock of water dragons jumped out of the waterway and charged towards Batenkaitos in a single stroke.

2

—Otto had managed to brainwash the herd of water dragons, accompanied by the immense influence of the Authority of Wrath.

The Authority of Wrath, with its ultra-wide range, even if it didn’t cover the entire city, greatly shook the emotions of people, planting the seeds of faint spirit among the citizens, resulting in enormous disarray and suspicion.

Nevertheless, the recent speech by Natsuki Subaru raised the people’s morale, which was also the basis of Otto’s hypothesis of using the water dragons’ strength.

Lye: “Oh, o~h—~tsu?!”

Batenkaitos, mid-air, could not stop the largely numbered water dragons.

With their limbless and serpentine body structures, and weight that was not below a hundred kilos, the multiple bodies crush Batenkaitos. As they continued glaring with their blue and white scales, their fangs continuously aimed for the crushed Batenkaitos.

Lye: “Hunting water dragons is cruel.”

With their fangs on their prey, they spin and tear the flesh apart. That small body would turn into countless pieces of meat, even without such an enormous number of water dragons.

“…”

The aftermath won’t be good.

Due to the influence of the Authority of Wrath, the water dragons were in a strong and excited state, and were skillfully deceived by words with the Divine Protection of Soul Language.

Felt: “Amazing! This, was done by nii-chan!”

Felt ran up, as she rose to cheer.

Despite not moving a single eyebrow seeing this cruel scene, only now does it seem that she had been moved.

Otto: “What I did was to give just a pinch to the water dragons. Whether it’s a Sin Archbishop or not, he cannot win against nature.”

Kiritaka: “Possibly so but… you are, a person who can do much more horrible things than what I thought.”

Otto: “Anyway, I am glad we’re okay. Kiritaka-san too, to think that you survived…”

Kiritaka: “I did indeed get injured on my back but, White Dragon’s Scales, which is a famous mercenary group, helped me out with their expertise in medical treatment.”

However, it unquestionably looked painful. Still, what could be the reason for which Kiritaka was still on the move, even with such an injury. Understanding the meaning behind Otto’s gaze, Kiritaka put his hands on his chest with a look that reeked of seriousness.

Kiritaka: “It is decided, isn’t it. I have the position of executive in Priestella’s management. I heard the broadcast, but I cannot leave everything to it.”

Otto: “I believe that spirit is commendable but…”

Kiritaka: “Of course, there is a low possibility of me being able to fight properly and be of any help. But, for once, even I should be able to do something.”

Kiritaka shamefully made that remark after the effect of the Authority of Wrath and Subaru’s speech.

Indeed, it had been Subaru’s speech which provided a support to the citizens, and it was a medicine too strong for people who already had strong missions to complete. To the extent, that it disabled the fear and reason that would normally stop a person from doing such reckless acts.

Felt: "'That's just recklessness, don't go about thinking such things."

Reading Otto's thoughts, Felt said this with sharpened lips.

Felt: "Everyone has the right to fight for the things important to them. Nobody can stop the feeling of someone who wants to do something for those things, even if it is not backed by a great reason, can they."

Otto: "That is… an individual opinion, and such a judgment should not be taken by someone who is in a responsible position."

Felt: "It depends on the things! Also, I never said that this applied for this situation, did I. Both me, and those guys, came out only because we could win."

Otto: "Win, you say?"

Following Kiritaka, Felt rubbed under her nose with her finger.

Felt: "I also heard nii-chan's speech. That stupid Reinhard too, along with you, went to the city government building. Everyone except me, isn't that right?"

Unfairly enough, what Felt was feeling right now was a misunderstanding. In this world, just as there are right words to fit, there are also some things that can only be done by those humans who are apt enough.

Just as that theory, Otto stopped pursuing further, since he seemed to not know the reason why he was here.

Otto: "Is Heinkel-shi properly captured?"

Felt: "He is kept at Camberley's shelter. Me and Gaston were going back to take what was taken."

What was taken, saying that, Felt turned her jaw towards Gaston. Gaston held a white packet in his hands, and it looked like a long spear.

Otto: “That is?”

Felt: “Old man Rom… it seems to be a secret weapon that he kept in our staff’s bag. It’s a magic tool, I mean.”

Otto: “Magic tool?! How convenient for such a timing!”

Ideally, the intimidating power of the magic tool would make it possible to have results that would normally not be possible.

After hearing that it was a magical tool, one’s expectations were bound to increase.

Felt: “The conditions for using it are a pain, but it’s worth it for its power. Even so, this thing can come in handy in cleaning up the mess nii-chan is in…”

???: “—~Hk.”

Felt’s words may not have had, but what entered Otto’s ears at that moment was a scream.

Otto looks back to where it came from, and Felt and Kiritaka react by widening their eyes. They didn’t hear that scream anymore. It’s obvious. As it was the scream of a voice incomprehensible to humans.

Lye: “They seem to be a much more fun opponent than we thought bu~t… Mere water lizards are no food, are they. Whether it’s for us Gourmet or for any other gastronome, they’re une~atable.”

A voice was heard, a voice that seemed to be able to beat up and defeat anything in this world.

At the same time, the flock of water dragons which should have had been jumping around and preying upon that prey. Their figures, with their tails, torsos, heads now disheveled, were extremely excited at the time of the initial attack, but their painful suffering and their flowing blood conveyed the abnormality of the situation to everyone.

Otto: “Felt-sama, this magic tool… is powerful, right?”

Felt: “From what Old Man Rom said, even Reinhard can’t avoid it, you know?”

Otto: “I see. That is certainly assuring… Kiritaka-san!”

Kiritaka: “Wh-What is it?”

Felt, who received that answer, and Kiritaka, who had an expression of despair after seeing the water dragons. Him leaving behind the White Dragon’s Scales was still, for the non-combatant Kiritaka, very dangerous.

Otto: “Me, Felt-sama, and everyone of the White Dragon’s Scales will buy time. In that time, Kiritaka-san should go to the city government building… no, first go to the eight evacuation center of the town!”

Kiritaka: “Go there, is there something over there?!”

Otto: “—If you go there, you will understand everything. The one who can win, which Kiritaka-san will subsequently send here, is present there.”

Seeing Otto’s determined face as he made that declaration, Kiritaka, changing his expression, nodded powerfully. He then turned back towards his guards,

Kiritaka: “It’s just as you heard. I will, from now, just as Otto-shi instructed, head for the evacuation center. I want you to stay here, and fight along with them. To protect this city.”

???: “Our work is to be young man’s guard… that’s what it’s supposed to be, when did it become such a bothersome position.”

Kiritaka: “That’s wrong. Your job is not to be my guard. Help me with my purpose, was the first contract.”

In front of the bitterly smiling faces of the White Dragon’s Scales, Kiritaka answered with a face that showed utmost seriousness. The reason why his way of addressing his way of self reference became further polite, was because the city meant much more to Kiritaka than just having a responsible position in it.

Kiritaka: “Help me with my purpose, White Dragon’s Scales. To protect our important workplace Priestella, and let’s fight to save our beloved songstress, Liliana.”

???: “Even though turning back would be impossible.”

Kiritaka: “It has nothing to do with not being able to smile again, or what lies in my thoughts. I love Liliana, and I need no more reason to put my life in danger.”

Saying that, Kiritaka looked at Otto and Felt. At the same time, he lifted the bag he was holding in his hands.

Kiritaka: “Without fail, let’s show that we can do it. Because no one knows the navigation of this city and Liliana more than me.”

Felt: “For a moment, I thought it was cool but it’s all disappointing in the end.”

Otto agreed with Felt’s impression, but he did not mention it, he nodded silently seeing Kiritaka’s preparations.

Lye: “—About time, are you prepared?”

The movements of the agitated water dragons had stopped, and stripped of their white eyes, they were close to dying.

Through the gap in that group, Batenkaitos slowly appeared. The blasphemer shaped like a young boy, embraced his shoulders and happily asserted himself as an adversary, and glared.

Lye: “Wasn’t that nice, that counterattack. Recklessness and braveness are different, and abandonment and persistence too are absolutely unlike! That’s a face that knows about that. We’re glad. Finally, you guys too, got the qualification to be taken to our dinner table.”

Felt: “Till now everything we did was just worth going into the trash can huh, this guy, has everything messed up.”

Otto: “Whether being recognized as the enemy is good or bad is again different. Personally, I think that those who get disdained, can still do a lot.”

Did he get this idea by being around Subaru. Or could it be that his thoughts had been influenced by Subaru. How bad would that be. Anyway,

Otto: “Kiritaka-san!”

Kiritaka: “—I wish for good fortune in the upcoming battle for you!”

Following Otto’s call, Kiritaka ran to leave this place. Just one person, Batenkaitos, tilted his head after seeing the figure of Kiritaka, who was trying to escape from the battlefield.

Lye: “Just sto∼p. After how you’ve gently stimulated our motivation and this fee∼ling of hunger!”

Following the back of the escaping Kiritaka, Batenkaitos’ body jumped forward. Fully using his small body, his aerial speed in a single direction was unbelievably fast. With the same pace, Batenkaitos’ fangs pass straight through and reach Kiritaka—they were on their verge to do so.

Felt: “Gaston!”

Gaston: “If I die here, I’ll cry and come to haunt you after becoming a spirit!”

Felt’s voice ripped through the air and the giant, who jumped at almost the same time, interrupted Batenkaitos’ course. Crossing his arms in front of his face and curling his back, it was Felt’s servant, Gaston.

Lye: “Don’t get in the wa∼y—”

Swinging the daggers of his arms, Batenkaitos tried to cut down the hindrance. The steel blade shines brightly, and it’s blow struck Gaston’s exposed arm.

Sounds echoed, and Batenkaitos' dagger broke.

Lye: "Hu~h?"

"…"

Batenkaitos' questioning voice was accompanied by Otto's. They had seen what had happened.

Gaston's position did not change at all. With his arm, he broke Batenkaitos' dagger.

Felt: "My giant is pretty tough. Enough to be my guard."

The happy Felt, who seemed to think that they scared him off, threw the knife she held in her hands towards Batenkaitos. Batenkaitos avoided it with the same momentum as he avoided Gaston's kick. Just as he somersaulted backwards towards the open distance, the "White Dragon's Scales" changed their positions and blocked the road.

Kiritaka's retreat, had become a reality.

Lye: "Hmm, he~y. We see."

The overwhelming existence called Batenkaitos was outnumbered, but the pleasant smile that was sticking to his face did not cease.

With the same pace, Batenkaitos glanced at the opposing Otto,

Lye: "The number of people Louis is likely to be pleased with, is three huh."

Whispering with a trembling sigh, he removed the broken dagger from his arm. Now his left arm was bare-handed, and only his right hand was armed.

Otto: "For some reason, I feel the gap hasn't been filled at all."

As usual, Otto's warning bell continued to respond to this, the greatest of threats.

Ignoring that voice in his head, Otto looked at Felt. That unchanging face, determinedly, looked at the intense battle.

Let’s fight, without the option of running away.

Otto: “Considering the amount of opportunities of fighting I have gotten in the past year, what will I even do as a merchant.”

The voice that spilled from that mouth did not reach anyone.

Henceforth, no one noticed that the voice had a pessimistic tone not because of the content of the words in it.

Chapter 55:
The War God's Challenger

—The legends of the god of war, Kurgan, were widely circulated in the Vollachia Empire.

In the powerful and meritocratic Vollachian Empire, as long as one had the ability, the circumstances of their birth would be disregarded.

In comparison to Lugunica, which remained discriminatory against demi-humans, and the Holy Kingdom of Gusteko, which barred foreigners, Vollachia adopted a system similar to the Kararagi City-States, one devoid of consideration for blood or appearance.

Therefore, among the four major countries, Vollachia was considered to be the best country of residence for non-purebred humans.

But on the other hand, that kind of cruel order, ruled by survival of the fittest, meant that there would be severe repression and oppression on those lacking power and wisdom. Naturally, personal evaluations and racial evaluations would be different.

In particular, the Multi-Arm Tribe had been wandering around for many years, as a nomadic race which never stayed in a single place. The appearance of the Multi-Arm Tribe was just as its name implied, and their aptitude at using magic was exceptionally low for demi-humans. In terms of a race, it could only be thought of as inferior.

The total population of the Multi-Arm Tribe was not large. If ever a dispute arose, they would be more inclined to relocate than to fight for the protection of their land.

It was inevitable that such a race, driven away from countless places, would come to the Vollachian Empire, where it would have only been natural for them to be swallowed up by the iron-blooded Empire and faced with decline.

—In this meritocratic world, a man named Kurgan shouted his refusal.

Although the characteristics of the Multi-Arm Tribe were that they had more than the two arms humans did, that number varied from person to person. Kurgan, who had eight arms where most had four or five, was a peculiar existence.

It had been the then-youthful Kurgan who had, when the local lord moved to evict them from his land, refused, waving his eight arms to drive the messenger back. Then, spurring his trembling brethren on, the lord's private army was driven back and broken through, time and time again, until finally the lord's mansion itself was attacked.

Although the barbaric attack had frightened the lord, Kurgan did not offer a violent solution.

He spoke that he and his people had proven themselves, and accepted a prized seat on the lord's private army. After that, throughout various battles, the name of Kurgan of the Eight Arms was passed down as a legend of the Vollachian Empire.

???: "…"

His whole body had been submerged in cold water, and he could still see the wavering moon through the water that flowed overhead.

The bone that supported his right eye had been broken, and the eyeball enclosed inside the socket seemed on the verge of slipping off. Instantly, he used his left hand to support the magical treatment and perform minimal healing.

His remaining left eye jumped around, surveying the red sediment flowing along with the water, his body arching back upward where it hit the bottom of the waterway.

???: "…"

Obviously, he lay submerged in the water, but he could feel no trace of its frigid coolness.

Emancipated from the heavy weight of gravity, strength slowly poured back into his hands and feet in a world where their burden had been lost. If only unloading the yoke of the heart could be as simple as removing the yoke on the body—right now, his heart was submerged in darkness.

That he could just keep sinking in this way, in no way was such a thought completely absent from his heart. However, drawing breath began to grow painful, and in the darkness, his eyes had not left him completely blinded.

The peach-haired girl, the orange-furred catgirl, and the black-haired boy emerged and ignited his waterlogged heart.

Maybe it was a flame that would disappear immediately. Earlier, that had been precisely the case, and his bravado had been entirely shattered, which proved so. Even so, no matter what,

—That was no excuse to be immersed in here forever.

Garfiel: “Phwah!”

Stretching to straighten his back, slamming hard into the water pushing himself up in one breath, Garfiel shook his head as it emerged from the water.

The vision in his right eye was still obstructed, and the lingering after-effects of the beating had turned into a tinnitus ringing ceaselessly in his head. His entire bloodied, wounded body was flooded with nausea, and the lack of sensation in his mouth had a discordant effect on his teeth.

Garfiel: “Fuckin’ shit…”

Grabbing the edge of the waterway to yank himself up, shaking his entire body like a wild beast to clear the water, Garfiel glanced around.

Earlier, Garfiel had been slammed into the waterway from that spot.

Nothing had changed, and the war god remained standing in place.

The position of his outstretched Demon Cleavers was the same, and with delay in his slight aura of battle, he maintained his stance, acting if there was not the slightest doubt that Garfiel would come back up.

Kurgan: "…"

Looking at the silent god of war, Garfiel began to think.

After all, the necessity of the class between Garfiel and Kurgan was small indeed. The task that Garfiel hoped to accomplish was to stop the surprise attack that Lust was likely to launch on the City Hall. Even if he fought with Kurgan here, he would not be saving the City Hall, where solely non-combatants remained.

At a glance, everything told Garfiel to avoid a fight with Kurgan here.

Garfiel: "But… no way, he'd let me escape."

A body so large that heads would crane to see it fully, and an overwhelming amount of muscle. Even if he looked incapable of agility, even if he tried to flee, he could not imagine that he could escape the reach of those swords.

From the very instant that this god of war had appeared before him, Garfiel had been rendered incapable of escape.

Now, there were only two choices that Garfiel was allowed to make.

—Fight to the death. Or die without resisting. These two choices only.

Garfiel: "Fuck… right now's not the time to think like that!"

Defeatist thoughts flashing through his head, Garfiel gnashed his teeth to drive them away. The fangs that had been urgently regrown to make up for his losses tinged with pain, but that pain drove negative thoughts of loss to deep recesses.

Any notion of the feeling of impending loss, of the harbinger of defeat, would be flattened. Self-satisfying words to justify his loss, were unnecessary!

—Win, win, win, win, win, win!

Seize victory, prove his own worth!

Garfiel: “UUUUAAAAAAaaaaaaah!”

Roaring loudly, driving away any weakness, Garfiel once again rushed forward. In the previous skirmish, a single blow that he had put his all into had been blocked.

However, if his weight were not enough, he could use speed to control him.

Using claws, using teeth, opening, tearing, biting, plundering.

Kurgan: “…”

The silent god of war greeted the rushing Garfiel.

A blow from a Demon Cleaver came from his shoulder.

Call it a sniping blow, but the penetrative force was too low; call it a crushing blow, but it moved too sharply. It belonged solely to Kurgan, this combination of swordplay and strength that would leave his opponents crushed.

The suddenly-approaching blade of the Demon Cleaver passed over the back of Garfiel’s head as he leaned forward. After that narrow miss, Garfiel’s thinking grew steadily more fervent.

If there were only one blow, Garfiel should be able to escape with ease. The speed of his small form, lithe as it was, was quite different from the speed of that enormous body with its equally enormous arms and weapons.

After avoiding his massive attack, sending a slashing paw towards his chest as a parting gift was easy. Or rather, should have been.

Garfiel: “—Guh.”

However, Garfiel, who had buried himself deep in those arms, was forced to dodge on the spot. One of Kurgan's giant side arms swept upward, threatening to send him flying with a blow to his chin.

This was also unexpected—no, his body's sense of balance was simply different.

Kurgan, born of the Multi-Arm Tribe, had trained relentlessly to find a style which suited his own body, wielding his eight arms. He honed frightening techniques of his flesh, which were entirely different from the maneuvers Garfiel knew for exercising four limbs.

Once his attack ended, his body would be left open, and weaknesses would be revealed, such common sense applied here.

If one arm were to be defended against, then it was common sense that a weakness would be borne by wrapping around to the side of that arm. But here, even if he could block one arm's fatal strike, he would still have the other seven to contend with.

If he could not manage all that, only a single dead end awaited.

Garfiel: "Gh, gaaaaah!"

In front of the shuddering Garfiel, the arm of the god of war seemed to be enough to shake the world. The roaring Demon Cleavers struck from all directions, crushing their opponent's body with violent force.

Blocking one blow with his shield, bending over to dodge another, darting backward to reduce the impact of the next, spinning to avoid yet another, offsetting one with all the force from his body, allowing the next to shatter his shoulder to avoid a fatal injury, deflecting one more with a beastified arm of his, then a single hit came through to make him fall on the stone steps.

Garfiel: "Gah, huu."

—Eight arms.

Just now, Garfiel had thrown his all against Kurgan, and had only barely survived the counter-offensive which followed.

Such an attack held the deadliness of a tempest, and yet, to Kurgan, he was merely swinging each of his eight arms.

If this were what it meant to be a god of war, Garfiel would be annihilated in moments if the fight continued. Right now, collapsed on the ground, the bloodied Garfiel still drew breath only because the still standing god of war had no intent to pursue him.

Kurgan: "…"

Assuming the same stance he had taken when Garfiel had clambered out of the waterway, he looked down at the loser in their struggle.

To be underestimated, no such feelings of frustration surged forth. The question now was of even occupying the same dimension.

Competing with each other, warriors on a battlefield.

The name of this god of war, Kurgan the Eight Arms, was a legend.

Garfiel: "Huu… Huu…"

He could not win. To win was impossible.

A legend that had passed away, a man who had become a hero, this war god.

Thriving in the imposing Vollachian Empire, even when his clan had been inferior and despised, was this man who had changed the destiny of his race on his own.

Garfiel was nothing more than a little kid who revered that legend.

Garfiel: "Huu… huu… huu."

Clearly that was so, but why did his body right itself? Even his inner self was so shaken, and yet his body stood upright.

Garfiel: "Haaaah… Noisy, noisy, fuckin' noisy!"

The rush of his heartbeat, it was now unusually loud.

The ringing of drums accompanying his ears, Garfiel stomped on the ground. The stone steps beneath his feet began to split, and the cracks stretched straight below Kurgan's feet.

The silent Kurgan and the bloodied Garfiel stood in confrontation. Swaying, Garfiel gathered power in his toes, once again slamming on the ground. Then, Kurgan moved.

No, he had been moved.

Kurgan: "…"

Through Garfiel's soles, the Divine Protection of Earth Spirits worked its power. That power moved from the newly formed cracks to Kurgan's feet, and the ground supporting the giant flew towards the heavens.

That enormous body floating in midair, honed though it was by a hundred battles, was still a slave to the laws of physics.

Losing the support of his lower body, he could no longer execute his powerful strikes.

Garfiel: "Haaaaaaaaaaa!"

This moment was the key.

Taking aim at where Kurgan hovered in midair, Garfiel swung his arm.

Part beast, an arm covered in the fur and muscle of a giant tiger struck Kurgan. Even the god of war had no means of resisting if he could not adjust his stance in midair.

With the sound of weapons colliding, the intercepting Demon Cleaver flew away, pulling Kurgan in its wake. And then, Garfiel's kick was waiting for him. Taking advantage of the first chink in his armor, his claws pierced those thick abdominal muscles.

Roaring, Garfiel ceaselessly pushed his opponent, who had bent over, pressing on with his attacks.

Chest, thighs, knees, and stomach, all took constant blows.

Suppressed by the force of the impact, Kurgan's numerous arms were unable to catch up to defend, and he could only take each attack in his splayed position.

Garfiel: "Gotcha!"

Garfiel, convinced that victory was in sight, cried out.

The slashing, bestial claws tore into Kurgan's chest, spraying Garfiel with dark blood.

Garfiel swiped the blood from his body, continuing to press forward. Confident that his opponent had been rendered helpless, Garfiel's eyes found Kurgan, skin carved from iron—and then cold washed over him as his hairs stood up.

Kurgan: "…"

The god of war's eyes fixed themselves on Garfiel, his demeanor exactly what it had been at the start, unchanged, not shaken in the slightest.

Garfiel: "—Huh?"

It was then, that Garfiel realized.

The god of war's delayed counterattack.

Two Demon Cleavers were swung, slamming into Garfiel's pair of hurriedly-raised shields, breaking both his arms, sending his figure crashing hard into the ground.

Garfiel: "Kuh—"

Not even a grunt could not be formed. In an instant, orientation vanished from his field of vision, and Garfiel's limbs were entirely controlled by the impact that had sent him packing.

All he knew, was what had happened.

In midair, without any grounding point, Kurgan gave a fierce attack with only his upper body. This method was simple and straightforward.

Grabbing the blade of the Demon Cleaver with both hands to increase the weight of the swing, the force had skyrocketed.

—That was the principle of a flick to the forehead.

Using two hands as a base to turn the attack into a fatal blow.

Sending him flying to reduce the force of his attacks— this method of combat had been thoroughly resolved by his opponent.

Garfiel: "—Hk."

Having his chain of counterattacks interrupted, Garfiel was struck by a foot from the huge body directly above him. Coupling the foot with his falling momentum, Garfiel's body squeaked and rebounded upward from the ground as soon as it made contact.

His thoughts occupied by pain and loss, what drove him to use his healing magic was solely his survival instinct.

Attaching the broken bones on his upper arm, elbow, and shattered shoulders, fixing his eviscerated internal organs. His ribs, waist bones and parts of his left thigh had also broken, but those would prove too difficult to recover in an emergency.

His Gate heating within the body, he drew upon all his magic, exhausting his Mana supply. Taking advantage of being able to draw strength from the ground, with his body pressed against it, he began to treat and repair himself from head to toe.

A few seconds, or tens of seconds, or possibly a few minutes.

Blocking out even the passage of time, Garfiel focused on the restoration of his flesh. Finally, reaching a point where he could just barely manage to move, he spat the blood from his throat and got up.

Kurgan: "…"

Calmly, the god of war regarded the bloodstained Garfiel. Seeing this gesture, the corners of Garfiel's eyes burned. The heat within had him bowing his head, teeth shaking.

Garfiel: "The fuck's this…?"

Since the beginning, Kurgan's stance had remained consistent. He would meet Garfiel's challenges, but he would not take the initiative to attack, nor would he rush at Garfiel with swords drawn.

Garfiel had been mercilessly defeated three times.

The feeling of defeat and humiliation in his heart had smashed through him, his warrior's conceit and arrogance.

He felt that he had to win against him. In a similar way, he also thought that it would be far cleaner to kill himself than to suffer this ridicule.

The god of war Kurgan, the hero of Vollachia. Being regarded as the peak of all the soldiers, asking him to understand the frustration in Garfiel's heart would be impossible.

Garfiel: "Might as well just…"

"Kill me", he could ask that of him.

Honestly admitting defeat, acknowledging the obvious disparity in power, asking to be allowed to die as a warrior.

Putting down his shields, spreading his arms, and forming an expression of bliss. To plead with him like this, would he be willing?

To fall in battle against the god of war, to a warrior, this was perhaps the proudest way to die.

Garfiel: "In this place…"

Wouldn't it be so easy, if it were all to end.

Garfiel: "It'd be too easy for it to be over, huh."

Equipped with his shields, tightening his arms to show hostility. Looking forward, as if intending to struggle.

Garfiel: “That kinda thinkin’ keeps lingerin’.”

Someone had said to him once, to not think so much when fighting.

You’re pretty strong when you’re not thinking about extraneous things, and just using your instincts to fight.

—Was that really the case?

Garfiel: “That sound won’t go away…”

How annoying, his heartbeat was. Every bone in him twisted and connected, and a sound began to form.

Annoying, annoying, annoying, annoying.

That extraneous sound, all of it, completely, in its entirety, was so annoying.

—The sound, could he not hear it?

Garfiel: “Can I hear… Always, of fuckin’ course my amazin’ self can hear it.”

Even if he avoided thinking about it, it would amount to nothing.

In Garfiel’s ear, or perhaps in some part of him separate from his tympanic membrane, that voice was still being accepted.

Someone’s voice, an intimate voice, a familiar voice, a heartwarming voice, a choked voice, a proud voice, a voice which could not suppress its rage.

All these voices, refused to let Garfiel go.

Even if he relied on instinct to fight, these incoming waves of sound would not recede at all, and Garfiel would not be alone.

The more he thought about it, the weaker he was, and the him right now was so weak.

It was different from when he had been in Sanctuary, playing at being the lone wolf. Now, he bore more humility, had seen more things.

The more people there were to someone, the weaker they would become. They would spend their entire lives growing weaker.

Garfiel: “How’s… that possible.”

Embracing those unfading voices, swallowing his sense of defeat, stirring up a desire for victory, and inserting his admiration and envy into all that.

—Garfiel, issued a challenge to the god of war.

Garfiel: “—Kuh.”

Kurgan: “…”

Garfiel’s gaze had changed. Kurgan, witnessing this, quietly moved.

Of his four Demon Cleavers, he sheathed two. However, this meant in no way that Kurgan’s strength had weakened. Instead, it allowed him more focus on just those two Demon Cleavers. Almost as if to explain, the god of war adjusted his stance.

The god of war, who had stood facing forward, balanced on his right foot, leaning in slightly as he faced Garfiel.

This, was a battle stance.

—Evidence, that Kurgan finally regarded Garfiel as an enemy.

Garfiel: “—So just now, ya really were just treatin’ my amazin’ self as a kid. ‘The osprey’s unsuited to child rearing’, does this happen to be the case here?”

Kurgan: “…”

In silence, Garfiel flew at the god of war.

Responding to this brutal offensive was a Demon Cleaver.

Suppressing the horrifying feeling of a wall of despair closing in on him, Garfiel rushed forward, seizing his opportunity with his all.

This was a misjudged tactic from his earlier attack. It had been caused by the aura that Kurgan gave off, as well as Garfiel's own imagined fearful admiration of the hero.

Garfiel: "Uuuuuuuaaaa!"

With a hook, he lashed out at Kurgan.

Although there was a heavy sound of iron on flesh, he had not hit where he had aimed, but an arm that had been extended to block.

Garfiel: "What kind of a joke's this!"

Seeing his fist blocked by that palm, Garfiel roared.

Drawing strength from the soles of his feet, he poured that power into his fist which met Kurgan's palm, allowing it to explode forward.

Kurgan twisted his fingers, turning himself around to avoid the sudden punching force, and Garfiel took the opportunity to land on the god of war's waist, and up his chest he ran, as if he were doing a flip.

Kurgan leaned back, lashing out with his Demon Cleaver at the same time. Reading the flow of the wind and atmosphere to predict the direction, Garfiel accepted the attack with his pair of shields. With a thundering sound, Garfiel's body flew backward.

Garfiel: "Haaaaaa—"

Slamming his limbs into the slate floor, he forced his body to stay in place. Looking up, the war god's pursuit had already approached.

Kurgan, who had yet to launch his own attack, now rushed forward to crush Garfiel.

Only one instant to predict, only one moment to react, only one second for the result to bear fruit.

Kurgan: "…"

Garfiel strained the arms he had embedded into the slate, lifting the ground before him. The rushing Kurgan shattered the wall launched at his shoulder, and lunged with the Demon Cleaver.

A cacophony.

Garfiel, taking a direct hit, was propelled backward. The heel that had tried to stand firm slid across the ground, and shards of teeth flew forward. But—

Garfiel: "Don't look down on me, bastard!"

He used his teeth to block the tip of the piercing strike of the Demon Cleaver. From his incisors, blood dripped to cover the Demon Cleaver, but Garfiel did not hesitate.

Garfiel: "…"

He strained the strength in his neck and jaw, and Kurgan's body shook. The latter grabbed hold of the bitten Demon Cleaver's handle with another arm, and strained to extract it in one motion, but the tooth piercing it would not give.

Not only that, but the force of his biting teeth yet increased. Garfiel's upper body swelled and began to perform a half-beastification.

Garfiel: "GHROOOoooooooa, GRAAAAAAAAAAH!!"

Transforming his head to animal form would lower his capacity for rational thought significantly. His reasoning would regress to the level of a beast's, and he had been told countless times that this was a double-edged sword.

But in this moment, that was Garfiel's choice.

The power of his abominable half was indispensable. Faced with the most powerful of the Multi-Arm Tribe, the god of war, how could he win, if he denied his own fundamental nature?

O tiger, o tiger, o tiger, in this moment, lend me your strength—!

Kurgan: "…"

The instant the golden tiger opened its eyes, the Demon Cleaver was torn.

The blade was shredded, and the force of the destruction moved from blade to hilt, shaking the giant's form as he suddenly lost his hold and balance.

—This, was truly an opportunity.

Garfiel: "Huu, haa, HAAAAAA!"

The beast swung its paws, beating at Kurgan's head. The giant could not catch his footing under the beast's repeated strikes. A slice and a bat arrived at the same time from the bestial arm, and Kurgan, dripping blood, was forced back.

Kurgan: "…"

Garfiel made to pursue further, but his nose was met with a fist.

The enormous tiger's face was smashed with an elbow, the bridge of its nose collapsing, and immediately following, from below, was a strike to his mandible.

His body fell, collapsing, and a punch from the front slammed into his face.

Blood splashed into his dimming field of vision. Orientation, control, these vanished from his mind.

Not that it had anything to do with him. What was important was all contained in his heart. Even without thinking about it, it would not vanish, and it would drive his bloody, battered body on.

The Demon Cleaver approached.

The remaining one of the pair, which had not been shattered.

Only one instant to predict, only one moment to react, only one second for the result to bear fruit.

Garfiel: “Guu, uu…”

The blade cutting towards his body scraped against his shield and met his stomach. Even had the impact been dispelled, this blow still had the power to slice through the thick abdominal muscles on his body.

However, faced with hair stiff as golden needles, and the swelling body of the enormous tiger, bisection was still out of reach.

At Kurgan’s feet, a stomp from Garfiel. This was an effect of the blessing of the Divine Protection of Earth Spirits.

Garfiel: “Uuuuuuuaaaaaah!”

The blade still lodged in his abdominal muscles, the god of war’s body still held it. In a grappling contest, Kurgan would come out ahead, but Garfiel could not sit still.

The lack of teeth, the arm that had been broken several times over, and the instinct overpowering his sensibility, had him catch Kurgan firmly.

Kurgan: “…”

Yanking on his cumbersomely large body, Garfiel threw Kurgan— into the waterway behind him. The instant he was thrown forward, Kurgan’s arm reached out to grab Garfiel, dragging the two of them down together.

Accompanied by a loud splash, the two plummeted into the waterway. Two huge bodies were scuffed by the current and each other, the blood which stained the water being swept away.

Kurgan: “…”

In the water, the two figures were still continuously attacking and defending. In the dark, vision-obscuring liquid, Garfiel and Kurgan continued to beat each other without regard to the resistance of the water.

Fists of a giant mangled his organs, excruciatingly expelling the oxygen from his lungs. Pain unto pain, suffering unto suffering, so the underwater battle continued.

Between that, Garfiel understood his own disadvantage.

For whatever reason, the god of war before him did not seem to breathe. He felt as if his opponent were a resurrected body.

Oxygen starvation brought lethargy, and Garfiel found his every action slow and stagnant.

The flow of the water gradually surged and swelled, and, again and again, the two figures fell from waterfall to waterfall. As his consciousness faded, his fingertips were sapped of their fighting spirit.

Garfiel: "—Haa."

—His breaths were not enough.

This would become the true cause of his defeat, as Garfiel's consciousness was leaving him. And victory was—

Kurgan: "…"

A heavy sound, that the muted, stagnant water carried to him.

Returning to his distant consciousness, Garfiel saw it within the murky water.

The Demon Cleaver sheared into the wall of the canal, and the god of war's strike created a divisive gap in the path of the water's flow.

He had neither the chance nor the air to ask what he was doing.

The sound of blades from every which way shook the flow of water, until finally the sound of breaking metal and a shocking rush echoed in tandem. In the next moment, a tremendous new stream was formed.

Separate from the waterway's true flow, it was another stream of water entirely. Garfiel's body, captured within this stream, was sucked and thrown clear from the waterway.

Garfiel: "—Puah, kuu, kuh."

The feeling of water around him disappeared, and Garfiel spat the volumes of water he had swallowed.

From his eyes, nose, ears, all the holes in his head, water poured forth, and Garfiel shook his head.

Just as he was wondering what had happened, he heard it.

???: "—Gorgeous Tiger?"

Amidst the sound of flowing water, someone called out quietly to him.

Chapter 56:
Signing of a Divorce

1

—The Authority of Greed associated with its star's name, the true face of its Invincibility.

The names of the stars that Subaru knew aligned with the names of the Sin Archbishops. The etymology of Betelgeuse, Orion's Hand, was quite fitting with the madman Petelgeuse Romanée-Conti's Unseen Hand.

Therefore, Subaru believed that the stars' sobriquets were closely related to the Sin Archbishops' Authorities.

And the Sin Archbishop of Greed was named Regulus Corneas. Regulus, his first name, had its origin in the Latin word "Leo", and was derived from the expressions "Little King", as well as—"Lion's Heart". Although he had once scoffed at the idea, Subaru realized that this notion was not meaningless and pursued this train of thought, thus arriving at a hypothesis.

In the first place, what is a King?

The Kingdom of Lugunica was currently in the middle of the Royal Selection, each candidate striving to show their Kingship. Although each Candidate's idea of Kingship would come to light sooner or later, Subaru wanted to bring up the concept of a King here, in this situation where it took a more general meaning.

This self-proclaimed King was a Kingdom's representative, who stood at its top.

Loosening the definition, a nation could be composed of anything, but a single individual could become no nation. A nation can only be a nation if there is a King, and Citizens who follow the King.

Following this line of thought, bearing a name with the meaning of “Little King”, Regulus Corneas would probably also correspondingly have Citizens who could grant him the title of King.

Subaru: “Then, who are the Citizens of this Little Kingdom, with Regulus as its King?”

He did not even have to think about it.

Without bringing any mook Witch Cultists, they had attacked the city of Pristella.

Although this was a group of devils with such distorted personalities and malicious intents so sever they made people look away, the only one to go through the trouble of bringing unnecessary numbers had been Regulus.

Why would he need to do so?

Knowing Regulus, the possibility that he merely craved the limelight was not nonexistent, but what if that was not the case? What if that was necessary for him?

Subaru: “In order for Regulus to be a Little King, he needed to bring his wives, who are the Citizens. Although it’s unknown if the distance is relevant, it looks like Regulus had to bring along his fifty wives due to this restriction.”

Was the condition of his Invincibility based on the number of wives? Or his distance from the wives?

If Regulus’s identity as a Little King were truly conditional, the scope of what Greed could reach would potentially be affected by such limits. In short, Regulus’s wives were in no way irrelevant to his Invincibility.

Subaru: “But, this isn’t quite enough to unveil the secret to his trick.”

What Subaru had understood with his reasoning, was only the Little King part.

His other name, Lion’s Heart, had yet to be explained, as did the overwhelming power, both offensive and defensive, that accompanied his Invincibility. The fact that his surroundings had no effect on him also remained a mystery.

If it were a mere strengthening of one's body, it would not have been impossible for Reinhard to break through; However, Regulus's Invincibility clearly transcended the realm of simple super-strength.

Subaru: "It can't be a super-strong barrier. All the measures to stop an Invincible enemy have been tried already. On top of that, he definitely lacks a heartbeat and body temperature. Then—"

The name of Lion's Heart opened a thought, and the last piece of the puzzle fell in place.

Regulus's Authority of Greed was not Invincibility. The true face of the murderer's overwhelming Authority was Stillness of an Object's Time.

Already supplied, already appraised, without holes.

The words that Regulus always wore at his lips of distorted self-satisfaction were about how he was a man satisfied with his ideal existence, but at the same time he made no attempt to hide the nature of his ability.

Subaru: "The time of his physical body's frozen, so forget attacks; he won't even get wet. The time of the sand he throws is frozen, so it doesn't bounce off, it goes straight through."

Among the familiar superpowers found in manga, there was a similar one, Spatial Splitting.

This power, as its name suggested, created a literal crack in space itself, cutting something off from its surroundings, regardless of whatever may try to affect it. Regulus's existence itself acted thus, on some level.

Regulus Corneas, who could cut himself off from the flow of time, could be said to be the distortion of space itself. Indeed, he had said that he stood in an entirely different dimension—Invincibility was but a side effect of Stillness of an Object's Time.

That was to say—

Subaru: "—The secret technique of freezing time's your true ability!"

Regulus: "I don't care how enthusiastic you are, I have no comment on that! Are you that type? Who wishfully believes that you know something, so everyone around you should know that as well? Even pride should be measured, so show me a little self-awareness, you selfish bastard!"

Subaru's back was pressed against a stone wall, hiding his figure as he yelled, and Regulus rushed at him with ridicule.

Breaking through walls, cutting through the canal, a literal march of devastation—as a result of this, Regulus caught up with Subaru.

Right now, Subaru met all this alone. That said, in truth, this was not the exciting match the word "combat" implied.

Regulus: "Darting back and forth irritates me to death, you. Not running away makes you truly a man, did you think I'd say so? You and I can't compare at all. Though you clearly gawked as I sent the Sword Saint flying, you can't even understand something like this? No matter how you look at it, isn't this just looking down on me?!"

Subaru: "When it's someone you hate, anything they do is always irritating, right or wrong. If I ran, I'd only run into a future so troublesome it'd kill me. In addition… this choice is the right answer, that should be it."

Regulus: "Right answer my ass. Whether it's personnel selection or strategy, all of, all of, all of allofallof it! It can only amount to a twisted result, isn't that right? If you wanted to continue the fight, wouldn't it have been much better for that cheating whore to stay? An adulterer like you, is there anything you can do aside from sleeping with someone else's bride?"

Subaru: "That's one hell of a statement."

Subaru was not anxious in the slightest, even while bathed by Regulus's bitter words. Not anxious, not irritated; even his disgust had been watered out, as he relied on only his smart mouth to control the situation.

Now, Subaru had lured Regulus a distance away from the church, having parted ways with Emilia, facing off with the murderer alone.

“Facing off”, saying so seemed a touch inaccurate. Since Subaru was just trying to hide himself, he maintained his taunting demeanor, striving merely to buy time.

If Regulus noticed this, and attacked so destructively as to rend that entire section of the city from top to bottom, Subaru’s plans would be shattered in an instant. However, Subaru was sure that Regulus would never do so.

In this short period of time, with the hostile nature of their interactions, he had very accurately gauged Regulus’s character.

In short, Regulus was scum.

This simple statement could in no way explain all of Regulus’s problems, however. More precisely, Regulus was someone who put his own sense of values above all others’, and would certainly never be capable of ignoring the existence of others.

To be frank, calling him the incarnation of desire for approval and desire to show off would be the simplest way to put it.

Claiming that he possessed no desires and no demands with sophisticated words, treating his existence as one that had already achieved perfection, Regulus seemed unable to continue living without proclaiming his own value to others.

Repressing the feelings of others, imposing his own values onto them, using intimidation and violence to forcefully instate himself as supreme. This attitude was not how he treated just his brides, but how he treated the entire world.

Therefore, that was why Regulus attempted to meet everyone with his own kind of straightforward honesty. His battle of offense and defense against Reinhard served as perfect proof.

If Regulus was capable and willing of doing so, he could have completely invalidated Reinhard's attacks with his Invincibility, and gone on to kill the somewhat-troublesome Subaru and Emilia. Despite this, he had been deliberately eager to accept Reinhard's attacks directly, and thus was unable to put this acute plan into action.

Although, this was not to say that Regulus valued nobleness of spirit. Rather, this decidedly further proved the nature that he had supposedly cast aside.

—This man, Regulus, was a man who could not help but force everything around him to yield, by use of his Authority.

Therefore, he did not crush the meddlesome Reinhard, nor did he ignore Subaru's provocations. Those were not decisions he could make in battle.

Assured by the premise that he could be neither injured or defeated, he needed to force his opponents into complete surrender, leaving their spirits defeated and broken—Regulus was a man who knew only this way of battle.

Such a repulsive nature was truly unsightly to behold.

The reason behind this judgement was that everyone, with no exception, would to some extent hold the same feelings. Assuredly so. Even Subaru himself was aware of such ugliness in his own nature. Precisely because he forced people to gaze into this ugliness, this was why the existence known as Regulus was so hateful.

However, this exact reason was also what allowed a faint glimpse at a tiny chance of victory.

Subaru: "Your secret method of freezing time, fine, ignore it, but what about the first part? Was my speculation really completely off? If you would, even if it's just a rough idea, I hope you can outline it for me."

Regulus: "Why would I have to answer the question? It's nonsensical and not obliged of me. A matter of disclosing my own secrets isn't even about rights anymore. To what extent are you planning to look down on me? You bastard, are you incapable of understanding without having your bones ground to dust?!"

Falling for Subaru's provocation, Regulus stomped hard at the ground.

The tips of his feet pierced the stone road, as easily as if it were made of pudding, sending dirt flying everywhere. The ammunition it released randomly destroyed the area near Subaru's hiding place, as only the general direction of his voice could be used to ascertain his position.

Long before the bullets could find him, Subaru, who had read Regulus's actions, had fled from the wall. During his escape, he also toppled the stone pillars standing at the ends of the street.

And thus, the rope tied to the stone pillar came untied, and a series of slight sounds echoed.

Overtop the head of Regulus, who had looked up to see what had happened, countless shards of ice flew down. With Emilia's help, the street had been turned into a minefield of carefully lain traps.

Of course, the place where Regulus had been directly struck was unscathed, but—

Regulus: "This kind of thing! This is nothing but what you'd call idiotic!"

Regulus, without attempting to dodge the falling ice, spread his arms in order to accept it with his entire body.

Of course, without hope of piercing his invincibility, the shards of ice shattered into fragments, scattering to disperse into Mana particles. Including the parts that had failed to touch his body, as if to show off, Regulus stomped through all the scattered bits of ice, destroying them utterly.

Regulus: "What's this supposed to be? If your long rambling theory from just now is indeed correct, couldn't you yourself think of how meaningless this attack is? Look at it this way, isn't it that that girl's attacks are much more effective? Winding back and forth, just what do you intend to do?!"

Subaru: "I can answer what I intend to achieve by winding back and forth like this, if you answer my question. This should be an equal exchange, no?"

Regulus: "An exchange between me and you, what is this but sheer wild arrogance!"

Subaru pulled back quickly, putting distance between himself and Regulus.

Refusing to let him go, Regulus chased Subaru persistently, gently bending his knees and leaping in one motion. Moving forward with that explosive propulsion, in a blink of the eyes, the distance between the two shrank.

Like this, fingertips of death reached Subaru—almost, but just before that, Regulus lost his foothold.

Regulus: "Wha—?!"

Subaru: "This was truly outside my expectations, but since you're someone who only knows how to meet force with force, you're super weak against all sorts of tricks."

The classic pitfall trap. It was reliant on Emilia's magic to dig into the ground, a primitive mechanic which used a layer of ice covered with soil.

However, Regulus completely fell for a simple trap, the sort of which a veteran of hundreds of battles should have seen through. Although ironic, this also served as evidence that Regulus was incapable of doing anything but enforce victories with brute force.

Properly and uprightly, using his cheat ability to directly crush his opponent with brute force. Capable of nothing aside from this, evidently a man who would consider no other battle tactics.

Subaru: "Albeit it's different from nullifying your Authority, I can think of a million ways to pull these things off. If I keep repeating such a thing, it's gonna get hard to even tell who the antagonist is anymore, though."

Taking a shortcut to reach the church first, they had fought for every last second to turn this area into a minefield of traps.

Although Emilia had refused to leave Subaru until the last second, she could never use these dirty tactics with her guileless nature. And so, they allocated the right person in the right place.

Subaru: "…"

In the time Regulus took to climb out of the hole, Subaru surreptitiously glanced down at his right foot. Even after the strenuous parkour of his escape, it was still in excellent condition. In fact, he had almost forgotten that it had been turned to bloody ribbons and enveloped in this mysterious black pattern.

Perhaps this was the influence of the Dragon's Blood, which felt almost as if the blood were speaking to Subaru.

'This arrogant false King that is your enemy, show him the prestige of the Dragon Kingdom'.

Subaru: "In this case, I'll be asking you for more help. Though I'll be owing you lots."

Regulus: "You are so annoying, you fucking bastard!"

The ground erupted, fragments of stone steps and lumps of soil scattering with force.

Being influenced by Regulus's Authority, they caused further fierce damage to the streets. Despite this devastation, Subaru was not within its destructive reach.

Having jumped out from the ground, Regulus, eyes widened with hate, glowered at Subaru, who had put distance between them again. Very deliberately, Subaru raised his middle finger at Regulus.

Subaru: "Seems that someone once said this is idiotic, may I ask who said this, again? It's often said that 'treating others as a mirror can lead to an understanding of victory and defeat', but shouldn't you take a long hard look at a mirror first?"

Regulus: "Messing, messing with me, to such an extent, you..!"

After politely and carefully having his flaws pointed out, Regulus revealed a look of ferocity.

More than likely, his homicidal feelings towards Subaru had already easily reached a breaking point, and the flames of hatred had consumed his murderous, unchanging body.

Regulus seemingly had not noticed at all that this was all more or less within the scope of Subaru's expectations. Because, without sharpening his murderous intent, his loose and messy attacks would be ineffective. And that was a point Regulus had yet to notice for even the slightest of moments.

Subaru: "Though that's the case, I can't afford to take this lightly."

Wiping sweat from his neck, Subaru, with a flippant grin, also hid his readiness for death.

What he could not let Regulus see, was that his intent was only to buy time. And even if that were to be seen though, he absolutely must not gauge the reasoning behind it. This was the condition for victory of this battle, the task that Subaru, who had sent Emilia away, needed to accomplish.

This was what he and Emilia had sworn to each other, that they would fulfill their respective duties no matter what. And so—

Subaru: "Leaving it to you, Emilia—Be sure to pull out the wives' heartfelt feelings."

2

When Emilia arrived at the church, the brides were still where they had been left.

Emilia: "Excellent, everyone's still exactly—"

Looking at the faces of the wives lined up in attendance, Emilia blurted her feelings. However, she was struck silent, as the positions of the wives in attendance had remained quite literally unchanged.

If Emilia's memory served her correctly—they had not moved even the slightest bit since the moment they had left the cathedral.

Emilia: "Just because Regulus gave an order to keep still…?"

What Emilia understood, from what she had already been told by Subaru, was that the Authority of Greed had no binding force. Although he had stressed repeatedly, "This is just a hypothesis", Emilia had full faith and no doubts in his answer.

In order to defeat that murderer, what Subaru and Emilia had to accomplish no matter what had yet to be done.

Emilia: "Everyone stayed here… Then, the first issue isn't a problem."

The most frightening possibility was that the wives had scattered into hiding, or had fled the church in a panic to hide.

If things got out of hand, they would be forced to take a last resort. The plan that Subaru had so gravely proposed, Emilia wanted to avoid it if at all possible.

And so—

Emilia: "Everyone, let's talk about this."

There was no time. Although there was no guarantee they would even listen, Emilia had to overcome this obstacle now.

Number One Hundred & Eighty-Four: "—Husband-sama, how is he?"

In the half-destroyed church, standing in the middle and facing Emilia, the first to respond was a blonde-haired woman—No. 184 Unlike the other silent wives seated in neat rows, only she sat at the front near the collapsed altar.

Having helped Emilia change, offering her advice, with eyes as cold as when she spoke of the despair her future would hold, No. 184 questioned the returning Emilia in a voice devoid of inflection.

Emilia: “Regulus is outside… Sorry. We’re still engaged in battle. I couldn’t strike him down.”

No. 184: “Is that so… I am sure you are.”

The corners of No. 184’s mouth rose almost imperceptibly.

Such a tiny smile, as if she did not know why it was there. In addition, Emilia understood that this smile conveyed neither joy nor sadness, but something resembling ridicule.

Because, a smile like this, which existed to bring harm unto others, was one Emilia had encountered many times in the past. And so—

Emilia: “Such a cold smile. I don’t think it suits you, such an expression.”

No. 184: “…My apologies. Husband-sama forbids smiles, so I allowed you to see an undignified expression.”

Emilia: “Please don’t apologize. What I meant wasn’t that.”

At No. 184’s self-deprecating words, Emilia shook her head.

Inside her chest, heat began to concentrate somewhere that was not her heart. It was just as Subaru had told her, those words kept rising to the surface of her mind.

Intense to the point of discomfort was a fierce feeling, swelling unbearably inside her heart.

Closing her eyes, suppressing the turbulent emotions, Emilia glanced back and forth around the church before she spoke.

Emilia: “We’re planning to take down Regulus. To do so, we need everyone’s help.”

Wives: “…”

Emilia: “I don’t know what treatment you’ve suffered at Regulus’s hand up until now, but even I, who was only briefly in contact with him, can see that Regulus is wrong.”

Having been taken by him while unconscious, he had asked for her hand in marriage as soon as she had woken up. Then, she had immediately been overwhelmed by the wedding ceremony, and had been told of Regulus’s ideas on marriage and the way he treated his wives.

It was a far cry from the happy marriages Emilia had envisioned.

Emilia: “I don’t want to lose to Regulus. I understand that in battle, winning or losing doesn’t make something right. But right here, right now, I don’t want to lose to Regulus. If I lose… certainly, that important thing will be trampled upon.”

No. 184: “That important thing… huh?”

Emilia: “…”

No. 184: “If you do not wish to lose your life, you should have obeyed Husband-sama from the start, or you should have tried to flee without regard for anything else. Both were possible. Clearly, that would have been best for you.”

With a dark gaze, No. 184 answered Emilia.

No. 184: “What happened to the Sword Saint and to that Knight of yours, who were accompanying you earlier? They met Husband-sama’s counterattack, and fell in battle. And thus, you alone fled here.”

Emilia: “No. Both Subaru and Reinhard are still fighting Regulus. They believe in me and are waiting for my return.”

No. 184: “What could you accomplish by returning? And then, saying that you require our help and such… I do not understand what you mean.”

Emilia: “Do you truly not understand what I mean?”

No. 184: “—?”

Faced with Emilia’s interrogation, No. 184 raised her eyebrow wordlessly.

This natural reaction did not seem forced nor calculating in the slightest. Although she had slackened because she had resigned herself, No. 184 had never weaved words with the intent to deceive Emilia since the very beginning.

In other words, she truly had no idea.

—That Regulus’s Heart had been entrusted to his wives, her included.

Emilia: “And everyone else? Everyone, are you truly okay with this? Having wanted do anything at all, having wanted someone else to do something, is there no one who still thinks this way?”

No. 184: “Please stop. I will listen to you. If you have questions, please ask me. My answer is the answer of the collective.”

Facing Emilia who tried to take a read of those around her, No. 184 interjected with stiff words.

Stubborn, or maybe brave—Emilia recalled how, for her sake, the woman had even questioned Regulus, at risk of her own life. Although that had indeed been a form of altruism—

Emilia: “I get the feeling you’ve abandoned your own life, which is supposed to be the most important thing.”

No. 184: “…”

Emilia: “But in truth, you aren’t convinced by all this.”

Ever since the start of all this, No. 184 had been the one to speak with Emilia. Not merely because Regulus had ordered her to take charge of Emilia. In Emilia’s place, she had offered her opinions to Regulus, stood on behalf of other brides, and right now intended to accept the words hurled at all of them.

This kind of posturing placed her as Regulus's confidant—the suspicion that she was opportunistically manipulating Emilia and the brides was unavoidable.

Emilia: "But, I don't think that's the case. You aren't Regulus's Heart. I'd like to believe this."

Emilia had been saved numerous times by No. 184 Not sheltering her in a way that was visible to the naked eye, nor taking her hands to guide her.

Instead, in the face of incomprehensible malice, making sure that she would be prepared to proceed on. Someone so concerned about others—

Emilia: "Being the true bride of someone like that, I can't picture it."

No. 184: "…Perhaps it was because I wanted you to believe that, that I spoke to you, you know."

Emilia: "Yeah, I'm not very smart, so if you were trying to fool me, I may have been deceived instantly. But,"

Emilia did not know whether she had a gaze to discern that or not.

Currently, the comrades that stood by Emilia were not doing so because Emilia had chosen them and expected for them to eventually be her comrades. It had been because all of Emilia's comrades had chosen her.

But even with being chosen, she had never thought that she herself was amazing or anything like that. Rather, she had always felt uneasy, afraid of having to live up to expectations.

However, she wanted to respond to the expectations bestowed upon her, and she wanted to be able to respond to expectations herself. Always, she had prayed thus.

Emilia: "I want to believe in you. This is a choice I made."

No. 184: "…"

Emilia: “Why are you standing up for the silent crowd? Why, despite the surrender in your eyes, would you still help me? Why are you—”

No. 184: “All questions.”

Interrupting Emilia’s question, No. 184 shook her head.

Then, for the first time since Emilia had arrived here, she raised her face.

Frozen feelings on a stiff expression. Such dry eyes, and closed lips. This sense of sorrow took the woman’s already beautiful face to another level. However, what she was thinking was—

No. 184: “Please leave as soon as you can. If Husband-sama sees us, we will all die.”

Emilia: “Listen to me—”

No. 184: “I have no obligation to respond to your questions. You are no longer Husband-sama’s wife. You are not like us.”

Emilia: “—I’m a half-elf.”

No. 184: “Eh?”

Faced with Emilia’s confession, the woman was struck silent.

Realizing that she had done something unexpected, Emilia gave a faint smile. On the other hand, the woman also understood the meaning of Emilia’s confession.

She understood that, standing in front of her eyes, was a silver-haired half-devil.

No. 184: “Silver-haired… half-elf…”

Emilia: “In truth, up until now, you and I have been different. Different situations, different origins, different even in our most basic qualities. But I don’t think anything like ‘everything about us is different, so there’s no connection between us’ because of that.”

No. 184: "…"

Emilia: "The things you and I see are surely the same. When you're sad, you'll want to cry; when you are faced with something you can't solve, you'll be angry; when you encounter something happy, you'll laugh with joy. That's the same, right?"

No. 184: "What exactly… are you trying to say?"

Emilia, who had been talking in a rush, drew a sigh from No. 184

At the question, Emilia found herself confused. What exactly she wanted to say, and why she wanted to say it. She herself could not figure it out.

This went to show that she was talking based off of emotion, but that made her forget the topic and go off-track. She should learn from Subaru, and convey the feeling she wished to convey in a straightforward manner.

Emilia: "That is, I…"

There were things she wanted to know. There were things she wanted to inquire about.

Things about Regulus's Heart. Things about standing up and taking the lead role of the wives with her utterly defeated expression; having protected Emilia, who was about to lose everything.

All of this together, she hoped that the woman would answer. And one more thing, that she needed to know first.

That was—

Emilia: "Your name, could you tell it to me?"

No. 184: "…"

Emilia: "My name is Emilia, just Emilia. Although with circumstances different from yours, but surely sharing similarities with you, I'm a half-elf."

No. 184: “Hmph…”

Emilia: “If we can see the same things, feel the same things, share the same hopes… Certainly, talking won’t be without meaning.”

Once upon a time, her name had been requested of her like this.

When her heart had been ridden with loneliness, when she had been convinced that she had no one to rely on, when she felt as if endless floods were swallowing her.

Back then, her heart had been seized by those same words.

—Today, that was even more so.

At that time, she had been truly happy. The boy who she had never met before, recognizing her existence, had made her very happy.

Having grown used to being rejected for so long, there was nothing she could do when someone had thrown such words at her.

No. 184: “…”

Once again, she had to borrow Subaru’s strength.

Left and right, she was borrowing, and then desperately piecing it together. But that was fine.

No. 184: “Don’t, kid around… Why is it, now…”

Before Emilia, No. 184—the woman held her head, shaking it as she screamed with all her might. That expression was filled with agony, that voice with resentment, and those eyes with the feelings of gazing upon what she loathed.

This was, since the beginning, the first genuine emotion that Emilia had wrought from her—

No. 184: “Why, after all that, are you suddenly saying something like we can be human again?!”

As if to release the muddy flow of long-repressed emotions, she wailed.

No. 184: “Not that not being human matters, being a doll is just fine. That man is satisfied if we only act as obedient dolls. If we just act like dolls, our lives will remain safe and sound. Only because we could believe this, did we last until today… And yet!”

For the ruination of her efforts thus far, she clashed with Emilia.

An outsider who knew nothing, what could they know about people like her, desperately struggling to even stay alive?

No. 184: “What do you even know about us?!”

Emilia: “I know that you’re incredibly kind.”

No. 184: “What do you even know about us?!”

Emilia: “I know just how hard you worked to endure.”

No. 184: “What do you, even know, about us…?!”

Emilia: “I know that you’re all crying out to be saved.”

Hearing Emilia’s words, the woman suddenly raised her face, as if it had bounced on a spring.

With widened, round eyes, with struggling, faintly moving lips.

She could not utter even a single word. Because, up until now, if any of them had said it, their hearts would surely have given out.

Despairing for help, and the hope of salvation, were two sides of the same coin. Holding such hopes, until now, had not been allowed. In order to keep their minds from giving in, those thoughts were smothered, in their heart of hearts.

And that was how even the simplest of cries for help had been sealed deep within their hearts.

Emilia: ““I want to be saved”; all of you are saying that. So I’ll save you. I’ll free you from Regulus’s hands. And to that end—”

No. 184: “…”

Emilia: “Please lend me your strength. Please help the ones who, for me and you… those who are even now, still engaged in battle.”

She lowered her head. With sincerity, having stated her hopes, Emilia lowered her head.

She stared straight at the ground. Her heartbeat leapt painfully, and the faint, barely detectable atmosphere surrounding her felt as if it were a hurricane.

She held up her body, now on the verge of crumbling, clenching her teeth to steel her heart.

She was not the only one feeling afraid. Because, certainly, they had lived an unending nightmare, one they could never wake up from.

And then—

No. 184: “…Please, wait just a moment.”

Emilia: “…”

Towards Emilia, who had been keeping her head down, the woman spoke, biting her lip. Then, with a deep breath, she cast her gaze away from Emilia. There stood the gathered wordless wives, who observed the progressing dialogue.

No. 184: “I have a question, that I would like to ask. One that until now, I have yet to have posed to anyone.”

The woman paused for a moment, and the wives remained silent, wearing frigid expressions.

Emilia also could not form a single sentence, and like this waited for the result.

Bathed in a sea of gazes which could stop even breaths, the woman who had always stood up as the leader of the wives, spoke.

No. 184: “Is there anyone here who loves that man?”

The question that the woman posed, as she gently tilted her head, spread throughout the church.

The content shocked Emilia, and the brides who had remained silent only cast their gazes around at each other. Confusion accompanied the faint emotion that emerged in their minds.

And like a ripple, it spread,

Wife: "…Hate him."

The one who spoke this, was neither Emilia nor the woman who acted as the wives' representative. It was one of the wives seated in the rows, a woman with short hair.

Those words, which had barely been squeezed out, shocked not merely Emilia.

Wives: "I also hate him." / "I hate him too." / "I've always hated him." / "I hate him, I really hate him." / "What a weirdo." / "Messed up in the head." / "Has he even loved anyone before?" / "Only himself." / "I don't know how many times I've turned him down in my head." / "I want to cry." / "But I can't." / "Hate him." / "He should just die." / "I hate him more than anything." / "Hatehatehate, truly hate him." / "His gaze is hateful." / "The way he emphasizes words is hideous." / "The way he walks is hateful." / "His character is despicable." / "Unlovable by nature." / "I hate him more than yesterday." / "I'll hate him more tomorrow." / "Disgusting." / "Perverted." / "The brain of a child." / "Even a child would be better." / "Even a ground dragon would be better." / "No one could be a good match for him." / "Physiologically unacceptable." / "Hatehatehate." / "He makes me want to vomit." / "I don't know how many times I've thought about beating him to death." / "The worst." / "Worse than the worst." / "Being near him nauseates me." / "His touch makes me feel like I'm rotting." / "My heart died." / "My family's dead." / "How could I like him if he forcibly kidnapped me?" / "I can't even believe there's someone so unrepentant and malicious?" / "It hurts so much I want to die." / "He's long-winded and pompous, every time I talk to him I want to die a bit more." / "I hope his intestines rot." / "Give my lover back." / "I want to go home, I want to go home…" / "Screw rescuing us, just murder him instead." / "Scummy bastard." / "Truly hateful, I'll hate him forever!" / "A woman who would ever love him doesn't exist, does she?" / "Nor a man." / "No human would ever love him."

As if a dam had broken, the wives poured out the words that had been suppressed in their hearts until now.

The overflowing words were full of the resentment and disgust that had festered for too long in their hearts, stuffed with years of hatred and suffering, certainly not feelings that could bring joy.

—Even so, their expressions, as they spat those words out, became joyous and clear.

No. 184: "Looks like it is unanimous, but none could state their opinions for such a long time."

Emilia: "You, too, was there anything you wanted to say?"

No. 184: "Ah, there is."

After hearing the wives' admissions, the woman turned around to face Emilia.

Caressing her long blonde hair, then with a face full of smiles—casting aside the order that forbade smiling, for the first time she revealed her beautiful smile.

No. 184: "I hate that kind of man—Please by all means, help us."

Like this, the divorce statement was signed with a faint smile.

Chapter 57:
Where the Heart Lies

1

—About ten minutes had passed since Subaru had left his life in the hands of fate.

Regulus: “Come on already! Strive after something for once, how about obediently dying here?”

Subaru: “Uwaaah!”

Regulus kicked at the building, cutting into it with terrifying precision, and without its support, it toppled helplessly.

The cloud of debris accompanying the collapse filled the vicinity, and Regulus, whose own vision wound up clouded, clicked his tongue impatiently—listening to these tiny sounds, Subaru returned to the battlefield, having exhausted his improvised traps.

Regulus: “Restlessly moving about… do you have no notion of attacking straightforwardly at all? I couldn’t care less about your relationship with that whore, but is this any way to fight, for someone who claims to be her Knight or whatever?!”

Subaru: “Say whatever you like, talk until you’re satisfied!”

Regulus: “There you are!!”

If Subaru attempted to defend himself from Regulus, who kept muttering maliciously, he would receive in return a handful of sand that would end his life.

The instant after Subaru had escaped far away from the murderous dust thrown his way, the debris he had been hiding behind vaporized.

Being brushed would lead to fatal injury, a single strike would mean instant death.

So far, Regulus's attacks had all miraculously missed. As contact would instantly mean the end, thanking fortune for this would be a tad inappropriate.

Subaru: "Concentrate! Concentrate! Concentrate—"

Out of breath, wiping away sweat, he tensed all his attention to prepare for evasion.

The rising dust stained his face, and Subaru spat out a mouthful of saliva, tinged with the dust that had accumulated in his mouth.

He was putting the results of his parkour training into effect.

Unlike the days when his exercise had been without goal, the new sense of purpose and aspirations had an enormous impact on the state of Subaru's mind. In the forest near the new Roswaal mansion, repeated every single day, to the point of being sick of it—that time had not been for nothing.

Subaru: "Hah, no matter what, hah, I'm just a guy who can at most mess around with a bastard with the skill of an amateur…!"

Even then, he was a Sin Archbishop of the Witch Cult.

Considering the battle's situation and Subaru's personal ability, to say that he was accomplishing something special would not be much of a stretch.

For Pristella to safely escape from the Witch Cult's sinister hands, no matter what, he would try to contribute just a bit more—

Subaru: "So…!"

Regulus: "Are you going to keep trying to kill time with this, do you seriously think that someone like you can manage to do anything at all? You're just someone who figured out a bit of the mechanism of the Authority of Greed, but don't mistake that for the ability to stand against me!"

Without even room to catch his breath, the enraged Regulus increased the scope of his destruction. Regulus no longer cared about how much collateral damage he would cause in order to kill Subaru.

The city of Pristella, which was famed for its beautiful scenery, was gradually losing those sights because of the violent crimes of the Witch Cult.

The stone bridge that spanned the waterway was shattered, the store meticulously decorated with glass was destroyed. Finding an odd feeling of beauty in the flashing of shimmering glass, so dissonant from the scene, Subaru believed in his right leg, and took the momentum of destruction as a cue to flee.

Ironically, from his right leg came a surge of power. Pitch-black, infected by something of unknown power, that right leg was currently Subaru's lifeline.

Lashing out with his whip, he latched onto the rain gutter of the building right next to him. Believing in the binding force of his whip, Subaru stomped hard on the ground, crossing the streets while running along the wall—he passed near Regulus's side as if to specifically force the evildoer to watch him with widened eyes, and he stuck out his tongue for extra provocation.

Regulus: "You!! You have no idea just what you're worth!!"

The stone thrown from his swinging arm flew far off, completely missing Subaru, who fled using the momentum gained from yanking his whip.

Without even considering an attack, just try to escape.

Those who had perished at Greed's hands, had died due to their excessive courage. Weak, fragile, and timidly insisting on escaping. Certainly, such a person could not lose.

Thus, that misfortune could be wiped clean here. For that goal—

Subaru: "Not yet, Emilia? —This guy's Heart!"

Emilia: “Someone with a clue… isn’t there anyone?”

Before the brides who she had asked for cooperation, Emilia bit her lip as she received an emergency report.

The fifty-three assembled brides all glanced back and forth at each other at Emilia’s question, before finally shaking their heads meekly.

???: “My most sincere apologies. Casting that man’s control aside and wanting to help you is certainly genuine. Only…”

Bowing her head with remorse, this was the representative of the wives—the blonde woman who had given her name as Sylphy.

Amongst all of Regulus’s wives, she was the one who was most well informed about their current situation, and so, she had become a representative of sorts.

Sylphy: “I can scarcely believe that that man would place something so important with us. Though he may call us wives and brides and whatnot… he has never once actually acted as if we were husband and wife.”

Emilia: “I can tell that Regulus is a reaaally problematic person, but what you’re saying can’t be it. Regulus’s… Lion’s Heart is definitely, definitely entrusted to you.”

Although Sylphy had begun to feel discouraged due to the lack of clues, Emilia would not be so easily disheartened.

At long last, Sylphy and the other wives, of their own will, had found their resolve to escape from Regulus’s grasp. This was only the beginning of their resolve. To become discouraged at this very first step was absolutely unallowable.

And as for Emilia, she believed in Subaru with nary a trace of doubt.

Subaru was amazing. Not only was he aware of so many things Emilia did not know, but he could apply knowledge and a lively attitude to a solution, no matter what adversity they had had to face in the past. And so, Emilia held no misgivings about his suspicion that Regulus's Authority was Lion's Heart.

This was not to say that she was acting thoughtlessly or with blind trust. It was not the case that it would be okay just because it was Subaru. Even Subaru would make mistakes, and on occasion he would fail.

However, that mistake could be corrected. Or she would take his hand, and become a force that could help him; this had become a source of Emilia's trust in him.

Emilia: "Subaru thinks that Lion's Heart must reside within the wives…"

Touching her chin as if lost in thought, Emilia remembered the mystery of the Authority of Greed that Subaru had shared with her.

—An authority that could stop the time of an object, that could leave it unable to be changed.

Although she had initially thought such a power inconceivable, she found that too much fell in place with that explanation.

Could it truly exist in reality? Rather than being an uncertainty, it would be better to say that—

Emilia: "There is a reaaally mysterious power at work."

Apparently, this was something even more irrational than a Divine Protection. Unfortunately, Emilia, lacking a Divine Protection herself, could not comprehend the unique power inherent to those blessed with Divine Protections.

However, in Regulus, she could sense something similar. These Authorities were something far more ferocious and ugly than a Divine Protection.

Emilia: "Heart, heart…"

To Emilia, the worst-case scenario would be if one of the wives were truly a confidant, connected to Regulus's true heart. This real bride would then be siding with Regulus and concealing her heart from Emilia.

Emilia: "…"

Leaving the contemplative Emilia aside, the brides congregated around Sylphy, scrutinizing their previous conversations for clues.

Emilia's amethyst eyes carefully scrutinized their faces, as they engaged in discourse with serious faces.

At the same time, she had directed the Micro Spirits to look for changes in their bodies. These Micro Spirits were not particularly sensitive to changes in people, so their behavior, as if to test those who had applied for cooperation, was decidedly unpleasant.

However, her misgivings had long exceeded the level that feelings such as "I don't want to doubt" could curb.

Spirits: "Mmm…"

The Micro Spirits gave a response.

There were no noticeable reactions to the wives, though she was not sure. As far as Emilia could tell, there were no wives who served as Regulus's confidant, at least outwardly.

In that case, the only other possibility that came to mind was—

Emilia: "Eh?"

Suddenly feeling as if her hairs were being tugged on, Emilia immediately raised her head.

Before her eyes, dancing in Emilia's line of sight, was a Micro Spirit glowing blue. The Micro Spirit that should have been attached to one of the brides, swayed in the air as if wanting to convey something to Emilia.

Her eyes tracing the Spirit's line of travel, she found that it now faced Sylphy. She too was currently working hard, as the lead singer of the chorus of the wives' revolt against Regulus.

The Micro Spirit wrapped around her back, fluttering as if bobbing up and down in appeal.

Emilia: “Hey, do you have a moment to talk?”

At Emilia’s greeting, Sylphy turned with an expression of surprise. Emilia walked over towards her, sneaking a glance at the Micro Spirit which emphasized its presence, level with the blonde woman’s chest.

Sylphy: “What is it?”

Emilia: “Excuse me for a second.”

No one present beside Emilia could see the Micro Spirits, devoid of physical form. So no matter how hard Micro Spirits tried to communicate, their desperate appeals could reach no one but Emilia.

So, when Emilia suddenly reached a hand to Sylphy’s chest, the latter looked back to Emilia in shock.

Sylphy: “Eh? Eheheh?”

Emilia: “Wait a moment, please stay quiet. I’m checking something right now.”

Sylphy: “What are you checking, hey, what are you checking…?”

Her cheeks reddening, Sylphy questioned Emilia without being able to mask her surprise.

Emilia then answered Sylphy with a serious expression.

Emilia: “The rhythm of your heart.”

Sylphy: “—!”

Emilia: “It’s because I’m a Spiritual Arts User. Though my original contracted partner is currently on leave, I can still communicate with the Micro Spirits. I asked those Micro Spirits to investigate everyone’s bodies, and received a response that only your heartbeat was strange.”

Sylphy: “My heart…?”

Sylphy swallowed a mouthful of saliva.

Her expression was entirely one of disbelieving surprise. Her shock was merely a matter of course. After all, she had only just heard a brief summary of Lion’s Heart, before being told that her heartbeat had changed.

And if things had progressed to this point, then there was only one explanation—

Emilia: “This is terrible… Regulus combines his heart together with the heart of someone who he claims to be his wife…!”

3

???: “No matter how you look at it, although you’re wearing the image of virtuousness while reciting your respectable rhetoric, where the notion that your battle to buy time would actually bear fruit came from in the first place is a complete mystery to me. And although I don’t know how you could conceive of my Authority, why you would really want to keep fighting, now having clearly understood it?”

As he glanced down at the bloodied Subaru, Regulus’s cheeks raised, in boast of his victory.

Collapsed on the ground, lying by the side of a building’s rubble as he took pained breaths, half of Subaru’s face was stained with fresh blood.

Subaru: “Ah, guh…”

Regulus: “Although I’ve let you run about here and there, you’re really boring after having fallen. Well, that’s to be expected. It has to be like that. Considering the difference between you and I, this is merely reaping the crop when the harvest is over. With this, at last, without extraneous unpleasant moods, the end has come.”

Approaching Subaru, Regulus's heels crushed the rocks littering his path. His Authority was still active, as if he wanted it to be witnessed.

Regulus: "In summary, don't you feel that this is the fault of your excessively arrogant self? Up until now, there have been many like you, who wanted to beat me down or rouse a battle against me. But of all those people, not a single one has ever touched me. That is the fate of those whose desires are loftier than their abilities, an absolute law of nature. Do you understand?"

The Sin Archbishop of Greed, as he discussed the nature of desire, asserted his contempt for those who allowed excessive desire to immolate themselves.

To have desire would create struggle without meaning. To have desire would create starvation without boundary. To have desire would create ruthlessness without limit.

For this exact reason, to be without want and without desire was valuable. The optimal state of being would be to wish for purity and poverty, and to impose virtue on oneself.

Regulus: "Just being content with the present is enough, craving what is beyond one's own abilities will lead your own destruction. Gathering together one after another but refusing to learn, you really are a bunch of hopeless creatures."

With a sigh, Regulus slid a hand through his white hair, shaking his head as if he were drunk on the throes of a tragedy.

However, the sorrow in that voice was no act. Regulus was, more or less, from the bottom of his heart, mourning and sighing at the foolishness of Subaru and all others.

That was the self-righteous, undetectably lonely voice of someone omnipotent.

Subaru: "Before… I die… your… ability…"

Regulus: "Hah? Ahhhh, something to make you feel at peace as you die, is that how they put it? Trust you to know something archaic as that. You've bested me in an irrelevant store of knowledge, is that what you're trying to say?"

Regulus laughed as he watched Subaru, whose breaths looked to be on the verge of cutting off, wishing only for an answer to his final question regarding his Authority. Without a single route of escape, all that was left for his sorrowful existence was imminent death.

Regulus: "Well, you've already gotten this far. At the very end, I'll give your negligible self a reward for your efforts. I'll tell you, that all this time you struggled to your very last to buy, is all completely meaningless."

Subaru: "Meaningless… you mean…"

Regulus: "It's all really rather simple. My Heart, which you and that woman are searching for, is indeed carried by my wives—But, as to who is carrying it, neither I or any of them know. Equal rights, equally divided love, and equal responsibilities and obligations they bear, as well."

Towards the astonished Subaru, Regulus shrugged with a "Well, it's sort of like this?".

Regulus: "For those who have taken multiple wives, treating all of them equally is a matter of course. I am allowed to exercise my rights only because I can do just that, it's only somewhat logical. In other words, I'm risking my life by constantly manifesting my love for them."

Subaru: "And the wives are unaware of having this Heart?"

Regulus: "Not like there's a particularly complicated reason for that—There isn't anyone out there who is constantly conscious of the sound of one's own heartbeat, is there?"

Watching Regulus, who laughed with his mouth open, Subaru understood.

The method with which Regulus hid his heart, that vicious method.

Both simple and effective, and, above all, impossible to deal with.

Subaru: “With your Heart and your wives’ heart, you…!”

Regulus: “Managing the husband’s property is indeed one of the wife’s obligations. But you see, I am a selfless man. In the first place, I don’t have as many meaningless possessions as guys like you do. And so, what I have entrusted to my wives is my existence itself… Such magnificence, isn’t this the very essence of matrimonial love?”

—Disgusting.

Regulus’s consciously ruthless Authority. Without malice, without condemnation, he believed that was the natural order and process.

Subaru had come up with a number of theories on the methods through which Lion’s Heart had been hidden, before sending Emilia to the church. However, this had not been one of them.

Moreover, no one could break it—

Subaru: “Something so far beyond reason… Emilia, she couldn’t possibly do anything.”

Just now, if what Regulus had boasted of with a face full of pride was in fact the full extent of the power of Lion’s Heart, then there should still be a method of breaking through it. If that could be conveyed to Emilia, with her power, she could take care of it with haste.

The question was not one of possibility, but one of correctness.

—That was, the choice of life and death.

Regulus: “Hah? Hey, you…”

As he rose with a disgusted expression, Subaru stared at Regulus, the latter wearing an uncomprehending gaze as he witnessed the former’s action.

Having been caught up in the demolition of the city, Subaru, who had until now seemed to be on the verge of death, brushed the dust from his knees as he stood, still glaring. After a moment, Subaru raised his eyebrows with an “Ahh”, as he noticed Regulus’s incredulousness.

Subaru: “Playing dead… Ah, no. Playing to be on the verge of death. Since a flying stone happened to slice my forehead, I just wanted to give it a try, that’s all.”

Applying blood to his face and pretending to be in agony had led to this moment. With a face full of smiles, Subaru looked at Regulus, who had been in the palm of his hand all along.

Subaru: “I trusted in you. You’re definitely the kind who, having found a dying enemy, would arrogantly boast of your victory as you rambled on nonstop.”

Regulus: “—YOUUUUUUU!”

Subaru: “Whoa!”

Rising with a jump, Regulus’s body flew forward in a straight line.

With incredibly agile speed, and the movements of a filthy casual, he flew in a straight line. In this rare moment, Regulus could achieve acceleration that could shock even Reinhard.

However, the mechanism had not been understood until after the Authority was revealed.

Subaru: “Fuuu!”

Accelerating with his right foot, without hesitation his body flew toward the left. Regulus’s goal was to slam directly into Subaru, but he was thwarted by the limitation of linearity.

In summary, Regulus’s momentary superhuman ability was the result of the application of a temporal freeze on his physical form. His was an Authority that allowed the time of his body to be cut off from the world, and not be interfered with again. If he were to attack suddenly in this way, whether gravity, air resistance, or inertia, none could restrain him.

It was not always in effect, which should be because there were restrictions—

Regulus: "—Guh, you bastard!"

Subaru: "The one who wants to yell is me…! I have to find a way to reach Emilia, somehow…"

The whereabouts of Regulus's heart absolutely needed to be communicated.

To communicate it, and to make the choice. What method was there—

In order to save the city, Emilia was needed.

Subaru: "Emilia…"

In contrast to Regulus, who gathered momentum, Subaru looked in the direction of the church where Emilia should be.

In the midst of the ruined, collapsed city, there stood a half-destroyed church, where the aftermath of Regulus's actions had barely reached.

—And that place, in the next moment, was engulfed in a brilliance that shone blue and white.

4

The hearts of the wives had become one with Regulus's heart.

Emilia's conclusions caused tremors in all the surrounding wives who heard it. Most heavily affected was Sylphy, who had found herself the recipient of Regulus's shared heart.

Sylphy: "My heart… and…?"

After Emilia's hand fell back, Sylphy's face grew pale as she backed away step-by-step. The woman standing behind her, worriedly placed her hand on Sylphy's back,

Sylphy: "Do not touch me!"

In the next moment, Sylphy reflexively spoke as she swung out an arm. As if to keep the other wives away from her, holding this posture, she looked at Emilia.

Sylphy: “Are you sure there is no mistake?”

Emilia: “The Micro Spirit says it’s unnatural. I can feel a faint sense of overlap in the sound of your heartbeat as well.”

Sylphy: “…”

Sylphy placed a hand on her chest, closing her eyes as if to confirm what Emilia had just said. The speed, strength, and interval of her heartbeat resounding in her throat, she gave a deep sigh.

Sylphy: “I see… just how much, just to what extent does he want to trample upon others’ spirits, that man!”

Emilia: “Wait a moment, what are you doing?!”

Revealing an incredibly dry smile, Sylphy walked into the depths of the church. Half-destroyed from Reinhard’s attack, in a corner of the church were scattered shards from the skylight, exquisitely carved glass.

Sylphy plucked up a shard of glass, and turned back.

Sylphy: “You understand, right? That man’s nature. Imposing his weaknesses unto others, and then forcing decisions upon them as well.”

Emilia: “Decisions… what are you saying?”

Sylphy: “In order to stop that man’s heart, stopping my own is the only feasible way. As that man says, ‘until death do us part’, is this not one such case?”

As she played with the shard of glass, Sylphy spoke in a flippant voice. Emilia understood what she meant, and at the same time picked up on the underlying message. Sylphy’s epiphany, and Regulus’s malice.

Emilia: “Wait, you can’t! There has to be something, has to be some other way…”

Sylphy: “Such a convenient way, do you truly believe it exists? With our hearts already joined, stopping just that man’s heartbeat without stopping mine cannot be possible… and—”

Emilia: “Don’t give up so easily! If I could allow something like this, for what have I… Why did I leave that forest…?!”

Once again, there were going to be sacrifices.

Because of Emilia’s lack of power and knowledge, a sacrifice was once again about to happen before her. Just like everyone in the forest. Just like Fortuna and Juice. To make up for what Emilia could not reach, everyone except Emilia tended to use up their lives. “1”

Sylphy: “The days of being taken as that man’s wife… were truly arduous.”

Desperately, Emilia considered if there was any other way.

During this time, Sylphy’s heart gradually calmed down, and with the clarity of approaching her finale, she slowly began to grow more resolute.

Sylphy: “Merely in order to avoid triggering that man’s wrath, I desperately tried my best. Allowing whatever atrocities that man performed to slide, welcoming the new brides… those girls, who were in the same position as me. No matter what, I wanted to protect them. Just as the one I first met, just as the ones before me protected them…”

Acting as the representative of the wives, presenting herself before all the others no matter what, now Sylphy’s true aim had been made clear.

Before her had been others. Someone who had stood at the forefront of all these seized women had triggered Regulus’s temper. And then Sylphy took that will up, because even now these wives remained still.

Sylphy: “Even if our spirits were defiled by that man, because he would never touch our bodies… Certainly, if both had been defiled, we would have long been unable to withstand. So right until today, no matter the language or voice or behavior of that man, endlessly we endured and endured and endured and endured and endured and yet…!”

Having reached this point, Sylphy, who had been biting her lips, tilted her face upward. In her eyes were large, large drops of tears, as well as a scorching rage searing enough to evaporate even those tears.

Sylphy: “That man’s hand… It has tainted even my body! I had thought something of the sort, that at least I could protect my body, but even that something I wanted to protect so much had never been safe in the first place! We have always been that man’s servants!”

Tears flowed as a roar from her soul tore itself from her, and Sylphy’s hand wept blood. The glass that she had been gripping firmly had cut through the palm of her hand, and though she frowned at the pain, the corners of her mouth soon pitifully relaxed.

Sylphy: “Because women bearing injuries are atypical, even the slightest of bruises would mean death by that man… This wound, is my freedom.”

Emilia: “…”

Sylphy: “In no way is this your fault. I am incredibly grateful to you. Exacting revenge onto that man, for every single day until now, a better way could certainly never be found elsewhere.”

With a slight smile at Emilia, Sylphy looked towards the other wives—looked toward those who could be called her companions.

Then, clutching the glass in her right hand with her left as well, she pressed it against her chest.

Sylphy: “If I die, his heart will be transferred to someone. This is a certainty. That man would not use just myself alone as a shield for his heart. Just like that, everyone has no reason not to know that man's stubbornness."

Wife: "Surely, it will be so."

Which one of the brides had whispered that so softly was unknown.

As if assenting to what Sylphy had said, the wife who had answered emerged from the crowd. A woman with long chestnut hair, she too took up one of the shards of glass scattered beneath Sylphy's feet.

Wife: "I too have considered death a number of times. Like this, even if I'm living, I can't say that I'm truly alive. I'd rather reunite with my family in the afterlife…"

Wife Two: "My reason for not doing so was not wanting to die. Even if I were to be liberated from this pain, I wouldn't have any happy memories from life."

Wife Three: "But, if dying… If this life could exact vengeance on that man… If my death would not be something without meaning…"

One after another, the wives came forth and took up shards of glass. The brides looked at those sharp edges, as if looking upon their hopes. With Emilia's words as an opportunity, the wives had found their hopes, found something their lives could be spent on.

Sylphy: "Thank you, we are truly grateful to you—That man, aside from us, he truly has no other wives present. This is something I can absolutely guarantee. So then, I request of you."

Emilia: "…"

Sylphy: "Please be sure to help us speak. Our anger must absolutely reach that man—All we can do is trouble you, the only one to have been forced by that man, and to have rejected him successfully."

Sylphy's request was spoken with a voice full of warmth.

The wives all approached the shattered stained glass of the church that was to witness a marriage, holding the fragments in their hands as a symbol of the end they had chosen.

Pointing the sharp edges against their pale necks, with a breath they pushed it to commit suicide—

Emilia: “Wait.”

That action of certain death was stopped by Emilia’s words.

Emilia had fallen into silence until now. Power was contained in her words. Both in physical and metaphorical meaning.

Hands of ice reaching out from the ground sealed the wives’ movements. The movement of pressing the pieces of glass into their throats was successfully hindered, successfully preventing their suicides.

Sylphy watched Emilia’s actions with widened eyes, and then spoke with a trembling voice—

Sylphy: “I beg of you, please understand us! I am truly grateful for your sentiments, but this is the only method…”

Naught but death could serve as repayment.

Naught but death could strike a blow against that man, against Regulus.

That was Sylphy’s, and the wives’, conclusion.

This sorrowful answer of stopping their own hearts, Emilia also understood. So, to figure out how to reject it, thinking and thinking, all along she had been thinking of a way. And so—

Emilia: “I’m sorry. Not like this.”

Sylphy: “Eh…?”

Emilia: “If it were Subaru, he might have thought of another way. But my head is a bit slow, so no matter how hard I thought, I didn’t have a clue… So…”

Surrounding the muttering Emilia, brilliant lights of blue and white began to dance.

Gaining Mana, the swaying lights were the Micro Spirits which had entered a visible state. As if to engulf the entire collapsed building, the substantial gathering of Micro Spirits manifested itself—that was, in a sense, a sight as sacred as a dream, and Sylphy and the others held their breaths.

Emilia: “I want to make your heartbeats stop—Because if you stab your throats with a weapon like that, you won’t die such easy deaths.”

After Emilia lifted her hand, the Micro Spirits seemed to follow that movement as they shone, and blueish snow began to fall in the church. The snow layered thinly around the brides, and where it brushed their skin, it turned into white crystal.

This magic that Emilia was capable of, was both the gentlest and cruelest.

Emilia: “—Sorry. I can only use this method.”

Sylphy: “Please do not apologize.”

After realizing Emilia’s intentions, Sylphy breathed a sigh of relief. The hearts of the wives were in unison. They looked at Emilia, who was unable to form even a single sound, and spoke in agreement.

Wives: “Thank you.”

Emilia: “…”

Then, a brilliance that shone blue and white engulfed the church—

5

Icicles rose as if an assault from the sky had erected a frozen seal around the church.

It formed a sound so sorrowful as if to roll over the sky, as if the sky itself had turned white and died. Within the structure of ice that had risen, how much sorrow had gathered?

No one, save for the one who was responsible for this scene, could understand.

Subaru: “…Emilia.”

The ice created by the incomparably powerful magical vortex was peerless beyond measure, and could not have been made by anyone but Emilia.

Lion’s Heart… had truly been subdued—along with the lives of the gathered brides, their heartbeat had stopped. Subaru had already thought of this method. He could not think of any other plausible method.

And that method would have been impossible to actualize. He had even prepared himself emotionally that he would fail to reach Emilia at the church.

But, upon seeing this spectacle, the answer was clear.

—Chosen by Emilia, that answer.

Regulus: “Hey, hey, isn’t this a bit…”

Looking in the same direction as Subaru was Regulus, who could imagine the result of this ice structure, and his cheeks began to twitch. He of course understood that the place where the icicle had been raised was his wives’ current location. That also went for the meaning of that spectacle.

And so—

Regulus: “You two! Is this what you set out to do?! Is this something that humans are capable of?! Seizing another’s beloved, selfishly, without permission! Just… just how coldhearted can you be to do such a cruel thing! Huh—?!”

Regulus stomped at the ground as he shouted thus at the bloodied Subaru. His soles shattered the slate, and even distorted the earth enough to create an illusion that the city itself was shattering.

Rushing forward without a second thought, Regulus stabbed his fingers at Subaru.

Regulus: “Satisfied? Are you satisfied?! In order to kill me alone, you dared to snatch away the lives of all my faultless wives, and even felt happy to have done so, your humanity—”

His mouth spewing dirty curses, Regulus’s body, as he spoke of the sorrows of being plundered from, was suddenly sent flying.

The reason for that was the spear of ice sent by the girl who had emerged from the church’s entrance, on the other end of the street.

The spear of ice struck Regulus with astonishing momentum and rotation, ceaselessly striking the body of the standing Regulus in succession. His body was sent flying like a doll, and in the process, several more spears of ice flew towards him.

The momentum did not stop there, and like this, Regulus’s body was slammed straight into the waterway, and, with a loud crack, the waterway was frozen, becoming an ice sculpture in Regulus’s form.

Emilia: “—All that just now, consider it a divorce from your wives.”

Striding across the frosted street, Emilia returned to the battlefield in a flash of silver. She stood on the collapsed street, looking at Subaru as she ran up to him, whose pitiful sight made her narrow her amethyst eyes.

Emilia: “Subaru, that wound…”

Subaru: “I’m fine! It’s just something I cut so that it’d bleed more. More importantly, the church… what about the wives?”

Emilia: “…Everyone wished to defeat Regulus. That’s why…”

Averting her gaze, Emilia’s attention drifted slightly back to the glaciated church.

This reaction was enough, enough to convey that Emilia’s choice had not belonged to her alone. And the weight of that choice, Subaru would have to bear it as well.

Subaru: “B-But the effect of Lion’s Heart should have been interrupted. That man’s invincibility trick should have ended…”

Emilia: “No. It doesn’t seem to be something that’ll be so easily solved.”

Subaru: “Eh?”

“The sacrifices made as a result of our choices, should have been the price paid for the answer”, and as those thoughts flashed through Subaru’s mind, Emilia shook her head slightly.

Immediately after being astonished by her reaction, the ice filling the waterway behind them began to crack. The crack began to expand, affecting even the flow of the waterways which had been blocked off. As the collapse spread to where waterway met water flow, Subaru’s soles were immersed in water overflowing towards the streets.

Regulus: “Truly laughably ridiculous arrogance, vulgarity that is incorrigible, incompetence that brings speechlessness, shamelessness that brings disbelief, inferiority that is beyond salvation…!”

Leaving the canal, the murderer who was drenched but not wet in the slightest approached.

His white suit unstained, his white hair unshaken by the wind, his white face free of wounds, lacking even a drop of sweat. This existence was practically a daydream—No, better to call it a nightmare that appeared midday.

Regulus: “And now, what will you do? You two, how do you plan to take responsibility? Though you droned on and on like you’d done something great, in the end this was nothing but a failed miscalculation, in the end there were only sacrifices. How do you plan to recover from this situation?!”

In the form of this Regulus, who was enraged to the point of madness, the effect of Lion’s Heart yet lingered unchanged.

Emilia had made an assault at such a level, but forget being wounded, even a trace of what had happened could not be seen at all.

Subaru: “How’s this possible?! Even just now you were speaking of Lion’s Heart’s unending effects… How could someone like you have the presence of mind to bluff in a situation like that?!”

Regulus: “Do you think me so kind that I’d turn a deaf ear to that which can’t be ignored? I’ll say this first, isn’t the notion of not infringing on others’ hearts basic etiquette?! Clearly no one’s looking down on the rights of others, so how is it that you two are always doing something so mentally deficient? Conscience aside, are you lacking in even basic intelligence?”

Facing these unintentionally provocative lines from Subaru, Regulus looked down with an unimpressed expression, knocking against his head of white hair.

Regulus: “It seems that that contemptuous prostitute had counted them wrong, doesn’t it? Not remembering the number of lives she’s reaped, even though she’s the one who has done so, that’s a killer’s way of thinking. Certainly, there’s something wrong with it.”

Subaru: “Since when did you have the right to say those words…”

Regulus: “Don’t surreptitiously try to change the topic. Anything I’ve done to date, has absolutely nothing to do with that woman’s ungratefulness. Don’t turn your back on the sins you have committed. Don’t look away. Tossing your own issues aside to blame the other party, don’t you feel ashamed to call yourself a person?”

No matter where he went, carrying a vexing share of rage to impose on others, was Regulus. Carrying not a single doubt about his way of life was the foundation of Regulus Corneas.

How many contradictions would appear in his series of speeches before he was satisfied?

Discourse with Regulus was truly damaging to sanity. Faced with a

Sin Archbishop of the Witch Cult, it made one wonder if it was wrong to not be insane.

Regulus: “But… Look, you miscalculated.”

The substitutes for his heart, would even destroying all the alternatives of those be unable to lift Regulus’s invincibility?

There should have been no problem in theory. During his risky bet with his life, Regulus had proven that he was not so smart as to be able calculate with skillful words the way Subaru could.

Regulus did not have the ability to deceive or to rely on his eloquence to mislead others.

He was completely devoid of the ability to empathize. In his world, there was no one but him. Marriage was merely imitation, speeches were merely ideological, battles were merely conducted as an amateur. His way of being was merely pure malice—almost exactly like a Little King.

Emilia: “Fifty-three people…”

Standing next to Subaru as he trembled, Emilia muttered.

She had not, until now, towards Regulus’s fallacies, curses, and unspeakable complaints, shown any reaction whatsoever. Only one sentence, all she spoke was this one sentence.

Regulus: “Huh? What? Just now, what did you say?”

Emilia: “I said, fifty-three people. The number of women you forcibly brought to your side. Could it be that I’m wrong? That would be absolutely impossible. I could never miscount the number of lives.”

Regulus: “Hmmmm. And? So what? What are you trying to say?”

With a contemptuous attitude, Regulus dismissed Emilia’s quiet assertion as that of a fool. Digging a finger into his ear, his attitude was full of ridicule.

Even Subaru, with sarcasm as his strongest suit, wanted to clap in praise for his flippant manner. Just as Subaru was about to accept Regulus's provocation, Emilia looked straight towards him. Then she shook her head slightly at Subaru, who held his breath.

Emilia: "It's alright, Subaru. I understand it all now."

Subaru: "By understand, you mean…"

Emilia: "And, because I am incredibly angry right now… No longer, will I forgive him."

Feeling fear squeeze his chest, Subaru saw it.

Emilia quietly made disappear all feeling from her gentle expression, the tone of her voice dropping. She, having frozen her feelings like that, was the angriest he had ever seen.

A frigid flame rolling across her frozen eyes, Emilia touched her chest.

And then, spoke.

Emilia: "Regulus's heart is here—Right now, beating inside my chest."

Chapter 58:
—Faith

1

Regulus: “Fufufu.”

It was immediately after Emilia spoke, having placed her hand on her chest.

What rang out was a laugh that could not be hidden. Although what leaked out was at first only a breath, he soon could endure no more, and his voice gradually escalated in volume, until it became cachinnation.

Regulus: “Hahaha! Ahaha! Fufu, hahahahahahaha!”

Straightening his back, Regulus laughed loudly as if he had heard a great joke. Sticking a hand into his white hair and tousling it, the murderer was now immersed in a fit of laughter that no one else could understand.

Subaru could tell from his smug demeanor that Emilia’s speculation was correct.

Subaru: “You bastard, what’s so funny?!”

Regulus: “Of course it’s funny, isn’t it?! Or rather, you are, I really must suggest that, in this desperate situation, you should give up on trying to think and we can all laugh together. On that note, do you understand the current situation? You, with your own hands, pushed the most critical of critical points into this calamity!”

Subaru: “Guh…”

No words could be fitting. Only in this moment, was Regulus’s reply so perfectly reasoned that it could be met with naught but speechlessness.

Subaru turned his head to look to Emilia, confirming with her whether the speculation could be taken as proven.

However, towards Subaru's searing gaze, Emilia shook her head.

Emilia: "There's no mistake. I've had the Micro Spirits confirm, and I can feel it myself. Inside me, there's something extraneous that doesn't belong to me. It feels reaaally disgusting."

Emilia assertion brought with it a desperate presentation of the current situation.

The effect of Lion's Heart had moved to Emilia. In other words, the only way to stop Regulus now would be to stop Emilia's heartbeat as well.

Subaru: "In the first place, why is Emilia's heart… Could it be I made a mistake regarding Little King's effects? His heart… anyone he so wishes…"

If it were that kind of ability, there existed no loopholes in Regulus's Authority. If he could give his heart to even hostiles and strangers, that would mean that as long as the human race lived on, a way to kill Regulus would not exist.

Rather, if it was that his heart could replace that of any living creature—

Subaru: "Truly shameless."

Regulus: "The worthless howls of a defeated dog are pleasant to hear. Hahaha, it doesn't matter what you have to say. Just keep running with your temper; searching for some ridiculous excuse for your failure is the right of the loser. And enjoying superiority while hearing them is my right as the winner… Ahh, this isn't bad! Not bad at all!"

Emilia: "I don't meet your standards for a wife, you were saying that earlier."

Regulus: "So annoying. Going on and on arrogantly as if you're strong enough to speak of your own rights. More importantly, how are you planning to take responsibility for killing my wives? My ideal wives… How long do you think it took to gather such a group? How many years do you think it takes? Obviously of age, but lacking anything like a wife or lover, do you want me to be one of those garbage widowers who no one wants? Until I find a new wife, you have the obligation to join me!”

Regulus used stern words to smack at Emilia, full of spirit as he voiced his abhorrent rhetoric.

The violent reasoning that the murderer believed in, completely convinced that his heart was indeed within Emilia. If so, the possibility of removing Regulus’s heart from Emilia—

Regulus: “Would you like to try? To see if there’s somewhere else you can move my heart to?”

Emilia: “…”

Regulus: “The method is simple if you want to try it. Right now, just kill this girl before you. If you stop her breathing, you’ll naturally understand whether or not my Authority will stop. Very, very simple, effective, and reasonable… Hahaha! You can’t do it, can you? If you do something like that, with the motives and values that you’ve challenged me with in the first place, won’t you have lost your self-justifying reasons?!”

Although hard to admit, Regulus was right. Subaru did not possess the courage to sacrifice Emilia. Call him selfish, call him arrogant, only that could he not do.

In order to defeat Regulus, they had already tossed aside the lives of his wives. Even with the revelation that there had been no alternatives to those sacrifices, in no way could they compare with the life of Emilia or his other comrades.

Natsuki Subaru’s choices were, as always, selfish to a disgusting degree.

Regulus: “You see, someone like him could never. In that case, how about offing yourself in proxy? Simple, isn’t it? Just like what you did to the others. Or what? You can’t do it? You’ve clearly taken the lives of others without consent, but because you treasure your own so much, you can't do it? How amazing, and how repulsive, isn't it?"

Emilia: "—Subaru."

Subaru: "Wait, you can't. Seriously, that is unacceptable."

At Regulus's provocation, Emilia seemed to be calling to Subaru with a determined sound. Hearing the unsparing tone of her voice, Subaru hurriedly stopped Emilia in fear.

Even if she gave in to the provocation, surely she would not immediately make the choice to abandon herself.

However, Emilia had already done a good job of choosing the worst option if she did not have the means to win.

And so, Subaru had only the thought that he would absolutely not choose that path. In that case, they had lost. Calling Emilia's name had stopped her, but he could speak no further words.

Regulus: "Then, in that case, we're about ready to draw this to a close, aren't we? Although keeping a filthy woman like you isn't in my interest, for the time being, I'll compromise. Before finding my next wife, you'll join with me for a bit. Though, I'll just have to kill this guy. He's already infringed on my rights to this point… Ah, that's right. So, did you laugh earlier?"

Before Subaru, who clenched his teeth, Regulus happily turned the corners of his mouth upward.

A torrent of Mana welled around Emilia, as she planned to make her own decision. At the same time, Regulus, not caring at all, laughed.

Regulus: "You're that guy, aren't you? That loud voice in the city that yammered on right before my wedding? Killing a single Sin Archbishop or whatever… What a joke, right? My condolences if you really thought you could best me, just because you killed that disgrace. That man, both before and after becoming a Sin Archbishop, has never accomplished anything, he has always been a damn fool."

Regulus stood, giggling. What his words referred to was, without a doubt, the madman Petelgeuse Romanée-Conti, who Subaru found abhorrent as well.

Petelgeuse had been the worst kind of lunatic with no redeeming qualities. He felt not a shred of goodwill for the lunatic, instead hating him down to his bone marrow; he would never spare him, even were he to come back as a ghost. But nevertheless, seeing the Sin Archbishop ridicule Petelgeuse who was supposed to be his comrade, in Subaru's heart grew a terrible and primitive feeling of unpleasantness.

It compounded further into this extreme situation, with the possibility of defeating Regulus, with Emilia's life and death at stake.

Then again, Petelgeuse—

Subaru: "—Ah."

—Should have been a loathed lunatic of an opponent, mad bloodstained laughter appearing in his mind. While thinking back on him, he lifted his face. Then, something felt as if it began to stir within his chest, and he seized it, swallowing his breath.

Could it be, that something like that, was also possible?

Subaru: "Could it be done…?"

Incomprehensible.

Strictly speaking, no one could guarantee the possibility that had appeared within Subaru's mind. Just like bringing an empty table to a negotiation—or rather, it was closer to being the product of Subaru's delusions. Merely Subaru's own feelings.

But that was precisely why. That was precisely why only Subaru was able to arrive at this possibility.

That notion now, based just on intuition, even a god would not know if it could succeed—but,

Subaru: “Emilia.”

Emilia: “…”

Feeling the Mana that seemed to have risen to its limit, Subaru called to her.

Emilia remained silent, only revealing the realization of a tragedy. Nevertheless, deep in her eyes, a hint of emotion flashed through. That was her expectation and trust in Subaru, who watched her.

As if to lend support to those feelings, Subaru asked,

Subaru: “Emilia.”

Emilia: “Mhm.”

Subaru: “—Can you completely trust me, and leave everything to me?”

Emilia: “Mhm.”

Her response to this question came simply and without hesitation. Emilia placed a hand on her chest, and for the first time since returning to the battlefield, revealed a smile.

Emilia: “I believe that Subaru can do anything.”

Ahh, damn it, how despicable this was. A girl who he liked treating him with unflinching trust, how could he fail? Whether holding tight with hands or biting tight with teeth, he was not allowed to fail here.

Subaru slowly breathed deep, then slowly released the breath.

Then, he glanced toward Regulus, who watched them in silence. Regulus did not obstruct their conversation, just waiting leisurely with arms crossed.

Subaru: “Aren’t you a bit too relaxed?”

Regulus: “Aren’t I usually relaxed?”

Any trace of failure and the like, not even a speck remained.

Regulus had revealed all his preparations, and wanted to slaughter Subaru. In truth, Regulus’s Authority, Lion’s Heart, was perfect. Even after its mechanism had been clarified, victory was still placed somewhere nigh-unreachable.

However, precisely because he was convinced of his impending victory, he would watch Subaru’s struggles and efforts from the sidelines, without intervening, allowing others to worsen the situation.

He had no idea what was happening. And that point was true for Subaru as well.

Subaru: “…”

If Beatrice were here, there might have been another method. If that intelligent girl had been by his side, there would have certainly been a less risky way to win.

In the depths of his chest lay the connection with the girl who was his comrade. Certainly, after all this was over, he would be in for a scolding from her. Not being scolded would not do.

So now that he was alone, recalling the times when he had been alone, the memories remaining within his chest—those were certainly not ones which brought happiness, awakening only an initial landscape of terror and agony.

Emilia: “Subaru.”

Subaru: “…”

Emilia: “Do it.”

Emilia’s call became strength, for him to make the decision.

Subaru violently seized his own chest, rousing something within him that was truly difficult to consider his, concentrating his consciousness on the center of the whirlpool where this chaotic black force swirled, liberating it—

In this moment, he would call it what it truly was. In order to have the murderer who had insulted the lunatic understand what was about to happen, only this once.

This power, this power inherited from that abhorrent madman would be declared by name.

Subaru: “Come forth… Unseen Haaaand—!!”

2

—Invisible Providence. Or rather, Unseen Hand.

The force that surged through his body, defined by Subaru as the power of a Witch, had its origins in the Witch Factor. He had heard from Echidna, in her Dream Citadel, that he had gained the Witch Factor upon killing the madman Petelgeuse—what detriments it had were yet unclear. However, the power which had bestowed an invisible, magical hand to Subaru undoubtedly had its origins there.

Therefore, until now, Subaru had never sought to use the Witch Factor as his own source of power.

The nature of this power being similar to that of the madman’s, was because the Witch Factor of Sloth inherently held this nature. That was what he believed. He did not even want to consider the possibility of Petelgeuse running amok within him.

—But if that were the case, what was this feeling?

Echoing, lively, silently cheering from inside Subaru.

Cheering for being called upon. Cheering for once again being able to use its power. Cheering for being requisitioned, being able to fulfill its goal. And then, there was only an unspeakable incomprehensible joy.

Accompanying the liberation of that power, that happiness and appreciation, as well as that feeling of gratitude. These incomprehensible waves of emotion were in no way a problem that Subaru himself could solve.

Regulus: “Huh?!”

Accompanying Subaru’s loud scream, was Regulus’s own astonished cry as he looked to the sky.

He should not be able to see it. Because this was an invisible, magical hand.

This dirty trick, perfect for assassinations due to its invisibility—Regulus had showered it in insults, scorning it as insignificant and a failure. Furthermore, yes; it was nothing more than a watered-down version of that failure of a power.

Only one in number, with an incredibly short range, and too many unknown factors.

As the key to breaking through this situation, there should have been a limit to its unreliability.

Subaru: “…”

The first step of summoning the magical hand had been passed. Starting now, he would move on to the unknown second step and the final, third step. With his own consciousness, Subaru commanded the fingertips to take action, infusing his own intention into the magical hand that seemed woven by shadow.

Subaru: “Emilia!”

And once again, he confirmed whether she was ready. Looking to steel himself.

Along with that sound, Emilia closed her eyes, nodding as if she understood what would happen after this.

Emilia: “It’s fine—You’re here, Juice.”

Emilia’s eyes were filled with warmth and understanding as she spread her arms.

Repeatedly preparing for what Subaru was planning, as if having foreseen what would happen, she shortened the distance to her heart. Subaru did not hesitate as he brought the magical hand into her chest.

Subaru: “…”

The invisible hand slid towards the center of Emilia’s chest. As the fingertips passed through her white skin without resistance, Emilia’s shoulders jumped as if she had felt something.

However, the hand did not hitch. Through the sternum, passing to the space between the lungs, finally it reached the pulsating source.

—The magical hand had arrived at Emilia’s heart.

The second step had been accomplished.

When the taboo was triggered, the Witch’s magical hand would easily phase through Subaru’s body, only causing his heart to ache. This was an application of that principle. The only way forth was to gamble on the fact that the Unseen Hand and the Witch’s magical hand shared that property.

However, so far, this bet had been successful. The problem was that, after this step, there was no precedent for that power.

If it were to just seize Emilia’s heart, he could do so in an instant. But that would make no sense. This power was not to be used for that.

So, what was this power for?

—Right now, in this moment, this power would be used to save.

Subaru: “…”

Was this really possible? With his mind drifting in a sea of confusion, Subaru took a deep breath.

Unseen Hand, could it really be used as a hand with which to save others? Wielded by the madman named Petelgeuse Romanée-Conti, how many lives had been stolen by this power?

Even though an ability was all about the way it was used, oftentimes, it would have a limited scope of application. Was Unseen Hand, too, the type of power that could bring naught but destruction?

This power, it was hard to believe it had been created for the sake of keeping someone alive, no matter what—

Emilia: “Subaru.”

Hesitating and doubting in that moment, Emilia’s voice, which he should not have heard, reached him.

Emilia: “It’ll be fine—Because, I have faith in the both of you.”

Who and what was she talking about? Emilia directed her trust to Subaru, and to another person he did not know.

But with ease, he accepted and believed all of it.

—This hand absolutely, absolutely, would not hurt Emilia.

Subaru: “Come, my third hand…!”

Within his heart, the undispellable doubts about this power dissipated.

How this power had originated did not matter anymore. This power, right now, was in Subaru’s hands, and Subaru had no intent of hurting Emilia, and perhaps, something existed within the power itself.

Inside Emilia’s chest, the magical hand weaved by shadow began to close.

Fingertips touched Emilia’s heart, beating like a metronome, and Emilia gave a slight gasp at the gentle grip on the surface of her heart. Rather than pain, it was akin to a slight itch.

Inside the chest of Emilia, whose cheeks were dyed red, the magical hand closed its fingers to seize something certain.

A heartbeat different from Emilia’s own, that little Lion’s Heart—

Subaru: “Gotcha—!!”

He could not afford to pull it out. So, with his magical hand, Subaru crushed that heart, that which so shamelessly continued to beat within Emilia.

Emilia’s heart received not the slightest bit of damage, merely defeating a parasitic organ; one which was harmful, yet sang odes to love.

Subaru truly did feel a solid sensation from that third hand that did not exist. And then,

Subaru: “Bwah!”

At that time, he experienced the cost of placing unprecedented concentration on a power that was not his own.

His organs feeling a pain as if being carved, what rushed forth was a sense of despair as if he had been tainted. Subaru immediately fell, wracked by harsh coughs tinged with blood.

Emilia: “Subaru!”

Emilia reached out a hand towards Subaru, who knelt on the ground still soaked with water, blood leaking from the corners of his mouth. He took her outstretched hand and placed it on his face.

Emilia: “Ah…”

Subaru: “Still… alive, right?”

Emilia: “…Mhm, I’m fine. My heart is perfectly fine, still beating inside me.”

Subaru used the touch and the feeling of coursing blood of the hand to reassure himself of reality, and Emilia used her empty hand to confirm her heartbeat. Without a doubt, in this moment, present there was a heartbeat that seemed to celebrate what had just occurred.

And then, Regulus alone wore an expression of being unable to comprehend the two he gazed upon.

Regulus: “Huh? What, what happened? Casting aside those around yo, for something only those involved with you can understand? What is this farce? Just what happened, you…” “1”

Subaru: “…You didn’t notice?”

Regulus: “Huh? What are you talking about? Having noticed what, when not a single change has…”

Subaru: “Your feet, they’re getting wet.”

Regulus: “—?”

Subaru pointed so as to instruct Regulus, who seemed to have succumbed to his anger. Regulus looked at his feet in suspicion, only to see them growing wet. He fell momentarily silent, widening his eyes in shock.

Noticing the reality that his white outfit—his white shoes and the hem of his clothing were being soaked through by the water at his feet.

Regulus: “You people—Kah?!”

Noticing this change with a response too slow, Regulus bared his teeth and waved his arm. But a slender white leg struck out, kicking the side of Regulus’s face and sending him flying.

Completely unprepared for this direct kick, Regulus gave a wail as he was kicked towards the ground filled with water. Half his body was drenched further by the water, and a shoe print remained on the side of his face that had been kicked.

Regulus: “Hk, huu… this, this kind of…!”

As if unable to comprehend this reality in the slightest, Regulus blankly lifted his face. Looking down at him, Emilia, who had performed the beautiful kick, tilted her head slightly.

Emilia: “I did it. I finally landed a hit.”

Regulus: “You, youuuuuuuu—!”

Emilia’s short sentence being filled with a sense of accomplishment made Regulus’s face grow redder and even more agitated. Using the motion of standing to gather water, Regulus scattered droplets of water at Emilia.

However, the pain of taking the kick prevailed, and his posture collapsed, the bomb of water flying in a completely wrong direction and instead leaving him wide open.

Emilia: “Ice Brand Arts!”

Regulus: “Hk—”

Creating a large mallet of ice in her hands, Emilia then slammed it directly into the center of Regulus’s body.

Receiving a swing that caused his bones to creak, the body of the murderer rolled atop the water. With unsuppressed coughs, slamming his fist into the ground many times without pause, Regulus glared at them with reddened eyes.

Regulus: “Why! Whywhywhywhy? You people, people like you, how, what, why, to the Authority of Greed! To my rights!

Subaru: “If you looked at all that and still haven’t figured it out, it’d be useless to explain it to you. Well, it’s simple, a very simple thing.”

As he pitied Regulus as the latter screamed, Subaru endured internal cries of agony from his organs, revealing a sneer.

Revealing a smile so vicious that it would not lose to Petelgeuse’s,

Subaru: “You were played by your opponents while you ridiculed them so much.”

Regulus: “—Hk!”

Even if he did not quite understand the meaning of those words, the intent to taunt would be clearly conveyed.

Regulus screeched with a sound that could not even be called a sound, ignoring Emilia, and taking a stance to launch himself at Subaru. However, he was cut off by Emilia.

Emilia: “Earlier, I attacked you in the stead of your wives—because that doesn’t seem to have worked, I still have to do land one properly.”

Regulus: “Stop kidding around—!”

Appearing over Regulus’s head, countless icicles had been created.

Each one varied in size, but if they all fell together, they would bring instant death. Emilia’s disgust of Regulus had reached a point that even her gentle self could not stand.

Climbing to his feet with a leap, Regulus struck at the falling icicles with water. Though the icicles shattered, the finer shards still had their uses.

Ceaselessly tossing out bullets of water as if in a storm, Regulus cursed loudly as his body was bathed all over by ice and rain while running across the water.

The snow-white crystals of ice turned to fog, then froze the streets that had been doused in water. For Subaru too, the water along his knees formed a film of ice around him, scaring him into hurriedly pulling his hands out of the water.

Even with consideration for Subaru, such destruction had befallen his surroundings. Of course, Regulus, the actual target at hand, was simply no match for this. But,

Subaru: “…Completely unhurt?”

In that scene of frost, after the barrage of ice had ended, Regulus remained, standing and alive.

Knees supporting his arms, spitting out uneven breaths, even though his entire body had been soaked by water, he still avoided meeting his end by being skewered by an icicle.

Regulus: “Absolutely, absolutely, haa, haaaaaa…”

Taking deep breath after deep breath, Regulus clutched his chest.

Looking at that demeanor, Subaru understood. The invincibility from Lion’s Heart could still be used even if the heart were inside his own body. However,

Subaru: “If you stop time to become invincible, you also have to stop the heart inside you—This is absolute invincibility, but with a time limit, right?”

Regulus: “Guh…!”

It seemed he had struck true, as Regulus displayed his rage all the while enduring the pain in his chest. With a time limit now in place, sooner or later, after repeated attacks, Emilia could land an effective one.

In that case, Regulus was now an army of one that had to put his everything into offense.

Regulus: “That, that’s… don’t you feel despicable in the slightest?!”

Regulus pointed a finger at Subaru, the latter analyzing his opponent’s strength. Additionally, he then pointed toward Emilia’s direction, looking back and forth between the two of them.

Regulus: “Two people ganging up on one person in an act that’s essentially extortion, do your consciences not ache? Isn’t there something wrong with your fundamentals as human beings? Do you truly hold no doubts about yourselves? Having doubts should be only natural, shouldn’t it?!”

Subaru: “…Man, you’re really something else.”

This was in fact the same mouth that had, under the advantage of Lion’s Heart, spoken nonstop. Having now lost that effect and being put in a disadvantageous position, he dared to use that shortcoming to request justification out of his opponents.

Subaru had already completely exceeded surprise, now on the verge of even wanting to respect him. Such an existence without a shred of human dignity had perhaps never been seen from antiquity unto now, and might never be seen again from now hereafter.

Subaru: “That is to say, this is what you believe? Because two-on-one’s too despicable, you hope to be able to fight an upright one-on-one battle. Because that’s the way battles should be. Is this the case?”

Regulus: “Exactly! You just take that for granted, eh? Who do you take me… who do you think I am?! I am Regulus Corneas, the Sin Archbishop of the Witch Cult representing Greed?! This world’s most satisfied, most resolute existence…”

Regulus spoke thus in a trembling voice, as he looked down at his hands.

Subaru was now completely speechless. So, in Subaru’s stead, Emilia spoke,

Emilia: “You go back on your word immediately after you say something, and your speeches are entirely devoid of actual meaning. I think… you are the most pitiful person in the world.”

Regulus: “—Hk! Don’t mock me! I… Mocking Greed, I’ll definitely make you regret this!”

Even shallow in his rage at the contempt of others, Regulus repetitively, endlessly repeated the drone of his curses.

Looking at that helpless demeanor, Subaru could finally feel fully relieved. Regulus was genuinely unable to win in any situation where he did not have the highest advantage.

If he could use Lion’s Heart for even a brief time, he still had a chance at victory. Clearly this was the case, but upon seeing a little bit of difficulty, he would immediately give up on the proverbial game without even bothering to look at the whole board.

Subaru: “Scorning progress in life will lead you to fall down in unexpected places.”

Regulus: “Hah…?”

Subaru: “Nothing, talking to myself. More importantly, we’ll accept your proposal of one-on-one combat.”

Regulus: “—! That’s more like it. This is how it should be. Of course, a Knight would not let their liege step up first?”

Smoothly going on-board with that convenient tale, Regulus immediately attempted to attach conditions that gave him further advantage.

Between Subaru and Emilia, their level of combat needed no comparison. As long as he first killed Subaru and caused Emilia to waver, there was hope for his victory. Straining that mind of his that did not exist in the first place, that conniving result seemed to suit Regulus’s tastes perfectly.

However, if he wanted to best Subaru in terms of unrelenting perseverance, he was hundreds of thousands of years too soon.

Finding a chance to win in a situation where victory was impossible, this was Subaru’s truest way of fighting. In terms of determining victory or defeat, the match between Regulus and Subaru had already begun long ago.

Subaru: “Indeed, having a Knight battle is the righteous way.”

Regulus: “In that case—”

Subaru: “So—Now that it’s come to this again, I’ll leave the rest to you.”

His feet still submerged in a shallow puddle, Subaru spoke after exhaling deeply.

At those words, Regulus tilted his head with a “Huh?” However, Subaru’s words were meant not for him, but for “him”.

???: “Ah, I see—The one-on-one duel you have proposed, I accept it as a Knight.”

What responded to him was a flame.

In these flooded streets, there stood a young man who caused not a single ripple as he strode across the water in approach. He, contrary to Regulus and his inexplicable mystery, possessed protections bestowed by the heavens on those they loved.

Reinhard: “Of the Kingdom of Lugunica’s Royal Guards, from the lineage of Sword Saints—Reinhard van Astrea.”

Standing before Subaru and Emilia, the Knight who reported his name pointed at Regulus, his sword sheathed. That demeanor of denomination was an invitation to begin a one-on-one duel. That was something even the Bowel Hunter, Elsa, would respond to, the well-established declaration of a duel.

In contrast, Regulus stood, stretching his hands before him.

Regulus: “Wait, waitwait! This, this is, this isn’t normal?!”

The Sword Saint would not show him any trace of tolerance, as someone who defiled the sacred duel, the very definition of a warrior.

The opening blow came from below Regulus’s underarm, vertically slashing across his body—Regulus had not even the chance to cry out before being slammed far into the sky.

Regulus: “—Hk.”

Before his eyes was the demolished City of Water—he had been sent flying to the sky, to an altitude such that he had a panoramic view of the entire city.

Whether a cry or a curse, a scream incomprehensible to all who heard it echoed.

Chapter 59: Regulus Corneas

1

It can’tbecan’tbecan’tbe. What the hell is this, I don’t get it. Why do I have to go through this. Who do you take me for. I am the Sin Archbishop “Greed” Regulus Corneas. The most satisfied existence in the world! The most indisputably asserted, an existence without any wavering aspects! It’s supposed to be like that, so why do I have to go through this?! Don’t mess around, this is no joke. Each and every one of them, what’s wrong with them that they accept such nonsensical absurdities as if they are a matter of course. That man, that woman, and that knight too, just because I showed a little mercy are getting too ahead of themselves, if I had been serious from the beginning then I could have had torn them apart in bits and pieces, but aren’t they misunderstanding their own power? That you can shamelessly make misunderstandings, that are from my point of view, hilariously wrong, is why I hate getting involved with others! Obnoxious, annoying, irritating, infuriating, vexing, dirty, unsightly scum. I’ve always always been doing well, for years, decades, centuries, this way for all that time, I have been faithfully serving as a Sin Archbishop more than anyone. When I was first chosen as a sin archbishop and received this witch factor, I killed them all, the father who despite his poor earnings was plagued with bad drinking habits, the mother who prattled on endlessly complaining day and night, and the greedy brothers who used to ravenously eye the portion that rightfully belonged to me, were all killed by me, the villagers who looked at me like I’m an idiot too, the people of the town who pushed me and my house into that hopeless village too, the inept heads of the country who carelessly abandoned the village and the town to that state in the first place too, I tore them all apart into bits and pieces, and when everything was gone I finally noticed a way I could live! I don’t need anything. Everything is just annoying. I am already satisfied. It’s not like I didn’t have it, I just didn’t need it. Unlike the intrusive scum, I’ve never needed anything. Despite that, giving me something, doesn’t that mean that from outside, from your point of view, that you looked at me and thought that I was a pitiful lacking existence. Everyone who wants to impose unneeded things on me should be killed, so only those who will leave the satisfied me alone should be allowed into this world. No matter who, just talking about their selfish nonsense, those shits. Who has the right to pity me. Who has the right to pity me and drive me to despair. As if I would let them. I don't need anything and neither did I ask for anything. A father who despite his poor earnings was plagued with bad drinking habits and yet still occasionally buys gifts for me is scum better off dead. A mother who prattled on endlessly complaining day and night while saying obvious things like "apologies I've troubled you" is scum better off dead. The greedy brothers who despite ravenously eyeing the portion that rightfully belonged to me used to divide my part of their bun when my food got spilled are scum better off dead. Stop you shits, being arbitrarily kind towards me. Being kind, it must mean that you think I'm low, that you're looking down on me. Someone who looks the goddamn down on others, especially someone who looks down family, It's natural that they would be hated. It's natural that they're dead. It's not my fault. I've done nothing wrong. It's your fault, you you pitypitypity me, treat me like I'm pathetic, and leave me all alone. Have a taste of what it's like to be made to feel like the most worthless person in the world. Surrounding me should only be those who do not pity me. Those who do pity me should disappear from the world. I hear laughter. You're looking at me, aren't you. You looked at me and laughed, didn't you. What's so laughable about me. What did you see in me that made you laugh. All of them laughing and laughing. A bunch of powerless scum who are only good at running their mouths. Why does my heart have to break so much because of them. Don't stand in my way don't obstruct me don't pity me I'm not the I'm not the pitiable one, it's you helpless and ignorant but still with "Greed"! You have to crawl throughout your entire life just to satisfy your incomplete selves, you're the pitiable greed! I'm different I'm not like that I don't want anything. The desireless me is better than your incomplete selves. Don't pity me. The truth is that you're jealous of me, envious of me, you admire me and because you can't reach me you're just running your mouth off. That's right that must be right it's obviously right. Wait, wait, just wait. Just stop. Don't look at me don't say my name don't talk about me. Good or bad, just stop it, don't pay attention to me, ignore me and leave me alone. Even though a complete existence has a heart that should not be able to be trampled on how come the likes of you are so insistent on interacting with me. I cannot comprehend it in the slightest. Both you and I are different people. Even thinking of getting a return by taking risks, no matter how you think about it, could never be reasonable would always be a mistake. You're sick in the head. Calm down and think about it and you should be able to understand. All humans except me are just floating in a fever. Asking of others, that very fact that it is understandable is meaningless, useless and irresponsible should be easy to understand. It is all a fantasy of yours which you call it love love is friendship and trust what foolish idiocy reproductive activities themselves are the utmost disgusting acts. I don't understand what it means. For what are you doing this. Whether it's for being a mother or a child, although it makes a family, even if it is decorated with such words, it will be different from myself, whether that thing dies out or not, what does that have to do with me. If they continue to live when I die, I'll be over. If they are dead while I live would only mean my continuation. Love and affection only makes it so that people cannot be independent. A person is independent in the first place. Out of concern for those who operate under such delusions, to be looked down by others is foolish and so I found companionship by gathering well looking women, and in order to not be betrayed I ask for only virgins, what more do you want of me. Don't skip such a selfish act. Infringing on me to this extent, but you still ask whether you can infringe upon me even more? To think you've hit this point! To think your thoughts could be so twisted! Inflicting all this upon me, what more could you even ask of me. Just what do I have to do to not be pitied. The most pitiful person in the world, or whatever! There is no way anything said by that a lady plagued with such vulgar "Greed" who wants to to connect with one she li~kes is justified!

2

Regulus: "Ra—ah!!"

Higher, higher, along with the wind, Regulus's body flew into the night sky.

The instant that his underarm had been struck, Regulus had activated Lion's Heart and stopped his heartbeat to enter a state of invincibility. As a result, though the damage from the blow had been counteracted—

Regulus: "Ku, ku—hk"

Regulus panted, groaning as his vision blurred with pain.

Regulus's stopping of time, alongside his heart, could last for five seconds maximum. Although during this period, he could hand Lion's Heart over to a wife without issue, going any further would mean that Regulus's body would be unable to recover.

In addition, once Lion's Heart was lifted, the ever present pain of the sudden release of a stopped heart was inescapable. Anything like pain and suffering, hadn't been tasted in more than a hundred years.

Regulus: "You're, kidding…"

Painfully coughing hatred as if it were blood, the rising Regulus could no longer speak comprehensibly. His flying body was stuck in orbit, infused with who knows how much momentum, reaching a height that offered a bird's eye view of the city of Priestella.

Watergate City Priestella—there, upon seeing the Gospel's writ that the empty wife's seat could be filled, clearly only fortune had been in his heart.

Regulus: "Such a… foolish unfoldingaaaaah!"

Losing those wives which had been collected with such hard work, even his status as Greed had been shaken, insulted by a damn kid whose only talent lay in his foul mouth, pitied by a shameful woman who had only just met him.

There was no greater shame. He couldn't remember having ever tasted such humiliation. Wasn't it precisely because he didn't want to taste this loathsome feeling, that he became an archbishop. Clearly still receiving this kind of treatment, wasn't this different from what had been foretold.

Regulus: “Enough, enough, enough… hk!”

No need to think about being merciful. The show of indulgence would end here. This had nothing to do at all with Lion’s Heart being seen through by an opponent, or with that extraordinary Sword Saint.

As long as he could stop his heart for five seconds, Regulus could kill them many times over. Because he hadn’t wanted to see the expressions of despair, hear cries of death, he’d refrained thus far.

Using Lion’s Heart’s effect of creating a state of invincibility, Regulus could ignore every physical law in the world if he so wished. Reaching speeds that could outpace the wind, in that logic defying moment, with power so overwhelming the denizens of this world could not conceive, he’d turn them into corpses.

If he used the authority of Greed to take him higher into the sky, it’d be easy enough to kill them by scattering sand into the city. Although the other Sin Archbishops had also come to the city, he couldn’t care less whether they lived or died. At the moment, washing his own humiliation clean was the priority. He would have the faces of those fools who boasted of victory be painted with horror.

Once this pointless momentum came to an end, his fall back to the earth would spell those guys’ death. Before that, at best they could be excited about a superficial victory—

Regulus: “—Aaaaah?!”

Regulus who continuously recited words of hatred, screamed as an attack collided with his back.

Looking from the side would determine that Regulus’s rising momentum had come to a sudden stop, having been forcefully nailed into the air. As if something from the heavens… had stepped on him to pin him in place.

Reinhard: “If this were a normal duel, I’d withdraw my blade once my opponent lost their will to fight.”

The owner of the voice was perched on Regulus's back in midair, leisurely saying so.

As to what the existence who stepped on his back in midair was, Regulus understood instantly. Shuddering as he came to this realization. He grasped just how high where he was right now.

Arriving faster than the Regulus he had struck, just how had he managed to reach such heights.

Reinhard: "Though I have no intention of boasting, I have quite the confidence in my jumping ability. I had once even leapt from the ground, to land on the back of a flying dragon."

Regulus: "Damned, monster…!"

Reinhard: "Indeed. I am a monster who hunts monsters. —For you too, the time to accept fate has come."

Reinhard's feet left his back.

As soon as the sound of his voice fell, Regulus felt a fighting spirit. In the course of his life, although he had repeatedly faced strong opponents, Regulus had learned nothing whatsoever.

Even the him who was like this, had greeted those powerful opponents who had come forth to confront him with a yawn, and his conscious memory was limited. Relying on this memory, Regulus tried to react.

—Lion's Heart was activated, in the same instant that an attack came.

Regulus: "Aaaaah!!!"

Toward the center of Regulus's back, Reinhard swung his hand like a blade.

Regulus received an attack even more piercing than an actual blade would deal, but he took the impact with his invincibility, and slammed downward in one motion.

Accelerating toward the ground, Regulus slammed straight into the slate. However, the effect of the Lion's Heart persisted, and his body continued to dig into the earth as if being swallowed.

Regulus's body penetrated the paving in a line, crossing a rigid sheet of rock to drill through the earth. While helplessly continuing to drill into the ground, Regulus suddenly noticed.

If this momentum were left untouched, his body would plummet to the lowest level of the earth. He'd never considered whether or not there was a lowest level before. But, the land of this world was not endless. Surrounded as it was by the Great Cascade, at the end of this would be where those falls flowed to.

If he kept falling like so, was that where he would wind up?

Regulus: "Something like this, how could I endure… guu?!"

Literally, the limitless horror had made Regulus hold his breath, reaching the limit of his heart.

Five seconds had passed. Sirens began to blare, as Regulus found himself confused over his judgment. Stopping his heart within his own body for more than five seconds wasn't feasible. The number of seconds that he could hold it at maximum, was perhaps less than ten. And even if he could extend it, that was just more distance he dug.

But here, what would happen if he dispelled his ability while drilling into the ground?

—There was no time to debate. Heart stopping or brain dying or whatever, stupidity should have a limit.

Regulus: "Uuuuuuuu—!"

Gritting his teeth in preparation for the shock that was about to meet him, Regulus strengthened his resolve.

Hearing the sound of his heart which demanded to resume its beat, Regulus lifted the effect of Lion's Heart, let go of his invincibility, and the laws of physics were restored—

Regulus: “Bu, ue—!”

His entire body, all his bones, shattered.

Regulus’s body was attacked mercilessly upon impact.

That was a matter of course. Regulus’s body had hit the ground with a much higher velocity than free falling, and the momentum continued drilled into the earth without loss. The reason his body hadn’t shattered in every which way, was that there was no space for it to scatter underground.

However, although it could not spread horizontally, vertically was a different story.

Regulus: “Aa, ue…”

With a hollow voice, tears of blood flowed from Regulus’s ruined eyes. The impact penetrated through Regulus’s body, rendering it completely destroyed.

Saying he’d received damage greater than a shattered body would be no exaggeration, even the organs within his stomach had been twisted together. Originally impeccable white hair was covered with blood and mud, and his incontinent lower abdomen had lost its function and freely released waste.

Existing here, was a slab of meat which had lost human form.

And what was most surprising was, that this slab of meat still clung to life.

Regulus: “Aa, au…”

Peerless persistence in clinging to life—or rather, this transcended persistence into a grudge.

This was not merely some attachment to clinging to life. Remaining was solely, a grudge against those above who remained alive. Still struggling in such a condition, was this empty vanity.

If I were to, get serious, you fuckers—merely this.

Regulus: “Au, uu.”

Yet, this fixation should not be sullied.

Having exhausted a lifetime in pursuit of being that would not be pitied, an evil whose root was unharmed after experiencing more than a century’s worth of attacks and beatings, making the most suitable judgements for his own survival.

Wretchedly, repeatedly using Lion’s Heart in short bursts, Regulus dug at the earth. If he entered a state of invincibility, his injuries became insignificant. In the absence of pain, he could exercise even his injured body without harm. With his empty hands, Regulus dug ceaselessly at the soil.

His body had been buried upside-down, and he adjusted it by digging in a circle. Once his head faced upward, he needed only to slowly work his way aboveground. And perhaps once he made it he would see those self-satisfied maggots, smugly celebrating Regulus’s fall.

Unforgivable. Could never be forgiven.

To be mocked, to be scorned, to be pitied, was a pain without parallel. That such injuries were impermissible in life went without saying, and even in death could not be tolerated. Aah, right. Directly acting was all that was needed. Whether those who saw him and those who didn’t, if he cleanly did away with them all no one would bully him anymore. If only he’d done so at the very beginning. This time he would certainly not make the same mistake. Returning to the surface, killing all three of them, that would be the end of this.

Regulus: “…”

No longer capable of making sound, Regulus turned his hatred into strength and continued to dig at the ground.

When he made it aboveground, he’d be sure to savor the sight of those guys pleading for their lives. Especially the woman who had continually scorned him, he would be sure to mock her in equal measure. The 79th wife, was the role she'd been meant to fill. Speaking of which, the woman who was originally supposed to fill this vacancy was that elf woman living in that forest, where the hateful Petelgeuse had been as well—

—

—

—

Aaaaaaah. Ah, ah, ah, ah. Ah, ah, ah, ah, ah.

He remembered. Now, he remembered.

That woman! Indeed, it was that woman. No, she had been a child then!

The little brat who'd been crying and yelling nonstop, when he'd gone to retrieve No. 79! The little brat from then, had grown into the woman of today!

He now understood, the reason for which he'd felt inclined to fill the vacancy with her the instant he'd laid eyes on her. A simple matter. Serving as a substitute for her mother, it would only be natural that the daughter takes up this position.

That was the little brat of No. 79 who scorned me, and that fool Petelgeuse. Why hadn't I realized earlier. No, thank goodness I'd realized it now.

If he'd killed them without having noticed, he wouldn't be able to derive proper joy from it. Precisely because he had now clearly realized their sins, would there be value in killing them. Would he feel the accomplishment of avenging his humiliation. Would he experience that long-lost feeling, of the significance of fulfilling a desire.

Watch me tarnish her, No. 79 Watch me snatch her, Petelgeuse.

The one you all cherished, who dared to pity me, that girl.

Regulus: “Aah, hehe.”

An impulse surging from deep within his throat, Regulus grew giddy with excitement.

With a mouth missing teeth and cracked lips, he smiled. A hope of survival emerged. Feeling joy, at the idea of brutalizing those who dared to insult him.

Climbing up, climbing up, climbing up, and then—

Regulus: “—?”

The upward striving Regulus, suddenly felt his fingertips come into contact with something. He withdrew the right hand with fingers no longer in comprehensible positions, and with a blinded eye tried to catch a glimpse. His bloodied and muddied form was faintly wetted by something other than blood.

He tried taking a lick at it. Although tinged with the bitter taste of mud, it seemed to be water.

Water. It was water. After understanding that it was water, Regulus immediately felt a thirst parch his throat. One drop was not enough. He wanted to soothe his throat, to fill his stomach. Lion’s Heart’s effect had been interrupted, and Regulus’s body having returned to the cycle of time, finally had the opportunity to ingest again after a century.

For now, water was fine. It tasted sublime. As he thought so, as if in accordance with his wishes, the water gurgled as it poured down from overhead.

He sipped this slightly muddied water. Even if all his teeth had fallen out, his tongue had been shredded, his blood spurted forth without cessation, this water tasted amazing. So satisfying. That feeling existed here.

—The flow of water pouring in suddenly grew, and Regulus’s body once again fell to the bottom.

Regulus: “Aa, uu, waaah?”

Flowing down. Flowing in. In this earth with nowhere to run, the water gradually rushed in.

This was the underground, without any extraneous space. In a blink of an eye, Regulus's body sank into the water where he lost his freedom of movement.

—Perhaps until this moment, Regulus still had not understood what was happening.

This water came from overhead in Priestella, where all the canals gathered.

Due to Reinhard's attack, Regulus had smashed through the street and into the ground. Between the underground tunnel that he had made with his body, and the path he had dug himself, the four currents of the canal had been blocked. It now rushed to Regulus without pause, submerging the murderer entirely.

As if expressing the fury over the destruction of the streetscape, from the city and its inhabitants.

Regulus: "Kuu, fwah."

Needless to say, Regulus who was busy drowning at the moment naturally did not notice.

Trapped by the soil, Regulus panicked from the pressure of the water that poured directly into his lungs, and began to struggle with desperation. However, he had no room with which to struggle within the earth. All he could do was curl up through the sludge himself and protect himself with Lion's Heart.

When Lion's Heart was active, he would be able to breathe freely. The same held true for the pain of his ruined flesh.

However, Lion's Heart could last for only five seconds. Once he felt his heart reaching its limit, fear of death would cause Regulus release the effect and once again be dragged back to hell.

His cause of death alternated.

No matter which, he could choose neither side. No matter which, neither side could not be eliminated. However, Regulus had no choice but to endure. All he could do was resent this unreasonable situation.

The time limit had disappeared.

Even if he could use Lion's Heart repeatedly, that wasn't the case for breathing. And to reuse Lion's Heart, he would need to wait several seconds.

Heart failure.

Drowning.

Heart failure.

Drowning.

Heart failure—

Drowning—

As if continuing without end, pain and suffering without end or pause.

Regulus opened his mouth, and water and mud are poured together into open mouth. With this repeated violation of his lungs and internal organs, Regulus cried out. With a voice that could not make sound, he continued to cry out.

No response. Around him, there was no one.

Even so, he continued to cry out. From his cries, spilled a hatred that hoped for all of mankind to die off.

After he died, mocking laughter would be begged leave of.

For that girl, rejoicing over the vengeance of her mother and Petelgeuse would also be begged leave of.

The mere thought of that girl's delight over Regulus's death, growing radiant with excitement, was vomit inducing.

A life's goal, a motivation to keep living, its consummation would certainly bring joy.

Her existence being moved by Regulus's death, giving off radiance, to say this significance was unknown would not be incorrect.

Because this was wrong, completely unexpected, unreasonable joy, the notion of satisfying that girl was unbearable.

His death, would greatly impact to the girl's heart—

3

Regulus Corneas shattered through the stone street, and was buried in the dirt.

Toward the grave dug by the murderer's body, water from the Watergate City gushed voluminously. How deep the murderer had sunk was unknown. However, considering the limits of his authority, crashing through to other side of the world—such a thing was impossible.

In all likelihood, the effect had been exhausted somewhere underground, and like that he had been crushed by the momentum. Even if he hadn't been crushed somehow, the water that poured in would never allow the murderer to escape.

The murderer who indulged in his powerful authority, had finally drowned as a tribute to the city he had destroyed.

Subaru: "…Emilia-tan, you look sorrowful."

Emilia watched the cave where Regulus sunk motionlessly. Seeing a trace of mourning on her face, Subaru spoke in response.

For that murderer, there should have been not a single hint of sympathy. Emilia was supposed to share that feeling, and not feeling badly about his underground demise should have been right —

Subaru: “Although Emilia-tan’s kindness is wonderful, I don’t think it should be wasted on him. A completely hopeless guy, really does exist.”

Emilia: “…Thank you for worrying about me. But, that’s not it. It’s not like that.”

Subaru: “Nn?”

Toward the concerned Subaru, Emilia slowly shook her head from side to side.

Then she fell silent for a long while, while casting low the eyes from which hung long lashes—

Emilia: “Regulus, seemed… When I first saw him, I felt like I’d met him somewhere before.”

Subaru: “So this wasn’t your first meeting? In that case, when?”

Emilia: “That, I can’t remember.”

Faced with Subaru’s question, tilted her head in doubt.

Miraculously, this coincided with the exact moment the buried Regulus screamed.

With a voice that could not reach, the murderer screamed for Emilia to not cheer for his death.

Her mother’s death and her benefactor’s madness, he’d been closely entwined in both. Toward a young girl this was perhaps a turning point that she could never forget, he did not want for her to find satisfaction upon his death.

Such was the murderer’s dying wish, which had no way of reaching the surface.

Emilia: “—Regulus, just where did you meet me?”

Regulus Corneas, had left no impression on Emilia.

In this ironic manner, it was precisely achieved.

Chapter 60:
One Ending, One Battle

1

The sight of a white light.

Warm, soft, a light which reassured one's heart.

To greet the morning with such a serene mood had been too long absent.

Always waking in despair, in never-ending everydays that were as nightmares, there had never been a trace of peace.

Gradually coming to firmly believe that for always and always, this darkness would never usher in the morning sun.

Precisely because of this, was perhaps why this this ray was so refreshing.

???: "—Hey, wake up."

Hearing someone's voice.

Beyond the white light, someone was calling for her. Guided by that voice like so, led by the hand like so, departing from this darkness.

That white light glimpsed in the distance, finally engulfed her vision completely.

Emilia: "Good morning. No matter how much of a sleepyhead you are, it's about time to wake up, you know."

Opening her eyes and gazing over, a shy silver-haired maiden laughed as she spoke such words.

—Those words made Sylphy's cheeks, become stained with tears.

2

Cerulean light flooded the sky, as the enchantment of ice lifted.

The ice that had engulfed the half-demolished church gradually turned to light, and the scattering mana was circled by the micro-spirits and disappeared.

The sight of one unfathomable fantasy being overtaken by another unfathomable fantasy, engraved an agonizing wound in the hearts of the viewers.

Although it wouldn't be strange to be moved to tears by such a sight, the reason why they cried and wailed, was certainly something greater than that.

From what overtook their lives, a nightmare which had bound the most brilliant and sparkling time of their lives—from that, they had been freed.

Subaru: "Speaking of which, Emilia-tan is pretty amazing."

Thoughtlessly loosening his lips, Subaru murmured absentmindedly.

In front of his eyes were Emilia, and the bride clinging onto her in tears—the former brides, in a healthy shape.

The number of women in dresses were precisely fifty, with not a single error in counting.

Subaru: "… When I informed her that his heart and the brides were integrating, I thought there wouldn't be a way to save the brides without having them die."

Taking away the lives of the brides, rendering Lion's Heart without a place to be in. Subaru had partly, seriously given up on there being another way to stop that abhorrent man. He had been prepared for victims.

However, unlike Subaru, Emilia had not given up.

It is true that in the fierce and life risking skirmish against Regulus, his thinking had come to a standstill. However, Emilia did not stop thinking.

With the cards she held, and considering what all would be possible for her, she had made her move.

Which is why,

Subaru: “This time, Emilia-tan completely carried us across, huh.”

Emilia: “It’s, not like that.”

Letting out an exhausted sigh, next to the wall, Subaru remarked on his own vanquish. Hearing his relieved exhale, Emilia came back to him. Her white dress was torn, and her silver hair, which overcame the struggle for life and death, was disheveled.

Even still, now after the fight had ended, Emilia looked beautiful.

Inhaling with that in his mind, Subaru jerked his chin.

Subaru: “Those people too, faces full of expressions of dissatisfaction that fail to sufficiently express their gratitude toward Emilia.”

Emilia: “Don’t use me to kid around. And I, am unable to explain some grand ideology to them. Even if only for a brief while… the choice of dying was forced upon them.”

Subaru: “But there isn’t anyone who died. Everyone’s still alive. — This point is more important than anything else.”

This result, was more perfect than anything else.

Having found the answer he was seeking, Subaru felt relieved. Emilia placed her hands on her hips, and raised her voice as she spoke to the Subaru who was still regarding himself too lowly and thus putting himself down.

Emilia: “Wounded all over, forcing yourself even so… if Subaru hadn’t worked so hard, everyone wouldn’t have made it so far. Lion’s Heart too, was all thanks to Subaru noticing it.”

Subaru: “Lacking a trump card is the usual thing… That said, all along it’s felt off. But, thank goodness it had been noticed. Freezing the wives, to place them into a death trance.”

Emilia: “I too, was frozen for a bit too long.”

Hehe, Emilia stuck her tongue out with that kind of feeling. Adorable.

Although, for some reason, this didn’t seem like content to be discussed while laughing.

Which was to say, Emilia’s actions and keenness to strike down Regulus, had yielded the greatest effectiveness without unnecessary sacrifice.

Fifty-three lives, of those precious wives’ had been saved.

Emilia: “Though as for whether or not I could do it, I was a bit lacking in confidence.”

Subaru: “But it was done even still. Emilia-tan, worked hard in order to improve your own skill and strength.”

Emilia: “But, that possibility that they would stay frozen like this also existed. To free everyone perfectly like this is what finally allows me to relax.”

And then as if to hide her shy smile, she touched her chest.

Underneath the palm of that hand, was seemingly to confirm that there remained only her pulse and heartbeat.

Emilia: “In addition, if Subaru hadn’t removed Regulus’s heart from my chest, I would have needed to use the same magic on myself. In that case, whether for Sylphy and the others or for myself, I think it’d be waaay worse than melting like this. Because then it could have taken another hundred years.”

Subaru: “That again—isn’t that exaggeration no matter how you look at it?”

Emilia: “…”

Subaru: “So this isn’t exaggeration?! Or worse, isn’t this completely unparalleled extremism!”

Watching the silent bitterly smiling Emilia, Subaru felt a sharp shock.

Due to Regulus’s provocation, Emilia had wanted to stop Lion’s Heart’s effect on her. If an eye hadn’t been kept on her, if the situation hadn’t been dealt with right then perhaps Emilia would have been parted from this life. Of course, notions of searching everywhere for a way to melt the ice in order to avoid this still existed.

Subaru: “Something like two sleeping beauties, my pestilent demon truly isn’t ordinary, please give me your forgiveness.”

Although complaining, Subaru’s heart had settled down.

In any case, Emilia had been rescued safe and sound, and the wives had been freed without harm. Although the battle against Regulus had yielded a scale of destruction beyond what one opponent seemed capable of—in summary, their side had sustained more or less no loss.

Even so, Subaru’s flesh carried all kinds of burdens, as well as an unnecessary fate shared with the Witch Cult.

And in addition—

Emilia: “Reinhard, leaving without even treating his wounds, I wonder if he’ll be okay.”

To Subaru who had been lost in thought, Emilia suddenly spoke thus.

Subaru raised his head, gave a wave with his hand.

Subaru: “It’ll be fine, since that guy, even if he leaves his wounds as is micro-spirits’ll come along and treat them. He himself said so.”

Emilia: “Ah, makes sense. Originally there had been quite the number of micro-spirits here, but as soon as Reinhard left, everyone went too… Reinhard, perhaps has the aptitude to potentially be a spirits arts user.”

Subaru: “My niche would be completely killed so that can’t be!”

And as for Reinhard’s circumstances, even without anything like that, he was strong enough. Although the one who had tossed Regulus to be dealt with by Reinhard was Subaru himself, Reinhard’s manner of battle in that final indistinguishable duel, to describe coldly in one phrase.

Could a human, leap with such ease above the clouds. Even if they couldn’t all be classified as human, they were all knights to a candidate of the king’s election.

Subaru: “Emilia-tan, weak though I may be, please don’t cast me away.”

Emilia: “—? I am, especially dependent on Subaru?”

Subaru: “Is that right! That’s right! From now to the future I’ll also work my hardest!”

Emilia: “Apologies, your sudden rush forward of hard work is a bit confusing…”

In any case, best to stop comparing this to that. To do so, would be the same as Regulus who couldn’t act with the peace of mind without using others as a point of reference.

Though he’d always been thought of as a man without qualities to be admired, but unexpectedly treating him as a frame of negative reference worked out just fine.

Emilia: “…Everyone else, are they getting along fine?”

Subaru: “It’s for that reason that Reinhard was brought along. In all honesty, because everyone else is stronger than me.”

To entrust to one another, or rather for one to rely on the other, the awkward expression known as Faith would be the most suiting.

Despite differing factions, who would one day meet in conflict in the struggle for the throne, Subaru still believed in them. Even with the variance of personalities, abilities, and beliefs.

At least, he'd believe that he wouldn't lose to those despicable, hopeless guys of the Witch Cult.

"…"

Moreover, if anyone failed, if the lives of anyone who mattered—was to say that Subaru needed to consider using, Return by Death. The contract with Roswaal, even if it hadn't existed, as long as there remained any slight chance of salvation, they would certainly be saved.

Pain and suffering were worthy of his hatred indeed.

But tragedies were surely, even more worthy of his disgust.

Emilia: "Subaru."

Subaru: "…"

Unknowing of what the Subaru who was considering death saw, Emilia bent down from beside the sitting Subaru.

Her body rested against his left shoulder, as she gently stroked his lowered head. How itchy. But, it was hard to part with.

Subaru: "Emilia-tan?"

Emilia: "Right now, I share the same sentiments as Subaru. Although I'm worried about everyone, my own strength is spent. Even reaching out a hand is impossible. So me too, allow me to pray with Subaru? In hope, that everyone will be safe and sound."

Subaru: "…"

Emilia: "Certainly there won't be any problems. Because everyone compared to us, is suuuper strong, suuuper smart, suuuper hard workers."

In order to reassure Subaru, carefully considering her choice of words was Emilia. Her use of phrasing sounded especially of her, and Subaru too was able to relax.

Faith. To have faith in everyone. And Reinhard who had already set off.

Immediately upon defeating Regulus, Reinhard had left to help their compatriots. A battlefield with him present would not be any cause for concern.

Without losing even a single person, welcoming the coming morning. In that case, capturing Subaru's worry, was only one remaining issue—

"…"

Alongside Subaru who looked toward the sky as if in prayer, Emilia as well looked through the ceiling of the demolished church to regard the night sky. As if to prevent Emilia from seeing, Subaru tightly grasped his chest.

—Alongside the moment of Regulus's death, it had felt as if something formless and black, had slid into his own chest, pulsating.

This must be, the same thing that had happened with Petelgeuse then.

So he would in order keep Emilia from noticing, merely keep quiet.

Pray to the heavens, come to an epiphany, merely keep quiet.

3

—Turn back time to just a little before Regulus had been defeated.

When Subaru and the others had left for the control towers, and Otto who had seen them off before leaving in order to recover the Book of Wisdom, even transpiring about a quarter of an hour after.

That was when Otto and Felt had encountered Gluttony and had begun to fight, was when Garfiel and Kurgan had just landed in the canal, was when Wilhelm had unveiled Theresia's cloak, was when Julius had frowned upon hearing discourse of hatred that he couldn't remember, was when the church where a bride had been on her way to being forced into marriage in a farce of a wedding had been half destroyed, was when the canals to the city's north had suddenly ignited at once—was the instant when City Hall with only non-combatants left inside were attacked.

???: "Kyaha! Time for this lovely lady's debut~!"

On the topmost floor of City Hall that stood five stories tall, a tremendous force shattered walls without any room for resistance.

The tremendous vibration shattered the architecture's windows, and combined with the damage to the building's foundations that had happened during the day caused lethal damage. Priestella's City Hall, a building which had once been the city's center had in the space of a mere single day turned to the verge of ruin, becoming unsightly to behold.

However, whether or not the curtain would close on only the verge of ruin, was dependent on what would happen here—would be decided based on those results.

???: "Four towers corresponding to four gates. No matter which opens the city would indeed be flooded… to not gamble on the possibility of retaking all the towers wouldn't do. Even if you rotten meats were unwilling you'd still need to disperse your forces, so using your total forces wouldn't do either."

Long-windedly, a voice which was an assault to the ears described the immediate circumstances of the city.

And then, echoing were voices opposite to this.

"Everyone! Be certain to survive, to protect this city!"

"Using our strength, let's take back this beautiful street!"

"We who stand with justice couldn't possibly lose!"

“Good is paid with good, and evil is paid with evil. This battle, will be the victory we await—!”

The stern voice of a young man.

The brave voice of a young woman.

A cry of a stern voice from a male soldier which had tangibly seen war, a cry of rational naivete from a young woman cheering everyone on.

In any case, only the innocence of these unrelenting and unashamed wills and proved these unyielding lines of discourse—only, the mouth which discussed this was only a single one.

???: “Why~ is it, this unwillingness to just think the slightest bit~?”

Then from the same mouth which spoke these effective words, as if betraying all the preceding remarks, insulting and taunting, a voice so rooted in malice to speak as if without even conscious malicious intent of smearing them away spoke thus.

And then the owner of the voice, hugged her own petite frame as if seeing something disgusting and began to shake back and forth at the shoulders.

???: “Kyahahahaha! Stopstopsto~p, please don’t do this! Why~ does this lovely lady have no choice but to greet thi~s justice that exudes the same stench~ as soil and sweat? Yo~u rotten meats, are you all gathered together so that your brains can boil beau~tifully?

Raising her voice high, producing a laugh piercing as a clamor.

Without capability of hiding, without intent of hiding malice was this sultry voice, and the source of this voice was a young girl who had yet to blossom into maturity.

Wide round eyes and delicate thin lips, blond hair riding to shoulders and faintly reddened cheeks, as if taking the form of the concept of cuteness, that face appeared inconsistent with the young girl’s luster and fierceness. Clad in pieces of cloth which were practically just lingerie, forget being a woman, for a young maiden whose human body's characteristics had yet to develop this outfit was far too exposed. Any normal human who saw this would hold a twisting sense of aversion.

The terrifying young girl—or rather, the monster's purpose lay here.

Witch Cult Sin Archbishop representing Lust, Capella Emerada Lugunica, a monster whose purpose was to ridicule morals and dignity of humanity as exceedingly as possible was present.

Capella: "That you would delusionally believe this lovely lady would be following decorum, and obediently wait in the tower is practically incomprehensible! Kind to the point of allowing you~ to pass these days, is already charity! What is called battle is about not allowing the opponent to do as they like, and then to do~ precisely what they don't want you to. This kind of principle is understood even by flowers in a greenhouse~, you trash trash trash trash meats."

In the midst of these coarse words of unbearable ridicule, was the monster that was only cute in appearance that was Capella.

Using fingers to poke at cheeks while twisting her body was this monster, who resumed human form immediately upon successfully infiltrating City Hall and entered a nearby room—meeting Capella there was a cat-eared knight who had been immersed in her abusive words earlier. And the long-haired woman lying on the platform behind him.

Here was the uppermost floor of the hall, the room that the pair of Ferris and Crusch occupied.

Felix: "You are, the Sin Archbishop of Lust…!"

Ferris cried out with a voice trembling with rage as he protected the bed while glaring at Capella. Capella tilted her head at the Ferris who glared at her, then looked toward the bed behind him and nodded with an expression of acceptance.

Capella: "Ah~ okayokay, your hatred is understandable. She di~d in fact lose to the blood. From the start it shouldn't have worked. E~ven though that was believed, actually seeing this failure is disappointing indeed. The most noble Lugunica blood~ mislead me to have just the slightest bit of expectation."

Felix: "For what purpose would you force something like this on Crusch-sama?! What has to be done to save Crusch-sama! Answer me!"

Toward Capella who sighed with something more like listlessness than disappointment, Ferris's cute face was dyed red in anger as he screamed. Wielded in his two hands was the soldier's short sword he'd been carrying until now.

That sword was engraved with ornate decorations and the emblem of a lion, more akin to a first-class ornament of favor than a weapon of combat. Aligning with Ferris's own immature skills, it lacked the ability to make effective attacks.

Capella: "Is that a toy? An important gift? No matter which, using your frail arms to wave something like thi~s is pretty da~ngerous, little girl… no, hmm?"

Capella who had stuck out her tongue to jeer, cut her words off midway with a sudden frown.

Capella: "Uwah, disgusting. Eh? You~ have a pretty unnatural body. Clearly a man but that body… Something that should have been removed wasn't so how~ did you become like that. From a glance it's fundamentally different from a simple change by dressing in women's' clothing, hasn't this lovely lady ruined your mood now?"

Felix: "—hk"

Not only did she see through Ferris's gender, Capella showed disgust at the unnaturalness. The monster carefully examined Ferris from top to bottom, looking as if it were unintentional.

Capella: "That manner of dress, is it to seduce other men? In any case, all it's worth is bringing understanding of the pointlessness~ of humans. Men are all fools, women are all sluts, and humankind altogether is utter trash… is what this lovely lady concluded from her preferences.”

Felix: “How noisy! Stop with the useless… answer my question already! What exactly did you do to Crusch-sama!!”

Capella: “Ah~ truly, how truly annoying.”

Toward Capella who hadn’t yet established dialogue, Ferris was unable to bear the insult and once again let out a roar of rage. Capella who heard this relaxed her shoulders, and after a moment the visage of the young girl dissolved away.

Felix: “—?!”

Before the Felix who took a stunned inhale, the young girl’s body began to dissolve and reform.

Short stature elongating as if in a nightmare, bright golden hair beginning to change in color. The tempting sweet face who would provoke in anyone a desire to protect it upon being seen became stern, and the lingerie-like clothing transformed into a blue dress.

Although having heard of it, this process of variation and change was still the first time it had appeared before Ferris. The body which was released conformed not in the slightest to others’ opinions, freely being changed as the architect of this nightmare liked.

And then faced with this scene as if a nightmare, Ferris was frozen with shock.

Felix: “Aa, uu…”

Capella: “—What’s there to be so surprised about?”

Saying so, caressing long green hair was the face that Ferris cherished most.

The figure of Capella who stood before him motionlessly, had become the very appearance of Ferris’s most beloved master. This made Ferris's face turn stark white, and even the hand holding the short sword had begun to tremble slightly.

Capella: "Look here, the ferocity from earlier has completely vanished. This face, this body, this voice, before your very eyes has become like this now."

The face of Crusch that he had never seen before laughed, and slowly Capella strode forward.

She reached Ferris's side, stopping when she reached a distance where she could touch him if she stretched out a hand. As if thinking of something, pointed the short sword Ferris was holding to her own chest.

The tip of the sword rested right at the center of Crusch's large chest.

Leaning just slightly forward would have it pierce through, was the position it was in.

Capella: "Your despised enemy is right before you. Avenge me. It hurts, it hurts. Even breathing brings me anguish. Eyes unopening. Flowing through my chest isn't blood. Flowing through my entire body is something that feels like poison. So hurry, avenge me. — She's saying so, like this you know~."

Felix: "Huu, huu, huu…!"

Capella: "Plunge the blade in with one breath, stir the wound around as you will and yank it out in one breath as well. Then the heart will be destroyed, the pulse will stop, the blood spurt forth constantly. You can kill her."

Ferris's breaths began to grow too rapid, gaze began to wander.

More prized than gold, the life of his master's enemy was being offered right before his very eyes. Just as she said, like this an attack could truly be effective. Could destroy her heart. Could kill her.

However, precisely because she wore that too familiar face.

Capella: “Stab down, stab down, stab down, stab down, stab down, stab down.”

Felix: “…”

Capella: “Stab down—!”

Felix: “Uu, aaaa!!”

Commanded as if by malediction, Ferris’s sword short stabbed toward that chest.

The blade pierced that body with ease, reaching between bones to destroy the heart within. With a twist of the keen blade, came the ruthless sound of muscle being severed, and finally along with blood that spurted forth the short sword was yanked out.

Ferris: “Ha, hah.”

Felix trying to avoid being stained by the gushing blood, with uneven breaths backed away. The short sword slipped from his hands to the ground, the floor wetted by the dripping blood.

Capella: “Hah, kah.”

And then, Capella who had been stabbed in the chest knelt on the ground, spitting vast quantities of blood from her mouth.

In appearance she still wore Crusch’s mien, a pained face stained with blood, amber eyes filled with disbelief fixing on Ferris.

Capella: “Hurts, it hurts… Why, why do something like…”

Felix: “It was you, who made me stab down…! Made me, injure Crusch-sama!”

Capella: “So uncomfortable, so very uncomfortable… Too much, unforgivable. Though clearly speaking of things like liking you, loving you… clearly loving each other…”

Felix: “—! Don’t say such ridiculous things! I don’t share that kind of relationship with Crusch-sama!”

Capella: “Ah, is that so? In that case, the interpretation of the script itself was off~”

With a frank expression, Capella used a sleeve to wipe the blood from her face while standing.

She casually brushed the wound on her chest, and the freshly made wound disappeared in an instant. The twisted expression of agony from before disappeared as well, leaving only a sigh.

Capella: “Indeed, playing around is meaningless if it doesn’t start from the ve~ry beginning, it’s something like that. Master and vassal who love each other, forcing one to kill the lovely lady who looks just like the other. And then to unfold the tale of the shaping of a love, was what had been planned on originally… a failure, failure indeed.”

Felix: “Putting on such a farce… just what do you intend. What do you want from us!”

Capella: “Nothing much? There i~sn’t much intent behind it, nor i~s there anything to really ask of you. Watching a husband kill his wife is something to kill time. Asking an adjutant knight to wear women’s clothing, something caused by a preference like that, just think of it that way.”

Felix: “My promise with Crusch-sama, isn’t anything superficial like that!”

Capella: “Putting proclivity and sexuality on the surface like that, this lovely lady finds that a rather frivolous performance you know~.”

Regarding the Ferris who couldn’t help but cry out, Capella tilted her head as she said so. Then Capella raised her right hand, and her external form once again changed drastically.

Her palm becoming like a flower’s giant petal, the tentacles that stretched forth sent Ferri’s body flying, before entangling him as they lifted him up, then tightened their grip as they slammed him against a wall.

Felix: “Kah, huu…”

Capella: “Whether seeing or feeling it’s the same, wha~t a body both so slim and so fragile. If you wa~nt to become a woman so badly, how about this lovely lady lends you a hand? In this lovely lady’s hands it’d only be child’s play. How about being given help for removing it and forming your holes in minutes?”

Felix: “My, body is irrelevant… More importantly, that Crusch-sama is…!”

Capella: “How ridiculous. Something like valuing another over yourself, how about you sto~p audaciously saying sweet nothings. And speaking of which you’re asking about how to recover a body infected by Dragon’s Blood to its original state? Hah, if such a method exists it should rather be said that this lovely lady wo~uld be more eager to know.”

The tentacle continued writhe forcefully, causing Ferris’s delicate extremities to begin bleeding. Widening his eyes in agony, the sound of twisting broken bones echoed throughout the room.

In comparison to the right hand which had taken the form of a carnivorous flower, the raised left hand took the shape of the scythe of a mantis. Maintaining Crusch’s mien, she had become a repulsive monster whose left hand was an insect’s and right hand was a flower’s.

Even so, that face bore no trace of change, all the more horrid for remaining adorned in beauty.

Capella: “Directly turning you into mincemeat would also be also pretty entertaining, and this lovely lady do~esn’t have much time to spare anyway. Before any unrelated others can appear, it wo~uldn’t do to not take care o~f you and your master.”

Felix: “—uu, kuu”

Capella: “That said, you really are some guy foolish beyond limit. Without expecting this lovely lady to show up here, even a strategy for counterattack i~s sluggish. Just what point will it come to before…”

Having said this, Capella’s once delighted face was now tinged with a touch of a frown. As if holding doubts toward what she had just said, she dragged the still gasping Ferris before her.

Capella: “No matter what isn’t this a bit too slow? Even given that this lovely lady infiltrated from above, it’s taking too long for any others to arrive on this upper floor.”

Felix: “…a”

Capella: “You have to be planning something, hurrying up and revealing everything is for your own good you know. O~therwise, your most treasured Master-sama, will undergo an even uglier transformation…”

Capella’s scythe extending from her left wrist reached toward Crusch who lay on the bed, and Ferris faced in incomparably cruel choice. Serving as a response to this question, was Ferris’s shaking voice that he squeezed out,

Felix: “—You,”

Capella: “Ah~? Which way of begging for mercy will you…”

Felix: “You, utterly… useless creature.”

Capella: “Hah?”

Yellow pupils bearing disgust glared at Capella, a sentence uttered as if spat.

Immediately afterward, the tentacles that bound Ferris began to spout smoke, and the petals discolored and rotted away. Regarding her own right arm that had been corroded away, Capella revealed an expression of surprise.

Capella: “A~rara? Just what happened to this lovely lady’s hand…”

???: “Well, just think of it like scummy personalities ain’t unique to yer side.”

The tentacles rotted away, and Ferris’s body was freed.

Another sound overrode that of Capella who turned her head at this. That was a cute voice with a unique cadence. Capella looked in the direction of the bed that had issued the sound—at this very moment, light flooded the entire room.

A white ray which practically created the effect of instantaneously spiking temperature. This energetic beam burned away at Capella’s face, destroying the entire left half of her face.

Accompanying the carbonizing half of her face was the stench of scorched flesh, and Capella retreated a several steps. Then reaching out a serpentine tongue to caress the surface of that wound, smiled.

Capella: “Standing against the face of an ally without even a trace of leniency hu~h… well, not li~ke this had much of an effect. The presence of someone here is well expected, so n~ot a huge surprise to wind up like this.”

???: “Something like ‘n ally is a misunderstandin’. We’re commercial competitors… nah, it’s more like competitive opponents. Moreover not like we’re livin’ such easy lives that we’d hesitate to attack upon seein’ the face ‘f an opponent like that.”

Capella: “A conditional ally will sooner or later become an enemy. In that case, was especially aiming at the face some deliberate~ preemptive scheme? If truly so, your personality might be a little too twisted too.”

???: “Ah’ve already said, there wasn’t any such confusion of private n’ public affairs. Aimin’ at the head was purely to see, ‘f destroyin’ it would prove fatal, hopin’ so for a moment ‘s all.”

Saying so, the person who clambering from the bed gave the sigh of betrayed expectations.

In place of Crusch, lying on the bed had been Anastasia.

She touched her own wavy hair colored with green dye, responding with a slight smile to Capella who had survived with even half her face burnt off.

Anastasia: “Though Ah’d clearly hoped for it, seems no death happened.”

Capella: “Even~ though you might be different from the type of woman who only smiles upon seeing mo~ney. But something like unhesitatingly scorching half the face of a woman, a personality surpassing a reasonable amount of self-interest, truly a female meat that this lovely lady would take an interest in!”

Anastasia: “Being taken interest in by a person like you, even us here would feel a bit of resistance. Y’ see, us here’s somethin’ beloved is with long fur that feels silky to the touch.”

With formality, Anastasia responded frankly to the monster Capella’s words. With a small cough she approached Ferris who was near the bed, taking his wrist and helping him up.

Watching the teary-eyed Ferris, Anastasia with “isn’t this enough” as a precursor,

Anastasia: “No information’s been gathered at all. At the very least, let’s set Crusch’s affair aside for now.”

Felix: “…I understand. You’ve accompanied me far already, in such a risky gamble.”

Anastasia: “For this situation, us here’s holds a rather large share of the responsibility, so let’s just call it that.”

Even the ability of Ferris who was the leading healer in the kingdom, could do nothing to heal the current Crusch.

To save her, there was no other way aside from finding the reasoning and a solution from the one who had done this to her.

As for what Ferris had prosed, Anastasia could not refuse.

Welcoming each candidate to the city of Priestella had been Anastasia. And then things had hit this point. Due to holding a share of responsibility for the matter, Anastasia was unable to refute Ferris’s plea.

Anastasia: “It’s something like this, call this completely fruitless and yet it still managed to betray expectations.”

Capella: “To be burdened by expectation like so, my deepest apologies~ but these feelings are truly, completely absent. But, there shouldn’t have been any guarantee that I’d show up at all?”

Anastasia: “Wasn’t there an announcement from Natsuki-kun? Seems that, you would have acted upon hearin’ it.”

Sending the main combative force away, leaving the base camp undefended would surely prompt activity from the enemy. In the first place the Witch Cult had no obligation to greet then with integrity. Truly this was just as Capella’s earlier speech had said.

Anastasia: “Natsuki-kun there, grew naive at a critical moment.”

Although in no way was there a possibility of a guarantee, strictly speaking to consider from the nature of the Witch Cult, showing up to attack could only be one of either Wrath or Lust.

So Anastasia had laid a trap, and allowed City Hall to be attacked. The real Crusch had of course, fled to a nearby shelter with the other injured.

There would of course be no one who would step into this uppermost floor. People still remaining in this building, aside from those on the this topmost floor—

Capella: “…Hm~ph, he~h. People whose minds move a little too quickly, are just the slightest bit irritating to others. But then, aren’t you underestimating this lovely lady? That cat-ears over there, this little lady over here, nei~ther looks like someone who can hold their own in battle.”

Anastasia: “Bein’ called a little lady is really rather embarassin’. Though we here look like this, seems that I’m technically still a grown adult.”

At Capella’s remarks, Anastasia closed one eye in response.

Capella: “It’s been decided. That cute face of yours lovely face, is all that'll be when everything below your neck becomes a locust. After turning in to that do try again, to ba~ttle against me using that rude mouth of yours~."

Anastasia: "How rather horrid… in that case, best to bid farewell for now."

Capella: "…"

Anastasia's refusal, surprised Capella who had been the threatening party.

Anastasia tugged on her still green hair, glanced about the room.

Anastasia: "We here should have mentioned already, we've been awaiting you all along—in that case, we couldn't have been waiting without making any preparations."

As soon as the sound of her voice fell, Anastasia rapped gently against the floor with her fingers.

Two ringing sounds, as if some kind of signal—immediately afterward, cracks appeared in the floor by Capella's feet, and the broken body of the young girl plummeted downward.

Capella: "Oh, myyy."

The bottom of the floor falling away, and appearing in the floor she had plummeted to was a similar opening.

In this manner Capella continued to fall floor by floor, falling the height of four stories in one breath, landing directly into an underground chamber beneath the first floor.

Splat, with such a sound, Capella's body exploded.

Defenselessly slamming into the ground, the body of the young girl was completely flattened on the cold surface.

Blood gushed forth from her face, and her limbs were folded over and broken with a miserable appearance. But, the body that become a piece of flesh immediately began sluggishly move in hands and feet, and young girl's body stood in the form of an aqueous amorphous state.

Appearing there was, the figure of a seductive woman.

Clad in extremely revealing clothing, displaying her ample flesh without a trace of shame, the rare sight of black hair was done into a three-stranded braid. Exuding a somewhat dangerous aura, and a beauty that caused restlessness in its wake.

Whether Ferris or Anastasia, both should have no idea who this appearance belonged to. In any case, the two that remained on the fourth floor, shouldn't be able to see her transformation.

And so, there should have been no one who would react with surprise upon seeing this figure.

Capella: "Aah, aah, reallyreally… i~sn't this just going to make me so very delighted so very excited. Kyahahahaha!"

With the manner of an agonized death and a manner that couldn't feel agony, Capella let go her voice. That was a light and delicate sound incongruent with her mutated appearance, echoing throughout the entire underground chamber of City Hall.

In shadows, in air both cold and humid. This was not merely the landscape of a basement, it was part of the numerous waterways distributed throughout the city—part of the management facilities used to maintain these waterways.

From somewhere came the sound of rushing water, and from somewhere else overhead a breeze blew by.

Capella: "Receiving such a warm welcome and whatnot, allowing me to freely change the size of my chest is exciting i~sn't it. To return and embrace them tight, to have them rectify their upbringing from within this lovely lady's arms, to have them never love anything aside from this lovely lady…"

???: "Can't return."

Capella: "…"

Cheeks dyed crimson, Capella who was exhilarated to the point of trembling, was barred by someone unknown.

Sounding out was a deep voice, a man's voice muffled and sulking.

As she heard this voice Capella raised her head, and from the shadows underground emerged a person's figure.

The expression of Capella who saw him suddenly twisted. The absentminded expression that had been her face until now, immediately contorted to one of loathing, as she glared at her opponent.

Capella: "By this lovely lady's aesthetic values, the most intolerable are the ones who try to hide their ugliness are~n't they?"

???: "I see. Rest easy. By my aesthetic values, your feelings can't be tolerated either."

Responding to Capella with an apathetic manner, heaving a sigh as if something were weighing him down.

And then,

???: "Shouldn't you have heard from above? Your actions have been seen through by that wicked one on our side. Which is to say… in terms of wickedness, how could you hope to triumph against our princess?"

As he spoke, the heaviness that sat in his voice was still present.

The sword attached behind his side was drawn from its sheath, and sluggish light reflected onto it from the empty space above his head.

Standing there was a man with one arm. Was a shadow clad in a black helmet. Was a singularly dressed strange man.

The stranger facing Capella, pointed over with the single arm holding the Blue Dragon Sword.

Al: "Though I've only just greeted you, I'm in a terrible mood today.

—Before I die, hurry up and leave the hell away from here. Mollusk.”

Bonus Short Stories

Otto Suwen's Internal Affairs Struggle: Line 3

1

"Bweh?!"

Suddenly, Otto woke up to the feeling of his face being bathed in cold water.

The abrupt incident made him spring up and hurriedly check the state of his surroundings. To lower his posture and ascertain the position of the hostile presence would be the first crucial step to take.

From Otto's point of view, him being used to camping, failing to notice the imminence of the adversary before they could cause any harm would result in nothing but a formidable mistake.

If this was a witchbeast, his life was at risk; if this was a thief, his life was at risk; and if this was a pursuer from his hometown, his life was very at risk. In any case, his life was at risk.

Placed in that campsite combined with a life crisis, thinking about how, in the first place, he had never been given that many chances to let his guard down, Otto consciously braced himself for the crisis—

"…Mr. Otto, you're incredibly messy."

"Huh? Petra?"

Looking at Otto lying on the green grass was a young girl with deadpan eyes, Petra.

She worked at the Roswaal estate as a novice maid—though it could be said that, now that nearly a year since she started working had elapsed, both her experience and work habits made that title no longer appropriate for her.

Anyhow, while in that situation where she looked down towards him, Otto tilted his head greatly. Because in her hand was a bucket, leaving enough circumstantial evidence to determine that within her lied the cause of the impact that he had been showered with upon awakening.

“Uuuh… Petra, why have you poured water onto me? Did I do anything to make you angry, perhaps?”

“Who knows? It’s just that, when I came to see the flowers for the morning watering, I found you curled up in the garden and I was scared, it’s definitely not revenge or anything of the sort.”

“…Thank you very much for the polite explanation.”

“No, no,” Petra bowed politely; and, while watching her, Otto scratched his head as he fixed his wet hair. Then, he looked at the grass that seemed to have become his bed.

That green grass, although it was quite awkward to call it a campsite, Otto understood that he would not have woken up there until he had received Petra’s counterattack.

—Because, in a mansion full of unworried people, there was no way to keep one’s wariness going.

2

“I’ve heard it from Petra, Otto-nii, ya were sleepin’ in the garden, weren’t ya? Doin’ that ain’t gonna make ya less tired, and also, ya can catch a cold, y’know?”

When Otto had already returned to his room after getting that early morning act over with, Garfiel came to him. Listening to what Garfiel said with his sharp fangs clicking, Otto put his hand on his forehead,

“Things spread pretty quickly, I see… This is about what happened a while ago, right?”

“Petra was just grumblin’ about when she went ta water tha flowers. Damn tho, had I been a little quicker, I could’ve seen Otto-nii all covered in grass."

"You do not need to worry about those things, really…"

While organizing what was on top of his desk, Otto tiredly shook his head before the smile of the boy he saw as a brother.

Even though Garfiel and Petra had promptly exchanged information, it was still unexpected that the two got along well.

Garfiel was fifteen years old and Petra was thirteen, making them the closest in age within the youngsters of the Roswaal estate; and, recently, it had become it was frequent to witness Garfiel being fed by Petra, who was earnestly devoted to her progress in the kitchen. Since Petra especially adored Frederica, maybe she had good affinity with Garfiel due to him being her younger brother, or maybe she had good affinity with the blood of the lineage those siblings had.

"Well, Petra can get along flawlessly with anybody, so I do not think it matters."

"So, why were ya even sleepin' on top of tha grass, Otto-nii? Didn't ya say ya were goin' to take a bath and then sleep after playin' Shatranj with me?"

"And I did intend to do so, but I was caught by Ms. Ram's group when I finished bathing…"

The night before, since he had unusually finished all his work for the day, Otto felt pretty eager to jump into his bed after taking a bath. However, that was where he had been trapped by Ram and Frederica, received an invitation for an evening drink, and therefore gladly jumped at it without a second thought.

"I did not intend to have enough to get drunk, but you know…"

"Ah, that alcohol thin'. Even y'are all disastrous with that, Otto-nii. I don't get what's so enjoyable about drinkin' that stuff, but it seems like both Ram and Sis like it."

Placing his buttocks on the desk Otto was organizing, Garfiel empathetically shrugged his shoulders.

The drinkers in the Roswaal estate were Otto and Roswaal, plus Ram and Frederica.

Due to Emilia being horribly weak to alcohol, it was forbidden for her; and on the subject of Beatrice, putting aside her actual age, Subaru disliked it, so he did not let her drink it. The aforementioned Subaru, too, used “because I’m a minor” as his reason to refuse drinking, hence Otto found drinking partners valuable.

Being that the case, the combination of the feeling of liberation from having finished his work plus the chance to have the drinking partners he had missed for a long time arose, and as a result, Otto had ended up spending the night with the garden’s grass as his bed.

“Fortunately, I did not catch a cold, so there are no obstacles for my work. That is a relief.”

“I get tha feelin’ that’s not what ya should be worried about, but if y’are fine with that, Otto-nii, then it’s alright, I guess. ‘Now is when Hemuken rejoices,’ like they say.”

“What does the name of a millionaire famous for perishing after taking a wicked woman as his bride have to do with this…?”

Even then, since having the reason explained to him in detail would probably have been depressing, Otto did not inquire any further.

“Well, even Hemuken could be happy precisely because he did not know the details, and this is where I should follow his example… Oh.”

Piling up documents and matching their corners, Otto suddenly looked at the scene outside the window, and his gaze softened. When he saw Otto like that, “‘Sup?” Garfiel also watched outside next to him.

And then, he noticed the figures of three people doing an odd dance in the mansion’s garden below his eyes.

"Ah, tha Captain and Lady Emilia, plus Beatrice. They seem to be havin' so much fun every mornin'."

"Actually, radio calisthenics is becoming a custom, as you can see. It is something splendid, in the sense that it does not break one's daily habits. …Though it is not like I have any idea of how his plan to spread that through the whole domain even works."

From the dimensions of health and lifestyle, radio calisthenics spreading was a good thing, but Otto had a few reservations about the approach of announcing it as a public commitment for the Royal Election.

Leaving Subaru's banter aside, Emilia had zero bad intentions and a lot of goodwill, so getting her to make a change of plans through persuasion would prove greatly difficult. That was not actually a bad thing, though.

"Now that I remember, the Captain said we should help 'im announce that doin' calisthenics every day transforms ya int'a beauty."

"Isn't that just outright lying? Lady Emilia is more than one hundred years old, surely she was already a beauty a century ago. I sure hope he is not going to try something as unpersuasive as saying she has been doing radio calisthenics for one hundred years, since that would be pretty problematic if promptly spread…"

Wishing to be spared extra misgivings, Otto breathed out a sigh. And, after hearing that, Garfiel indiscreetly averted his gaze.

When he saw the reaction of the boy who was like his brother, Otto experienced a dreadful presentiment, and turned around to where his gaze was averted. His gaze turned away. It turned back. It turned away. It turned back—

"It can't be, has he already advanced with that rumor?"

"Nah, maybe he's just spreadin' it from time ta time, maybe even I helped 'im, or maybe it's already close ta bein' the vogue at Costuul…"

“H-How troublesome. First of all, becoming a beauty with radio calisthenics is a very… Huh?!”

Surprised at the unexpected hidden mechanism he had just uncovered, Otto remembered the latest incidence, and his shoulders rose. Now that he remembered, days ago, while in the Industrial City ‘Costuul,’ which was close to the mansion, he had been told by the citizens that had already become pretty familiar with his face.

“They told me: ‘Mr. Otto’s such a beauty, you see,’ and I thought it was some characteristic expression from Costuul, but… Is it really because of that?!”

“Aaah, that could be it… Uh, Otto-nii? Where ya goin’?”

Unwilling to let this happen, Otto scratched his head as he readied to exit the room; and when Garfiel made a question to his back, “I think it is obvious,” Otto turned back,

“I shall go and silence the foolish gossip Mr. Natsuki has perpetrated, right now! What would we do if the propagation of those strange rumors had a negative influence on the Royal Election as a result?! Besides, I am afraid the passing ladies might look at me and get weird expectations about radio calisthenics!”

“I feel like that last one is yer actual motive, tho… Wait! Don’t ya dare go without me!”

Otto walked lumberingly as his ponderous step sounded; and, while hurriedly following behind the man that was like his brother, Garfiel clicked his sharp fangs,

“Ever since the Goddess Statue incident, Otto-nii gets all sensitive when treated like a beauty, huh?”

And so he muttered.

3

“And for that reason, Subaru and Emilia both went to the city in order to clear up the misunderstanding, I suppose. Since Betty is a lady capable of showing consideration, I sensibly chose to let them go on their own."

It was a time period when breakfast was over and fire time had begun—there was Otto scanning the material, which he treated as a matter to be scanned anew, that had been brought into his room at some point, and before him was a cute young girl, well-behavedly sitting with her small chest thrown out. It was Beatrice.

Although she was Subaru's contracted spirit and always Subaru-bound, there were also rare occasions when, for reasons of consideration like she herself said, she separated from Subaru's side.

The one Beatrice was together with the most during those moments was Petra, who adored her, but there were also times, like this one, when she came to Otto.

Her main reason was—

"You're busy and therefore have no time to bother with Betty, which helps to make it easier to complain, I suppose."

"So you just couldn't wait one more second for me to come into the room for this?!"

"Don't be so noisy. This is the truth at which Betty, who has seen various types of humans for four hundred years, has arrived through her aesthetic sense, I suppose. An innate talent lies within you. An entertainment one."

"Entertainment?!"

Even though it was not a gratifying truth at all, he would take Beatrice's words with a grain of salt. Very recently, Beatrice was receiving a pretty strong influence from Subaru, to the point that her conduct was greatly close to Subaru's.

He used to think that, as long as nobody was harmed, it was something heartwarming; however, after noticing that, in essence, this could mean that Subaru was multiplying by one and a half, he could no longer think of it as heartwarming.

It was necessary for Beatrice to fulfill her duty as the one in charge of restraining Subaru whenever Otto was absent.

“In that sense, you have helped me by showing the actual contamination level received from Mr. Natsuki, thus allowing me to easily grasp the cause of my headaches. ‘…Helped?’”

“Soliloquies are a good opportunity to reflect on yourself, I suppose. And in your case, it would be more constructive to stop solely paying attention to others and to start thinking a bit more about your own happiness, in fact.”

“S-Such earnest advice… It doesn’t seem to be the same person that, just a while ago, was telling me that it’s easier to complain if talking to me.”

Thinking about how this was, probably, a sign that she worried about him, Otto awkwardly scratched his head.

The report of Otto sleeping in the garden had become known in the blink of an eye, and every person he had met since morning had, one after the other, shown concern for his condition. Petra, being the one who had poured water onto him, had served him, by own initiative, a refill of his post-meal tea; and Frederica, too, seemed fairly remorseful about the events of the previous night.

Early in the morning, the fact that Garfiel had prioritized Otto, over the radio calisthenics he would usually join, must have been because he was worried about him; and the documents he was given as the Internal Affairs Minister in his room, which were probably left there by Ram, were fewer than usual. That was a relative matter, though. When Otto wondered how much of Roswaal’s consideration had been included there, the crease between his eyebrows changed its depth.

Therefore, if even Beatrice bothered to come to his room—

“An incomprehensible consideration, isn’t that what this is?”

“…I don’t really understand what you’re saying, I suppose. However, I do know that if it was a comprehensible consideration, it would surely turn into a mess even you wouldn’t escape from, I suppose.”

“—? What does that…?”

And, at the same time Otto tilted his head, the room’s door opened with a boisterous sound.

“Otto, are you here? Everyone at the city was surprised to hear you were sleeping in the garden this morning!”

The one who forcefully flew into the room was Emilia, who was supposed to be heading to Costuul along with Subaru. Since, supposedly, she had gone to correct the misinformation regarding radio calisthenics, he was surprised to see her come back this quickly,

“Why did you tell them I spent the night in the garden?! Isn’t that making more rumors?!”

“Frederica just happened to be talking to the store gentleman that brings everything to the mansion… But the important thing here is, if you were that tired you could’ve simply told us!”

“Who has their priorities backwards enough to go with the purpose of correcting a rumor, and then return after hearing another rumor…?”

Seeing Emilia pout at the fact that he had hidden his weariness from her, Otto pondered what excuse to tell.

However, before the answer to Otto’s concern could come out, the one who arrived after Emilia fell into the room.

“Y-You’re so fast, Emilia-tan, you’re an awfully fast runner.”

“Ah, Subaru, sorry, I didn’t mean to leave you behind. But I couldn’t contain myself…”

Looking at Subaru heavily breathe after catching up, Emilia gently caressed his back. While his respiration calmed down, “Haaa,” Subaru took a deep breath, “Emilia-tan, it’s an amazing thing that you’re attentive, but Otto sleeping in the garden isn’t anything worthy of surprise. That’s like his preference, right?”

“It is not a preference or anything of the like! Well, I must apologize for causing you to worry…”

“You don’t really need to apologize, I’d just like you to tell us that you’re not fine when you’re not fine. You know, since we’re all always relying on you when something happens, Otto…”

Despondently, Emilia raised her eyebrows out of concern for Otto’s overwork. At Emilia’s side, Subaru and Beatrice looked like they had just reflected on something.

Seeing their laudable aspect, Otto felt a very light tickling in the pit of his stomach.

“Certainly, it is true that all my days are busy with one thing or another. However, that is something I decided to do… because I know that there will eventually be time for me to relax.”

And that would be, for example, a day like this one, when he would wake up in the garden and receive consideration from everyone.

Even if only a little bit, a day when nobody brought favors for him felt healthy, yet at the same time unsatisfactory, but that was the work of his own troublesome nature.

“So, Otto, are you alright?”

“Yes, I am thankful for your concern. Now, I would not like to inconvenience you any further, but…”

Cutting his words off there, Otto glanced at the material on top of his desk—the mountain of papers that was very subtly lower than usual, and after that, he calculated the time necessary for the process and smiled.

“Since it seems that I can make room for tea time, would you mind if I join you?”

It never hurt to occasionally take some time, not for favors or for work discussions, but for nothing more than a friendly chat.

And that was how the Internal Affairs Minister of the Emilia Camp, Otto Suwen spent his busy daily life—his half-holiday that had suddenly emerged from only one of those days, the day he had woken up in the garden.

Petra’s Emilia Camp Struggle:
Page 4
(Edited Machine Translation)

1

Griffith: “By the way, that phrase "I really hate you more than anything" is a really hearty expression.”

As soon as he sat in the dining hall, "Dairy King" Griffith Allen stroked his substantial stomach and said this with complete happiness.

Their current location is Viscount Talion Aluz’s mansion, which is also the venue for the meeting between the leaders of the Western Border.

…This is an important meeting that concerns the Royal Selection and will greatly influence the future of the Emilia camp.

All the people present here are famous and powerful, and getting their cooperation is an indispensable condition for the Emilia camp to be able to compete in the Royal Selection.

So what kind of debating talents will be displayed by Margrave Roswaal L Mathers during this meeting? This is something that has attracted much attention, but…

Petra: “I made you laugh…”

Gwen: “It’s not embarrassing, right? You did a great job in front of all the Oji-sans. Talion-chan thinks so too, right?”

Aluz: “Why even ask for my approval… However, this young maid really did not commit any particular faux pas. I admire her for being so dignified and calm in such a situation despite her young age…”

Gwen: “Petra-chan, Talion-chan already has a young wife, you should tread carefully.”

Aluz: “Gwen-dono!”

Viscount Aluz yelled with a bright red face, and Gwen Merret flashed a mischievous smile with one eye closed. The argument between the two caused Petra to ease the corners of her lips and her cheeks to start burning a bright shade of red.

Petra, who participated in this meeting as Roswaal’s attendant, her mission was no longer limited to the duties of being an attendant, but also shouldering a great responsibility.

The reason why the half-elf Emilia was recommended as a candidate for the Royal Selection.The explanation expected to clear the supporters’ blind prejudice was completely entrusted to Petra.

Being forcibly entrusted with such a large and heavy task, Petra was completely surprised by it.

The purpose of this is to allow Petra, who has no reason to favor Roswaal, to speak regarding Emilia’s character in order to produce effective persuasiveness. This is not difficult to comprehend. But what she doesn’t understand is why he held back on such an important thing and did not tell her in advance?

Petra: “Obviously, had I screwed up, the Master wouldn’t have anywhere to go…”

Roswaal, who has a truly rotten personality, never imposes tasks onto those he believes can’t complete them. In the end, everything he made her do was well within Petra’s capability and it frustrated her.

Therefore, even though Petra managed to claim victory over that sudden and critical battle, her anger will not waiver.

Therefore, Griffith’s words at the beginning were an insult that Petra directed towards Roswaal in front of the dignitaries as she was suddenly pushed onto the stage.

In addition, the shame that Petra felt was fully vented and removed by Frederica on Roswaal, so she felt very happy.

But no matter what…

Aluz: “It’s almost time for the banquet, so let’s stop talking first.”

Petra: “Ah, then I have to help out as well…”

Hearing the words of Viscount Aluz, Petra hurriedly left the dining halland went to meet Frederica, who was preparing for the banquet.

And just after Petra left…

Reynolds: “…Even that child’s struggle is a strategy to seek recognition from us, right?”

???: “…”

Reynolds: “Originally, I didn’t have any grounds to refuse the Margrave’s invitation. However, if power was used to incur obedience, there would be a possibility of creating a grudge. So, this is a necessary step…what’s wrong?”

Sitting at one end of the conference table, the solemn man expressed his opinions. The mayor of the industrial city Costuul, Reynolds Rex frowned at the gaze focused on him.

Seeing Reynolds’s reaction, Gwen rubbed his chin’s beard.

Gwen: “Ah no. It’s just been a long time since I’ve last heard Reynolds’s voice, and I was thinking about what he would say during such a rare occasion. I didn’t expect it to be this.”

Reynolds: “Hey, being introverted is just a matter of character. So, why did you say that?”

Keeping his poker face, Reynolds asked Gwen back. When he heard his question, Gwen shrugged, and Viscount Aluz and Griffith also sighed separately.

Then Gwen looked at the door that Petra had just walked out of.

Gwen: “Everyone knows that it was just an act. Forget Roswaal-chan, even Petra-chan who made those remarks herself knows it well.”

2

In the past, Petra had always considered herself a smart girl. Once upon a time, she even felt that she was the center of the world, but this illusion was on the verge of annihilation due to the occurrence of a certain event.

Having said that, Petra did not feel that she was worthless because of this, but instead, still believed that she was better than the average person.

It’s just that with such a firm belief, she’s not allowed to make any mistakes. Therefore, she will not start doubting herself now.

…Her own persuasion strongly touched the hearts of those adults and prompted them to change their minds.

Things are probably all developed in accordance with the plot set by the script. Even if some sudden changes were made, the results will not change. And so, a solid script like this was complete.

Petra’s struggle is nothing but an illusion that cannot get rid of the framework of the script. It is precisely because she knew this point that Roswaal was able to scheme with peace of mind.

Petra: “…Sure enough, I still hate the Master.”

???: “--Saying that out loud in front of your maaaster, you really aaare quite something”

Petra’s words made the corners of Roswaal’s lips rise.

After all the dignitaries went to the banquet, Roswaal stayed in the meeting room because he still had something to discuss with his relative Annerose. On the way to the banquet after the end of their conversation, the two ran into Petra in the corridor.

Annerose: “Eiya, isn’t this Petra? That was truly a wonderful speech just now that was not inferior to my uncle's provocation tactics. It seems that you have been watching Emily well."

Petra: "Annerose-sama…"

Saying that, Annerose poked her head out from behind Roswaal.

In Petra's view, although Annerose is only ten years old, she has a temperament and style not befitting of her age. She is an aristocrat who is more like a nobleman compared to the unserious Roswaal.

Although young, she deserves respect. So Petra bowed her head respectfully.

Petra: "Thank you, Annerose-sama. But…"

Annerose: "…No matter what the outcome was, the dignity of your behavior will not be belittled in the slightest. Lift your head, Petra. I allow you to do this."

Annerose: "I shall speak in my uncle's place."

Annerose said as she pinched Roswaal's armpit. Seeing this, Roswaal, who was regarded as an enemy by the two girls, couldn't help but laugh bitterly.

Roswaal: "Aaalthough I already knew it in my heart, I really aam being regarded as a total viiillain"

Annerose: "Of course. Uncle's only achievements today are allowing Petra to talk about Emily's charm and hiring the best chef, Dias."

Petra: "Ah, is it Dias Lepunzo Elemanso Oplane Fatsbalm VI?"

Annerose: "Does Petra know of her too?"

Petra: "That's because I saw her in the courtyard just now…"

Suddenly, the little girl who spoke exaggeratedly appeared in Petra's mind. Although her name is that convoluted, because her impression was so deep, she can just barely remember it.

Now that she thinks about it, she did seem to be the chef who had been invited to prepare dinner.

Petra: “Is she famous?”

Annerose: “She’s not just famous! She is the legendary chef who can stop wars with her cooking, and even make the “Divine Dragon” forget about its scales being touched because of its supreme deliciousness!”

If everything the passionate Annerose said was true, then she is not so much a great chef, but rather a mage. No, she has to correct that evaluation. Because the representative of the greatest mage is the most detestable person in the world for Petra.

Roswaal: “Actually, I have summoned her to the mansion befooore. Since it can make Annerose happy, then it was not a waste ooof effort to search for her back. You can enjoooy it.”

Petra: “…?”

Stroking Annerose’s little head, Roswaal’s voice sounded gentle. This is Roswaal’s way of pampering Annerose, and his attitude towards her has always been this way.

Petra sees it as something similar to his bias for Beatrice.

However, the awkwardness that Petra felt for a moment was not due to Roswaal’s twisted love…

Petra: “Why, does the Master speak as if such a matter is irrelevant to you?”

Suddenly, what catches Petra’s attention is Roswaal’s attitude towards it, as if that matter doesn’t relate to him.

At Annerose’s side, whose eyes were like dazzling stars with a delicious premonition, Roswaal said with an outsider’s expression and voice.

Roswaal: “Hmm? It’s very siiimple. …After all, I have no sense of taste. It is only natural that I can’t enjoy the taste of cooking.”

Petra: “…Eh?”

This is no longer a speech that can be described by the word "unexpected" alone.

For Petra, this is truly a literal shock that shook her world.

…No sense of taste, what does that mean? In other words, the Master can’t taste?

Petra: “Since, since when…”

Roswaal: “I’ve been like this a loooong time, before you were even booorn. This is something you don’t need to worry about. After all, you haven’t noticed this matter until nooow, right?”

Petra: “…”

Petra was speechless. He wore a straight face while spitting out absurd words.

Because not being able to taste means not being able to feel the happiness of taste. The taste of Frederica’s cooking, Ram’s steamed sweet potatoes, the taste of wine drunk at night, Garfiel’s meatloaf, Subaru’s mayonnaise, and all the other tastes of the world, he never felt it.

Roswaal: “This is something that ooonly Annerose and Clind know. Even Ram and Frederica were not tooold about it. You are now the only one who knows about it in the entire maansion.”

Petra: “What..! Why… would you tell me…about this…”

Roswaal: “Even if it’s just one, you want to know at least ooone of my weaknesses, right?”

Looking at Roswaal, who closed a single eye and looked at her with his yellow eye, Petra bit her lip. In an instant, Petra’s mind was overwhelmed.

The anger, towards Roswaal, that had been vented by Frederica was now filled in another form.

Petra: “Why, Master…!”

Why say that. Roswaal, why did you have to say it like that?!

Petra will not forgive Roswaal. Absolutely not. What is he saying to Petra like this? It’s really irritating.

Making a fool out of her by telling her a secret that neither Ram nor Frederica knew about?

…Treating people as if they were monkeys.

Annerose: “Petra, ignore my uncle’s wickedness…”

Petra: “…No, Annerose-sama, I have already decided.”

Seeing the change in Petra’s expression, Annerose touched her arm worriedly. Petra then gently joined her palms and placed them on Annerose’s hands, then shook her head.

Her course of action is already decided.. …Petra Leyte, is by no means a girl who will cry herself to sleep.

3

…At the beginning of the banquet, Petra couldn’t help being stunned by the richness of the dishes served on the table.

The table is full of dazzling arrays of delicious food. From the selection of ingredients to the cooking method of the food, it can be described as a gluttonous paradise that uses all kinds of high-quality ingredients to create a fusion of ancient and modern, motherland and foreign countries cuisine.

Dias: “This dish is the ultimate display of Moi talent, use all of your five senses to enjoy it.”

The one who was speaking pridefully was the loli chef, Dias. The table filled with dishes displayed a style that matched her and the fat assistant beside her’s overflowing self-confidence.

Even if this ultimate feast is called the supreme work, there is no exaggeration in the slightest. In fact, those influential people who must have been tired of so-called delicacies can hardly conceal their feelings of admiration in front of Dias's cooking.

Dias: "How's the taste of Moi's supreme dishes, little girl?!"

That's right, the person who Dias asked briefly about her taste is Petra, one of the guests at the banquet.

It can be said that this is the reward for breaking through Roswaal's unreasonable means, Gwen's request to Viscount Aluz, and Dias proposed the conditions for allowing Petra to participate in the banquet.

Petra gratefully accepted these kindnesses. …Also for Petra's own rebellion.

Petra: "…Mmm!"

With just one bite, the moment Dias's cooking was placed on the tip of her tongue, Petra's whole body was madly ravaged by its violent taste. Her small body trembled with ecstasy, her cheeks were flushed with wonderful pleasure, and her pupils were wet.

She had miscalculated how shocking Dias's dishes would be. It is precisely because Petra's cooking skills have improved by leaps and bounds during this year that she can deeply understand their vast difference in skill.

This is the pinnacle of deliciousness that no ordinary humans can reach. After accepting this bitterly, Petra smiled.

Petra: "Yes, it's very delicious. The sweet fragrance spreads inside my mouth, there is a delicious aftertaste left on my tongue and teeth, and the taste is absolutely wonderful. Because the taste is much lighter than it looks, it feels like you would never tire of eating it."

Dias: "Hohohoho, yes, yes. You understand little girl! You are a master in the art of flattery."

Hearing her thoughts, Dias leaned back with joy and danced. Petra watched her reaction while peeping at Roswaal's face.

Roswaal: "…"

Listening to Petra's eloquent words regarding the cuisine's cooking and deliciousness, Roswaal showed a thoughtful expression. …And Petra burned this image into her memory, feeling secretly delighted.

This is the taste of happiness that Roswaal has always ignored and hidden.

When making dishes, the cook will take into account the feelings of the diners. If the dish is the taste of happiness, isn't the cook the person who creates happiness? Roswaal has always ignored this point.

She did not listen to his explanation. Petra just accepted it. So, this is the revenge from Petra. An attack that conveys unknown joy to Roswaal, who has no sense of taste.

Tell him about the details of the taste as much as possible. And she must do her utmost best to describe the deliciousness of the food so that the listener is mouth-watering, to the extent that his stomach is groaning before he knows it.

Dias: "What's the matter, Margrave? Did you forget how to eat? Wasn't it you who called Moi over?"

Roswaal: "Ah, ahhhh, that's riiight Of course, I am also very much looking forward to iiit."

As he said, Roswaal looked dazed and picked up his dinner plate. Was the moment of hesitation sent to his lips the result of Petra's revenge?

That is…

Roswaal: "…Ahhh, it must be really deeelicious."

Roswaal squinted his eyes at Petra's posture as she was enduring the delicious impact and trying her hardest to describe its taste. That's what Petra interpreted from his current expression.

And in addition, even Frederica, after hearing Petra's praise of Dias's dishes, Frederica could not help but comment…

Frederica: "Petra really is skilled at flattery."

After that, Frederica began to demand feedback about the taste of her cooking no matter what kind of dish she made.

END

Joshua Juukulius's Third Careful Encyclopedia

1

The view outside the window always looked like an illusion that he could not reach. House Juukulius was of ancient origin and had produced knights for the Dragon Kingdom of Lugunica for generations.

Through various events that happened in the Kingdom of Lugunica's history, the members of House Juukulius accompanied and solemnly supported it as knights.

It was not a role like that of the Sword Saint and Sword Demon, who lived in the spotlight for their extraordinary achievements at turning points in the history of the kingdom. However, just like a king was nothing without his vassals, there were always nameless ordinary knights hiding in the shadow of heroic achievements.

House Juukulius was also no more than a family that produced that sort of ordinary knight. They were the backbone of the kingdom, as people who swore their loyalty to it.

I have never doubted the way my family is. As I mentioned before, it is a necessity. There need to be ordinary people's stories behind the stories of heroes and other excellent people. It is just a matter of having the right people in the right place and deciding on their roles.

In other words, a main role and a supporting role. I thought there was no big difference between these two. If I had to name a problem, there is just one—

"—Cough."

He coughed as his body creaked and ached somewhere deep inside without any reason. His urge to cough could not disappear, and he kept coughing and breathing roughly, enduring the pain.

It was not anything unusual. It was just one of the pointless seizures that happened to him ten times daily. It was not an illness. He was just weak and fragile.

“—Cough.”

And the reality of that “weakness” was his inescapable sin.

In House Juukulius with generations of knights, the fact that the “eldest son” was born too weak to hold a sword was a very deep sin that could make him regret his own birth.

—Joshua Juukulius was born into this world a sinner.

2

“—This is Julius. He will live with us from today. You originally are cousins, but he will be your elder brother from now on,” I was told by my father who is the head of our family.

This was how I first met my “elder brother.”

Joshua felt miraculously good on that day and could eat together with his family for the first time in a while. The introduction above was done before eating.

“Julius is my younger brother’s son. He recently lost his parents in an accident, so I decided to take him in and raise him… Do you have any questions, Joshua?”

“Questions?”

“Yes. Julius is three years older than you… If I take him into our family, he will be in the position of your elder brother. In that case…”

I noticed how my father’s golden eyes looked away for a moment.

It was something like an expression of his guilt that was visible only for a brief second. Joshua fully understood his father’s unspoken words.

Joshua naturally caused a lot of trouble for many adults due to his weak body, especially his parents. Those kinds of kids also naturally got the ability to read adults' faces.

Joshua was no exception. That's why he could read his father's thoughts—he felt sorry for Joshua but also prioritized fulfilling House Juukulius's main mission. Joshua could guess the tension between his father and the knights, so he did not oppose.

I did not have the right to oppose from the very beginning.

My father did not need to feel all that guilt in the first place.

If I were born with a proper body from the very beginning, there would not have been a strange gap here.

Joshua chose to smile and nod as an attentive son would do in order to reassure his father.

"…"

You could see the relief in his father's face as he lowered his eyebrows in response to Joshua's reaction. He could not see Joshua's true feelings, but he could not be blamed for that.

Joshua was that good at hiding his true nature.

That was why—

"—Julius, you should introduce yourself."

"Y-Yes, Father!" said the boy as he was pushed by his father to go forward.

Julius stood in front of Joshua. He looked gentle and had the same hair color as Joshua and his father—proof of the Juukulius bloodline.

"My name is Julius Juukulius, and I will be living with the main branch of the family starting today. I know it's weird that I will be your elder brother even though I came here later, but…I hope we get along well," said Julius without hesitation, as if he had practiced these sentences multiple times before.

He then held his hand out.

Joshua looked at the handshake gesture and tried to play it safe. It was his first encounter with someone he was going to spend a long time together with.

“I am Joshua Juukulius. Nice to meet you too.” Joshua tried to give a neutral response, so as to not leave a strong impression.

He softly shook Julius’s hand and wanted to end the situation.

That’s what he thought—

“—Huh?!”

The second they shook hands, Joshua saw something unthinkable. The second after their hands touched each other, Julius knelt down in front of him.

Then, with one knee on the floor of the dining room, Julius gently brought the back of Joshua’s hand to his lips—that was a kind of courtesy that a knight would do towards a lady.

“I hope we will be together for a very long time.” Julius’s face turned red as he said those words while kneeling down.

It was not an act he was used to doing. His voice was shaking and his gaze kept going places, but he looked like someone who achieved his first goal.

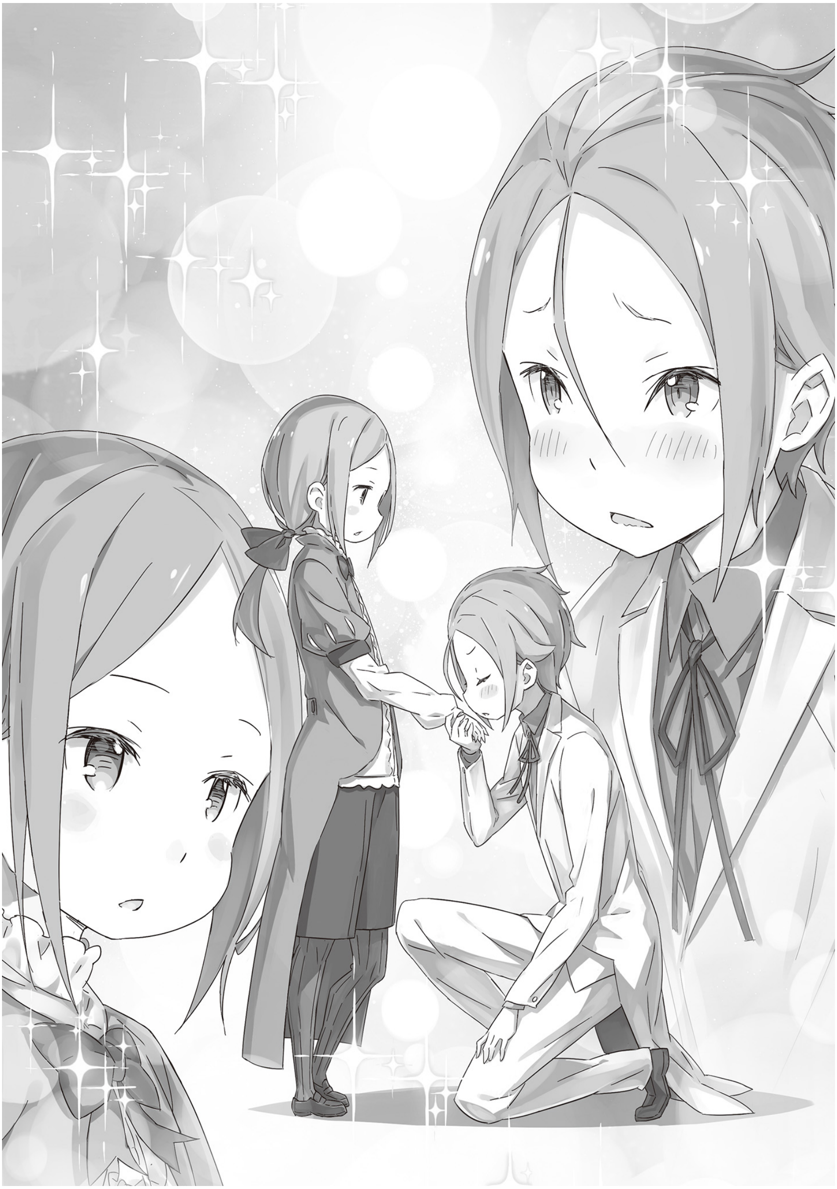
Joshua caught his breath when—

“—Hahahaha! Ahahaha! Julius, this is a greeting a knight gives a lady. You shouldn’t do it with Joshua…ah…ahahaha!”

“D-Did I make a mistake?!”

While trying to endure the humiliation and follow courtesy, Julius was stunned as his mistake was pointed out.

It was the first time Joshua saw his father laughing so loudly and smiling so broadly. There were other servants in the dining room, but his father wasn't able to keep up appearances and hold the laugh in.



“D-Don’t laugh at me, please!” exclaimed Julius. “I thought about this a lot…”

“Ah, I know, I know,” his father responded, wiping away his tears as Julius desperately tried to resist. “It’s fine for you to learn etiquette from now on. I see that you have the desire to learn, and that is enough.”

Julius turned back to Joshua, seemingly saddened by his father’s reaction.

He then tried to apologize to Joshua for kissing his hand, saying that he had embarrassed him—

“A-Are you okay?” he asked.

“…Huh?” Joshua replied confusedly.

“You…you are crying…Are you in pain?”

Joshua’s body stiffened in surprise due to Julius’s words. Julius touched Joshua’s cheek with a “You see?” before continuing. “—These are tears.”

Joshua saw a few drops slightly shaking on Julius’s little finger.

The moment Joshua realized those were his own tears that were scooped up—

“—uh…u…”

His emotions poured forth so easily that he could not believe it. It was such a muddy stream of unknown emotions that even he was unaware that he had sealed away.

Joshua burst into tears, instantly being tossed about by the flow that came pouring out all at once.

“Oh! Ah! Ohhhh, Father! What shall I do?!” Julius exclaimed.

“J-Joshua, what’s wrong?!” his father shouted. “Tell me if something is wrong! What happened?!”

The father and Julius clearly panicked at the sight of the sobbing Joshua. His son was very easy to deal with apart from his physical condition. The father’s surprise was unsurprising considering this sudden change in his son’s behavior.

The servants’ reactions were no different. They mobilized all their forces to stop Joshua’s tears.

—In the end, Joshua stopped crying after a while, and his first encounter with his elder brother was engraved in his mind as a bitter memory.

3

“I hadn’t studied anything to become a knight in my family.”

That was how Julius started his story after he visited Joshua in his room a few days after their bitter first encounter.

Joshua’s father, who was now Julius’s father as well, switched easily from being a father to being the head of House Juukulius. He suppressed his guilt towards Joshua, and Julius started his special education as a knight.

That being said, it was the long-awaited knight education for the father—it was originally supposed to be taught to Joshua but was left in limbo, so it was understandable why he was so enthusiastic about it.

Of course, I can only imagine how hard it will be on Julius, who will actually be going through it.

“If I had known things would turn out this way, I would have been more serious about everything…”

“—What did you do in your family, Brother?” Joshua tilted his head lying on the bed as he called Julius his brother.

Joshua had a fever this morning, so he was told to rest in bed by his worried servants. But things got better by the middle of the day after lunch.

On days when he had a fever in the morning, Joshua tended to rest for the day. —It was a routine that Joshua had been doing for a long time in order not to bother other people in the house and make them worried.

That's why no one usually entered Joshua's room when he was resting. No one. Except for Julius who came to complain about his special daily education.

"I often used to help my mom and dad. Apart from that, I went out with my friends nearby… I had no idea I was related to a big House like this."

"Did your late father tell you anything about House Juukulius?" Joshua wondered.

"Nothing at all! I was very surprised when my current father came to pick me up."

Joshua squinted his yellow eyes as Julius exaggeratedly waved his hands. He had heard about his father's younger brother, who was also Julius's father and an uncle of his, multiple times.

He was an odd one even within House Juukulius. When his elder brother became head, he quickly married an ordinary woman and started a life outside the family.

He was the kind of person who preferred a simple and ordinary life over a noble family life in House Juukulius. It is not like we were strangers, but I never really interacted with him.

The reason for his and his wife's death was a flood that occurred in a town where Julius's family lived. They were apparently swept away in a flash flood while trying to help others.

"They were great people," said Joshua.

"…" Julius kept silent.

"Brother?"

If they died trying to help others, it meant they lived as righteous and good people. It was ironic that that was the reason for their death, but it made Joshua truly respect his uncle and aunt.

However, Julius just shook his head with a “No” in response to Joshua’s words. “My mom and dad weren’t anything special. But everyone says they did something great, including our father. But…” Joshua sniffled. He then continued with tears in his eyes. “But I don’t care if they were ordinary, I just want them to be alive. Is it weird to think that way?”

“Well, that…”

That was a question Joshua could not find an answer to.

It was definitely a difficult thing to discuss for two young boys who had just become brothers. Julius wiped his face with his sleeve in front of the silent Joshua.

“My mom and dad died,” he continued, “and I was brought here by our father. I got you as my younger brother, and a lot has changed, but…I am still worried.”

“…Worried…about what?” Joshua asked.

He had a body that could move freely; he could be taught all the necessary things to be a knight by his father. He was Julius Juukulius, who would now be walking the path that Joshua was supposed to follow.

—What on earth could you be worrying about, my new brother?

“I wonder what I should do. I wonder whether it is fine to just do as father says. If I do that…” Will I be able to become someone who can repay my dead father and mother?

Young Julius could not find the right words, but that was what he wanted to say. Joshua took his unspoken words and pondered.

He carefully thought about Julius’s concerns. At the time Joshua didn’t understand why. He just thought about it.

If Julius was supposed to follow the path of a knight as the eldest son of House Juukulius that was originally destined for Joshua, it meant that the concerns he had were also Joshua’s concerns.

There is me who was born in a knight family, and all that I have is a body unfitting for a knight. And then there is Julius who grew up as an ordinary person but is going to be raised as a knight in a knight family.

—His path would definitely lead to the unfinished path of Joshua Juukulius.

“Hero…”

“Huh?” Julius raised his eyebrows at Joshua’s mumbled words.

Joshua relaxed his lips as he stared at the slightly surprised Julius. “Your parents were great people. In that case, in order to be worthy of your parents, you definitely need to become a hero.”

“What…is a hero?” Julius tilted his head, but continued listening with a clear desperation in his eyes.

Joshua looked at the bookshelf in his room in response to that gaze. There were different kinds of books from all times and countries that his father had collected for him.

There was a book there that was Joshua’s favorite, and in it was the future ideal of Julius.

And so, let us hear those stories quietly and slowly. Let them be told in all sincerity for Joshua Juukulius’s wishes to be entrusted to his new ‘brother.’

—In order for them both to walk together on the path of becoming heroes as knights of House Juukulius.

END

Volume 20

Chapters 61-81

Chapter 61:
Victim of the Territory

1

Capella lightly tilted her head towards the man chattering without rest, dao wielded in his one hand.

A braid composed of three strands of hair, long and dark, spilled upon her white shoulder. With arms folded as if to emphasize her plump chest she bent forward, casting a mesmerizing gaze towards the helmeted man. Using that bewitching gaze to tempt a man's eyes, it would drive a man's instincts wild, even if he knew it was a trap.

However, whether such a demonic scheme would be effective would depend on the opponent.

Al: “That erotic pose is indeed quite something, but if your goal is to seduce me, it's useless, ya know. For a hardcore virgin… making me thirst after a passerby onee-chan's got such a high difficulty that I'm practically laughing.”

Capella: “Demeaning your own frivolous words and having moderate restraint… Setting aside whether this lovely lady's goals apply for you, you are a man who gives the impression of not gobbling this up. After putting on that harlequin act to catch me off-guard, just what are you going to do with that thick thing?”

Al: “Women shouldn't go spouting dirty jokes like that. It's a real turn-off.”

Capella: “…”

Capella's seemingly provocative gaze turned into an expression of speechlessness after the man's response. The aura of surprise quickly dissipated, however, and Capella laughed as if happy from the bottom of her heart.

Capella: “Kyahahahaha! What is that, that remark at that age, with that demeanor? The maiden of your dreams lives on only within your chest. You’re without doubt a flower in a greenhouse, with an entirely different perspective of things, aren’t you? Kya~a, how dirty.”

Al: “Though I apologize for interrupting your show, don’t make me say it over and over. I’m not in the mood today. Even if you asked, I couldn’t really tell you when it is that I’m in the mood, especially today, so.”

Capella tapped her feet with an attitude not befitting her appearance towards the posturing man—at that, Al’s attitude became extremely complex and irritated.

Rather than posturing, it seemed to be that he was dissatisfied with this task from the bottom of his heart. Being rather different from the two people from above on this point, this led Capella to become increasingly intrigued.

Capella: “Not in the mood, finding this a bother, and yet not clearing the way. Your words are truly full of contradictions. In that case, why the hell are you still in the company of a raucous maniac like myself?”

Al: “The nerve of you to say it yourself, you raucous maniac.”

Capella: “Of course I’d say it. In any case, from this lovely lady’s perspective, absolutely everything that exists in this world is just a way to pass time. You’re all, in entirety, ultimately, objects of this lovely lady. The lovely lady’s love is boundless, filled with mercy, because everything aside from seeking love from this lovely lady is unnecessary… Anything else, do with it as you like.”

Spreading her arms, Capella smiled with the sweet expression of a poisonous flower.

Al, looking at this smile, lowered his dao with a whoosh. Twisting his neck so that his bones made a crack, he spat out a long sigh, “Ah—”.

Al: “That’s it. You’re rather different from the other sins I’ve known.”

Capella: “Oh my, you’ve seen other meats rotted beyond rot? That perverted female meat who resents her own longing? That virgin bastard with miniscule ability? That low-life brat of Bizarre Eating with vile character? Or was it that sick in the head, sick in consciousness, sick in thought, self-entitled Spirit? No matter which, for companions, they’re the absolute worst choices! Haven’t your parents taught you? Choose your companions carefully.”

Al: “…Unfortunately, my current friends are the type my parents warned me about.”

Capella: “That still deserves condolences. Even if you’re like that, will you embrace this lovely lady’s august love? Remove that helmet and reveal your face, embrace and devote love to this lovely lady!”

No matter how contemned or rebuffed, Capella, who carried out the gestures of seeking love, was the epitome of a mind which sought love. Except that referring to her most extreme, forcefully plundering, one-sided love with no regard of others as “Love”, was a misnomer.

Of course, not a single person would answer to her love, which rather than being called awkward, would be better described as completely disparate from human nature.

Al raised the dao that he had just lowered, slowly shaking his head.

Al: “Apologies. I’m happy you feel that way, but the two of us are still unfamiliar with each other, and it’d be embarrassing if any odd rumors spread amongst my friends. Please accept my refusal.”

Capella: “Something like giving regard to the gazes of outsiders, don’t you still have quite the cute aspects. Is this lovely lady that lacking here—I didn’t think this would be outside the sexual preferences of a garbage, masochistic male meat who enjoys being ordered about by women.”

Al: "…Huh?"

Capella: "Disregarding of others, harsh eyes. A body which could even be said to be filled with both sensuality and violence. A stature shorter than this lovely lady currently is, showing plenty of lovely skin. One whose words changed along with mood, yet never grew meaninglessly arrogant. An inner character always held up with logic and self-confidence. One who handed many tasks over to subordinates, but rarely became reliant on them. Not likable but not dislikable, the position and the woman both."

While chattering on endlessly, Capella's figure metamorphosed.

Still maintaining her plump body, she shortened her height and transformed her clothing into a dress which boldly revealed her shoulders and back. Her eyes shifted from sleepy to sharp, and from her keen gaze overflowed an atmosphere of confidence. What appeared was a beautiful woman with long golden hair hanging loose.

Although not the appearance of any particular person among his associates in the city—to some extent, she resembled a woman whom Al associated with.

Al: "…"

Capella: "Oops, not blonde? If it's someone from Lugunica, this should be most likely… In that case, hmmhmmhmm, red—Hm, orange it is."

Observing Al's subtle reactions, Capella's hair color changed bit-by-bit. Testing black, brown, green, blue, hesitating for a moment when it became red, then becoming orange.

With just this, she had assumed an impression ridiculously similar to a very familiar woman.

Al: "How hair-raising… Where have you met Princess?"

Capella: "Never seen her, never spoken to her, never even realized her existence? I merely deducted the type of woman you like from your reactions. This lovely lady is a woman who will give her all, you know? I want you to like it, so it's a matter of course I'd do my best to be liked by the party I want to like me."

Al: "Speaking of reactions, my face is…"

Capella: "Voice, movements, speech patterns. Angle of neck and line of sight, attitude. From chatting, understanding your attitude, nature, preferences."

Al: "…"

Capella: "One twitch or one movement, not missing a single one. Putting in the entirety of her heart and soul to be loved, this is the way this lovely lady utterly devotes her all. This lovely lady has already utterly devoted her all like this so… Look at this lovely lady. Look only at this lovely lady. Don't look at anyone else. This lovely lady's face, body, voice, attitude, gestures, all of it, all of it! They should all be totally completely in line with your preferences!"

As she spoke, the voice of Capella—rather, of Capella who had assumed Priscilla's appearance, gradually grew rough. Her claims were a straight line of desire to please, but a line too straight would become a love that would pierce right through its target.

Al could not respond with a shake of his head or with words, instead only able to ready his entire body's will to fight as a response to Capella. At this silent answer, on Capella's face grew discouragement and contempt.

Capella: "You, a selfish scum male meat… which aspect of this lovely lady are you dissatisifed with?"

Al: "Don't misunderstand. I neither like you nor dislike you, either way is fine… Sorry, that's a lie. As expected, you're disgusting, so I really don't like you."

Capella: "—Hk! You adulterous, rotting male meat!!"

Stomping her feet, Capella's right arm began to transform into the huge head of a wolf, starting from her shoulder. The ferociously howling, beastly head flew towards Al, who was frozen in place, at speeds beyond what the eye could process. In a moment, the fangs of that head, sharp as blades, gnawed on the entirety of Al's upper body with a single bite—the instant before that could transpire, Al's body flew forward into the gap of the approaching canine fangs, flying horizontally to escape by a hair.

Capella: "Don't think you can escape with just that!"

Al: "Like I'd think that! The side! And next, the back!"

Over Al's head as he rolled on, a powerful attack from a hand slammed down. It was a giant hand, each of its five fingers comparable in size to a human torso. Being caught in its grip would be akin to being caught by a snake.

However, this attack too was evaded by Al with a backstep. And then the wolf's head returned, its fangs looking to crush Al's waist, but it was stopped by the dao, wielded behind his back.

Al: "Whoa, whoaaaa, Dona!"

Without completely dispelling the momentum of the attacking beast, and all the while maintaining his blocking stance with the dao, Al's body slid forward. Midway through the canto, a wall of earth rose from the ground, slamming directly from below into the right arm that had become a beast.

The wolf whose lower jaw had been struck let out a wail, and the shift in mass of her right arm led Capella's entire posture to collapse. Seeing this, Al, having dodged the left arm's onslaught as well, rushed forward.

Al: "Dona! This side too, Dona!"

Capella: "—Hk."

The Dona that Al so incessantly launched was the lowest tier of Earth Magic.

Whether in power or durability as a wall, both were perfectly aligned with its nature as the lowest tier of magic. Even so, Al still relied on this magic as his best tactic in life-threatening combat.

Forming obstacles, blocking field of vision, forming a foothold—exactly like he was doing in this moment.

Al: “DOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOOO!”

A solidly formed wall of soil hindered the movements of Capella’s distant right and left arms. In addition, Capella’s body itself was assaulted by a wall of dirt that obscured her frontal vision. Then, with the preparations in place, Al rose into the air—using the speed and momentum from the earth rising from the floor, he launched forward as if he had been ejected by a spring.

The moment she heard these shouts, Capella glanced overhead, and a flash appeared upon her slender neck, her head flying away.

A face similar to Priscilla’s own danced through the air, a tremendous amount of blood spurting from the wound. Capella’s blood seemingly possessed an unidentified poisonous effect, the very reason for Crusch’s suffering.

Of course, even having been warned to not brush the excess of blood—

Al: “Who do you think you’re fooling, you damn liar!”

Stepping into this pool of blood without mercy, Al stuck out his dao.

The tip of the blade did not hesitate in the slightest to reach through the back of Capella’s headless body, penetrating through her body and coming out through her cleavage, adding another fatal injury to an opponent who was supposed to have died. However, it could not stop at this.

Al: “Take this! El Dona!”

Sweeping up the pierced body, Al flew forward and incanted with momentum—one level higher than Dona, El-tier magic using the dao as a pivot was activated within Capella’s body.

Of course, Capella’s body was unable to suppress the mass that swelled from inside, and scattered in an explosion.

"Bang", with a foolish sound as if it were a joke, Capella's body turned to shreds. Hands and feet scattered and flew away, pink viscera and bright red staining the entire underground space. In that frigid air, those pieces of meat even seemed to give off warmth, finally resulting in a result that one could walk away from.

Al: "…How's, that! Hah, hah, this much should…"

Shoulders heaving as he caught his breath, Al spoke to Capella, who had become pieces of meat.

After this, after something like this, a creature able to survive after being destroyed to this point simply could not exist. Towards Al's declaration of victory, an existence that could respond did not exist. Or at least, that was how it should have been.

Capella: "Ah, how excessive—Ah. No matter what, ordinarily things wouldn't go so far."

Al: "Fuck."

The one that had received Al's insults of disgust, responded in that airy, yet wicked voice.

The voice came not from the dismembered flesh, but from the direction of the head that had been severed at the start—In other words, it came from the place where Capella's head had landed. Capella's head remained on the ground it had rolled to, joyously witnessing Al's reaction.

Al: "Sending your head flying and destroying your heart isn't enough. Isn't that breaking too many rules…"

Capella: "Head flying and heart destroyed would pose no problem to this lovely lady… But it is rare that you've suddenly become so devoid of a trace of tolerance. This lovely lady, right now, should be tempting you with your favorite face, could it have been a slip of the eye? Or could it be that you're the type who expresses love by inflicting pain?"

Before Al, who was revealing his feelings of helplessness, Capella's head righted itself.

The severed head moved sluggishly, black flesh that could not possibly have been present gushing out. Forming a neck as a pedestal, quivering flesh became limbs, the black surface hidden from sight by white skin, turning back to—No, completely transforming into a golden-haired maiden.

Al: "…And the pieces of meat scattered here?"

Capella: "Since they're unnecessary, they can dissolve."

Al looked on with amazement, as the scattered pieces of flesh that had formed Capella's body started dissolving with a noise. The organs and limbs became a substance like black mud, bubbling as they disappeared. Even their method of disappearing inspired disgust to the point of aesthetic fatigue.

Capella: "Anyway, no hesitation in severing my head, hmm? The one from above… seems to have been a fake, but wasn't there someone whose comrade couldn't fight anymore, after taking this lovely lady's blood? Soaking in it like that, wasn't it scary?"

Al: "It wasn't some kind of bluff. Though I didn't know what conditions needed to be filled, the knowledge that being dripped on wouldn't be my end is something I've already tested. It was a waste of time to dodge it."

Capella: "—? But you haven't shown even a trace of an attempt to avoid it."

Al: "It's something you couldn't know about. Head, heart, if both don't work, next time, that severed head will be crushed. No matter how many tries it takes."

Al's extraordinarily tired sigh was even more pained than it had been before the battle had begun. This should have been due to the effect of Capella's tricks, but it seemed that further burden had been placed upon his shoulders after this exchange.

In any case, not a trace of damage was left on Capella's freshly regenerated body.

In addition to variation and transformation, a regenerative ability to the point of immortality—with even the typically most fatal attacks on head and heart rendered ineffective, this was truly a genuine monster.

However, difficult to kill was not synonymous to undefeatable.

Al: “There are also methods like freezing the entire body to seal it, or some method like tossing it into the Great Waterfall.”

Capella: “With an unkillable opponent, despair is only natural, but you don’t give up at all. Aren’t you truly an incorrigible trash meat? Being motivated is well and good, but can you actually do it? Seems like you’re good at petty tricks like dodging and escaping, but aren’t you lacking a way to actually kill this lovely lady?”

Al: “Indeed, even if I died a hundred times, I wouldn’t be able to kill you. In fact, I’ve already gone half of the way… But, aren’t you forgetting something?”

Al placed the dao over his shoulder and gave a knock, his helmet making a clunking noise. Capella’s head swiveled at that question, and in that moment, the tip of the sword was pointed overhead.

He was pointing at the City Hall—somewhere outside of it.

Al: “You had originally intended to disrupt our home base, having deserted your control tower. Meaning that the ones who went to attack Lust’s control tower will rush back shortly. As long as I keep up these time-buying tactics, naturally you’ll be done with soon.”

Capella: “…”

Al: “For your information, my abilities are okay for buying time, no? I’ll try every means to keep you down, to trap you in here. So, if you’d like to run, your chance is now.”

Being locked in battle against Capella in solitude, Al used the imminent arrival of reinforcements to try to coerce his opponent into retreating. Upon hearing those words, Capella raised her eyebrow as if surprised, and towards her questioning attitude Al responded with a “Hmm?”.

Al: “What’s that, your reaction. Even if you have some complaint about my suggestion to withdraw from just now then…”

Capella: “Do you truly believe that this lovely lady, who bothered to come alone into enemy territory, wouldn’t have prepared measures against the troops you sent out?”

Al: “…Huh?”

Capella: “The muscle daruma and the swordswoman were placed along the way. Even amongst our puppets, those two are unparalleled in quality… Can your reinforcements really get away so easily?”

Al: “Gah!”

The unforeseen development drew a sound from Al, who looked at the large hole overhead. As if reading his expression through his helmet, Capella continued with a “By the way”,

Capella: “The Conversation Mirror you had on you is sealed, you know? So even if you hurriedly tried to establish contact with anyone else, you wouldn’t be able to reach anyone.”

Al: “How did you do something like that?!”

Capella: “The creator of those magical devices seems to have been a Witch. Rumors about such legends have long been passed down in the Witch Cult. Including things like disrupting the wavelength of the Conversation Mirror.”

Due to the nature of this unorthodox annoyance, the strategy behind Al’s words had failed entirely.

Although Al had no way of ascertaining the truth of Capella’s words, in truth, the two who had been sent from the City Hall to take on Lust—Wilhelm and Garfiel, would sooner or later clash with her minions. The possibility of returning from a battle between monster and man could only be said to be extremely low. Which was to say,

Capella: “If we’re stuck here with nothing to do, wouldn’t it be better to get it over with?”

Al: “…A stalemate, well, I wouldn’t go so far as to call it that.”

At Al’s vague answer, Capella revealed a faint trace of a smile.

And in the moment immediately after, that faint smile melted. Once again, the form of the young girl became an amorphous piece of meat, and just like that, Capella’s mass grew exponentially.

With a gurgling sound, Capella’s form broke the limits of a human form, growing huge. Delicate maiden, seductive woman, dignified young man, stern warrior—her flesh grew enormous with a momentum yet unseen, the underground space echoing with laughter.

And then, appearing after a moment was a dragon of black, whose body blended into the shadow.

Al: “…I see, you could even turn into a dragon.”

Considering the fact that there were no divisions of rooms, the underground was much more spacious than the City Hall had been. However, even a space like this could not accommodate the black dragon’s huge body so easily.

Hearing Al’s low voice, the dragon narrowed its golden eyes, and Capella opened her mouth as if to respond to Al. From that mouth, came a merciless scorching breath.

Al: “—Hk.”

The breath of flame seemed to ignite the very air of the underground, as a white light forced its way close to Al.

An incantation completely overpowered by the roaring sound created a wall of earth in the volume that breath occupied. However, faced with the overwhelming temperature, the wall failed to mount even a momentary defense before crumbling under the heat—however, Al’s purpose did not lie there.

Al: “Kah, huu—”

The jaw of the black dragon, from which the breath was being released, was hit by a suddenly rising wall of earth. The mouth that generated the breath was forced shut, and instead the black dragon scorched its own throat with its flame.

Even so, the flame that the black dragon had spat out before its interruption continued to burn. Towards his back as he tried to escape the range of the heat, green flame approached—

Al: “Damn it! Dona! Guh?!”

Issuing a canto alongside the stench of burning, a wall of earth suddenly slammed into Al’s side. Using the momentum, Al was launched into a nearby waterway as he was scorched by the flames. Then, the instant that his back brushed the bottom surface of the waterway, another incantation summoned a wall of earth that sent him flying out of the water.

Al: “—Shiii!”

Completely soaked, Al flew from the waterway. In an instant, the razor claws of the black dragon had swept across the waterway’s bottom. Splashing up water, the wall which had carried Al out of the water burst into pieces. Although an evasive maneuver, the ferocious attack on Al continued, as he endlessly avoided, avoided, avoided.

Using miraculous movements to evade in such an extremely small space, withstanding attacks from behind that should have been unforeseen, his body’s lack of ability was supplemented by his own magic, as he continually avoided fatal injuries.

Capella: “Gyiiiiiiii!”

Al: “D-D-D-D-Donaaaaa!”

The now-impatient dragon rotated its enormous body, mowing down with its tail.

Faced with this arcing blow that battered up a storm, Al used multiple incantations to create five earthen walls simultaneously in front of him—reducing the threat of this attack as much as possible, and using his dao to block it while jumping backwards, then hitting the ground to roll several times before staying down.

The dramatic rolling movements lessened the burden on his body, and Al stood with the dao as a crutch. However, the damage had not been completely offset.

Hurriedly, through the gap at the bottom of his slanted helmet, a large quantity of vomit spilled.

Al: “Kuh, kuh… Damn it, on the victim’s side this time… really outta luck here…!”

Capella: “Doesn’t seem that way though. Considering your abilities, there’s a kind of incomprehensible foolishness in staunchly standing with allies…”

Towards Al who sighed over his current predicament, the black dragon Capella gave a rather uncomprehending praise.

Even from her perspective, Al’s desperate defensive battle held an inexplicable sense of incongruity. Attacks that should not have been seen through, pursuits that should not have been imagined, Al had all along been using his own ability to survive as long as possible—As if he’d long known all those choices.

However, neither had the leisure to pursue those idle thoughts for now. As for why,

Capella: “…Has this been a bit too much?”

The reason why Capella who raised her head would say so, were the faint vibrations transmitted from the surface of the ground—and then, there were fatal sounds coming from the City Hall that had continually suffered damage.

The foundation of the structure which had seen too many large battles had already suffered a great deal of damage, and then the battle that had taken place underground had given the foundation one final blow. The result was the gradual widening of the hole that had served as the trap to send Capella down, and the cracks spread not only on that floor, but through the entire building.

The development after this, even a small child would understand—Collapse.

Al: “Stop kidding around! If this Territory comes undone I’ll actually die!”

Seeing part of the floor fall away from above, Al pushed through the pain, and with labored steps leapt into the flowing waterway.

Along with the sound of water, his body disappeared in the stream of water that flowed under the city. Seeing him off, as she maintained the form of a black dragon, Capella gazed upon the gradually collapsing ceiling.

Capella: “Yep, my interest is wilting. I’m tired from playing, so forget it.”

With murmured words that seemed listless, the black dragon yawned.

Like this, that unusual sight went unseen by anyone, being buried under the rubble of the collapsing architecture, pouring down like a landslide.

2

???: “—Uh.”

At the scene of the collapse, echoed a low moaning sound.

The sound accompanied the sound of rubble being shoved aside, with several slightly larger stones rolling down from a mountain of rubble. Thanks to this impact, the mountain collapsed, and from an opening created by the collapse a white hand protruded.

As if searching for something, that slender arm hurriedly attacked the mountain of rubble and made it cascade bit-by-bit.

And then, several minutes later, having finally succeeded in breaking free of the mountain of ruin, Ferris crawled out of the pile of scrap wood, his clothing having become ragged.

Ferris: “Kuh, kuh.”

As he coughed, Ferris spat out vast quantities of soil and blood.

Was it sand or was it blood, that remained in the gap between his tongue and teeth? No matter which, it did not matter at all to Ferris. Right now, he just wanted to rinse his mouth.

Ferris: “Didn’t expect the City Hall to collapse. Isn’t this another death for nothing…?!”

Ferris used the inside of his dirtied clothing to scrub the blood from his face. Wiping away what dirtied it, like that he would return his face its usual neatness and cuteness.

It was nigh unimaginable that a human being could be in this condition, just a few minutes after being caught up in the collapse of a five-story building, having been crushed, unable to do anything.

Ferris: “Something like that is… that’s right, Anastasia-sama!”

Cat ears pointing upward, Ferris shouted that name as he looked around him.

Anastasia had volunteered to appear in Crusch’s stead, assisting in this dangerous battle by acting as bait. Having successfully met Lust’s ambush as anticipated, the results could only be described as a tragedy. But a collaborator was still a collaborator.

And in the necessity of determining whether she lived or died, there also resided a level of emotional obligation to Julius.

Ferris: “If like me, she’d been directly crushed to death…”

Looking around, he started the search in the nearby rubble. In the moment that the building had begun to collapse, Anastasia and Ferris had been in the same room.

As it had been a sudden collapse originating from beneath their feet, she would end up the same way provided she had been caught up in it without any preparation. At the very least, if she had not died instantaneously, as long as she could be subject to Ferris's healing magic, she would be safe and sound.

Ferris: "This search would be much simpler with a single reply!"

Ferris's slender arms were ill-suited for anything of the sort of search and rescue.

Even if helping the injured was Ferris's very own specialty, the same did not go for the work that lay before healing. Because of the lack of information received from Lust too, Ferris felt an unprecedented sense of frustration. And it was precisely at that moment—

???: "Ah, Ferris, you too are safe and sound."

Ferris: "—!"

Hearing the approaching sound of footsteps kicking away rubble, Ferris, having jumped as if startled, turned to see a solitary figure. Tugging on the hair that had been dyed green and straightened, smiling slightly, was the Anastasia he had been searching for all along.

The hem of her kimono which seemed difficult to move in swaying, she approached Ferris with careful steps.

Ferris: "Anastasia-sama, are you unhurt?"

Anastasia: "It's as ya can see. In fact, we here should be saying that. Ferris, thank goodness you're unhurt from that collapse."

Ferris: "That's…"

Although strictly speaking, he had not been unhurt, Ferris suppressed his instinctive reply. There was no obligation to reply, and it would not merit a pleasant topic. Seeing Ferris closing his mouth without reply, Anastasia surveyed the rubble and scene of collapse of the City Hall.

Anastasia: "Tellin' everyone to leave for the shelters in advance truly was a correct decision. This was quite the grand happenin'."

Ferris: “A grand happening…”

Anastasia frowned as if incredibly troubled, and Ferris surveyed his surroundings as well.

Anastasia calling this a grand happening, but could this circumstance be called such with peace of mind? Although calling it a grand happening was not incorrect, it seemed to be missing a touch of seriousness.

Not to mention that the cause of this collapse was precisely—

Anastasia: “Seems to me, that the cause’d be the underground battle between Al and Lust…”

Ferris: “…”

Anastasia: “Bein’ completely buried, diggin’ them out like this’d be a bit difficult. If they successfully entered the waterways underground, seems to me there’d be a possibility of escapin’ alive…”

Of course, in that case, the possibility of Capella’s survival also needed to be considered.

As Ferris had observed, Capella’s capacity for regeneration surpassed human imagination. Having had half her face destroyed by Anastasia’s magic, she had not given any regards to that. It was truly beyond strange. Just like the outburst of Ferris’s lifeforce, it should not have been the result of some unnatural constitution.

Ferris: “Speaking of which, where did Anastasia-sama learn such magic?”

Anastasia: “…That, has it got anythin’ to do with this?”

Ferris: “Since I had heard you couldn’t fight, a little bit of surprise can’t be helped.”

During the discussion on how to distribute the combat forces, she herself had been the one who had said she did not possess any combat ability. Neither Anastasia herself nor the Artificial Spirit accompanying her had such powers.

However, if that was the case, what had been that magic, that which had ruined Capella’s face?

???: “—This topic, I’d also like to hear a bit about it.”

Anastasia: “…”

Anastasia kept silent in response to Ferris’s question, and just at that moment, the voice of a third person chimed in.

Before the eyes of the two who turned their heads, stood Al, soaked and kicking away at rubble. Twisting his head so that water poured from the opening in his helmet, he approached.

Anastasia: “Seeing ya safe and sound’s nice. A successful leap into the waterway?”

Al: “On three attempts, I felt I was gonna be crushed. Eh, not like it matters. More importantly, we’ve got something more important to talk about.”

Anastasia faced forward to welcome the laborer’s meritorious return, but Al unsheathed his dao as he spoke. Pointing the tip of the blade to Anastasia as well, she frowned.

Al and Anastasia stood facing each other, and Ferris was caught in between the two. The places where the three stood formed an exact triangle.

Anastasia: “What in the world are you doin’, exactly? If this a joke, then I ain’t laughin’.”

Al: “Not like I’m in a kidding mood. Setting aside that cat-eared bro for now, it really doesn’t make sense that you survived this destruction. In addition…”

Anastasia: “It’s merely that there were backup plans. Hiding those was indeed my fault, but as for that I can’t exactly explain it forthrightly…”

Al: “Sure, you can gimme that answer, but the problem here’s your attitude. Barely managing to escape from the collapsed building, then chatting idly with a familiar face atop the ruins… From your attitude, it feels like your expressions and feelings are completely out of place. Do you know what we call people who can chat like that?”

Anastasia: “…”

Regarding Al, who persisted with his hail of questions, Anastasia stopped replying. However, her expression now froze into a sly smile.

And then, as Ferris witnessed it, Al spoke a definitive, clarifying line.

Al: “Those kinda people, we call them Witches.”

Anastasia: “…Really now, that word is a little excessive.”

An incredibly philosophical tone of response, which gave the impression of being devoid of emotion.

Sly smile falling away, what emerged afterward was an empty smile, a smile only in appearance. As if that movement of skin was directed not toward another person, but toward one’s self in a self-deprecating manner.

Anastasia: “In my experience, Witch is by no means a term used in good conscience.”

Al: “Could it be that you’re under the impression that I’m lightheartedly dropping a greeting? Your first impression is right, swindler fox.”

Ferris: “What do you mean?”

Looking at the two people who had reached an understanding—Anastasia, who had changed her tone, and Al—Ferris sought an opportunity to interject. In response to Ferris’s attitude, Al shrugged with his armless left shoulder, his gaze still fixed in Anastasia’s direction.

Al: “It’s something like, the miss still looks like the miss, but she’s different on the inside. That fox with wicked character dangling from her neck… Echidna is inside her.”

“Anastasia”: “This is something that prioritizes Ana’s survival, it is just that the result ended up like this. It is really rather distressing that this affair is being spoken of as if I have some malicious intent.”

At Al’s hostile words, Anastasia—Echidna revealed a troubled expression as she replied. Then Al harrumphed into his helmet with a “Hah!”

Al: “Someone replacing another shouldn’t speak with such a righteous tone.”

“Anastasia”: “Replacing or whatnot is really quite the misunderstanding. From where did such a notion come from?”

Al: “Everything right down to that fake Kararagi accent of yours should serve as evidence. Unfortunately enough, I can see through the nature of a Witch that can’t comprehend humans.”

Ferris: “Act a bit more properly! Like this, the topic won’t progress no matter how long you talk!”

After Al’s systematically detailed response to Echidna, Ferris finally exploded.

Although it seemed that Al’s information did have a degree of reliability, what mattered most right now was the affair of Anastasia’s body. Her body right now, had indeed been taken control of by Echidna.

Ferris: “First of all, is Anastasia-sama alright? It isn’t something like merely protecting her body, but her consciousness flew off somewhere?”

“Anastasia”: “That is not the case indeed. It would not do to not have Ana healthy in body and soul. Because if that were the case, there would not be a need to use a forbidden technique.”

Ferris: “Forbidden technique?”

“Anastasia”: “It refers to this condition here. Since Ana’s Gate is a little bit complex, it cannot be used by itself. Even with me acting as a proxy, the burden is still incredibly heavy. It is something like that.”

Stroking her meager chest, Echidna made Anastasia’s expression turn gloomy.

Although Al still propped up his sword with a demeanor of intolerance, Felix forcibly stepped in front of the tip of the blade as he continued discourse with Echidna.

Ferris: “Then why did you pretend to be Anastasia-sama, to converse with us?”

“Anastasia”: “Would it not be more unnatural to abstain from a greeting upon seeing your ally safe and sound? Pretending to be Ana herself, was to keep you from spotting our weaknesses. Exactly as I just said, Ana’s body is quite unstable. So I wished to hide the fact that she had become one with me… and then was seen through too.”

Ferris: “Julius is also… unaware of this ability. After all, he had not even known about your existence before this. What do you intend to do about this?”

“Anastasia”: “That is an issue between Ana and Julius, and the Iron Fang as well. For your questions, I do not feel as if I have an obligation to offer speculation.”

Everything made sense. The sense of incongruity that Felix had felt from Anastasia atop the mountain of rubble as well, all stemmed because he was dealing with Echidna. The contents were different.

In addition to the fact that her magic had been her protection, was the fact that Anastasia’s body had indeed been protected from the collapsing building—with these two points, Ferris’s previous doubts had come undone.

Ferris: “Although, that person over there still gives an impression of being unwilling to lower their weapon?”

Al: “…Tch.”

As Ferris had asked, Al clicked his tongue as he reluctantly placed the dao within its sheath. Upon seeing this, Ferris once again looked at his bruised and battered body.

Burns and scrapes, his body looked like it was truly injured.

Ferris: “Alright, let me take a look and it’ll be healed soon. Uwah, this place’s been gouged…! Hya, this slash, it’s miraculous you didn’t die from it…?”

Al: “With my ability, turning a fatal injury to a serious injury is the limit. Though it’d be better if I hadn’t lost the gamble… well, whatever.”

Ferris: “—?”

The palm of Ferris, who tilted his head, healed all of Al’s wounds.

All that could be said was that, thanks to the healing properties of that pale blue light, in the blink of an eye, the numerous injuries on Al’s body had been healed. Having confirmed this, Al gave Ferris his thanks.

Al: “Like me, the miss ended up surviving. Without a doubt, that Lust bastard also’s got to be alive. I can’t rest easy even if she’s been buried by rubble.”

“Anastasia”: “About that.”

At Al’s voice which raised a warning, Echidna lifted her hand. The Conversation Mirror was held in its palm, and with her other hand she gently knocked on its surface.

“Anastasia”: “As a matter of fact, since before the building collapsed, the Conversation Mirror hasn’t made a single sound.”

Al: “I’d heard. Lust… or rather the Witch Cult? Within the Witch Cult there seems to be some way of crippling magical devices.

Presumably that suppressed communications with anyone on the outside…”

“Anastasia”: “That’s what I had thought. However, if it was due to the Sin Archbishop that that happened, it means we should have escaped that problem by now.”

Al: “…Talking in circles.”

“Anastasia”: “Apologies, it is a habit of mine. That is to say, the function of the Conversation Mirror has been restored.”

Hearing those words, Al and Felix were simultaneously shocked.

Al was surprised that the Conversation Mirror could reach others with a Mirror. But Felix was surprised at the cause of the Conversation Mirror’s malfunction and the possibility that the cause had been eliminated.

Ferris: “What do you mean? Lust’s interference ended… which is to say she’s dead?”

Truly, it was unbelievable that the monster who had ceaselessly boasted of her regenerative ability would have died from being buried by rubble. After all, just as Al had said, the three people present were all still alive.

Believing that the undying monster with extraordinary vitality would die like this was truly too difficult. If any possibilities aside from this could be considered—

“Anastasia”: “She received a wound to the point that her sabotage could not continue, or perhaps the interruption itself is meant to induce carelessness in us, and they’re lurking, awaiting for an opportunity…”

Ferris: “That… doesn’t feel like it fits with that awful character…”

“Anastasia”: “Indeed, I think so as well. It should be more daring than just hiding… Something such as taking the form of one of the three people here? With the original having already died, completely replacing that existence. That is precisely a tactic that Lust would enjoy."

This speculation of Echidna's caused Felix to shiver.

He recalled that, before the collapse, the monster had assumed a form identical to Crusch. Having witnessed that transformation with his very eyes, there was no room for doubt that she had been a fake. Of course, even if she had become Crusch, Ferris was confident he would be able to see through her, but these two were another matter entirely.

This possibility made Ferris feel ill. However,

Al: "Don't get your kicks from spouting such disorienting stuff, what a wicked nature. The lack of reaction makes it a quick deal. She turned tail and ran, that's clear. Leaving after becoming bored of playing, that one is just like that."

"Anastasia": "To say that without basis or reason…"

Al: "Before being crushed, the monster wore a completely disinterested expression. That would be the reason."

The one who had faced off against Capella all the way to the end had been Al.

If the opponent had been another human, such a conclusion would have been astounding, but if their opponent were a Sin Archbishop, common sense could not be upheld. Of course, even assuming that, vigilance should not be dropped.

Al: "More importantly, if the Conversation Mirror is functional, couldn't contact with the Princess be established? That's what's most important. Hurry up and help me connect."

The teams that had left the City Hall with Conversation Mirrors had been team Wilhelm-Garfiel and team Priscilla-Liliana. Originally, Al should have been part of Priscilla's squad, but at his master's order, he had reluctantly remained with the team left behind. The desire of wanting to confirm his master's safety was painfully understood.

"Anastasia": "I see. You do not need to be in such a hurry… Hmm?"

Placating Al like this, Echidna who held the Conversation Mirror in her hands frowned.

Just as Ferris glanced over, intending to ask what had happened upon seeing that reaction, the Conversation Mirror in Echidna's hand gradually began to radiate a faint glow—This was an indication that a connection with another Conversation Mirror had been established.

And that which was reflected on the surface of the Conversation Mirror was—

Chapter 62:
Commend of the Warrior

???: "—Gorgeous Tiger?"

Garfiel's consciousness was shaken harshly the moment he heard that sound.

He coughed out the volumes of water he'd swallowed, shook all the moisture away from his body, sight beginning to return to his brain drowsy from oxygen starvation.

This place was an underground space both dim and frigid.

The rigid stone ground was still submerged by volumes of water flowing in. It seemed that the turbid flow had flooded the room from an indentation in the wall behind him, which had allowed a breath of fresh air.

He was currently showered by a great number of gazes. In them lay unease, vigilance, dread, opposition.

From the number of people before him and the myriad of feelings in their gazes, Garfiel blearily came to the conclusion that this was one the city's shelters.

The waterway he had plummeted into connected to the shelter, crashing through the wall led to this place. As a result, he'd been swept in along with the water.

Garfiel: "…"

At that realization, Garfiel's blurred consciousness received a shock.

Jerking his head up with a start, remembering the events that had transpired before he'd been sweat him erected the hairs on his body. He hurriedly spun his head around, rapidly searching for the giant who had plummeted into the water with him in a tangle —

Garfiel: "…ah"

His gaze overlapping with a young blond boy's green eyes.

He remembered this face. This face made his chest tighten, followed by memories which agonized his spirit.

He'd come face to face with him again, that boy who had a connection with Garfiel's mother.

He was a little brother, remaining where he'd wanted to be, accepting the love of a mother—

Garfiel: "—?!"

The sense of being startled away was once again buried under an excess of feeling.

And then, an enormous splash swept the water surrounding Garfiel, the form of a giant who'd a splash flying standing up in the shallow water. This enormous figure waved his arms, mercilessly slamming toward the blankly staring Garfiel.

Facing this attack, Garfiel's reaction was a beat too late.

And this beat, proved fatal.

The momentary carelessly offered the opponent a flaw.

And from the war god facing Garfiel came not an off-color attack.

In total, eight attacks swept toward Garfiel.

One or two were blocked. However, the remaining six slammed straight into Garfiel.

The face was hit and two attacks squirmed the body. Then the floating body was beaten to the ground by the fist, hitting the head of the water and eating the fist from the top.

Taking a blow to the face, two attacks to the side leaving his body in midair. And then his floating body was slammed to smack into the ground, his head which slammed into the water taking another hit from directly overhead. His face slamming through the water into the hard ground, his nose and teeth taking serious damage as well. The surface of the water stained with crimson, a string of blood flowed from Garfiel's mouth and nose as he leapt to his feet.

Garfiel: "Stop, kidding… arouuuuuund!"

A roar coming from the mouth which had teeth knocked loose, shaking away the ringing in his ears from blows to the head. A momentum of anger sweeping through this underground space, the war god positioned directly forward stepped forth as if this were the reason.

Fists overlapping. Garfiel turned his head, using his teeth to scratch at the fist which scraped his head, tearing it from wrist to elbow in one motion. his head and used his teeth to smear his fist across his face and tear it from his wrist to his elbow. Extending his right arm to grab his opponent's neck in the same instant, digging all the way to the lower abdomen.

Fresh blood sprayed from the sharp incision, causing no small amount of damage to the war god's body.

However, the war god's seven remaining hands continued to strike. In order to avoid them all, Garfiel needed to do his utmost to respond.

In one exchange of blows, he needed to use one hand to deal with eight.

Overwhelming disadvantages, overwhelming differences in ability, overwhelming differences in battle – this in fact ignited his will to fight.

Garfiel: "Aaaa, aaaaaaaaaaaa!!"

Attack, attack, attack, attack, attack, attack, attack —

Block, deflect, avoid, evade, duck, kick aside, meet head on —!

Fist to fist, generating shock waves that caused evaporated the sweat dripping from the two.

Unyielding and steel facing off in collision, the staggering sound made it difficult to believe that this was flesh on flesh. The pair's bodies were unable to withstand this and flew outward in opposite directions.

Ferocious tiger and the enormous body were both tossed aside to cause giant splashes.

Kurgan's back collided with the wall, and Garfiel once again became intimately acquainted with the water. He immediately raised his head, his gaze overlapping with Kurgan's who was looking directly toward him.

Although without a single word spoken, mutual understanding was established in but a moment.

Garfiel stood, stepping into the water that now reached his ankles.

Garfiel could feel the Divine Protection of Earth Spirits beneath the soles of his feet, cutting a quadrilateral from the floor beneath his feet, allowing it to float upward. Kicking aside this floating piece of floor, the huge holes caused much of the water in the underground to flow into it all at once, drastically reducing the water level.

As Garfiel conducted the draining of the water, Kurgan approached the hole where the water flowed in.

The holes that had sent the two underground was enormous, vast amounts of water pouring from within. Left alone, the underground space would flood in a matter of minutes.

Kurgan yanked out a Demon Cleaver. Minus the one Garfiel had bitten to pieces, there yet remained three Demon Cleavers. Kurgan removed one to aim above, his target hanging directly overhead of hole – he hefted the exaggerated piece of iron at the ceiling, shattering it.

Using the vision of a warrior to see through the collapse, with roughness he filled the hole in the wall in with rubble. Of course, even blocked water would still leak in, but not the extent of instantaneously submerging the underground

The hole was plugged, the water was drained, water would no longer flood submerge ankles.

Checking the status of their surroundings wordlessly, the two warriors returned to their original positions. Face to face. Fists lifted with shields, Demon Cleavers drawn. The hero Eight Arm Kurgan, the challenger Golden Tiger Garfiel.

Subduing an opponent at peak condition. This was the implicit agreement between warriors.

"…"

Garfiel knew that this was not the time for such a thing.

His duty was to return to the high rise City Hall that was likely under attack, to rescue those who could not fight.

However, before any matter of facing or not facing, about what to face, Garfiel had long ago already faced this problem.

—This sentiment was out of place, but Garfiel felt excited.

His pitiful loss against Reinhard, sealing memories and feelings both for a mother, unable to avenge the kind girl who had protected him, leaving an ally in a dangerous situation when faced with an ambush.

So many important things snatched from his hands, leaving him to feel powerless and empty.

Leaving Sanctuary, seeing the world, Garfiel had recognized his own weakness.

The him that had remained in Sanctuary, would certainly have remained strong, for certain. Because then his metric of comparison was only himself, holding no doubts to the martial abilities he'd trained.

Leaving Sanctuary, seeing the world, Garfiel had recognized far greater strengths.

Compared his time in Sanctuary, his own power had not decreased. However, the his metric of comparison was no longer the him of his imagination, making him weak in relativity.

In a mere two days, a shift in consciousness made him clearly recognize this conclusion.

Powerlessness and loss had exposed Garfiel's inner self, forcing him to recognize he was merely a bluffing brat. His inner self had created hesitation, doubt, regret, the wavering of his heart turning him weak.

—And injected life into his wilted soul was precisely Kurgan.

The hero Eight Arm Kurgan, the Vollachian Empire's hero. The strongest man of the Multi-Arm Tribe.

He'd readied his Demon Cleavers, regarding Garfiel as a warrior to face. How important this was to the Garfiel who could not find his own value.

The two entangled men plummeted into the waterway, where Garfiel had lost his footing due to his inexperience in aquatic combat. The magically resurrected Kurgan had no need to breathe, and if he had wanted to decide the outcome could have merely waited for Garfiel to drown.

However, the war god had shattered the wall of the waterway, connected to a shelter, had let Garfiel survive.

For what purpose.

Garfiel: "Thought initially… that 't was yer show 'f mercy."

Kurgan: "…"

Before Garfiel had determined his epiphany, Kurgan had not regarded him as a warrior.

Flinging aside an attacking child, kicking aside a crybaby was not what a warrior would do. And thus facing Garfiel who had been throwing a tantrum, Kurgan had completely sidestepped him.

But, that was wrong.

Precisely because he'd stood, raised his shields, being regarded as a war god by Garfiel.

That was why he'd seen the famed Demon Cleavers being drawn, had met with the stance of greeting a warrior.

After seeing this demeanor from him, what he had shown to Garfiel was certainly no mere mercy or pity.

What Kurgan sought. Was the result of a decisive battle for victory against Garfiel.

—The battle between warrior and warrior can only accept a mutual blow as a conclusion.

Garfiel: "Yo, ya fuckers… how long 're ya goin' t' keep starin'?"

Garfiel checked the shields on his two arms, these words directed not toward Kurgan, but meant for the onlooking audience.

The ones who after the two men had been swept in, had silently regarded the battle between warriors—the refugees.

Gathered together though differing in clothing, and, and even race, all they had in common was their in ability to fight, they were a group of non-combatants who would be sent flying with a single attack.

If Garfiel fell here, there was no one here who could deal effective damage to Kurgan. Although difficult to imagine Kurgan committing atrocities against non-combatants, but likely the only one who knew this was the Garfiel facing him.

And so,

Garfiel: "Should be able t' tell 't a glance. Even 'f you spectate from over there, 's absolutely nowhere that y' c'n make a move. Hurry n' take th' chance to seek shelter outside…"

Fred: "—Gorgeous Tiger—!"

Garfiel: “Ah…?”

Garfiel’s words urged them to leave quickly were overwhelmed by a loud cry.

Calling out to the Garfield whose brows were knitted in pressure, using this phrase to call out to Garfiel happened to be one of those onlookers.

The boy’s eyes filled with tears, both cheeks crimson, gripping the hem of his clothing tightly.

Faced with Garfiel’s astonished sight, the boy’s watery eyes stared back. It held a will strong enough that Garfiel found it difficult to reply.

Garfiel: “Hey, lil’ brat… th’ hell ‘re ya, sayin’…”

Fred: “Gorgeous Tiger—!”

Garfiel: “…”

Fred: “G-Gorgeous Tiger—!”

The quavering voice of the boy called so to the silent Garfiel.

As if unaware of how else to express his feelings, calling out this name.

This was the name of the golden tiger. This was the name that Garfiel Tinzel yearned for, the name of the strongest tiger.

Why now, was he calling this name. What did he want to convey.

Tears dripped down the reddened cheeks of the boy.

Spreading through the entire underground audience were the cries of the boy. So everyone shared this share of passion that was injected despite being inexpressible.

Garfiel: “Enough, y’ve said ‘t already now go.”

“Gorgeous Tiger—!”

Garfiel's sigh, was buried under their cries of calling for the golden tiger.

From behind the boy, a girl with the same blond hair embraced him. That was the boy's sister. As if to protect her younger brother, her gaze trembled as it found Garfiel.

Her lips also trembled without pause. In a voice without sound of silence, calling the name of the tiger of gold.

"Win for sure!"

Not from the boy, not from the girl, of course not from Garfiel.

Another man in the underground space, called out while raising a fist.

Garfiel: "Wait, told y' to run…"

"Fight, and then win!"

"Don't lose!"

"E, even if we can only… watch on!"

Garfiel was speechless.

The voice he used to urge them to flee was repeatedly buried under other voices.

Directing his attention back, the enthusiasm in the boy's voice reached the hearts of everyone underground, not a single person watching Garfiel and Kurgan's duel making a move to flee.

If using common sense, if calming down to think, how could anyone think staying was right. Everyone, was overwhelmed. Solely for the sake of this meaningless determination and faith, reaching a conclusion that was likely to end in self sacrifice.

Garfiel: "…"

The hell does this count for, was what Garfiel thought.

What was the point of staying here. What was making noise, showing support supposed to mean.

It would be much better to hurry to and run. He himself wouldn't have to worry about involving them. The likelihood that they'd be sacrificed even if he himself fell would reduce. This was much more reasonable.

But not a one of them fled, why was this.

Garfiel: "Cap'n… sure 'nough, your speech delivered effects too strong…"

From his mouth Garfiel called out his name for Subaru, remembering the words he'd conveyed to the entire city.

Subaru had touched the hearts of everyone in the city, the powerful broadcast that had been proclaimed as weak pulling together all the people that felt submerged by unease and horror. A flickering candlelight had been lit with the last bit of hope.

And fire burned out to leave heat in the peoples' hearts, waiting for the next change to reignite.

And for them, the moment of ignition, was now.

And the same went for Garfiel in this moment.

"Gorgeous Tiger—!"

The solidarity, did not stop.

The first to call out to the golden tiger was Garfiel's little brother whose birth he had been unaware of. And in order to protect her littlest brother, was the little sister whose birth had been equally unknown to Garfiel.

Little brother, and little sister, were looking directly at Garfiel.

The city that had accepted his mother after she had lost her memory, its residents were looking right at Garfiel.

Garfiel: “F’r a duel between warriors… compared t’ th’ usual, ‘s a bit too noisy.”

Kurgan: “…”

Garfiel: “Really, sorry. Been troubling you all along. Especially most troublesome’re my amazin’ self’s lil’ brother n’ sister. After this, they’ll get a proper scoldin’.”

Kurgan: “…”

Garfiel: “‘N so.”

Wordlessly the war god readied his fighting spirit.

Needless to say, his attitude was one of utmost power.

Garfiel clenched his fists, knocking the shields on his arms together.

The sound of the steel striking steel lit a spark, through his fangs Garfiel took a deep breath.

Garfiel: “Shield of Sanctuary… no,”

Kurgan: “…”

Garfiel: “Gorgeous Tiger, Garfiel Tinzel.”

The announcement of a name that was meant to initiate a battle.

To Garfiel’s announcement of a name, Kurgan remained silent. Merely scraped his Demon Cleavers, showing his opponent the utmost of will to battle.

This was, enough.

Garfiel: “Haaa, aaaaaaaah!”

Garfiel kicked against the stone floor, rushing forward.

Kurgan greeted him with the same, the distance between the two reducing to zero in a mere instant.

To say hit would be too sharp, to say slash would be blunt, the attacks that Garfiel made without pause leaving little room to breathe.

The air that Demon Cleavers touched was not whistled through or sliced so much as it was killed, every blade only being caught by Garfiel due to his warriors' instinct for danger.

In one exchange of blows he needed to content with eight hands, and those eight hands only needed to contend with one.

With the number of Garfiel and Kurgan's hands differing, to win against him was to Garfiel as difficult as scaling the sky/reaching the heavens.

However, without acting he could not reach it. And so he initiated this battle, gambling his all.

"…"

Faced with heavy blows which made his body their target, if hit directly even a blunt blow would be enough to sever his blood and flesh. Without the slightest of hesitation Garfiel lifted his foot, shattering a Demon Cleaver speeding toward him with a single step.

From directly overhead the heel broke the body of the Demon Cleaver, the thick body of the blade piercing through the stone floor, the roar of the splitting rocking creating an illusion that the entire city was trembling.

He'd first dealt with one, but couldn't let his guard down.

At the same time that the broken Demon Cleaver had pierced the floor, the second one cut an arc through the air from the direction of his opponent's left shoulder. Upon hearing the whistle of the Demon Cleaver with his right ear, Garfiel immediately defended his head with the shields strapped on his arms. The attack hit exactly in the instant he raised his arms, shaking his attention for an instant.

The impact from his right fractured his elbow, the wrist of upper arm shattering completely. Garfiel gritted his teeth, to the extent that his teeth dripped blood. That was the second hand.

The third fourth hand were empty, striking in the same instant.

The clenched fists of Kurgan with his giant form, were no smaller than the size of a child's skull. Explosive power paired with explosive size, the power of a blow could be said to equate that of a warship's.

Not to mention that one first felt capable of piercing iron plate, approached Garfiel whose mind had blanked after the impact to his head. One toward his body and one toward his head, either with a direct hit was capable of exploding a human.

The blow concentrated on Garfiel's body burned as it scraped across his abdomen.

The fist seared as if scorched in flame, with unnatural power.

Twisting across his body, this fist only scraped away the skin on the surface of his abdomen. The third hand.

A feeling as if having half his body plaguing his consciousness, with his right hand Garfiel blocked the punch headed toward his face. The already broken and shattered right arm, completely burst open under this tremendous force.

Elbow to wrist to tips of fingers, this hand no longer looked like a hand. The shield affixed to the wrist was sent flying as well. But losing a hand was hardly a fatal wound. Garfiel arched his body to meet the first with his forehead. Smashing Kurgan's fist with his headbutt, he avoided the blow from the fourth hand.

Remaining were the fifth, sixth, seventh, eighth. Still distant. Too distant. Distant enough to make one laugh. To make one shiver to their teeth.

Garfiel: "—Aaaaaaaaaa!"

The fifth, the sixth hands were empty as well. One Demon Cleaver yet remained, and a fatal wound had not yet been made.

Both these hands were left hands, each protruding from under the shoulder and side of the body attacking at the same time. The right hand that he'd blocked with was now useless. His left hand couldn't make it in time. Garfiel unhesitatingly stuck his right foot forward.

Soles of his shoes drawing a splash, at the same time conveying his will to the earth.

On occasion the earth lent him strength, on occasion aligned with his whims, and this time too offered him its own power.

From a tilt under his feet, Kurgan's lower body lost its balance.

Even so, without pause the war god righted himself. His movements were without a trace of hesitation. However, in his unwavering attention there appeared a break.

In the instant that Kurgan's attention had shifted below to his feet, seizing this break Garfiel rushed forward.

Lifting his foot, with a twist of his body, shoving his head between the two approaching fists. As if in the eye of a storm, the two fists both swept behind his body.

The instant his feet were in place, Garfiel felt a shudder for his own judgements.

He himself unsure of why he would have made that judgment, a thought and a decision accomplished in a fraction of a measure of time. Brain scorching. Heart scorching. Life on the verge of bursting.

The fifth and sixth hands were thus dealt with. Afterward, the seventh and the eighth hands —.

"…"

Suddenly, Garfiel's hair stood on end at a chill.

Kurgan whose six hands had been dodged would want to use the remaining two to finish Garfiel. —A fatal blow approached.

—Skipping over the seventh hand, the eighth and last hand attacked.

He stopped an attack with one hand, using it to wield the Demon Cleaver.

Right hand holding the pommel of the Demon Cleaver, right shoulder's hand tightly gripping the body of the Demon Cleaver. A blow that surpassed powerful was about to welcome Garfiel from the ground.

Surrounded on all sides, such overwhelming presence that one would believe that they would die no matter they tried to hide.

This was a sight that made the wretched attacks of the previous six hands seem almost a waste.

Avoiding was unimaginable.

Backing away, leaping aside, or rushing forward, would all result in a direct hit.

An image of being turned into a slab of meat as the result of this attack appeared before his eyes.

Escape was impossible. Attacking would be even more reckless. — There was only one option, and so.

Garfiel placed his unbroken left hand on his head, dropping his waist.

In this moment, there was a voice that still remained audible. The sound of little brother and little sister, and a large crowd of people cheering.

Estimating was only in a moment, moving was only in an instant, the result was right there.

"…"

The instant when the Demon Cleaver moved, Garfiel had entirely left this world.

All encompassing silence, all encompassing formlessness. Extraneous surroundings vanished in an instant. In the attention of Garfiel whose focus was sharpened to its absolute limit, remained only Kurgan.

With abnormal sluggishness, with the Demon Cleaver he slashed downward at Garfiel.

Garfiel raised his head, the movements he met the attack with equally slow. In a world so stagnant as to induce anxiousness, all Garfiel could do was tightly clench his teeth.

Wrong, there was still time to revolve around.

He saw Subaru. Saw Ram. Saw Mimi. Saw Frederica. Remembered Lewes, and Emilia, Otto appeared too, thought of that bastard Roswaal, saw Beatrice and Petra and everyone in Sanctuary, and then his mother Reshia and his little brother and little sister.

The battle that had happened at Sanctuary, had allowed Garfiel to realize his own weakness.

Realizing the breadth of the world, when he'd lost to Reinhard, Garfiel had adopted the wrong impression that he was weaker than he'd been before leaving Sanctuary.

—That was impossible.

If embracing more meant more weakness, then for what did people live on.

Being strong enough to protect everything you embraced was enough.

Garfiel: “Ah—feel refreshed.”

Suddenly, the irritation plaguing his heart fell away.

That instant, the Demon Cleaver struck the shield on his left arm, sending a jolt which felt like lightning throughout his entire body.

“—hk!!”

The defense mounted by his left arm, was in an instant cut through by the Demon Cleaver.

Just like his right arm, wrist, elbow, bicep, even shoulder were all twisted beyond repair.

Feeling the familiar pain of a shattered arm as if in a nightmare, agony dyed his vision red, thoughts sinking into complete blankness. Garfiel opened his mouth to form a howl.

The fangs that had been clenched all along loosened, beginning a chorus of despair for each accumulated wound.

The Demon Cleaver's assault did not end.

After shattering his left hand, the momentum that remained slashed at Garfiel's head. Such power would be enough to shatter Garfiel's small body, leaving him nothing but minced meat.

Just how did the war god regard this young warrior who keened agonized wails as if dying.

In his heart was compassion, or pity—was neither.

Unless one side stopped drawing breath, the principle of a warrior pitying a warrior existed not.

"—Aaaaaaaa!"

Garfiel howled from agony as he lowered his head. The sound of that heartrending sound persisted for a long time, and then.

Garfiel: "—aaaa, gah."

The howl stopped, Garfiel clenched his jaw. On the teeth that he clenched down on again, shone a radiance of silver.

That was the silver shield that had fallen from his ruined right arm, which Garfiel had caught in his teeth.

Garfiel: "Gaaaaah, aaaaaaah—!"

Whipping his head around, biting the shield Garfiel had met the Demon Cleaver slashing toward his face, biting the shield had mounted his second defense, slamming it into the side of his face the instant the attack had reached. Blood sprayed from Garfiel's nose, his teeth sent flying, but, his knees did not kneel.

He supported the weight of the Demon Cleaver with biting strength and the strong neck.

The spark of the collision between steel and steel—created a flame, causing Garfiel's consciousness to flicker.

"…"

Even though the whites of his eyes had begun to show, just what kind of willpower was still even now supporting his neck.

Was it fighting instinct, or rather a beast's vitality and survival.

Suddenly, blood spurted out. Vast volumes of blood poured forth, crimson flowers of blood pooling in this underground space.

It sprayed from Kurgan's right hand, that last right hand that clutched the Demon Cleaver.

On it was a wound persisting from the last time he'd attacked Garfiel, deep enough that bone was visible from hand to upper arm. From this blow just now the wound had completely split open.

Kurgan's face bore no shock. Nor did his expression change due to the pain.

That was a matter of course. He was a corpse. Pain existed for the sake of urging people to live, to ensure that the candlelight of life still existed beyond the minimum limit—the deceased did not need such a tool.

And thus, Kurgan had ignored the effect of the injury on his right arm.

If truly wishing to perform the most perfect attack, the last blow should have been given up to his still functioning left hand.

Success or failure determined here at once—was not the right place to say.

However,

Garfiel: “—ah.”

Withstanding attacks from eight hands, Garfiel heaved a sigh with a bloodied face.

The shield clenched between his teeth clattered to the ground. Kurgan’s front was wide open. Yet Garfiel’s left and right were completely useless, muscle in both legs torn from insufficiently withstanding heavy blows. Even so, he could still leap one step.

After leaping over, what to do. Hands, could not be made use of. Then remaining was—.

Garfiel: “Aaaaaaaaaaaaaaaaa!”

Garfiel let out a cry, opened his bleeding mouth wide, rushed toward Kurgan.

Garfiel’s teeth sank into the neck of the stationary war god. Teeth piercing through tight muscles with easy, severing at the base those organs so vital to life.

Biting down like this Garfiel twisted his body, teeth shredding through muscle and sinew, tearing away a large chunk of neck, crunching with force.

Garfiel: “Hah, ah.”

Utterly defenselessly Garfiel collapsed on the ground, spitting out shredded flesh. He turned his head as he vomited, watching Kurgan’s figure as blood gushed from its neck.

Garfiel’s hands were gone, several teeth were missing, body remained stained in blood.

Having been mortally injured by the Garfiel covered in wounds, heroically Kurgan’s body remained yet standing with chest upright.

This was a hero's spirit, so moving as it was of the human heart.

"…"

Finally, Kurgan turned slowly, facing Garfiel.

Facing the warrior who lay on the ground gazing up at him, the war god crossed his arms over his chest with calmness.

And then,

Kurgan. "—Magnificent."

In a baritone low and heavy, commended the victor.

Garfiel: "Aah…"

Without, even allowing him time to reply.

Kurgan's body collapsed right before Garfiel's own two widened eyes.

Collapsing like sand was the figure so large one needed to crane their neck to see, alien face becoming stone and ash. Such an end inspired such grief, the deceased dying once more—this was the result.

This is ultimately the sadness of the people, the deceased once again changed back to the dead – this is the result.

Garfiel: "…What pleasant words."

Watching the war god crumble to ash as he died, Garfiel sighed discontentedly.

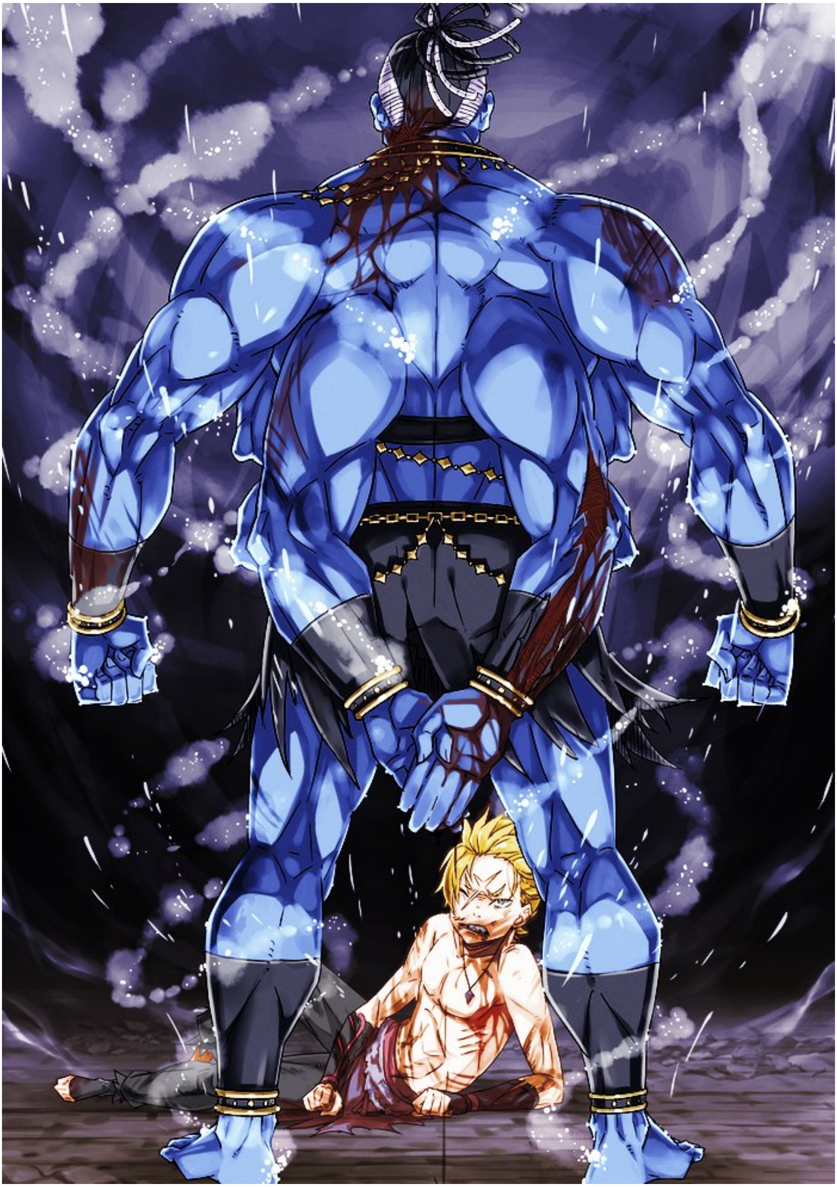
Not that he wished for him to live on so unnaturally, but after a mutual duel to the death, a feeling of emptiness at the end was natural.

And so, this was merely a grief that Garfiel had nowhere else to express.

Garfiel: "Ah, damn it… fuck, screw it…"

The flow of blood was too much.

Laying on the ground, Garfiel used his entire body to channel the Divine Protection of Earth Spirits, into turning his gathered mana into healing magic to repair his body. His hands especially, and his face was a disaster too.



Wounds that had yet to be healed aboveground, immediately followed by such a number of attacks. Being left with heavy injuries was not such a surprise.

???: “Gorgeous Tiger!”

Garfiel who had been putting his all into healing heard a sobbing cry.

Treading puddles to approach were the figures of little brother and little sister. Others approached as well, but in Garfiel’s eyes were only those two.

Both looked to be on the verge of tears—no, they were already crying.

It couldn’t be helped. Even as seen by others, Garfiel’s condition was disastrous. And to someone familiar with this sight that he remained alive was practically unimaginable. If looked at by a healing expert their faces would surely be a terrified white, determining that emergency treatment would be needed.

This also served as proof of just how many hellish trials he’d overcome.

Of course, although he wanted to feel proud of it —

Garfiel: “Survived… but, couldn’t buy a bit ‘f time.”

Even having defeated Eight Arm Kurgan did not mean he’d succeeding in delaying.

This had been Garfiel’s battle, but it was not solely his battle. Right when he’d been dragged into battle, perhaps an ally had sunk into danger.

Needing to return to the city hall, Garfiel sat up.

Hearing his words and seeing his movements, the expressions of the little brother and little sister who had rushed over changed. Little sister especially wore a look of rage.

Sister: “Are, are you stupid?! Alright lie down already! Right away… yes, right away, right away I’ll go call a doctor over…”

Garfiel: “There’re other guys needin’ doctors. My amazin’ self’s got other things t’ do, kiddo.”

Garfiel nodded at the little sister whose face had turned bright red. But his face full of fresh blood perhaps didn’t look very convincing. Little sister ceaselessly wept anguished tears.

During this time, wretchedly broken bones in his arms reconnected. Although the flesh had yet to recover fully, running a few steps wouldn’t have him passing out. Garfiel stood after having reached this conclusion.

Sister: “Wai, wait a minute… Are, are you really going to go?”

Garfiel: “…Th’ broadcast, d’ya hear it too?”

Sister: “Eh… mm, mm.”

Garfiel with fingertips still dripping with blood, Garfiel’s words received a response.

The voice on the broadcast had given little brother and little sister courage, giving Garfiel his last shove here. And so, Garfiel needed to repay that voice on the broadcast.

He said it would be fine, Subaru said it would be fine, and so he had to make it so.

Garfiel: “‘N so, my amazin’ self—”

Sister: “Ah!”

With a stagger his blood deprived body knelt to the ground. Little sister hurriedly supported the body that appeared as if it would fall any second, and Garfiel clicked his tongue.

And then, standing before Garfiel now was little brother.

Fred: “Gorgeous Tiger.”

Garfiel: “…What’s up, but sorry, ‘f you’ll say t’ stop ‘t won’t work.”

Fred: “That, that’s not it. Gorgeous Tiger, your clothes are glowing.”

Hearing little brother’s allegation, Garfiel looked down and finally noticed.

At the waist of his own ragged clothing, a piece of cloth gave a gentle glow.

Stowed there was the conversation mirror. Because it hadn’t been able to connect with the city hall, he’d shoved it there determining it was useless. Its shining right now meant,

Garfiel: “‘d thought, ‘t was broken!”

Sister: “I, I’ll pick up.”

Garfiel’s breath came quickly. Little sister reached toward his waist, pulled the conversation mirror out before she could be stopped. The surface of the mirror shined, which allegedly meant that another conversation mirror from elsewhere was calling here.

In other words, this was either the city hall, or the other group calling his side.

Sister: “What, what should I do…?”

Garfiel: “Bring ‘t here. —Who’s ‘t?”

Little sister carefully brought the mirror close to Garfiel. Garfiel looked at the mirror’s surface, called out.

The conversation mirror, slowly began to flash.

Chapter 63:
The Passion of Liliana Masquerade

1

Priscilla: “There seems to be some sort of unrest… Not following shall certainly bring regret.”

Emilia: “Huh?”

Pulling on Beatrice’s hand and muttering something, Subaru-sama, for some reason, had left the park in a hurry.

The opening words were said by Priscilla-sama, who saw them off with her gaze. Because those were so sudden, Emilia-sama too widened her eyes. The meeting of tow beautiful women’s gazes created a beautiful sight.

Allow us to savor the atmosphere, as we admire the aura they give off with levity.

In their clashing gazes grew sparking petals of flame!

Slim red eyes both harsh and elegant, and gently sloped eyes of pale amethyst.

Caught in Emilia-sama’s gaze, Priscilla-sama’s graceful nose gave a huff, crossing her arms to emphasize her chest. At the sight of that large chest bouncing aggressively, I quietly stroked my own chest. I looked at my hands. Flat.

Emilia: “What does that mean?”

Priscilla: “Nothing, the meaning is literal. You should be able to see through something inconsequential to this degree. Or is your intent truly to question? In that case, it’s laughable to the point of hurting one’s sides.”

Emilia: “…”

Priscilla: “Even between master and servant, secrets are natural… to believe so is comedic. Servants need only hands and feet, there is no necessity for a head. If something like this is permitted, they will reveal attitudes unbefitting of the will of their master. That is precisely the situation you are in.”

Faced with a razor tongue lashing out without pause, Emilia-sama revealed a pensive expression. That dismayed gaze and silver hair swaying with the wind together, inspired a truly indescribable emotion… In truth, it would feel super nice to rub and pluck those cheeks.

Liliana: “Hehehe…”

Anyway, Emilia-sama’s thoughts were in accord. She nodded toward Priscilla-sama with “Understood” as a response.

Emilia: “Okay, I’ll do it… Although I believe what you’ve said is correct, my thoughts on being a master and servant are a little different.”

Priscilla: “How truly presumptuous to raise objection to my thoughts. And dullness and foolishness are of equal demerit. My tolerance for your disagreement runs thin, so with haste, take your leave.”

Emilia: “Thank you. I’ll catch up to him… Though I’m sorry to leave Liliana behind as well.”

Liliana: “Hehehe… Uwah?!”

While quietly listening to this story, Emilia-sama gave me an apologetic blink. Pondering what it meant, I raised a fist at Emilia-sama.

Liliana: “Please don’t worry, Emilia-sama. Songstress Liliana here! I believe in Emilia-sama and Subaru-sama’s return, so relax and leave protecting this park from harm to me!”

Although energetically speaking about being a Songstress, calling myself in this manner was truly embarrassing! More embarrassing then had been previously expected!

Emilia: “I’ve got no idea what you’re talking about, but I’ll leave it to you. Priscilla, don’t bully Liliana.”

Priscilla: “Refrain from carelessly calling out my name. My intent has already been conveyed. Leave at once, find that clown to play with.”

Emilia: “Really.”

Rather unfriendly terms, but Priscilla-sama seemed unbothered. Right until vanishing from the range of my gaze, Emilia-sama continued to glance at me with concern.

Ah, farewell, Emilia-sama. Although there were many more words that should have been said, merely being able to survey you from all angles was enough.

Liliana: “A flash. Please listen—To look up from under your feet.”

Priscilla: “You fool, if there remains time for levity, use it to seek the supreme melody. This world cannot match your talent, and everyone’s lifespan is equally limited… And so, the value of the same second differs greatly between you and one of the mundane. The leisure of squandering as one pleases is the privilege of those wealthy. But lacking the discipline to better yourself is the equivalent of flinging yourself into a sewer.”

Liliana: “Shamed by your praise, my spirits are rising rapidly, falling rapidly, too much for me to keep up with!”

Have I been praised? Scolded? Smart people are always disorienting and exceedingly incomprehensible when they speak.

I’m a wandering bard, rarely do I feel shame, without education and without family and without grave! Wandering without end and without boundary on this world is my guiding principle! The path of song!

Priscilla: “That others are incapable of understanding your quirks, looking at the world differently, cannot be helped. Even so, to be ignorant is undeserving of pride. This affects the quality of your beloved song.”

Liliana: “Nonono! Not in the slightest?”

Priscilla: “—Oh?”

Liliana: “Eek!”

At the instinctive retort, Priscilla’s voice lowered in pitch. Her narrowed eyes were both beautiful and terrifying, but this Liliana here was not one to immediately yield.

Liliana: “P-Please stop, Priscilla-sama… Defying Priscilla-sama wasn’t my intent…”

Priscilla: “Refrain from acting in a deplorable manner that does not befit your talent. To have your value decrease would be an insult to myself, who has praised your song. You are forgiven.”

As with lines on one’s palm, paths to happiness were not shared!

Uncertain of why Priscilla-sama would care about something like this, eh… Asking a little shouldn’t be such a big deal, right?

Liliana: “So… to Priscilla-sama, one’s education and their song are related?”

Priscilla: “Indeed.”

Liliana: “Well, I believe that a person’s education has nothing to do with the quality of their songs.”

Priscilla: “Oh, and why would you think so?”

Liliana: “—Because there is no requirement for a song to move people’s hearts.”

Songs are powerful.

It would be very arrogant of me to believe that my song possesses such power. I am still inexperienced, and though I am confident that my goals are lofty and that I am on the right course, I still have a long way to go.

Immature song, immature performance, but the heart that had been full of passion since youth was mature indeed.

Liliana: “Using song to express joy doesn’t require much learning; using song to express sorrow, merely a heart is enough; using song to express rage, naked rage is enough… it’s like that.”

The Lyulyre, and this tiny body, were more than enough for use in song.

Complicated words were unnecessary. Desire to learn was precious, but the chosen path of a bard was not one of being unable to enjoy song without it.

A bard lives for song. But the song does not choose an audience. And so, neither should the bard.

Liliana: “To have my song contain my feelings is enough, I don’t intend for it to express anything complicated. As for what’s left in the heart of audience, is for the audience to determine—song brings joy in such a way. Lingering in the heart, from time-to-time, subconsciously rising as a sudden hum… If something like that were to happen in my song, then this life was not lived for naught.”

Priscilla: “—Hmm.”

Liliana: “Hah!”

Noble bard full of energy, but the opponent was a Royal Candidate whose aura could strike a flying bird down in midair.

Among them, Priscilla-sama was especially famed for her troublesome character. With only a relationship of singing and dancing together, to attempt to get closer to her was too arrogant!

Liliana: “Eh, it’s fine, at this moment today I’ll agree with you… This is an exception, mm, an exception. Hehe, although sorry for intending to ignore…”

Priscilla: “Excellent, you… rather, you are truly a good child.”

Liliana: “Eh?”

The legs that had been intending to apologize and run, were caught by Priscilla-sama's words.

On that note, had Priscilla-sama smiled just now? In other words, just Priscilla smiled? A pure smile without hostility, something like that, it somehow felt cute.

Priscilla: "I was the unreasonable one, you are merely following your steps forward. Do approach me should you find trouble, for you have value enough to receive my regard."

Liliana: "Eeeeeeeeeh?!"

For some reason, this was an evaluation far higher than imagined!

Priscilla-sama then, unexpectedly and unhesitatingly, sat on the edge of the park's fountain with leisure. Boldly crossing her legs, and what long legs, looking even longer! Or not.

Liliana: "I… can keep my life?"

Priscilla: "Even should this world come to meet its end, I shall guarantee your survival until the very last."

Liliana: "I'm full of energy to live on with confidence even should the world be completely destroyed! Inspiration flashes, please listen —The Woman of Utter Despair."

Priscilla: "If this song is dedicated to mineself, surely it must be noble?"

Liliana: "…Bringing forth, a classic called the Record of the Blight Dragon Conquest!"

This refreshing atmosphere of being about to be beaten to a pulp amongst joyful sounds and laughing words, how lovely it felt.

Priscilla-sama sat before the rushing water, before a fountain that seemed as if it could swallow her up, as I tried my hardest, as if stepping on hot coals. Plucking the strings of the Lyulyre, immersing myself in the piece I had performed many times.

Raising focus to the extreme, this feeling of casting the world aside—I call it the Singer’s Realm, I want to be immersed in it!

Come, immersion! Forget unrest and terror, along with every trouble!

Hyahya, all those troubles!!!

2

Priscilla: “—Cease the performance.”

Liliana: “Hehehe, can’t be done… Eh? What did you say?”

If there were too many troubles, the Singer’s Realm could not be relaxedly entered, but just now the immersion had come without issue.

Then, even though the song had been executed perfectly, Priscilla-sama stood with a serious expression. Why? Did the song sound unpolished?

Liliana: “Priscilla-sama?”

Priscilla: “Have you yet to notice? The city is strangely loud… As I relaxed, something malicious began to foolishly stir.”

Liliana: “Eh…”

The words that had left Priscilla-sama’s mouth were confusing. What exactly had just happened?

Priscilla: “It seems that Pristella is facing a disaster. If it goes on like this… that clown’s intuition would have been surprisingly accurate. How unpleasant.”

The one called “clown”, was probably Subaru-sama. But what about intuition, what did it have to do with leading Beatrice away, and with Emilia-sama who chased after them…?

Subaru = “Lolimancer”, Beatrice = “Loli”, Emilia = “Amazing Lovely Girl With Magic”.

Liliana: “Oh no! What happened to Pristella?”

Priscilla: “Truly, for subjects other than singing, blood isn’t circulating within your head whatsoever. Unlike myself, exceptional in all regards, you are only exceptional in one. But I do find it to my taste.”

Priscilla-sama, who closed her eyes, began to fan herself with the fan she had taken out at some point as if she had a headache.

I would truly like to exchange more words with that Priscilla-sama, but this was not the time.

Liliana: “Indeed, everyone who was in the park vanished…”

Priscilla: “That was because you have revealed an uncouth attitude during your performance.”

Eh… I do hope you can forgive me for lying on the ground and playing the Lyulyre with my teeth.

Liliana: “However, should any incident occur, the broadcast of the magical device in the City Hall should immediately reach the entire city. Kiritaka-san reminded me too, this morning I…”

Priscilla: “That device can spread sound to an exaggerated degree? Indeed, listening to your song throughout the city is enjoyable… But what about it?”

Liliana: “—?”

In addition to the regular morning broadcast, the Watergate City of Pristella was a place with high attention to safety because of the presence of the large watergates. Shelters were located all throughout the city, so the citizens should be well-aware of those.

So why—

Liliana: “Ah… what’s this?”

My chest, what made it suddenly start to ache? How strange. On my chest was nothing so dashing as an old wound.

So, this feeling—

Priscilla: “…Do not approach.”

My smile faltered, an “Eh?” of consternation escaping my lips. Priscilla-sama suddenly raised her head to look toward the sky.

—Following immediately, was the sound of the city’s broadcasting device.

???: “Well then, all you trash, rotting meats, please take care to pitiably die off and rot away, kyahahaha! The person making this broadcast here, is a Sin Archbishop of the Witch Cult, representing Lust! Capella Emerada Lugunica-sama! Kyahahahahaha!”

The sharp, piercing voice cut off all of a sudden, quietness coming afterward. Leaving only the sound of the wind, and that of the water flowing from the fountain. That sound had appeared far too suddenly, unnatural enough to think it was a dream.

Priscilla: “Really now, quite the conceited words.”

Ah, that wasn’t a dream. Seems that wasn’t a dream.

The nearby Priscilla-sama’s tone grew terrifying, scaring me into turning my head to confirm her words. My keen survival instincts were informing me, “This turn of events is no good!”

Liliana: “Um, so, Priscilla-sama… so, perhaps it’s simply just an exercise… or maybe a malicious prank, that’s a possibility to. That’s what I think, but…”

Priscilla: “Desire and speculation are of different nature. If this were a malicious prank, who would call upon the infamy of the Witch Cult’s name? And in addition, the opponent claims to be a Sin Archbishop. You know those lunatics are a group who give no thought to time, place, or means.”

Liliana: “Uhh…”

Priscilla: “And within the city is that clown, the one who killed one such lunatic. That they would grow more frantic because of that is a matter of course. Who knows how many people are completely hopeless like you.”

Priscilla-sama’s words were still difficult to comprehend, but right now she seemed to be taking great pains so that I could understand.

With that, even someone like me with holes in their brain could understand. The attack of the Witch Cult led by the Sin Archbishop had already become reality, and in addition it was very likely the City Hall had been captured already.

In that case…

Liliana: “Is… is Kiritaka-san okay?”

Priscilla: “Well, that name is an unknown. If he is someone relevant to the city and, furthermore, dwells in the City Hall, there is no way to assure his safety. Seems that now is no longer the time to remain here and enjoy music.”

As soon as Priscilla-sama finished speaking, she took up her fan, marching forward with unflinching will. Ehhh, but, that was in the opposite direction of the shelter.

Liliana: “Then, then, don’t you want to find a shelter?! Choosing a path differing from what’s expected in an emergency will lead to disaster!”

Priscilla: “Hiding in a shelter with head bowed, waiting for the trouble to pass as if it is merely a stream of water, that is indeed fine. But the issue this time is a different matter. For if I do not act, this situation will not come to an end.”

Liliana: “Which is to say, you intend to kill a Sin Archbishop?!”

This Royal Candidate, who intended to slaughter her way into the City Hall—!

It was a matter of course that it was something to be witnessed, but to allow her to throw herself into a battlefield like this without a chance of victory would end only in tragedy.

Speaking of which, with Priscilla-sama so full of confidence, could it be that she was capable of doing battle?

Responding to my words so full of doubt, Priscilla-sama covered her mouth with a fan as she looked back, tilting her head slightly.

Priscilla: “No, before that, Schult must be retrieved. Al is fine either way, it doesn’t matter what becomes of that fool. But Schult’s adorableness is without substitute. If I do not take care to retrieve him, surely he will be crying somewhere.”

Liliana: “Eh? Eh?”

Priscilla: “As for the other one, presumably he followed what I decreed this morning, and is wasting his time at a tavern. A stroll in that area would perhaps locate him. Truly, what a troublesome man.”

As she rambled on, Priscilla-sama strode toward the park’s exit without hesitation. Though I clearly knew what was occurring, the way she looked at the situation, her decisions and actions were all too stunning.

Then, Priscilla-sama turned back,

Priscilla: “Though my request was not for you to follow, if you get too far from me, you shall no longer be in Sun Disk’s range. If you wish to refrain from mingling with frantic fools, you would do well to follow myself.”

What is this, it’s terrifying! Just what had happened?

Liliana: “Priscilla-sama?! What’s going to happen after you find the ones you are looking for?! Wait, Priscilla-sama!”

Hurriedly chasing the silent shadow of her back, paying no mind to those who were fleeing for the shelters, with dignity we walked about the city. The shadow of her back gave off such a sense of security, that perhaps even Sin Archbishops didn’t need to be feared…

—Thinking so was a mistake, was what I realized soon after.

3

I moved forward through the city according to Priscilla-sama’s words. What was curious was that despite being unaware of where exactly her destination was, at every fork in a canal or street, Priscilla-sama chose her path without hesitation.

Because of those correct choices, I, who should have been guiding her, had no chance to give my performance!

Liliana: “Isn’t this Priscilla-sama’s first time in Pristella? Moving with such ease that it’s startling…”

Priscilla: “No, this is the first time. Because its name is similar to my own, and because the sights of the Royal Capital of Water are famed, I had thought to visit one day. This development was not expected in the slightest.”

Liliana: “Is that so, this really is a shame. It was supposed to have been a much more tranquil, lovely city, without a need to rush like this.”

The Watergate City of Pristella was certainly a place most interesting for touring. For someone like me, who’d been staying at this place an awful lot of time for a bard, a leisurely stroll through the city was blissful. It seemed that the Muse Company, which had its roots here, had been making efforts in that direction, especially since Kiritaka-san’s generation.

Well, it’s hard to say, because Kiritaka-san is more likely to spoil me than to tell me complicated things like that. Kiritaka-san, please be safe.

Liliana: “Speaking of which, we happened across no one! A city where you’d find people walking on the streets, where water dragons’d be visible on every street with a canal, where singing’d lead to meeting Kiritaka-san, is in such a strange situation!”

Ever since the Witch Cult had first made a broadcast, no sound had been made. In addition to the people and water dragons all going missing, the only noises that stirred were the flow of water and wind.

How quiet. But, it felt like more than just quiet. This stillness, wasn’t it too ominous?

Priscilla: “Don’t wander off, it should be a right turn here. Do you understand? Follow my directions.”

Liliana: “Eh, don’t you want to take this path? It’s clearly a shortcut to that bridge and cross the waterway… Really, how scatterbrained of Priscilla-sama.”

Priscilla: “Oh—?”

Liliana: “Eep! Apologies, I misspoke!”

I wanted to decrease the distance by telling her of a shortcut, but it was a failure! Speaking of which that “oh” was too scary! The gaze of a beast… No, the gaze of a beast that hunts beasts!”

Priscilla: “Follow my instructions, and nothing shall go wrong.”

Liliana: “Hehe, this lowly one will now completely obey Priscilla-sama!”

Following Priscilla-sama’s directions, after this we took several winding routes. For some reason, during this not a single person was encountered. Time was running out!

Liliana: “Let’s be cheery as we walk and sing?”

Priscilla: “You said that song chooses neither place nor its audience. But even if you do not opt for others to listen, others have the right to choose the song.”

Liliana: “—?”

Priscilla: “Allow your throat to rest for a time… it shall not be long until your opportunity to sing arrives.”

Liliana: “Ahhhhh.”

Like that, Priscilla-sama’s eyes held a hint of having predicted something. That twisting and turning manner of talking felt suffocating to someone like me who took straightforwardness as a duty, but I shut my mouth and kept silent.

And so, this odd and silent tour through the city—

Priscilla: "—Here."

Having paused her footsteps, what Priscilla-sama was regarding was one of the shelters in the city—the Convention Center of Second Street. If the City Hall at the center was the a place of assembly for the entire city, then the Convention Center of each numbered street was where each of their standpoints would be discussed.

Kiritaka-san was not only the manager of the Third Street convention center, but he also had influence in the operation of the City Hall.

Liliana: "Oh, being unexpectedly taken somewhere safe! Quite honestly, I was even a bit scared on where I was going to be taken!"

Priscilla: "Hm? What are you saying? Hurry and get inside, blabbermouth."

Since this was a Convention Center, inside were probably one or several extraordinary people. Besides, because it was a place where the people living in the area had escaped to, it was at the same time place to heal the loneliness of not seeing anyone—

???: "You, the fuck are you saying? I'll kill you!"

This lovely daydream dissipated like fog after being met by a cry of rage.

An enraged roar filled with real murderous intent, with no intent of letting off those words as a simple strongly worded threat.

Those uncouth men had cast aside their usual frivolity, to exude genuine killing intent—I am a bard, but also a woman, and having wandered through so many places, taking not only safe paths, but having travelled dangerous ones as well… This was what was known as "rage".

That which could not remain unfaced, the Wrath that accompanied violence and murder.

Liliana: “P-Priscilla-sama…? This is…”

I was about to break down, and without being aware of it, I clung onto Priscilla-sama beside me, but she avoided my outstretched hand, glancing around the convention chamber with an extremely listless gaze.

On my knees, with disbelief, I surveyed the scene that Priscilla-sama was examining.

—The sound of a scream.

Inside the meeting room, the crowd shoved each other and flung insults, voicing loud words of hatred.

They must have numbered fifty… no, a hundred? Two hundred?

In summary, a mass of people pushed over those beside them indiscriminately, male and female and old and young together.

Insulting each other… those insults tinged with hostility and malice, displaying violent behavior, full of intent to wound and kill. Many had fallen and shed blood, and, in the corner of the convention chamber, there were the quivering forms of children.

What in the world was happening?

Priscilla: “Hmph… Amidst such a mass of random people, finding just Schult is indeed difficult.”

Casting me aside in my astonishment and sense of defeat, Priscilla harrumphed, face calm as ever in the face of those annoying screams.

…No, but, this situation was a disaster? Why was she so unaffected?

Priscilla: “It is certain that this kind of event has occurred through the city. Perhaps you may have been too slow to realize it—as I did avoid a path of trouble.”

Liliana: “Avoid…?!”

After saying it out loud, I finally understood the meaning of those words.

The reason that Priscilla-sama had gone out of her way to take the long way around—was to avoid those where people were coming into conflict with one another.

I alone had failed to notice, while leisurely complaining about things like the lack of people—!

Liliana: “Pushing and fighting each other like this… Does this have to do with the Witch Cult?”

Priscilla: “Were this just bickering because of their anxiety, I would have dismissed it as the extreme of the masses’ stupidity, but that is not the case. These people… No, the area of this entire city has been covered in some asinine power. This is the result.”

I couldn’t understand the most important parts of Priscilla-sama’s words. But at least I realized that the people hurting each other right now, were not doing so of their own intent.

Liliana: “Why, why am I untouched? Do I have the unique ability to counter something like this… Or rather, did I awaken in this moment?!”

Priscilla: “‘Tis the majesty of mine Sun Disk. Without it, perhaps you would have been swept along with it… But more importantly.”

Priscilla-sama narrowed her eyes, surveying those who shoved at each other. With the same gaze that she’d given me a “Oh—?” with. Which was to say that it was terrifying. Looking at those two eyes, her next words would presumably be equally terrifying.

That presumption was right.

Priscilla: “To find someone in this commotion, is practically the dream of a madman. With a small display of intimidation, they shall shut their mouths.”

Liliana: "…Eh?"

As her words fell, Priscilla-sama casually "drew a sword from the air". No, to say it like that was wrong. To be more precise, the light became a sword?

Priscilla: "Be enchanted by the brilliance of my Yang Sword—"

The sword which Priscilla-sama held was decorated with a beautiful floral pattern, dyed in red from pommel to blade. Radiating sunlight from within Priscilla-sama's hands, illuminating the entire convention chamber… How dazzling! How wondrous! A degree of illumination that regular light was incapable of reaching, scorching the eyes as if it were the sun. Kya, kyaaaaaaaaa—!

From up close, how damaging to my two eyes!

Ducking away to keep my distance, planning to raise a complaint to Priscilla-sama—And then I noticed it.

The convention center had grown quiet, the people fighting now focusing on Priscilla-sama. But of course, if such a blinding light appeared, it was only natural that everyone's quarrel would end.

And just when their hands and voices stopped,

???: "Priscilla-sama—Hk!!"

A boy who had been sobbing near the wall approached, running with cheeks reddened as he jumped towards Priscilla-sama. Priscilla-sama caught the boy directly from the front, stroking his peach-colored hair with gentleness.

Priscilla: "To be so troublesome, only you alone could receive my attention like this. Schult, have you realized what a fool you've been?"

Schult: "I-I… I thought I wouldn't make it…! But, Priscilla-sama… Priscilla-sama…"

Priscilla: "Well, crying easily is expected of children, they shall not be blamed for it."

The sight of the boy having his hair so gently stroked was surprising.

No, Priscilla-sama had come all the way to look for this child, so I'd assumed she cared very much for him, but witnessing this showed that it was not the case. It felt very uncomfortable, because Priscilla-sama's attitude was frigid. Thinking about it nearly made my neck twist.

However, it couldn't be assumed that with such a spectacle, it would be easy to escape. After all, we'd become the target of the attention of this convention center!

The enraged crowd was now focusing on the radiant Priscilla-sama. And in addition, they had just noticed that the shining blade had disappeared.

Liliana: "Priscilla-sama, where did the sword from just now go?"

Priscilla: "Its consumption is high. So when not in use, it must fade back into sunlight. Hmph."

Responding to my question, Priscilla-sama looked towards the ones who gazed at her. Her gaze was calm as always… Which was to say, apathetic.

Priscilla: "What are you lot staring at me for, you fools without reason? It is natural that you commoners worship my beauty, but understand time and place plus your own position. The first and most polite action would be to kneel."

Liliana: "Why are you provoking them—?!"

Pressing Schult into her chest, with a fierce expression Priscilla-sama pointed at the ground, ordering everyone present to fall to their knees. Although as expected, the crowd, much more short-tempered than usual, became enraged and rushed forward.

The ground rumbled violently, and I hurriedly dropped my bottom to the ground as I tried to curl up. However, Priscilla-sama remained standing there. No, wait.

Man: “This woman! What kind of joke…”

Priscilla: “First of all is you—At least soar with grace.”

The large man attempted to grab Priscilla-sama in a fit of rage, but she immediately dodged aside, shoving his broad chest away.

A man who seemed to have twice my weight was blown away like a leaf. No, really, that easy, not exaggerating.

Man: “—Hk?!”

The body of the man flew away in the direction of the mass of people rushing in, causing a dramatic and pitiful sight. One after another they were pushed back and knocked over, toppling like dominos.

And so, due to that initial loss, the crowd’s momentum came to a halt. The legs of those lined in front trembled upon seeing Priscilla-sama’s strength.

Priscilla: “As you can see, were it what I will, all of you could be cut down with ease. Although it is bothersome, if you desire to attack, approach in turn. For only today I shall spare the time to thoroughly respond to your desires.”

Refugees: “…”

Priscilla-sama spoke in a regal tone, glaring at those surrounding her.

That said, there was no one who would approach after hearing those words. The enraged demeanor of before went who knows where… Or rather, the rage lingered on in everyone’s hearts. It was merely that they had yet to lose their minds enough to direct it at Priscilla-sama.

Priscilla: “It appears that there are none. Well then, there is no longer meaning in remaining here. My attendant has been found safe and sound. You lot are free to enjoy yourselves, once I have departed.”

Liliana: “Eh?!”

As soon as Priscilla-sama finished speaking, she took the hand of the crying Schult, striding toward the exterior of the Convention Center with lavish steps. She’s on her way, but is this really how she’s going to go? Is this really okay?

Liliana: “Ah, but! Just leaving everyone here like this…”

Priscilla: “After my departure, the quarrel will start anew… It would not be surprising if it ultimately led to slaughter. However, do I have any reason to terminate it?”

Liliana: “That is…”

It might be the case, but was it really fine like this? No matter how you looked at it, just leaving them behind was far too terrible.

Liliana: “P-Priscilla-sama is a candidate in the Royal Selection…”

Priscilla: “Even for me, there are things that I cannot accomplish. Without question, I am indeed in that annoying position, but to use it as an excuse is too forced.”

Liliana: “Guh…!”

She stopped me before I could finish, and I was no longer able to raise voice to any retorts!

But, but, once we’re gone, the quarrel would start anew. Could I really do something so ruthless such as escaping?

Something like this, I—

Priscilla: “Or is that to say, you’ll solve it?”

Liliana: “—Eh?!”

Just as I was hesitating, Priscilla-sama murmured in a low voice. What did that mean, that, uh, rather appealing proposal?

Priscilla: “Before, you told me. To enjoy song requires no qualification. Not selecting place or audience is the essence of that which you give the moniker of “song”. If so, why do you not use your miraculous song to save that lot?”

Liliana: “…”

Priscilla: “You are within my Sun Disk. In addition, as I previously proclaimed, you are to approach me should you come across trouble. Although perhaps it may be early to play this card… But this is still a pleasure. Remaining here for nary a moment just to be able to hear your song would be acceptable.”

As if provoking me, Priscilla-sama folded her arms over her chest. Was it a quirk, to raise her chest like this?

That violent cleavage could be seen with ease. I brushed my hand over my chest. Flat. I stared down at that hand.

That palm was wet with cold sweat.

Liliana: “Is it… possible?”

Priscilla: “It matters not if you do it—If that is what you believe, then it shall merely amount to wasted effort.”

If you don’t have the ability to sing, but yet think you do, then, so be it. If thinking that songs had no power, such a line of thinking was not wrong.

I’m sure I do, I’m sure I do, I’m sure I don’t—!

Taking up the Lyulyre from my back, I gripped it tightly with both hands.

The people who had yet to become my audience, people who had stored all their rage in their core, were watching! How dare they! When clearly from now, I was about to sing!

—To hope that, when everyone savored the sound of song together joyously, that they would not fight!

Priscilla: “Schult, wait for a little. You shall witness something entertaining.”

Schult: “Understood.”

Priscilla-sama and Schult stood behind my figure as I held the Lyulyre.

I don’t need to see what they looked like, ugh, despicable, it was obvious without looking!

The girl, Liliana! Wandering the world with only a Lyulyre, a bard who forever held heroes in her heart! If she failed here, both the woman and her life would be ruined!

Liliana: “Inspiration flashes! Please listen—Ripples on the Surface of the Watergate City!”

Return to sanity, then show me a frenzy! If this takes away time that would be spent fighting, it’s all the more meaningful!

Chapter 64:
The Despondence of Liliana Masquerade

1

Liliana: “…”

Fingers sliding across the strings of the Lyulyre, reproducing a movement that was completely bound with familiarity. For many years, for many tens of thousands of times, for as long as I can remember, these fingertips have played these notes.

For me, to sing was as natural as drawing breath, as natural as exhaling laughter when encountering amusement, so it was far too difficult to remember when it had started…

Throat opening, diaphragm inhaling, rhythm intertwining with the melody I had started playing.

What I sang were all the words, all the feelings that emerged in my mind in the moment. All of those were overlaid atop the melody that would surface in my mind in a similar fashion.

Liliana: “…”

When creating a new song, although I would say “Inspiration flashes”, to truly say that it was inspiration flashing was rather absurd.

In other words, it was no sudden flash, but a discovery. Calling it that would perhaps be more suitable. In this instant, the melody and words emerging in my mind were things hidden within this world in origin.

Discovering a melody somehow forgotten by the world.

Stumbling across it by coincidence, taking it up by chance, as if a gift had descended from the skies—a tune concealed in the corners of the world. I have all along regarded it as such.

And thus I had told Priscilla-sama that even without learning anything whatsoever, music could be enjoyed. If one completely gave up all their wisdom, all their knowledge, it would be the same.

Because music was sung, even if not by a human being.

Ever heard birdsong? Ever heard a chorus of cicadas? Ever quietly listened to the wind sweeping across a stream, felt it raise a murmured voice?

Did they also have humanity? Perhaps, or rather, no, they shouldn’t have. At the very least I think they don’t! I don’t!

From the sun that illuminates all, from the moon that waxes and wanes, from the earth that diffuses its aroma, from the firewood that crackles, have you ever felt music? I have! I’ve felt it—that is proof that music permeates this world.

That is proof that the world is constructed by music, this world is filled with music, this world is connected by music.

Liliana: “…”

Us bards merely borrow songs from this world filled with music. Music that was originally present everywhere, can be made slightly easier to notice with a little meddling.

Without shyness, without apology, we selfishly enjoy this exquisite melody alone.

It doesn’t matter if you think of it like that. It doesn’t matter that we think of it like that.

However, isn’t this music something lovely?

There is joy in sharing with strangers that which is interesting, and that which is fun. There is joy in laughing out loud when something is funny and when something is amusing.

Music is like that. Music allows you to do that.

Because the entire world is singing, who would scold those who sing?

Come, immerse, immerse, immerse your all. Come, devote, devote, devote your all.

Submerge in joy, fill your heart with glee, be imprisoned by happiness!

Use not only your ears, but also your eyes, nose, skin, heart, soul, all of those to “join” with the “music”!

Frenzy swallowed the audience, washing away the extreme Wrath in one wave.

Swaying in dance, raising their voice, like that, they became one with the performance. Should their gazes overlap with those around them, they would notice they were now sharing the same feelings.

Of course. Music has always been by your side, an ever-present comrade, from birth to death. You’ve seen it, heard it, felt it.

We are always here, calling for such music—!

Liliana: “So, hell yeah! You weren’t quiet at all, but thank you for the attention—Ahhhhh!”

Singing on, uwaaaah!

2

E~h, so, how to put it, sorry for gleefully forgetting myself.

After the end of an extensive performance such as that, recalling the passionate demeanor I’d worn, my cheeks reddened.

Schult: “Um, onee-san was amazing! I was very moved!”

Teehee! How cute was Schult-kun’s cluelessly pure gaze! My heart was itching, aching! Those undirtied, wholesome, watery red eyes, made blood go drip-drip in my heart!

Ri~ght, this kid was completely without malice, so it wasn’t sarcasm. He merely expressed his childish feelings with earnestness. Though I was aware of this, his praise couldn't be accepted comfortably because he was too cute!

What a pity, Schult… As an adult, this purity would be dirtied.

Schult: "—? I couldn't understand some of it, so apologies for my lack of study."

Hya! That dejected expression was unfairly cute!

This child gives off an impression that makes you want to do something terribly mischievous?! A little, just a little touch… He~hehe…

Priscilla: "Liliana. That performance just now was not dreadful. You are worthy of my praise."

Liliana: "Gyobih!"

Priscilla: "What was that horrendous sound just now? A girl… especially one such as you, their throat cannot be making such noises."

Just as Schult was about to be reached by an adult's sinful demonic grasp, I was caught up with a trickster like Priscilla-sama. No, I had no plans to do anything deplorable, really, none whatsoever.

By the way, the moment he saw Priscilla-sama, Schult's face became sunny, sticking close to her waist. Though saying so, it wasn't tight clinging, merely lightly holding part of Priscilla-sama's red dress… the modest demeanor of an angel.

Now, we'd come to pick up this precious Schult-kun, and attempted to turn the Convention Center, about to become the very scene of a catastrophe, into a Festival Hall…

Liliana: "This result was unexpected… At some point when I wasn't paying attention, it seems I reached the pinnacle of music. Indeed, a goddess of music without parallel!"

Priscilla: "Foolishness. To be aware of the difference between the mundane and your own ability is imperative. But to evaluate one’s self so highly lacks elegance. Your song was indeed worth enjoying, but the time to call yourself without parallel is yet to arrive. You were merely lucky; that they immersed so early was solely because they were suggestible.”

Liliana: “Suggestible?”

What did that mean?

Priscilla-sama fanned herself with a listless expression as she scanned the faces in the Convention Center. I hurriedly followed her gaze, seeing many people.

People had finally been released by the sick feeling that had them insulting, attacking and fighting each other, had recovered their cool. Some extended their hands to those who had been shoved over, some offered apologies, some responded constantly with “It’s fine it’s fine”, some silently gave treatment to those who had been injured.

Oh, well then, my song was pretty amazing! The ones who had been arguing like that earlier, had in fact sunk into such a lukewarm state… Practically the talent of a master!

Priscilla: “Do not forget yourself with glee. The influence of unrest which played these commoners as if marionettes still persists. The sound of your song alleviated the commoners’ distrust and fear. However, without solving the root of the cause, they shall soon devolve to their previous state.”

Liliana: “Pfft?! Ah, no, but, think about it, every time their hearts are pulled into that tough spot, I’ll clean them away with my fervent…”

Priscilla: “In theoretical terms, that works. However, if you treat the symptoms, the root of the problem remains. And beyond that, this commotion is not occurring merely at this Convention Center.”

Liliana: “Wh-Wh-Wh-What?!”

This was the first time I was hearing of… No, earlier Priscilla-sama had said that such conflict had been avoided on the way here. Could it be that such disruption was occurring all throughout the city?! Isn't that really bad?!

Liliana: "P-P-P-Pristella, we have to do something about it."

Priscilla: "Well, that is how it is. To be frank, I do not possess any obligation to try to save this city…"

Schult: "Priscilla-sama…"

Once again, a merciless, cold-blooded, iron expression! With his gaze trembling, Schult looked towards Priscilla-sama as she spoke. How to put it, it was obvious upon a glance that Schult-kun seemed so normal next to Priscilla-sama. Perfectly perfect wholesomeness.

Ah, this child is hopeless, completely in line with my preferences.

Not receiving a response from Schult-kun, not knowing whether he shared my feelings counted as my loss. Priscilla-sama shrugged helplessly, breasts bouncing with violence. I gazed at my hands.

Liliana: "How old is Priscilla-sama?"

Priscilla: "Nineteen."

Liliana: "I see. By the way, just to mention, I'm twenty-two."

Priscilla: "No one asked."

I just wanted to mention it. What was this difference, something in diet? Did the disadvantage of being a wandering traveler, a bard, come into play here? Such suffering.

Priscilla: "Without even mentioning having Schult trapped here, daring to display such disrespect during my stay, I am hardly so generous as to forgive it. Without regard of which Witch Cultist is involved, their heads shall roll."

As my hands tightened, Priscilla-sama's decree seemed to have been settled upon.

Although many excuses would be voiced, I well understood that she was really thinking to Schult-kun's request.

Liliana: "Really, Priscilla-sama is truly, too, overprotective of Schult-kun♪ …"

Priscilla: "…"

Liliana: "Gyah?! Burning, burning, it's burning?!"

On fire?! Caught on fire just now?!

In the instant that I'd jabbed Priscilla-sama in the side with my elbow, fire had ignited over my head?! The tips of my hair were curling from burning?! There wasn't even a "Ho" this time!

Sudden brutality! Genuine panic! Unforgettable nightmare!

Schult: "O-Onee-san, are you okay…?!"

Schult ran over towards me in a shock as I rolled with my head burning. Perhaps to try to extinguish the flame immediately, he withdrew a bottle from the parcel, intending to tip its contents into me, struggling to pour its contents on my body. In the meantime, my head had been engulfed by flame.

Priscilla: "Halt, Schult."

Schult: "But, Priscilla-sama…!"

Priscilla: "This is my evening alcohol. As it my property, even a slight drop would turn the singer into a ball of flame. These sound like jests, but this is the reality."

Liliana: "Owowowowowowow—!"

Before I could be ignited, I rolled back and forth on the frigid ground. Schult tilted his tiny neck to ask, "Can alcohol catch on fire?"

Despicable, master and servant had collaborated to have me perish in flame… But! Even were I to die here, the soul of a bard would not rest, and my song would echo by your bedside nightly… Because song was everywhere in this world!

Priscilla: “If you would not mind it, doing so is fine as well by me. Speaking of which, kicking up such a fuss over singed hair tips, hurry and stand.”

Liliana: “Eh? Where’d the cursed flame go? I should be enclosed in scorching flame and turned to ash?”

Ah, for real, I wasn’t burning at all. That was so surprising that I completely lost it.

Laughing with embarrassment while wiping my clothing, feeling like people were staring at me, I walked to Priscilla-sama’s side. I had to talk to her directly.

Liliana: “Well then, Priscilla-sama! In order to save Pristella, please attack with a bang, gracefully giving your regards to the Sin Archbishop! I’ll be rotoing for you!”

Priscilla: “Do not speak as if it were another’s affair. I have already decided to take you as well.”

Liliana: “Uhhhhhhhhhh—?!”

Earth-shattering! Sky-flipping! Life-sucking beauty! Why nominate me at this moment?!

Liliana: “A bard like me, who only knows how to be cute, sing, and be cute… A bard without any specialties… Taking me could only satisfy your eyes and ears, you know?”

Priscilla: “That candidness is not unappealing. As I have said before, I am fond of you. It would be a shame if that singing voice were to be lost. Not to mention leaving you in the company of the rabble would perhaps lead to misfortune. You should stay within the reach of my Sun Disk.”

Liliana: “Which is to say… I’m so cute you want to protect me?”

Priscilla: “—Ho?”

Liliana: “Wah! Priscilla-sama is truly kind to beat me when angry!”

Compared with the attack of setting my hair aflame without indication, how kind was the Priscilla-sama who only set me on fire after giving warning. Huh, chest tingling. What kind of feeling was this… Heartbeat quickening, sweat dripping, breaths toiling, blood vanishing from face…

Priscilla: “There are other reasons to take you. That irritating lunatic’s declaration… Had you not stated that the magical device is in the City Hall?”

Liliana: “Huh? Ah, right, it’s in the City Hall. Every morning I get up early, rubbing my sleepy eyes to do as duty asks… Ah! That isn’t to say that I wouldn’t sing because I wanted to sleep in. It’s true that I am sleepy, or half asleep, or more than half asleep, right up until the last moment, but when it’s time to sing, my eyes are open! My eyes are open!”

Priscilla: “Knowing the location is enough. All I require is that magical device… and you.”

Liliana: “You want…”

Priscilla: “Your throat.”

A change in phrase. However, thanks to that, I finally realized exactly what Priscilla-sama had meant to say. In other words, she wanted to say,

Liliana: “To have what happened just now in this Convention Center, spread across the city using the broadcasting magical device…!”

Priscilla: “…”

Liliana: “Eh, hm, Priscilla-sama? What is it?”

Priscilla: “Daring to be so ostentatious before myself. You fool, what have you done with the real Liliana. That person could not possibly be so intelligent.”

Liliana: “A clever and cute me being treated as an illusion!”

The kind of impression she had of me was, in truth, very disappointing.

However, I understood Priscilla-sama’s thoughts. If commotions similar to the one in this convention center were occurring all throughout the city, then that would perhaps be where my song would come in.

Being able to tour the city to give performances would be something wonderful, but there wasn’t enough time to travel around like that! In that case, my mind was made!

Liliana: “Alright, understood! That certainly makes sense. If that’s the case, then it’s only natural that Priscilla-sama’d want to take me with her! In addition, the City Hall would be the place where the brains of the city would gather! Surely Kiritaka-san would be there, in an emergency like this, he can be relied on!”

Priscilla: “However, within the City Hall there certainly awaits a Sin Archbishop. Exterminating that pest is unavoidable. You would do well to avoid being caught in it.”

Liliana: “I’d forgotten!”

Right. Lust currently occupied the City Hall. Which meant that if the City Hall was serving as a base, the operation would have been stunted from the start.

Liliana: “No but, no but, no but! That Sin Archbishop might’ve emptied out the City Hall already! There are lots of rooms in there which are inaccessible for secrecy, so it’s not really a place to kill time. Maybe Lust got bored with waiting and left already.”

Fufu, indeed, a burst of divine reasoning. This was an idea unique to me, who was left there every morning after work.

In truth, everyone would be working hard in there, so there was no one who would deal with me. If someone didn’t understand numbers, they’d be kicked out, or something like that!

And so, certainly the City Hall'd be completely empty…

???: "Yahoo. Yahoo~. Yahohooo~."

And it was right at that moment that I heard the second broadcast.

3

After listening to the second broadcast, we left the Convention Center feeling depressed (Priscilla and Schult did not look depressed).

Leaving the Convention Center took a while, since the people became anxious again after the second broadcast, and they had to be calmed down with my song. Frankly, that performance could only be called unintentional.

No matter what was sung, any behavior lacking reason could not be included. However, at its basis, adding extraneous impurity to the song was not permissible.

Becoming intoxicated by the song, becoming immersed in the song —to sing with these feelings was what I had intended. But I didn't want to think of song as a way to counter the psychological attack which unsettled people. But if it turned out that way in the end, if I, the singer, began to think of song like that, I would no longer be sincere when singing. I could no longer believe that I could rapture someone's heart with song.

Priscilla: "Taking over the control towers and the watergates, leaving the demands to the next broadcast…"

After leaving the Convention Center, with steps which were as always self-assured, only I shakily followed behind. Rather than calling it a loss of assurance, perhaps it was a loss of identity?

Without doubt I existed for singing, but was it myself who was requested of by these circumstances, was it the song, or was it the consequence of the song?

Although all three originated in me, the three were not in sync. I couldn't help but feel that way.

Priscilla: “A third broadcast has to happen, before we have access to the City Hall’s magical device.”

Schult: “Why is that?”

Priscilla: “The Witch Cult needs use of the magical device only once, to send out their request. Afterward, they shall only need to oversee the four control towers they occupy, and remain far away from the City Hall, in which there is no rationale in putting their main forces. However, for the sake of playing their twisted game, there is the possibility they may continue seizing the magical device.”

Schult: “Why can’t we do it?”

Priscilla: “That is not the case, as long as the one operating that magical device is Lust… Although she wears quite the vicious skin, what lies beneath is quite cunning. What a lunatic would become if given the opportunity to be clever would look exactly like that.”

Schult took the lead in asking Priscilla questions, ones that I had myself. Schult had instantaneously figured out the secret behind not enraging Priscilla-sama (perhaps he himself was unaware!). And because he was so genuine, Priscilla-sama politely answered everything she had been asked.

Because it was an explanation meant for a child, I understood it easily as well.

Which was to say, was the situation progressing as the Witch Cult willed?

Priscilla: “And so, after the third broadcast, when their requests have been made, if the magical device is operable, your song shall join the playing field. Should the city be in a state of unrest, who knows where the pests among the lions will gather.”

Schult: “Before it becomes something that complicated, is there no chance for Priscilla-sama to regain control by using that bright sword to finish off the Witch Cult?”

Priscilla: “The control towers from all four sides, should a single watergate out of any of them be opened, the city would be flooded. Even I am a lone person. To raise a hand in counterattack is ineffective. In this city are a few capable others… they, too, shall try to recover the magical device.”

The capable others Priscilla-sama had mentioned were those capable of meeting the Witch Cult in battle.

As far as I knew, people who had extraordinary achievements against the Witch Cult were indeed in the city. Indeed, the Lolimancer, Natsuki Subaru-sama, and the Silver-Haired Witch, Emilia-sama, who accompanied him!

Liliana: “Oh, I get it! We’re waiting until the third broadcast before going to the City Hall.”

Fists clenched, breaths involuntarily growing wild.

In all honesty, to be unable to protest against it was a bit disheartening. However, not going to the City Hall, would mean being unable to assure Kiritaka-san’s safety… Or rather, even being assured of Kiritaka-san’s safety would not be useful as far as battle went…

However, if only for the sake of that person alone, I felt like I could sing even if devoid of feeling.

Liliana: “So until then…!”

Schult: “You’re going to go around visiting shelters with Liliana-sama!”

Liliana: “Yes, yes, take me to a shelter and—Wait, ehhhhhhhh?!”

Schult answered with frenzied enthusiasm, what was this about??!!

Priscilla-sama nodded with satisfaction. Seeing this, Schult grew happy, his entire face becoming bright red. Although clearly I had been named, I was left all alone by himself.

Even though I was so close, I was somehow left feeling lonely.

Priscilla: “Though I am aware of how your song has an effect on this unsettling wave, your mood should be calmed before asking you to perform… Though just then you had been at a loss, right now you have no leeway for such troubles.”

Liliana: “But, does this have anything to do with the shelters?!”

Priscilla: “Although using the magical device to dispel the curse is your duty, it shall be a while before you are able to do just that. In the meantime, the hearts of the commoners would be left in solitude, swaying with unease.”

Liliana: “Ah…”

Priscilla: “Before you can take your place and stand before the magical device, those who need your song are countless. To prevent this, you must meet their needs.”

Priscilla-sama’s proposal could finally be easily understood. Before the time for my song arrived, countless cases of people hurting each other, like the one in the Convention Center, would occur. By then, perhaps the delivery of a most valuable song of salvation might be too late.

I was certain that not all of them could be saved. But, to extend a hand to those who could would be no futile task.

Priscilla: “From my point of view, you have no small amount of courage on the stage. However, that wavering just now is somewhat dangerous. Perhaps it shall rear its head at a critical moment. Thus, you must increase the number of times you experience the stage.”

Liliana: “Times on the stage… is it?”

Times on the stage was already a countless figure. Although the phrase “courage upon the stage” had never been used, never before had the stage brought any feelings of shame.

What Priscilla-sama actually meant was—

Priscilla: “Your troubles are unknown. However, what is needed is not a song for yourself, but one for others. You must understand that your songs are for the sake of others. And thus, you must increase your number of times on the stage.”

Liliana: “…”

Priscilla: “To be prompted by me, to such a degree, truly is arrogant. Repent with the results you shall bring.”

With that said, as if having made a decision, Priscilla-sama folded her two hands over her chest, vigorously sticking out her chest—those large breasts bounced violently. My own, flat. I looked at my own hands, gripping them tightly.

Song was a presence different from the self. To sing in such a way—

Schult: “Priscilla-sama is as gentle as expected! I truly understand that!”

Priscilla: “Too noisy, Schult.”

It was an exchange that couldn’t help but feel a bit facetious, but with it I’ll steel myself to begin a battle of touring every shelter to perform. For Liliana-chan’s future, a bard of song and play and dance, who lives up to Priscilla-sama’s words!

—.

——.

———.

Well, while visiting the shelters with this enthusiasm, checking up on those who had succumbed to frustration or despair, there would be a third broadcast…

Priscilla: “—Hmm… someone else went first. How annoying.”

Priscilla-sama lifted her head to regard the darkened sky, murmuring to herself like this. As for what those feelings were directed toward, I had of course likewise heard.

Natsuki Subaru-sama had made a broadcast with the magical device.

Although those words had been clumsy and by no means could be called inspiring, perhaps they could have imprinted something other than anxiety and fear in the hearts of the people within the city.

The was the same as our desire to sing. In that case, it should be fine, no matter who'd done it.

Liliana: "Even if someone else went first, just as he said, the City Hall seems to be clear. For now, let's meet up with everyone, and begin the battle to retake the city! And I! Will sing my best!"

Priscilla: "Don't display such a relieved attitude."

Liliana: "No, no, no, I don't feel anything like safe."

To some degree there was a sense of assurance, but what was greater was a sense of shame. A chance being taken away, missing an opportunity to be the Songstress.

But in its stead, I had witnessed the place where a Hero was born, and that gave me satisfaction.

—But that feeling of satisfaction was short-lived, as the Hero's recklessness had led to a suicide mission with Priscilla-sama!

Yay! There would still be a chance to sing! Well then!

Chapter 65:
The Regret of Liliana Masquerade

1

Yay, this is Liliana, live from the scene!

Yesyes, currently we’re in the northern part of the City of Pristella! We’re engaging in a battle to capture one of the control towers—!

The four control towers were taken over by the Witch Cult! In order to recapture the towers, the most capable ones in the city have made their move, undertaking the challenge to capture all four simultaneously!

Amongst these warriors who did not pale in the slightest, for some reason, a mere cute musician such as myself actually joined the battle as well, how unexpected! However, retreat wasn’t to even be considered!

Well then, next up, introducing the crazy face who is going to be participating in this operation together alongside me, Liliana Masquerade—!!

Priscilla: “That face is just about sickening already. Present your neck beneath me. Once that head has been severed, that skull shall serve nicely as a candleholder.”

Alright, this is i~t! Merciless words and vicious tactics! But if that’s done, we’ll be finished too! I’ll die, so please have mercy!

Light dancing in those slender crimson eyes, the figure akin to a flame turning back! Even that difficult character was like the ever-changing form of flame, obviously dangerous to the touch!

Wielding the Yang Sword in one hand, was the champion of our offense and defense! Priscilla Bariel-sama!

Priscilla-sama crossed the ignited waterway by the side, in one breath waving the dazzling Yang Sword! Waving! Wavewavewaving!

Impact! Radiance! Sound! The one receiving it, was knocked back greatlyyy~!

But! Catching their step! And then glaring at Priscilla-sama!

???: “Aah, aah, aaaaaaaaaah! Really, really, really! Why is it that this one and that one and everyone are all bunched and coming together?! Do you mean to prevent me from encountering that person?! Agonizing, agonizing, how agonized I am! This heartbreak rends my chest! These violent feelings make my heart tremble! Such sadness cannot be contained—!”

What had appeared was—! A sobbing enraged lunatic wrapped in bandages, crying out while tears flowed and flowed!

Face covered in white bandages which looped and looped and looped and looped to cover eyes! Body completely covered in a cloak! In all honesty, their gender was indistinguishable, though from the voice, it was probably a woman! With that style of clothing giving away the identity of the woman, with dangerous thoughts she swung chains that looped and looped and looped and looped around her arms!

Both I and everyone else had already lost track of what that someone was saying, the Sin Archbishop of the Witch Cult representing Wrath, Sirius Romanée-Conti! Who had announced herself just now!

The covered face of the lunatic Sirius was overflowing with tears! Those tears seemed to be aflame, allowing tongues of flame to flutter around in the courtyard beneath the control tower! Such a connection! It was inexplicable!

And adding on to that, there was the presence of a white flame in the waterway, and people, people, people were crowding outside! A majority of the people who should have been hiding in the shelters on the north part of the city had gone out of their way, rushing to witness this battle—Sike! Because, right now, everyone was tumbling about on the ground and sobbing! Just like the lunatic, Sirius! This was the power of Wrath, that which had spread chaos throughout the entire city—!

In the eyes of everyone who was sobbing and screaming, there was no trace of awareness! Should they be said to have been poisoned by emotion, or intoxicated by emotion, or manipulated by emotion, or tormented by emotion as playthings, it was something like that! It's incredibly clear, watery, crystaline what would happen if they were left alone, so trying a little harder here would be good, wouldn't it?!

Liliana: "Uhhh, uhhhhh… Come, come on now, this certainly is a big stage, once in a lifetime!"

Atop a high platform! From above, I surveyed what lay burning below this stage, the still-sobbing audience, and the actors who sparked sparks as if driven mad, and again I raised and raised my voice on the stage.

In all honesty, because I had left the vicinity of Priscilla-sama's very powerful feeling, just now, my chest had been pierced endlessly as if attacked with sorrow and despondency and loneliness, but don't think that I'd stop my steps, smooth my fingers, or lose my breath to the burning flames for that sort of reason!

Being forced to feel something like agony happens all the time when exposed to such songs, so I was not going to be discouraged if the waves were a bit high!

Last but not least, I would like to introduce every last one of these people to the last member of this nutty group, to the one who played a leading ro~le!

Liliana: "Come, come, those far away, come listen to the sound! Those close by, come watch the dance! Those even further away, I'll raise my voice so you can hear! Liliana Masquerade is here to sing and dance and perform for you, so listen well! —The Sky Overtaking the Morning Glow!"

Placing delicate yet bold force into the fingers which played the Lyulyre, throat opening to reach as far as possible, to have echoes reverberate close by, borrowing from the world sounds and rhythms, I started playing—!

But well before that! Let’s go back for only a fraction of time, to recall how this situation came to be!

2

Liliana: “So, sosososo, Priscilla-sama! Uh, is that really fine?”

Priscilla: “To what do you refer?”

As usual, Priscilla-sama’s steps did not slow in the slightest.

Chasing that figure, I hurriedly called out. No~, ri~ght. Although clearly the next step was to contend with a Sin Archbishop, the only one who had been brought alongside was in fact me!

Was this it? At the beginning of the beginning of the beginning, this wasn’t what I’d planned on.

After the Witch Cult’s third broadcast, Natsuki Subaru-sama had made a, how to describe it, not firm, yet leaving imprints in the heart, well, anyway, a broadcast with that kind of feeling. And we had regrouped with those in the City Hall!

There, I was told that Kiritaka-san’s safety was in an uncertain state, and something resembling worry formed in my heart, but something even more shocking was revealed there!

After all, Lust was not the only Sin Archbishop that had come to Pristella. Just one Sin Archbishop would’ve been enough of a disaster, and there were in fact four! And the four would each occupy one tower, that was already strange enough.

Who was it that’d spread some news such as the Witch Cult being a group of deviants without commanders and unable to function as a group? Wasn’t this a perfect example of teamwork? And wasn’t this the result of that?

Was the only fitting part the one about them being deviants? It can’t be~, that’s simply scary—!

Butbut, gathered on our side were the candidates of the Royal Selection!

Though some of those valuable people present had suffered injuries in a prior battle, in the eyes of those who were planning on retaking the city there lay no cloudiness! And because of that, all that remained was to send all those people filled with energy off.

Priscilla: "—With myself, and the singer as well, there is nothing to fear."

Suddenlysuddenly, as I had entrusted myself to the inspiration of Kiritaka-san's requiem, I heard myself being referred to by Priscilla-sama!

Wasn't it that I would be brought to the midst of the battle against the Sin Archbishop of Wrath?

Nono, I bravely argued for her to reconsider, that it would be very unreasonable—but with a frigid attitude, as if she'd forgotten those hours we'd just spent together, Priscilla-sama stabbed and stabbed at me with provoking words.

To receive words to such an extent, how could this be, I was merely a woman. A bard.

And what was more, shrinking back wasn't an option, having been told that this Wrath had been the one who had spread discord throughout the city.

Originally, Priscilla-sama had brought me to use the magical device in the City Hall to spread my song to all those in the city. But since that goal had been overtaken by Subaru-sama's speech, my turn to take to the stage was spoiled, and I was left with a feeling of defeat…

Should there be another chance to face Wrath, that would make the perfect opportunity to do battle once again. Rather, this was the re-opening of a war that had ended without battle, a battle of revenge that the opponent was unaware of.

Something like that, wouldn't it practically make someone ignite?

Liliana: "Excellent! This woman, Liliana! On the stage, under Priscilla-sama's order, with the Lyulyre and this throat, will sing with beauty!”

Tada~! And I made a big show of it.

As Priscilla-sama and Al-sama focused on the battle with Wrath, I would, from behind, immerse those who had been affected by Wrath’s incomprehensible power in song. A perfect setup!

That was what I had thought would be the case. Alright, and with that, the scene returns to the exchange from earlier. To Priscilla-sama, responding to my shameful voice with “To what do you refer?” Rightright, of course she’d say that.

Liliana: “Why did you leave Al-sama back at the City Hall? With only two women, one being the adorable me and the other being the beautiful Priscilla-sama, don’t you think this is too much?”

Priscilla: “It is not. I alone would already be surplus to begin with. After all, this is a state of affairs so lacking in available personnel that even I must act. To have me be pressed into making a casual effort, those of the Witch Cult must believe themselves to be on the verge of victory.”

Liliana: “…? I really don’t understand what you’re sa~—Hk! Priscilla-sama is amazing!”

Having only received a sideways glare from Priscilla-sama, the place that was glared at seared with pain! An illusion? Was it an illusion?! Was it from feeling Priscilla-sama’s burning passion from so up close that my body was already conditioned by her?!

Priscilla: “It should be as you have heard. As long as a signal is sent to the control tower, certainly one of them shall aim for the vacant headquarters. And when that happens, they shall be able to do whatever they may so desire to those left… Although that merchant seems to have realized so.”

Liliana: “Ah, and so you spoke to Anastasia-sama before leaving.”

Priscilla: “Although it appears that the option of taking only the magical device, and hiding in a shelter with the other non-combatants was considered… Since the Witch Cult will be arriving either way, to choose to greet them with battle would be best. The one to return shall presumably be Lust, but with Al around, something may be managed.”

Liliana: “Ah, so that’s how it is… Al-sama does indeed seem trusted!”

As I listened to Priscilla-sama’s words, after nodding another glare was given!

But just then I hadn’t done any wrong! Becausebecause, something like leaving an ally at a place where the enemy would try to force their way in was certainly something that couldn’t be done without trust.

Priscilla: “Do not carelessly speak of trust and reliance. Although I shall not deny being supported by Al and Schult. Although that man does indeed play the part of a fool, he is in fact a useful man. Although he is a card drawn in my hand for his eccentric exterior, placing him beside myself does not serve as an impediment.”

With a derisive sound, Priscilla-sama spoke in a low voice, as if bored.

In truth, such words should be directed toward one’s foremost Knight-sama, and in the end, the degree of warmth in the evaluation of a trusted partner was zero, but why was this? Those words clearly contained only their superficial meanings and feelings, but for what reason did it feel as if just that were enough?

Liliana: “Because evaluations for others are so low that those evaluated as normal feels like they’re evaluated greatly, is it an issue of distribution…?”

Priscilla: “You shan’t need to attempt understanding my mannerisms. Regarding solely the results is fine. Nor do I request of you to understand. What I do request of you, is solely what I acknowledge.”

Liliana: “S-Something of mine can be regarded as useful to the point of being acknowledged…?”

Priscilla: “It can be said to be useful to the point of being valuable enough to be brought alongside me. You have an obligation to respond to my expectations.”

Uhyiiii, merely being regarded like that made it a serious responsibility indeed!

Or, well, that is, in any case, setting that aside, I had just noticed something.

In the meeting in the City Hall just now, Priscilla-sama had indeed been referring to me as “you”, “you”, “you”, leading to a feeling of distance suddenly being drawn, but now her referral had changed back to “you”. Could this be…?

Liliana: “A special side you show only to those you deem amiable, ju~st kidding… Uhyiiiiiii!”

I clutched at my head, hiding from Priscilla-sama’s searing gaze. Hu~u, I had learned from these past several hours. How should it be put, that it was Priscilla-sama’s, something like the atmosphere? Such subtle changes in Priscilla-sama, were all keenly caught by my sensitive ears, skin, etcetera…

Liliana: “Hmm? The anticipated sharp rebuke did not strike? How is it possible, for this Liliana’s expectation to be off…”

Priscilla: “Despite still being in the middle of this small play, interest in your farce extends only so far.”

Liliana: “Ah, back to calling me “you”…”

Had distance once again been created with that? As I held such slightly despondent feelings, I raised my head to understand. Ah, understood, this wasn’t the time to play around with me.

At some point in time, we had reached our destination, the control tower. Well then, the control tower had a slight problem, it conflicted a tiny bit with what I knew—

Liliana: “Did you know, Priscilla-sama? According to my report on Pristella, the control tower shouldn’t be something that would randomly go up in flames.”

Priscilla: “Indeed. Despite being a decoration I do approve of, to one’s regret, the director of this performance is beyond crude. This burning, scorching and searing would indeed raise spirits, but enjoyment cannot be derived from such shoddiness.”

Although Priscilla-sama was the very picture of composure, I could not regard this so coolly.

The northern control tower, that stalwart tower surrounded by various waterways, its entire structure was at this moment engulfed in flame. Since the tower was made of stone, it wasn’t supposed to be something that could be so easily set aflame. Ah, inspiration was about to come.

Liliana: “Inspiration flashes. Baked Stone Tower and Baked Yams… Would you like to hear it?”

Priscilla: “If you would prefer having that as your last mark in this world, then by all means sing it. One slip-up, and that shall become reality. Mediocrity, banality, commonness, if my glory is being relied upon then treat it with proper care, a group of fools can accomplish nothing. Do not expect me to be so merciful as to treat fools who harm themselves with mercy.”

Suddenly showing a face of severity! Was this an indication that Priscilla-sama had entered a state of preparing for battle?

That’s right, that’s right. Watching the burning control tower made the pressure increase. Thenthen, welcoming the two of us, the one welcoming us, was a freak standing before the tower consumed in flame, arms spread open! With this, there was no possibility that we had the wrong person.

???: “—My apologies, for having troubled you to come all the way here. Thank you.”

The bandaged freak’s first sentence was unexpectedly placid, as if being considerate of us.

That combined with the hands, having been spread open from the beginning, and the manner in which it bowed its head, for some reason, gave off a rather charming air. Was this gap? Something like that?

Sirius: “Although this is perhaps a little too much for a landmark, but since the functions of the city were halted tonight, it feels as if there is a lack of light, does it not? To become lost in the dark, or to slip into a waterway by losing your footing, would be quite dangerous, and thus I tried to light a fire for light.”

That was an excellent idea, bandaged freak, nono, that was rude. Let’s go with bandage-san. Bandage-san informed us of the reason for that fire.

Mmm, so that was it… To be touched couldn’t be helped. The city known as the Watergate City of Pristella was certainly filled with waterways. And to be reminded to be careful when making nighttime expeditions was common. Especially when leaving to go to somewhere like a back alley. On the other hand, the main roads were equipped with backup illumination because of nighttime travel, but even so, the waterways held a high degree of danger.

Hu~u, that someone from elsewhere could in fact recognize that, and pay attention and care for such aspects of Pristella’s like this, led to some lingering feeling of happiness.

Ah, no, it wasn’t that Pristella was some kind of hometown to me at all, to stand as a representative of Pristella and feel grateful would be rather strange indeed. Eh, since I’d seen Kiritaka-san do a lot of things related to the management of the city, seeing the efforts of someone you’re acquainted with pay off wasn’t dissatisfying in the least. Fufufu~.

Sirius: “But, everyone within this city is pretty amazing. Although this perhaps sounds like a selfish opinion, the reaction to an emergency situation arising was truly excellent. Adults helping children, men helping women, husbands helping wives, elder brothers helping younger sisters, elder sisters helping younger brothers, even strangers helping those weaker than them. This spirit of mutual aid is ingrained deep in their bones. Upon seeing those figures rushing into shelters, I could not help but feel that the sight of mutual support truly is excellent.”

Clangclang. Upon closer inspection, those were sounds made by chains wrapped around Bandage-san’s two arms. According to Subaru-sama, those seemed to be Bandage-san’s weapons, but looking at them like this, weren’t they rather fashionable? The oversized coat that Bandage-san wore over her body… Thinking of it as a deliberate dress sense, it wasn’t that bad… Mhm, that wasn’t bad at all!

Bandage-san’s tone was very polite, but that voice was a little, what was it, strange? High though it was, there was a subtle feeling of fakeness that someone who worked with voices for a living couldn’t overlook, but that didn’t detract very much at all!

Looking at it realistically, well, couldn’t it be said that saying more was unnecessary?!

Liliana: “This is a relief, Priscilla-sama. Seems this is an opponent who can be communicated with smoothly. Considering the situation, if Priscilla-sama’s mood is poor, you would have a harder time communica—Ahhhh, my eyes, ahhhhhh—?!”

My eyes were burning! Ahhhh, fire spun into my eyes!

My eyes, my eyes would melt! Would melt and become incapable of seeing the lovely sights of this world!

Liliana: “Ahhh, damn it… If I’d known this would happen, I would’ve burned the look of those beauties in the City Hall thoroughly into my eyes…!”

Priscilla: “Fool. Raise your head. Do not become so casually engulfed and lead me to become disappointed.”

Hearing Priscilla’s warm voice that wasn’t warm at all, I tightened my face, blinked and raised my head. Ah, wonderful, eyes were still intact. I could still see the world, I could see it all. Could see the red Priscilla-sama, and the white Bandage-san.

Really now, Priscilla-sama was directing her usual severe expression toward Bandage-san. Bandage-san with gentle movements tilted her head to such a gaze. Ohhh, in this case Priscilla-sama was totally in the wrong.

Liliana: “Priscilla-sama, you can’t. You can’t treat everyone, no matter who, with that manner of regarding them as if they were an undisciplined dog. So, on account of my flat chest and face, on account, of, my flat chest… put on a manner of negotiation…”

Ehhhh~, why was this? For some reason tears felt on the verge of falling.

But that was fine. If this attitude of mine, facing the reality of my own flat chest, could become a bridge which connected Priscilla-sama and Bandage-san’s spirits, then I would swallow down my tears!

Liliana: “Come, on behalf of my flat chest, reach out your hands…!”

Sirius: “Indeed, this is something wonderful. I am in accord with that girl’s kindness. People are able to mutually communicate, mutually understand, mutually experience. Face warmth with warmth, kindness with kindness, love with love! Doing precisely that will yield happiness.”

Liliana: “I~! That’s what I was thinking too! Indeed, this is in fact love, isn’t it? Priscilla-sama, it’s love! Even though I can’t deny that I’ve been swept along by how it sounds, but going with the flow has its own flavor! Hey, this is the Watergate City, a city filled with flowing waterways! Hey, hey!”

Priscilla: “…”

Bandage-san’s words, one-by-one, struck my heart. Uwu, it stung, it stung.

Seeing that Bandage-san and I shared the same thoughts, Priscilla-sama’s stubborn determination accordingly crumbled, revealing to us… a sour expression?

Priscilla: “To reach such an extent, I must admit that I made an underestimation. There’s no other way.”

Liliana: “Huh—? Priscilla-sama, why would you have that expression…”

Priscilla-sama, who had placed a hand on her brow in thought, sighed. That sighing figure could have made a lovely portrait, but she immediately moved in front of me as if having figured something out.

Since my stature could be considered rather petite, and Priscilla-sama wore tall heels, I could only gaze upward at her as she stood before me. Oh, what’s with this sudden closeness?

Liliana: “Priscilla-safu~u.”

Priscilla: “…”

After feeling Priscilla-sama’s chest shoving from the front, those white fingers firmly grasped my neck and chin. Then, Priscilla-sama’s precious face, drawing closer, met mine. Or rather, lips met lips eeeeeh—?!

Liliana: “Mmh—! Mmmmmh—! Mmmmmmmmmmmh—!”

Slapslap, beatbeat, with face bright red I resisted desperately with all my might. But the force that held me down was overwhelming, and the pressing lips were too soft, really, what was this??!!

Ah, huh, waitasec, flowing in from Priscilla-sama's lips was something searingly lewd, ahi, hiii, ahu.

Liliana: "…Hk, ah."

The heat ceaselessly flowing forth led to dizziness, and before I knew it, I had already slumped to the ground. Priscilla-sama gave me not a second glance, as she ran her crimson tongue over her lips.

Priscilla: "Well, that should be sufficient."

Like this, like this, like this, speaking to, to provokeprovokeprovokeprovoke!

I forcefully rubbed my moist eyelids, placing force onto my waist that had been stripped of all its strength to stand. Really now, Priscilla-sama, just now, ahhhh, I want to lodge a complaint!

Liliana: "P-Priscilla-sama, just now, what was that?! Please, please take responsibility. To have been forced into such a thing, I can't be wedded off now—!"

Priscilla: "The same would go for I, who allowed our mouths to touch. Using your first time as an excuse is your prerogative, but is it not true that, thanks to this, you were given a chance to restore your sense of reason?"

Liliana: "Eh? A chance to restore my sense of reason…"

After, after trampling upon the purity of another, Priscilla-sama still had an air of indifference. Did she think that doing whatever to a bard was fine? Sob, sob.

Priscilla: "How effeminate. Well, raise your head, look at that person."

Liliana: “Sobsobsob, eh?”

With the weakness of a woman who would obey those words I raised my head, and saw, in their original positions, Priscilla-sama and Bandage-san, no, huh, Bandage-san?

Nonono, how was this possible? Why had I not felt any discomfort, so kindly calling that person Bandage-san? Inexplicable, utterly inexplicable!

Sirius: “Both women and yet they… Although, there are such forms. Although the form of everyone’s love differs, even if directed differently, they will still love the same amount. In fact, that is the splendor of the emotions that makes humans humans…”

Priscilla: “—Cease this ridiculous farce. How nauseous.”

Watching Priscilla-sama and I, that bandaged freak pressed her hands to her face as she droned on, but those words made me feel discontent rapidly.

Words, attitudes, gestures that up until now seemed to be trustworthy no matter the conditions, after having been able to accept with normalcy the situation that had been prepared by the bandaged freak, so suddenly were reversed.

No, setting the tower alight to serve as a light because of the darkness couldn’t have been possible, to regard those lightly dark-red and dirtied chains as fashionable was entirely an error, and lastly, the evaluation of those of the shelters truly evoked disgust! Just who did you think had made this happen?!

Priscilla: “Although there are many in this world who immerse themselves in the pleasure of enumerating exceedingly shallow theories, even amongst those your self-absorption is extreme. To call you a clown would not fit your repulsiveness, to call you a fool would not befit your strength… Value in your continued survival is impossible to find.”

Sirius: “Oh my, oh my my, oh my my my, is that so? Thank you for your consideration, my apologies? With gratitude, apologies.

Apparently, it is difficult for my words to reach you… But, this does happen from time to time.”

Priscilla: “My, rather reasonable. Are you willing to hurry and present your neck yet?”

Sirius: “Indeed, of course. Exhausting speech for the sake of mutual understanding is also an important ceremony for humans to establish relationships between them. Similarly, not long after, hearts will soften and merge into one. Love will thus become one, will become as one, will work hard to become one. Love is exalted, all along I have been taught thus, and all along have lived as thus!”

Liliana: “Uwaaah! Although the realization was a bit late, I just realized, that was the first time I kissed someone!”

Priscilla: “Solely the existence of this burning tower to welcome me is deserving of the merit of praise.”

Wow! Although to me it was a little bit eh, but now, dialogue hadn’t been established in the slightest bit!

Calling to the bandaged freak who all along felt like she was incapable of listening to reason, Priscilla-sama strode forth to make her own way, and I had been left disoriented from the attack on my lips! Hey, wasn’t I completely unnecessary?

Priscilla: “You are needed after this. The mouth-to-mouth was for that reason.”

Liliana: “Please stop reminding me of it! Also, please try not to glance this way. It somewhat feels like when Priscilla-sama looks over, my chest goes badump…”

Priscilla: “That the result was too effective can also be considered a problem. My beauty is indeed a thing of sin.”

Beside me as I tried to endure the thumping, Priscilla-sama sighed in melancholy. That profile felt lovely to the point of being painful… Eeeeeeh, it’s not the time to say such things. Priscilla-sama had from the start been filled with tenacity, yet the opposing bandaged freak showed no signs of backing down, and so, battle was certain! And were I to stay here, I'd be a liability!

Liliana: "Is-Isn't it best if I back away a little?"

Priscilla: "Well then, let us see."

Hey, why are you messing with someone to such an extent.

And then, as soon as I thought that, something happened. My keen and well-shaped ears caught sounds. Were those footsteps? Those were footsteps, without doubt. And not only without doubt, those footsteps were not only one pair, they were many… No, they went beyond many to excessive! Excessively excessive!

Priscilla: "So that's it, have you gathered all the humans nearby and converged them here?"

Sirius: "All those people are in accord with my love. Although sometimes there are stubborn people like you present, but as the saying goes, "once rainwater falls into a waterway, all differences vanish". If you surrendered your heart, your perspectives would change as well."

Were you to mix yourself with the rainwater, you would unexpectedly contaminate it—although the proverb meant something like this, now was not the time for such idle leisure!

The burning control tower! Surrounded on all sides by waterways! Facing each other in the square in front of the control tower! And the large crowd peering over at us from the other side of the waterway!

The number of people was really big. Certainly not on the scale of the Convention Center, which had merely one or two hundred people! This was a thousand, or perhaps even more? Indeed, that many people did surround us, and although saying this is very impolite, they glared at us with dangerous gazes! This was to say, was this the state of having one's soul completely overtaken by Wrath that Subaru-sama had described?!

Priscilla: "It should first be mentioned, that you, just now, were wearing the same expression as those commoners over there."

Liliana: “Uweeeh, really?! How terrifying! Ah! Butbut, in that case, if Priscilla-sama were to kiss each one of them, everyone would recover their consciousness, right?! If Priscilla-sama’s lips aren’t taken care of they’ll swell, ahhh—!”

Priscilla: “Who would give charity without regard to who is receiving it? Would you like to be burned away starting from your rear, you?”

A turn of events that resulted in being burned rear-first! To choose the wrong response would mean death! This condition was ridiculously disadvantageous to someone like me, who often ranted without thinking!

Priscilla: “In any case, that is your role. For what purpose did you think I brought you here? To forsake your own duties and beg assistance from me should yield shame.”

Liliana: “No, but, this is, I understand the reason, but—”

With this volume of people who had gone insane, without sufficient preparation a song could be sung. And if the performance took place before her, that bandaged freak would presumably try to put an end to it.

Priscilla: “Thus, I shall take the stage.”

As I retreated and squirmed, Priscilla-sama spoke as if exasperated.

No, although I would admit that Priscilla-sama was incredible, against such a crowd… Huh, wait, until now, somehow, I had this idea of “Priscilla-sama is incredible!”, but was Priscilla-sama truly so incredible?

Although I had seen the sight of her palm slamming away a fairly fit young man with a “pow”, but aside from that, there weren’t any such memories of such feats! Ehhh~, on that note, even if Wrath were the only opponent, had following along truly been the right decision?

Sirius: “You mustn’t. Clearly the relationship between the two of you is close to the point of sharing a kiss, so efforts to reach mutual understanding should take place to achieve greater closeness. As long as desires become one, thoughts will be able to connect. Just like the many people surrounding this courtyard, you will become one!”

As the bandaged freak stomped her feet, so did everyone surrounding the courtyard. This behavior, having been repeated by a thousand people without a sliver of disorder, was no different from the ground rumbling.

That was a force which made the courtyard quake, the surface of the water sway, the already ignited tower seem to tilt… Whether or not this was love could be contested, but this was without doubt a threat!

If that large gathering approached as one in an attempt to capture us—

Sirius: “Come. You, too, will be enveloped by love, will experience the ecstasy of becoming one—!”

Eh, gyahhh! As soon as I said it, it actually started happening! It’s over! A thousand people against two, this was a disparity in numbers that would be ridiculous even in a truly heroic tale…!

With a sound like a roar of rage, the crowd swarmed forth as one. Ignoring the borders of the waterways, like a horde of corpses they came for our virgin bodies—! Uwah! Father, Mother, Kiritaka-san, apologies! Places aside from Liliana’s lips would be deflowered now as well!

Liliana: “If I’d known this would happen, then I would’ve, unrestrainedly with Kiritaka-san…”

Priscilla: “Whether the pessimistic you, or that optimistic bunch, each and every one of you, just who do you think I am?”

Liliana: “Eh?”

Priscilla-sama moved to my front, as I despaired. Before it had even been noticed, wielded in Priscilla-sama’s hand was a shining crimson blade—the Yang Sword. That which had already been radiant enough when seen at the Convention Center during the day, in this nighttime, with the sun extinguished, exuded a shiver-inducing beauty.

Almost as if it had revived the sun that should have fallen—

Priscilla: “To tremble from my blade’s terrifying glare is correct. This is the original flame, the flame which had first lit the seat of the Emperor—Although my belief is that this scarlet radiance is not the same as what you lot recognize.”

Liliana: “…”

Having spoken solemnly, Priscilla-sama flew upward while wielding the Yang Sword.

That was an action which could only be described as flight. It had clearly appeared to be only a light leap, yet she moved with such agility that it was as if she had become the wind. Approaching the edge of the waterway before the crowd wildly surging forward, Priscilla-sama directed the tip of the Yang Sword to the water’s surface.

And following right afterwards,

Liliana: “—?!”

Before my eyes, a wall of crimson rose—No, that was flame, a wall of flame.

The licks of the fire were so red that they even appeared to be white. As if to reject any description of ‘wavering’, mournful light scattered forth, proving how terrifying that heat was.

That which was being scorched was the waterway, even the surface of the water itself. Water which should have been fire’s natural opposing enemy, water which should have been the opposite of fire, this was a sight which overturned such natural notions.

The flame of Priscilla-sama’s Yang Sword could ignite even water.

And in addition—all of the waterways surrounding the courtyard, simultaneously!

Sirius: “This is…”

Before the sight which did not belong to this world, the bandaged freak—No, let’s stop that at once. Wrath, indeed, even Wrath was lost for words. This couldn’t be described by words like “smoldering”, but flame did exist. It stopped the steps of the crowd attempting to cross the waterway, nailing them in place.

That was a matter of course. That moths fly into a flame was nature’s decree, but humans held wisdom and instinct that was capable of resisting such an end.

Priscilla: “Even if solely in form, your use of love as an excuse to name this not as dominance became a critical weakness. If this is a force that can be overcome by obeying one’s instinct, something of this degree could never stop someone in their steps.”

Taking anew a stance with the Yang Sword, like that, Priscilla-sama ridiculed the silent Wrath. Ridicule, mockery, derision, contempt—that was all I could say, you malicious expression of beauty.

Ahhh, something so important, I had overlooked. I had all along only been watching Priscilla-sama’s dashing expression of severity, although that was beautiful in its own right, indeed it could not compare.

Clearly, there could be nothing more beautiful than this malice, which yielded a beauty that caused shivers.

Priscilla: “Even if free will is curbed, if instinct is not restrained as well, this is precisely what you shall see. Seems as if no one is willing to go to the extent of being consumed by flame, which speaks loudly of the love that you speak of.”

Sirius: “…”

Priscilla: “This is the result of the cheap love that you have pronounced. Such a scene is precisely what is defined as “ridiculous”, Sin Archbishop. How truly incapable you are of measuring up to that exaggerated title.”

With mockery, with momentum, Priscilla-sama continuously chastised the silent Wrath.

My hands couldn't help but moisten with sweat, gaze flicking over to the scene. The thought of whether Priscilla-sama was truly so incredible, which had persisted until now, had been completely swept away.

Priscilla-sama was incredible! Priscilla-sama was powerful!

Priscilla: "In the end, expressions such as "love becomes one" are mere superficiality. My peerless self is at the very peak, and thus, no matter how much you struggle, commoners like you could never become one with me."

Wahhh, Priscilla-sama was amazing! Although she was amazing, but huh, wasn't this situation weird?

Priscilla: "Even if you are capable of approaching me, to catch up with me is absolutely impossible. The love that you speak of has already been defeated, has it not? And thus, ranting of becoming one is naught but wild words."

Liliana: "Uhm, Priscilla-sama, it's about time…"

Priscilla: "Even as a misconception, to become one is far too erroneous. Born as something else, and wanting to become one is a denial of the self. Why would something you yourself lack have any value when drawn closer? What is flawed is the entire premise, and to act according to this incorrectness is to exist in commonness—Something so vulgar."

Liliana: "Uwaaah! Why such an absolute rejection?!"

Oh no! Clearly because blood had rushed to the head! Clearly!

Even if Priscilla-sama's blood had rushed to her head, perhaps she was still able to do something, but for someone insignificant like me, the preference would be for you to refrain from doing this, and end it as quickly as possible!

Perhaps she had noticed, for Wrath, being faced with Priscilla-sama's words, had wordlessly bowed her head, immersed in silence. Well, to have been met with so many arrogant words, anyone would be infuriated. Talking back felt like it would bring a multitude of words in response, so even infuriated, silence would be kept.

It could be said this had turned to be entirely uncomfortable, so if possible, if Priscilla-sama could just beat down on Wrath-san and call it a victory, that'd be a relief.

Priscilla: "Fool. To do so would mean everyone but myself would be bisected, is that not correct? Although the sight of a city stained red with blood would be appealing to see at least once, there is no need to bring it about in my country. Well then, this first opportunity should be delayed, and likewise, you should fulfill your use."

Ah—right, that was the case. In the first place, that was my duty.

Being under the influence of Wrath, the pain and even wounds inflicted on that person would be shared by others. My song was required precisely for being rid of such a condition.

Liliana: "After seeing the actual scene, I've actually become quite unsettled, so who knows if my song will actually work!"

Priscilla: "If unwilling, your head, and those of that crowd, are free to fall alongside that being's. If you feel that such a scene is best avoided, without fail, place your heart into song."

I continued to clutch the Lyulyre, shrinking back now that such heights of responsibility had been cast upon me. The burning waterway was keeping the crowd away, yet the crowd remained as hostages, and the method to free them was my song! Priscilla-sama's duty was—?

Liliana: "So that's to say, that's to say, until I've used my song to sway the captivated crowd, Priscilla-sama's duty is to keep me from dying, isn't that how it feels?!"

Priscilla: "If you die, well, all that's left is to sever their heads as soon as possible. Best to think of it as all their lives being wrapped around your throat.”

Liliana: “Ukya—!”

Priscilla: “Such slow understanding. Now then… Hm.”

After I had covered my face and cried out loudly, Priscilla-sama’s expression changed. Priscilla-sama now regarded Wrath, who had maintained her silence until now, with brows frowned,.

With an uneasy premonition, I snuck a peek in that direction through the gaps in my fingers.

Sirius: “—How amusing.”

Liliana: “Eh?”

Sirius: “How amusing, such joy. Perhaps this should be called delight. No, perhaps it is not possible to name this ascendant feeling in my heart.”

Speaking with a low voice, languidly, Wrath raised her face. On that face obscured by bandages, impassioned and assertive eyes swept back and forth. They gazed at Priscilla-sama, at the wall of flame, at me, wait no, please, don’t look at me!

Sirius: “My apologies, I was scattered for a moment there. However, thank you. I have awoken. You are correct, expressions such as “desiring to effortlessly achieve understanding” were far too selfish.”

Was that a smile and laugh? The monster’s mouth split open horizontally, revealing a smile which showed white teeth, the monster laughed. Intimately, as if welcoming a friend or family, having been rejected like that, and despite that!

Sirius: “Please allow me to once more introduce myself. I am a Sin Archbishop of the Witch Cult, representing Wrath, Sirius Romanée-Conti. I do hope my affairs can be taken to heart.”

She bowed, politely giving a greeting.

And then the bandaged freak—the monster, Sirius, undid the chains on her arm. Rotating wrists, untying bondage, lengthening the reach of the chain, the chains rotated, slashing through air, layer upon layer of metallic sounds becoming malice itself, cutting through the atmosphere.

Even so, the monster wore a smile.

Sirius: “This is the Ordeal! Indeed, this is without doubt, the Ordeal! In this city, in which I reunited with my husband once again, to meet him once more, to express love in words, the Ordeal has descended upon me! The correctness of my love is proven by fate, which had me meet that person once more! You are the Ordeal that stands in the way of that!!”

With a ringing voice, with the flourish of a maiden in love, the monster ceaselessly waved her chains, shortening the distance to here in one breath. Ohno ohno, just being brushed would mean death for me.

Priscilla: “Quell the crowd, that creature’s opponent shall be me. At the very least, do not perform anything insolent.”

Liliana: “Uwah? Priscilla-sama?!”

Priscilla: “You are to prepare your song—Should a shadow fall across the Yang Sword, I shall, no matter what, sever that abomination’s head. And so, before that happens.”

Even the limit she gave was arbitrary—!

As if not hearing a trace of my words, Priscilla-sama and the monster Sirius exchanged opening blows, beginning their battle!

Listening to the fierce collisions of chain and sword, I thought that I had to at least do something. Rather than calling it a sense of responsibility, it was more like being urged onward by some indistinct feeling, but in any case I began running toward the wall of flame on the waterway. Hopelessly.

Run faster! Damn it, I hadn’t even though of anything!

Liliana: “And so for now, please listen for a moment—Hoshin of the Wilderness, uhhhhh, hot?!”

Nearing the boundary of the waterway, I had prepared to whisk those in hearing range into a whirl of song, but immediately upon drawing close, my face was destroyed by flame!

It can’t! Really can’t! Although forcefully trying to put on the air of a performance, Priscilla-sama’s wall of flame was beyond hot! Extremely hot! Hotter than was normal!

But without drawing close to this extent, no one would be able to see for real!

Liliana: “Owww, hothothot—! My hands will be scorched! If my throat or lungs are burned, this battle will be lost… Wait, huh?”

Having been licked by a tongue of flame, while regretting my carelessness for having gotten my face that scorched beyond repair, I discovered that the hands that should have been swallowed by fire were unharmed… Or rather, even the wooden Lyulyre hadn’t been destroyed by the blaze, which was to say?

Liliana: “This… is no ordinary fire…?”

Nono, from the start it’d been evident that this was no ordinary fire, but this seemed to be one which did not burn? Although the heat was scorching, it would not burn?

In that case, then this! Would be crossed through in no time, wouldn’t it?! What was this?! Was this a bluffing imitation of a fire, only meant to scare people off?!

Coming along was indeed a failure of a decision—Ah!!

Chapter 66:
Liliana Masquerade's Stage

Liliana: "Gah! What a disaster! This fire is way too hot! Way too, way too hot! Seven times hotter than regular fire! Being burnt by this would mean dying with seven times the agony!"

The white wall of flame now stood before me! Since it was a flame that would not burn me if touched, but miraculously appeared to only let off waves of heat, in truth, being able to withstand the pain would mean that it was possible to breach it.

And so, to keep the truth hidden from everyone, too scared to rush forth, I pretended to be someone writhing in agony because of the flames, to convey to everyone surrounding the waterway of the dangers of the flame!

Well, even with everyone's mental state being a tad insane, it seemed their instinct had left them with the notion that flames were dangerous. So my desperate act was perhaps not of much use, but even so, not performing it was something I couldn't justify.

Liliana: "It was easy for Priscilla-sama to order me to sing and dance to snatch the peoples' hearts back, but—"

In all honesty, snatching spirits back, rahhhhh! As a mood to sing with, it would completely serve as an obstacle, and it went against the principle of song in the first place.

As a result of frantic singing, to say that something airy would be left within the hearts of those who listened, that very something would be the natural intent of the heavens. And if they felt something in that intent of the heavens, and gave a tip because of that, the world would be so kind and gentle!

First of all, singing with the attitude of wanting to earn a tip would be an ulterior motive that would make its way into the song. A song with such a desire contained within was not what I wanted.

And so, couldn't this plan be said to be a losing battle from the very start?

Liliana: "Thinking back on it, although this life was short-lived, days filled with tumultuousness were experienced. Father and Mother, even though there was resentment when I cast myself into this cruel world at the age of thirteen after declaring my independence… Now I'm only grateful that I was born so cute. Although I was quite the unfilial daughter, the gratitude and wrath I felt towards the two of you was something integral to my every way… Guhhhh! Ahhhh, hothothot, a neverending summer, huhuhu!"

While speaking of gratitude toward parents and various other whims, I felt a sign that those on the other side of the wall of flame were about to approach, and once more put on an act of overheating. I was really hoping the bunch that was unable to read the atmosphere would react appropriately!

Butbut, no matter how realistic my performance was, it would fall through sooner or later. And then if it were exposed, there would be no way to contain Priscilla-sama's extremely limited temper.

And then, it'd be no good! It'd be over!

Sirius: "Oh my, oh my, do you have the leisure to see? The girl you have expectations of is wearing an expression as if there is no path forward, is she not? I can clearly feel the sorrow and exhaustion plaguing that child's spirit. Do you not feel sorry for her, weeping and aching?"

Priscilla: "Not in the slightest."

Without regard to me, who had begun to clutch my head and count down the seconds to the end, in the center of the courtyard surrounded by waterways that had been set alight, an exchange of dialogue between Priscilla-sama and that freak Sirius was in progress.

That said, the dialogue was entirely composed of Priscilla-sama mercilessly turning a deaf ear to Sirius's modest words! And setting aside Sirius's manner of speech for now, the figure now rotating the chains of both arms could not be called steady in the slightest.

Air being slashed, atmosphere being sliced, the path of metal chains being swung through the air changed freely! Tumbling, prancing, front, back, left, right, it struck toward Priscilla-sama like a metal snake!

The extending and retracting chain produced an ear-piercing level of sound, continuous to the point that it seemed to me that Priscilla-sama had been enclosed in a cage of iron.

The stone steps that took direct hits from the chain were exploded mercilessly, were caved in, were scraped, which spoke volumes of the power. If direct contact with the skin were made, the result would be hideousness akin to that caused by a snake's fangs and tongue! If the recipient were someone whose skin was white and delicate like Priscilla-sama, their cruelty would be even more pronounced!

Butbut, Priscilla-sama in fact ferociously attacked that metal chain—!

Priscilla: "Tumultuous and yet tasteless noise, the heedlessness which is projected indiscriminately, a base weapon from which even a hint of elegance cannot be felt, superficial and yet unseemly idle talk… Such a number of measures that incur my anger were prepared as entertainment. The disrespect you show me is rather admirable."

Liliana: "Priscilla-sama is awesomeeeeeee!!"

However, Priscilla-sama wore an expression of boredom, waving the Yang Sword to welcome the chains that approached from every direction. But, never mind front, side, top and bottom, how could a blow from somewhere unseen like the back possibly be intercepted?

In addition, perhaps this power was unique to the Yang Sword, but whenever the Yang Sword deflected the chain, the point of contact would be scorched white. That firepower did not seem negligible, and the chain would burn and become gradually shorter and shorter! If this were repeated, for sure, she would run out of chains!

Liliana: “Heheheh—! Priscilla-sama, please be rid of it, rid of it, rid of it—!”

Priscilla: “Regarding that, that is what is known as candid thoughts which forget to cover eyes. Although exposure of that level is presumably difficult for a commoner, it certainly inspires more pleasure than boring, twisted theory. Well, merely one person in this world would be enough.”

Liliana: “Ehhh~?! Just now, you praised me, that was a praise, right?! To consider that praise would be fine, right?! I’m about to feel happy you know!! Amazing, truly amazing. Yay!”

Even if I were to be told that it hadn’t been praise, I’d already felt happy, so it was too late!

Accepting my support, Priscilla-sama also gained more momentum. She continued to advance, ceaselessly burning the chain away. The imposing atmosphere seemed to overwhelm even the Sin Archbishop of Wrath, and I was now entirely just waiting! It was a yam in the oven!

Liliana: “No, wait a second, Priscilla can’t solve this so effortlessly! If that happens, we’ll also be offed effortlessly, ehhhhhh~?!”

Priscilla: “Mhm, that is indeed the case. Too fun a time was being had.”

How dangerous! If I hadn’t stopped her just now, she was going to go for it!

As Priscilla-sama stopped, Sirius, having been overwhelmed, took this chance to leap far backward. Although Priscilla-sama was out of the norm, the opponent that was meeting her match was none other than a Sin Archbishop, perhaps it should be asked whether or not humans were able to move in such a way?

Sirius: “It is rare for someone to be so stubborn in not opening their hearts even though I have spoken so much. For what reason is your soul so tightly closed?”

After gaining some distance, Sirius flickered her gaze to her two arms as she spoke. That chain had already been trimmed short, but as the freak yapped, she rotated her wrists to restore its length. It seemed that many chains were wound firmly on her arms, but whether they were cutting off circulation was unknown.

Sirius: "Everyone's hearts have openings, some greater, others smaller. To live means to have feelings, no matter the color of the feeling that peeks out from there, they are something every person possesses… Even a feeling you have staunchly bore all along can be understood, as long as it is revealed."

Priscilla: "…"

Sirius: "You too have a soul that can anguish, feelings that disorient. Although unwaveringly keeping weaknesses hidden from others is a condition to living strongly… there is only so much that can be reached on one's lonesome. What one person can achieve on their lonesome has a limit. After becoming one with other people, new peaks can be discovered. In order to allow others to see that place, mutual understanding and shared feelings are necessary."

Sirius swayed her body, speaking to the silent Priscilla-sama.

The sound of that voice seemed as if it permeated one's heart. That attitude seemed as if it was from someone truly close. That manner seemed tender as if it dissolved the guards of others. The content of those words seemed as if it enticed others.

Clearly as if a sweet poison that melted slowly, even my extremities felt numb.

Sirius: "Could you allow me to help you reach understanding with others? Truly your love is so deep, and loving of the world. Looking forward to be loved. Wanting it. I can understand this. And I hope that others can come to understand this. So that you are kept from spending a lonely night on your lonesome."

Priscilla: "Truly a shame to rely only on delusion and conjecture and prattle on without embarrassment. If you hold no doubts in your own words, you are precisely what is known as a lunatic."

Sirius: “Oh my, thank you very much. That is a title commensurate with my husband’s. Those are the delusional words of someone to be reprimanded, who cannot comprehend in the slightest how outstanding that person is, and spits wild words of admiration, envy, jealousy towards that person.”

Priscilla: “Cease speaking. What belongs to me belongs to me alone. Your narrative is the sole delusional, nonsensical thing here. Even the surface of my enigma cannot be skimmed by those alike you.”

Priscilla-sama, with self-assurance, rejected that sweet, enticing proposal beyond doubt. However, in terms of self-assurance, Sirius did not lose to her. The freak’s head tilted as if having expected Priscilla-sama’s rejection,

Sirius: “To say that even the surface cannot be skimmed, this is the epitome of stubbornness… is it not? In that case, how does such a significance sound? “Iris and the King of Thorns”.”

Priscilla: “…”

Sirius: “Or perhaps, “The Rose Knight of Tieros”? “Magrizza’s Guillotine”.”

I didn’t understand the significance of Sirius’s words, nor the intent behind the monster saying such words.

However, it prompted an immediate effect.

Priscilla: “—Better off dead.”

As I thought I’d heard a low murmur, Priscilla-sama’s figure vanished from sight.

As I expressed my confusion, the distance that had once existed between Priscilla-sama and Sirius became zero. Priscilla-sama swung the Yang Sword from above, arc mercilessly tracing towards Sirius’s neck. In an instant, the world slowed to an incredulous extent, and even I was able to see the path that Priscilla-sama’s blade followed.

Just aiming it, Sirius’s slender neck would be caressed and severed.

If that were to happen, my neck, and the necks of everyone nearby would break in the same way.

Could it be, that it was because I understood this, that it seemed to happen so slowly? Say, if a life-threatening danger were to approach, humans would, with great focus, see their perception of the world slowed down, right?

Although if that were the case, in a situation where the celestial scales of my own life were being tilted by others, what could I and the many people around me do about it?

The crimson radiance of the Yang Sword, with imposing manner, sliced through the atmosphere—

Liliana: "—Eh?"

Being unable to understand the sight before me, I couldn't help but let out the voice of a dazed fool.

Having made that noise, my neck was still firmly anchored upon this small body. That was a matter of course. My neck had not been severed. Neither my own, nor Sirius's.

In substitution, Priscilla-sama's body, which should have leapt at Sirius, had been flung backward forcefully. Having been intercepted by Sirius's metal chains head-on, she was hurled backward perilously.

Liliana: "Priscilla-sama?!"

I let out a cry towards that figure, which had obviously not leapt of its own will.

If Priscilla-sama were to be killed, the situation would become an irreparable wreck—I could hardly even think of such a thing, crying out solely because a sense of disaster dawned. And yet, Priscilla-sama suddenly spun back, still in midair, halting her momentum by stabbing the Yang Sword into the cobblestones.

Priscilla: "Cease the racket, the true damage is yet to come."

In reply to my wail, Priscilla-sama landed, the high-pitched sound of her footwear echoing. However, immediately after that, Priscilla-sama's necklace changed. It had originally been a necklace with three green jewels, but one of those had just shattered.

Almost as if it had taken the attack in Priscilla-sama's stead.

Priscilla: "The retaliation for my necklace shall have a rather tall cost."

Sirius: "So that's how it is. Is it that wounds you suffer are transferred onto what is valuable to you? That is truly a manner befitting Pride… Nono, that couldn't be, that couldn't possibly be."

Priscilla: "Deliberately putting forth demeaning speculation is malicious to the extreme, audacity to this this extent cannot be redeemed with even ten thousand deaths. A scorching heat that burns and burns yet never dies out is most fitting for the manner of your death."

Priscilla-sama's rage was directed at Sirius, whose attitude had not wavered in the slightest. Rather than to say that the Yang Sword in her hand had increased its radiance, perhaps it should be said that the heat was increasing? Priscilla-sama's regal attire, to me, appeared as if it swayed under the scorching rays of sunlight.

Though gazing at that, there truly was no way to think that Priscilla-sama was at a disadvantage… but there also was that incomprehensible happening from just now.

Sirius had taunted Priscilla-sama with words I couldn't understand. Priscilla-sama had seemed to rush forward as if falling for that provocation, and she had been intercepted because of such predictable movement—But that was not the case.

Rather, in my amateur opinion, in my eyes Priscilla-sama's movements had appeared to be fast to the point of disappearing from sight, but perhaps to Sirius this was not the case. Although this possibility couldn't be denied, that couldn't have been.

Because when the Yang Sword lashed out, Priscilla-sama's movements were stopped.

Appearing as if suspended, although such words did convey the general idea, what had happened was on a level different to that, more precisely, it was as if it had been completely frozen.

I didn't think that it was Priscilla-sama's intention to freeze in such an unnatural position, nor that it was something humans could consciously do. In that case, that stoppage should have been connected to some kind of incomprehensible ability, but what could it have been?

Sirius: "Please do not rage like that. Although you appear to be constantly raising your temper over something, such a thing will bring exhaustion and will only parch the soul? Something like Wrath is the tomb of the feeling that should be most shunned in this world. People's hearts are full of emotion… And so, they should be always filled by ecstasy and joy."

Liliana: "W-Well, even if you think that, the people outside don't look very happy, d-d-do they?"

Sirius: "Hmm?"

Huh?! Just now, could it have been a voice that had been audible?!

That freak Sirius looked directly at me, her eyes visible from a gap in the bandages coiling tightly around her body. Uhyiii, what a disaster, have I kanchou'd myself?!

Sirius: "Indeed, within the hearts of everyone outside, unease and lament reigns. Although this too is something tragic, this is merely the result of human hearts overflowing with tenderness and compassion."

Liliana: "Wh-What are you saying?"

Sirius: "Once under the influence of my Authority, people become capable of opening their hearts and resonate with one another. And so, feelings that cannot be put into words can come to light. To be human is to be able to empathize, a precious existence from which feelings can come to be. If the hearts of others are cherished, once sorrow is witnessed, in one's own heart sorrow will also bloom. And a new sorrow will also sprout in the hearts of those who witness that sorrow. As the cycle repeats, those drops of sorrow will become a pond, become a lake, become a river."

This person spoke such an outrageous thing.

In other words, the more people gathered, the worse it would get, because, with this person around, their emotions would be amplified to the extreme. Such a mechanism could rile up and spread suffering to everyone in the city… And it didn't just stop at creating unrest.

This person had referred to it as a connection of the heart.

Priscilla: "If this seems a tragedy, then, by all means, take the lead in saving everyone. Choosing not to do so and only voicing laments is but an irritating noise for the commoners."

Sirius: "Mhm, I can understand those words. I'm merely being overwhelmed by a one-sided attack by my own helplessness. However, I possess a means to save all those enveloped by sorrow!"

Sirius clapped her palms together, her demeanor like she had just had a wonderful idea.

Although it was doubtful that the freak's notion of a good idea could make the situation take a turn for the better, neither I nor Priscilla-sama spoke up. Although I didn't know about Priscilla-sama, rage boiled in my heart.

A feeling that could not be described with words was surging within my chest, was igniting.

Sirius: "A means to offer salvation to all those enveloped in sorrow… is to use delight, use joy to sweep away that sorrow. Which is to say that I, who is to be a conduit for such salvation, must find happiness!"

Priscilla: "…"

Sirius: "My, my, my. Within this city is the husband from whom I have been separated for quite some time. Confirming my love with my husband, with that person, having it returned. A happily married couple is the emblem of happiness. If my heart is filled to the brim with such joy, all those crying out in lament will be saved. By mutually enjoying happiness, the hearts of everyone will be saved—”

Sirius spoke her discourse, Priscilla-sama wore a completely disinterested expression, and I, who flickered glances at both, was thinking of many things.

I knew that this was the one time I couldn’t escape reality by pretending not to understand. Or rather, it could be said that now I understood. Thoroughly and completely, I understood the fact that this freak, Sirius Romanée-Conti, was our enemy.

Liliana: “…”

I raised my head and gazed across the surrounding waterways engulfed in flame. On the other side of the white-tinted wall of flame were the figures of people who stood in place, lacking a means to cross the waterway. They had all fallen under the charm of unwanted feelings, having lost their self-awareness.

I could hear the sound of their corpse-like voices.

Much thanks to my peculiar ears; as a bard, I was proud of my voice and hearing. To me, those voices seem to echo endlessly.

—So terrifying, so sad, save me, how painful, how, why, so unpleasant.

I could hear those kinds of voices, of resentment swept up as if in a vortex, of wails drawn out as if for eternity.

Was this the result of that so-called empathy, then? Was this the result of that so-called becoming one, then? That so called unity, was it something like this?

Liliana: “I have, to free…”

—Becoming one, and being the same as everything else, had to differ.

Men, women, adults, children, infants, elders, humans, demi-humans, were all clearly different.

To condense all that together, to blend it all up, and to say “like this, everyone will understand each other and become one”—such words were certainly nothing to joke about.

Nothing to joke about!

Priscilla: “There is no necessity for your happiness. Shut that pettily clever talking hole of yours while still able, and die on your lonesome.”

Sirius: “I don’t like that. Do not insist on using the loneliness of disconnect to comfort yourself. If you are one who cannot recognize the form of happiness, taking a look at my happiness and giving it a chance is not so bad, is it? Or perhaps, if you understand the joy of connecting with the one you love, then you have come to understand the joy of being a bride!”

Priscilla: “Unfortunately, I have already walked the aisle seven times. And on each of those, there was nothing approaching something like happiness. Apply not your paltry standards to me, for they are nauseating.”

Sirius: “Seven times… ehh…”

Priscilla-sama treated Sirius’s words as a jest, and brought the Yang Sword down from above. However, Sirius also commenced her own ferocious attack of steel chains. Sparks ignited and scattered, the burnt chains flew away, and the clash caused the figures of the two to be pushed away from the center of the courtyard.

Having been burnt off, that chain. Burning white, that inextinguishable flame. In a state of being unable to give voice, those people wailing in agony.

Within me, slowly it came together. Could it be accomplished?

If the situation that had been imagined was indeed reality, was indeed correct, in that case, it shouldn't be unachievable.

Sirius: "Even though I have clearly expended so much time on this, all for the sake of reaching the heart of that one person… You have had seven chances, and wasted all of them."

Priscilla: "Do not pin the blame for your own lack of allure on me. That is the reason as to why that pitiful man who has been imprinted on you refuses to even meet you—"

Sirius: "I and that person are intimately connected, and thus are deeply in love with one another—!!"

Suddenly, a voice of fury lashed out, one that inspired a jolt of terror.

Immediately after, bisecting the courtyard was a snake of flame which burned red! In the instant, Priscilla-sama blocked the chains that originated from Sirius's arms, and from there the flames followed the chains, the surging flame swallowing Priscilla-sama's body.

The snake of flame reared open its maw, consuming Priscilla-sama's slim body headfirst. Without a means to counter that fiery tactic, Priscilla-sama was swallowed and tossed outside of the courtyard now soaked by flame. Just as she was about to plummet, she suddenly stabilized herself with dignity using her sword. And yet, after being submerged in such flames Priscilla-sama's body remained completely unhurt.

But with a sound, a jewel from the necklace once again shattered. The two clasps of the necklace came undone simultaneously, landing on the ground with a resounding noise.

Sirius: "Me and that person share a deep love! That just and sincere person just cannot help that he has yet to finish what he began! Misconstruing that person's sincerity as pure love is just too obscene! Ahhhh! AHHHHHHH! How irritating!"

Priscilla-sama had once again survived at the cost of the necklace, but Sirius's demeanor towards her had entirely changed. The freak opened her mouth as if baring fangs, spitting ugly words as she violently expressed her temper. And her arms had swept up a vortex of crimson flame.

Sirius: “Why is it that you so inconsiderately shake my heart to this degree?! These violent emotions that shake my heart, Wrath, or in other words, passion! This quaking will give way to heat, burning away the accursed sinners! Is this what you want for yourself as well, you pretentious lonely wench, AHHHHHHHH!”

Priscilla: “With that mouth, with those eyes, such babble… Hk.”

A vortex of flame appeared over Sirius’s head as she raised her arms, immolating herself in that detestable Wrath. What had struck just now were a pair of slim twin snakes which emerged from her arms. And as those arms crossed, their forms merged into one singular powerful snake.

The arm struck vertically downward, and the enormous snake of flame rushed at Priscilla-sama. Rather than evade it, Priscilla-sama took a stance of meeting the attack.

The Yang Sword was swung from below to above, its tip lodging in the head of the giant snake. With a sound that was not of chain meeting sword, the flaming snake’s aim was strayed greatly!

However, Priscilla-sama was sent flying by the impact, making it impossible to follow up!

After Sirius summoned the snake in a fit of fury, the positions of offense and defense had suddenly reversed. Priscilla-sama had been forced on the defensive, and the metal chains and flames chased her retreating figure.

Why was that? Although it was clear at a glance that Sirius’s abilities couldn’t be underestimated, considering the earlier stages of the fight, I didn’t think that Priscilla-sama was inferior. Earlier in the day, she had said that the Yang Sword had poor consumption, but was that what was pressing her like this?

Or could it be, that, perhaps, merely as speculation. That Priscilla-sama was unable to attack—

Liliana: “Is it me?!”

A quick end, not just for me, but for everyone in the vicinity as well. In order to avoid such a result, was this a battle for buying time?! Wait, no, hang on, how could it be, that the arrogant Priscilla-sama, who thought the highest of only herself, would do something like that?!

Priscilla: “You are to prepare your song—Should a shadow fall across the Yang Sword, I shall, no matter what, sever that abomination’s head. And so, before that happens.”

At that time, something had shook my brain!

Right before the battle had started in earnest, Priscilla-sama had told me.

Before the Yang Sword met its limit, I was to prepare a song. And she had added that if that time were to approach, Sirius’s head would be mercilessly severed, and everyone else along with her.

But that meant that I shouldn’t wait around for the right moment, it had a much deeper meaning than I had thought initially, right?

If so, Priscilla-sama was waiting. Waiting for me to prepare a song.

At the very least, for the time that I took responsibility for those words.

Liliana: “Guhh, guhhhhh! Mmmm! Mmmmmmm!”

How bothersome! That person, so damn bothersome! If there are feelings, just confess to the feelings already! That person absolutely has feelings for me. No, I had been told I was liked, so it had definitely been said before. Ahhh, what a pain, screw this, this was terrifying, was there no other way—!

Liliana: “Priscilla-sama—!”

If the situation was as I suspected, then as she was fighting at a bothersome disadvantage, she must have understood what I was thinking right now. I pointed toward the stone tower that had been ignited by Sirius's flames.

Priscilla-sama turned her head at the sound of my voice, looked to the place I was pointing towards—

Priscilla: "—Hoh."

With terrifying expression and terrifying gaze, but despite such a terrifying visage inspiring a feeling of reliability, she smiled.

An expression so wicked which made it difficult to figure out just who the Sin Archbishop was here!

Sirius: "Stop looking away—!!"

Priscilla: "With the likes of you as an opponent, looking away is no distraction. Do not lecture me on my actions."

Priscilla-sama leapt back, while at the same time parrying an approaching chain with the midsection of her sword. Her body gathered momentum, moving with speed beyond that which one motion would allow, and landed by the burning tower. Priscilla-sama gazed up at the burning tower, and, directing the tip of the Yang Sword at its base, she stabbed.

Priscilla: "Such an unsightly flame. Truly beautiful light shines like this."

Differences in aesthetic between the lights of flame and such, were incomprehensible to an ordinary person like me.

Although incomprehensible, even a layman's eye could clearly make out that a decidedly different sort of flame now surrounded the control tower!

The rising, white-tinged flames that now shimmered there were of the same type that surrounded the waterways.

Even though the snakes of flame originating from Sirius's chains also burned crimson and scorched with bright and staggering heat, the flames emitted from the Yang Sword held a sort of sanctity that gave the impression of being untouchable.

Priscilla: “The stage is prepared—Ensure that you perform your utmost.”

Liliana: “Right, right! Understood!”

After smothering the flames of the control tower with another layer of flame, Priscilla-sama spoke one sentence. I replied with fervent confidence, rushing over to the control tower.

While watching the situation with an air of being set off by anything that happened, Sirius flickered her gaze towards this scene and extended both her hands in our direction!

Sirius: “What are you doing to the flame I lit as an emblem of my love for that person?!”

Liliana: “I think it’s best you don’t speak of outlandish ridiculous things such as setting an entire building on fire to flirt!”

I said it, I said it, I said it! Wa~hh haha!

Rushing towards my back as I spoke while running, I felt that Sirius freak’s chain coming after me in one smooth motion! Burning chains! A heat wave, heat wave!

I knew that before the flame burned me, my head could be sent flying the very instant I was attacked, but heedless of what was behind me, I ran! And the reason was—!

Priscilla: “This is a situation where I shan’t hold back until whatever that one comes up with is witnessed.”

Liliana: “Chiiiiiii!”

Taking the place of my fleeing self, Priscilla-sama landed where the chain would strike. The Yang Sword sliced downward, deflecting the licking tongue of flame!

Hearing the intermittent sounds of Priscilla-sama and that freak clashing anew, I finally reached at my destination, the burning stone tower.

Liliana: “Haaa, haaaaa…”

Although the distance covered hadn’t been too long, drawing breath grew laborious, and my body felt fatigued! In all honesty, right now, nothing would feel better than a drink of ice-cold water before collapsing on a bed. This was something not meant for a travelling bard, but after spending so long in greenhouse-like surroundings, anything but a soft bed wouldn’t work!

Liliana: “Ahh, really… isn’t this all Kiritaka-san and everyone else’s fault—”

Allowing me to reside in this city, showing me warm hospitality. Whether the Scales of the White Dragon or the citizens of the city, everyone had expressed their love, and the likes of Kiritaka-san with such enthusiasm that even I was taken aback, it was all their fault! Their fault for having me remain in this city, so that my ability to keep on the path of a travelling bard had been weakened!

Well then, just a bit of extra effort here—recall the ruthless determination of your waist and legs from before!!

Liliana: “Ihhhh, ihhhhhhh!”

Myself prepared, teeth clenched, I held my steady Lyulyre in my arms, and rushed toward the blazing tower! So hot, so hot, so hot, so damn hot—!

Liliana: “—Guh, giiiiii!”

Anticipation of the scorching pain sent a sharp jolt through me.

However, although I felt an overwhelming heat wave, neither my skin, nor my hair, nor the Lyulyre, had been burnt by the scorching flame. The heat of the flame could be clearly felt, but nothing had caught on fire.

Much alike the white flames that were rising in the waterways, there was painful heat, but no burning. And because of that, I recognized this flame as the Yang Sword's bluff.

However, it was different. Different indeed.

The Yang Sword wielded by Priscilla-sama had indeed burnt through the metal chains upon collision. Even though it was clearly the same sword, sometimes it burned through, sometimes it didn't.

Priscilla-sama's flame could choose what to burn. Which meant, that it could also choose what not to burn.

Liliana: "Ohhhh—!"

So that was why! The white flame enveloping this control tower definitely wouldn't burn me!

Even though it was hot enough to burn me, agonizing enough to seem fatal, painful enough to make whoever experienced it want to collapse and roll on the ground, it would not burn, it would not injure, it would not be deadly!

Eyeballs melting, tongue withering, hair alight, skin simmering, Lyulyre scorched, bones cracking, flesh burnt, consciousness eroding to nothing, was all an illusion—!

Not hot, so hot, so hot, so hot, not hot, not hot, so hot, craving death, not wanting to die, so hot, not hot, hothothot, even though it was so hooooot—!

Sprinting up the stairs of the control tower, first floor, second floor, just how many floors were there?! Where was the roof?! How far did the fire reach, where had the hands of the fire reached towards, looking left and right yielded only the sight of white fire, sohotsohot, how could such agony be, so hot, heat beyond heat, I—

Liliana: "—!"

Right now, I wanted to wail about the intensity of the heat, wanted to shriek until my throat burst.

Absolutely not. If this agony were given voice to, it would ruin my throat in one cry. This throat could absolutely not be spent. These fingers as well. I wanted to scratch, wanted to express the suffering no matter how. But no, absolutely not, if these fingers were damaged, they could not strum a melody.

Whether eyes, or skin, or hair, would be okay; it couldn't be helped if they melted. But this throat, these fingers, and these ears as well, were not okay, because they were all indispensable for what would come next.

Forcefully ascending the steps, slamming open the incredibly heavy door with a kick, appearing now before me was the night sky—the wind howling in frenzy, heat continuing to flow from beneath my feet, but there were no more walls. I wobbled along the cobblestone to the edge, where I could look at below.

The wind was blowing, and underneath, a red figure and a white figure were waving dangerous objects, amidst white flames surrounded by a wailing crowd.

I was so hot, so hot, I felt as if I would die at any instant.

Right now, I wasn't completely free from that heat yet, the soles of my feet were still burning, the white flames seemed to intensify when the wind blew, sorrow suddenly rose in my heart, and I wanted to squirm—

Liliana: "Eek, eeep… Alright, this is a once-in-a-lifetime stage!"

Reaching the place I had dashed for, through heat and agony that inspired a craving for death, from here, everything was visible, and could reach everywhere with sound.

I was dying to die, but before I died, there was still something left to do, and so—

Liliana: "Come, come, gather around, everyone far away, make sure you listen! Everyone close by, make sure you watch the dance! For everyone even farther away, I'll be even louder, so just listen!! Liliana Masquerade, is here to sing and dance and perform for you! So listen well! —The Sky Overtaking the Morning Glow!!"

—Just gather all those passionate feelings, and spit them all out at once!

Chapter 67:
Liliana Masquerade

1

In the end, Liliana herself did not remember when she had begun to sing.

Liliana's bloodline, since the time of her mother, of her mother's mother, and even of other mothers beyond that, had always been a bloodline that did not settle in one place, instead travelling the earth.

The vagrant occupation of a bard would naturally lead them to get bored quickly. They would not remain in any one place, but rather would continuously travel with only two feet along with the winds, along with their hearts' whims.

It seemed that many bards would gather together, to band together for performances. However, Liliana was not particularly fond of this nature of banding together. Although she did not dislike being with others, their interests were different. There was a palpable difference in sense of music.

Just like her line of mothers, Liliana trod alone onto a journey. However, even amongst the many bards that valued their freedom, it could not be denied that her independence had appeared rather early. She had been only thirteen years of age when she left her parents' nest.

???: "Hey, annoying! Can't you just sit here and wait?! Aren't you supposed to not do things without your father and mothers' assent?"

Although not over a trivial matter, at the end of that argument she fled with no doubts. Since the age of ten, Liliana had always wanted to live independently. Those were the heedless opinions of a daughter too deeply submerged in chasing dreams, and her parents, especially her mother, forcibly kept her from it.

However, at around the age of ten, the feelings of the young Liliana were already a tad more mature than those of other girls her age. That was, more or less, the result of her father's performances and her mother's singing of various poems. The influence of being familiar with those played no small part.

For young Liliana, the characters appearing in the music her mother sang were dashing. As she came into contact with their adventures, struggles, battles, romances, intrigues, Liliana had been forever unable to bear that her feet could not make their way forward.

—The people who had come to be famous through song, could so freely choose their way of living.

To the ten-year-old Liliana, the heroes that had appeared in the songs were friends. She was eager to savor the feeling of walking the same path, of witnessing the same sights, all underneath the same sky they all had raised their heads to see.

Clinging to such a feeling, she had been able to bear it for three years.

Liliana's single-minded passion and single-minded sense of companionship flared up. From her father she stole the skill of performing with a Lyulyre, and from her mother she stole the sound of her singing, along with several famed songs.

On the eve of turning thirteen, her mother personally handed her down the Lyulyre, a tradition of her bloodline, and after that grand argument between parent and child, she sprinted away from her parents' side, journeying away from home alone.

Liliana: "Hahahaha! Wait and see, Mother, Father! I'll be the king of bards…!"

Completely evading the pursuit of her parents, she, now alone, made a vow to the night sky. Liliana Masquerade's grand adventure would, from now on, commence.

—In hindsight, it was plain to see that their parent-child quarrel had been due to her parents' thoughtfulness.

Since the age of ten, her parents had deplored Liliana's recklessness. They complained that her skills had yet to mature, that she treated not learning melodies as a joke, and occasionally they even refused her food afterward.

Father: "Hehehehe! A little girl like you is ten years too early to think she can live independently! Leave it to this arrogant child to take care of the meat of the rabbits who've fallen into the trap!"

Mother: "My oh my, you poor thing! Today's rabbit meat seems to be so sloppily cooked, and now you say we have to wait? A child who doesn't listen to her father and mother really is pitiful!"

For better or for worse, her parents had a nature of chasing their dreams.

For a pair such as them, how heartrending the departure of their only daughter must have been. Surely, leading up to the departure, arguments would have been aplenty.

Father: "This lowers the cost of meals! We'll be able to eat three meals a day from now!"

Mother: "With Liliana gone, we can just have another child!"

Surely, there must have been arguments. Surely it had been painful. For sure.

And a parental argument was the last gift she received from them.

If Liliana's dreams were crushed, she would not return to her parents. To cut off Liliana's way out, they spoke such heartless words.

To weaken at the thought of an escape route was human nature. As long as a path of retreat existed, the flames of determination could not burn until their very last.

Especially for a travelling bard, who had no home of their own.

Family and hometown were typically notions that were merged into one. Reliance on family was a subconsciously overwhelming tendency. And so, the greatest obstacle standing in the way of independence was the act of cutting it off.

Thanks to her youthful recklessness, and her parents' shrewd manipulation, she had overcome such an obstacle.

While sipping muddied water, munching roots of grass, whimpering "I want to go home…" and having been overcome by starvation and weakness, only then did Liliana notice their consideration.

If her resolve had shattered then, perhaps she would have cast down her Lyulyre. She thanked her parents. That mutual parting had been the best for them.

Liliana: "—Oh."

Mother: "Ehhh?!"

Father: "Oh, eh?"

Years later, upon encountering them in another town, they had yet to settle their differences. On top of that, held in her parents' arms, was an unfamiliar infant.

Liliana initially assumed it to be her younger sister, but rather than speak to her parents, she merely stuck out her chest, straightened her back and returned the way she had come.

Years later, if she had achievements more worthy of pride, perhaps she could reunite with her parents and exchange smiles and happy words.

However, as of this day, she was sorely lacking. So, it should be left as that, for now.

Of course, after this meeting today, perhaps she would never encounter her parents again. And there was an even higher chance that she would never be able to introduce herself as an elder sister to the little sister whose name she had yet to learn.

However, that was fine. This was what Liliana had chosen, a way of life which relied on song.

And, one day, when Liliana eventually became a world-renowned bard, doubtlessly her parents would irresponsibly comment to everyone who would listen. The first victim would no doubt be her little sister. And thus, it was completely natural that she added another petty ambition.

Liliana: “Heheh, what a heart-pounding vision of a future. Even though it shouldn’t have been too much to ask for!”

It was around the time Liliana was seventeen, that she found her resolve anew.

Liliana, who was now twenty-two, had lived independently for nine years—it was a given that her life had not been smooth, instead riddled with tribulation.

Most notable among them, was that at the age of thirteen, right after she’d begun her journey, on the day immediately after declaring “I will be the king of bards!” she was already utterly close to death. If she had not been picked up by passerby merchants, and had not been allowed to save up some money working as a servant, surely she would actually have died alone, pitifully.

If not for a group of merchants, travelling across the lands to make their living.

Liliana had been picked up and taken care of, acting as a servant. It was a way of travel much safer, much more comfortably, than a true solo journey, because there would be meals and a bed.

Upon reaching towns, Liliana would also take up the Lyulyre, singing at the side of the road for coin. The first instance of having her performance recognized after leaving her father and mother’s household was unforgettable.

The merchants took care of her for around a year, but when their spokesperson settled in a town, having saved up enough money to acquire his own store, the group disbanded. Amongst the scattered merchants, several groups invited Liliana to come along, but solemnly she declined, continuing on alone.

Letting go of a safer and more comfortable journey, she renewed herself as a person and sharpened her fangs. The lukewarm days of the beginning had ended, and the legend of Liliana Masquerade began. This was, without question, a tale of such vigor.

The details of the following years of toil are to be omitted.

As part of a group of merchants, or of a respected house of bards, she would have been fine, but the ruthless world had no consideration for a little girl who sang.

It was then that she fully understood the consideration that her parents had shown before she left.

This was when Liliana realized that there was another great truth of this world. It was that the world she lived in and the worlds the characters of her beloved stories lived in were absolutely different, and she was in no way one of their companions.

The reason for that was hardly anything special.

On the night she had munched on roots of grass as usual and consumed untouched red fruits in the mountains, she suffered the agony of a stomachache and fever by her lonesome, and then, she realized.

The heroes of the thrilling stories she knew had never been like this.

Because those tales were done and over with. The days where they spat fresh blood, spoke their aspirations, cried out their hopes, and swung their blades were of the distant past. Liliana had only superficially tread through their footsteps and woven their tales for others to witness.

Liliana loved them, but they had never loved Liliana.

Her own thoughts had been completely one-sided, the kind of thoughts that would only lead to a dead-end set in the past and, ultimately, cause her to lose her way.

—Then, just what was a bard?

Her origin had been “I will become the king of bards!” and with that said, Liliana had taken up the mantle of bard for many years, before finally realizing how useless she was.

That was something she had never considered before, something that was akin to having slammed into a wall; Liliana tasted the feeling like having her nose and front teeth aggressively smashed.

For three days and three nights, Liliana’s pains, fever, and vomiting continued without cease. Amidst this nightmare, Liliana endlessly wondered what was dream and what was reality.

After the fourth day, Liliana awoke recovered, splashed her face in the stream, and drank its water. The self that was reflected there wore a different mien than the self of before.

The wind rustled the foliage, the gurgling of the stream was refreshing, and the calls of insects and birds could be heard.

And there, for the first time, she felt song.

Tears overflowing, Liliana could not help but leap into the stream. The insects, birds, and fish were all startled, their music flowing to the water’s surface where Liliana’s head emerged, heartily laughing, crying, laughing, crying out.

Liliana descended the mountain, body caked in dried mud and dirtied water, and stood on the streets.

Everyone found themselves disgusted by the young girl clutching an instrument, wearing a dirtied dress. The storeowner’s expression revealed disgust, and passersby on the streets seemed uneasy as well. Merely standing like that for a few seconds would perhaps result in being knocked over by some thoughtless passerby.

However, the Liliana moving through the streets moved with agility. It was not that she was thinking she would be knocked over if she did not start soon.

In this moment, her only desire was to sing as soon as possible.

Passersby: “…”

How many people had noticed the strings of the Lyulyre being plucked?

She was a dirty, muddy girl, the Lyulyre in her hands aged and withered, and yet the hands that were touching the Lyulyre were breathtaking.

It was unclear how many people had noticed it.

The only thing that was certain, however, was that the consciousness of those who had indeed taken notice had been immediately raptured.

Passersby: "…"

As soon as Liliana's performance began, the moment those graceful hands and delicate fingers weaved music, the footsteps of everyone on the streets paused, as did their breathing. In an instant, everyone realized there had been some sort of dramatic shift, confused by the tremendous wave that swept through their hearts.

Every gaze focused upon her, a dirtied, young girl standing in the street, the source of the sound.

Liliana felt attention falling upon her, and at the same time understood that she had become excited. The stage had been prepared, and she dashed on it in one breath.

As applause for her performance reached its zenith, Liliana's Song began.

From her throat flowed Song, to the extent of making her believe that the songs she had sung in the past were not of the same substance.

Her own knowledge and feelings for the famous melodies went back and forth, piercing her. With a clear heart, she watched them rise towards the heavens, the friends she had thought of as inseparable.

—Song was a gift, and to the friends of the past whose tales she sang of, she was nothing at all.

And that was fine, for Liliana understood that her own existence was that of a bard.

With this foundation of understanding, from hereafter she could continue to sing by herself.

Flaunt, that in this world such exemplary people existed. Flaunt, that she had held the misunderstanding that she had been friends with such exemplary people.

And one day, certainly, for certain, she would befriend such amazing people, and she would sing, proudly flaunting that such amazing people had been her friends.

Liliana: “…”

Finishing her song, Liliana shed tears.

The people there were struck speechless, shedding tears just as she did, wiped their noses.

Applause echoed like thunder across the street, and Liliana Masquerade had become a bard.

Since then, Liliana’s acquaintanceship with music had persisted.

2

Atop the burning control tower, Liliana sang, recalling the first time she had sung and the first time she had sung as a bard.

A feeling similar to the one from then danced in her heart.

What she wanted to sing, wanted to express with words, wanted to voice, was too much. Even in the midst of song, she could not resist the urge to sing it. To the point that it could be called an obsession.

The white flame that scorched only the prey it selected was still burning, its momentum showing no sign of relenting

Perhaps Liliana did not feel the heat that would scorch her, yet the heat that burned tormented her. Even now, blazing pain was transmitted starting from the soles of her footwear, the body that had scaled the control tower wreathed in flame continuously emitting out cries of pain. Pain that drove her to her knees assaulted her to the point of wishing to cry out immediately.

However, something like wailing was a waste. Something like rolling around was a waste.

Before her eyes was an audience who wanted song. This throat was not for crying, but for song.

Liliana: "…"

The song she sang was not one that had been passed down by her mother or family.

A bard's obligation was an obligation to inherit stories, and so perhaps for a bard this was a misstep, but this was the song that Liliana had received, as a gift, upon first coming to understand the world.

Upon the arrival of a new morning, the sky would be dyed a reddish yellow color.

The day Liliana loved to see chased off the night, signaling a new day. The break of day stained red and yellow, bringing a true morning to all.

—The sky that overtook the morning glow.

No matter what the night held, morning would always dawn.

The blue sky that oversaw the rise of the sun for everyone heralded the start of a new day.

Liliana: "…"

Right now, mayhem gradually permeated the city, and a great number of people had been overtaken by unease and sorrow, leaving them immobile.

In the midst of a night where neither looking forward nor backward was an option, every single one of them was struggling, struggling, that much was the reality of it.

But, even so, Liliana wanted to sing that the morning would nonetheless arrive.

Because she wanted to sing with that in her mind, she sang just that.

She herself would not survive the agony of holding back the song she wanted to sing. And thus, right now was the perfect time to use song to convey what she wished to.

At the top of the control tower, Liliana loosened the trembling throat, so carefully tightened, and continued to sing.

Fingers moved across the Lyulyre as if in dance, and in truth, she sang and danced simultaneously. Making full use of the peak of the control tower, hoping that a large number of those surrounding would listen.

And yet, how deplorable that her voice had no way of reaching everyone's eardrums.

The problem was not merely one of volume. There was an issue of distance. The hearts of her audience were troubled. No matter how much of her heart Liliana poured, the existence of physical and mental barriers that made listening impossible was an undeniable reality.

Liliana believed in the power of song. However, it could only be considered true song if it reached its audience, becoming song only when that was accomplished.

Spread every which way, just how many people had been overcome by unease and sorrow? Perhaps it reached hundreds, even thousands. Liliana had never had the experience of reaching such a wide audience on her own, without the aid of the magical device.

Whether a means to diffuse voice, or a means of reach so many simultaneously, a normal person would not be able to have such means.

Liliana’s battle was far too hopeless, her aspirations far too distant.

Back when she had been ten years of age, Liliana’s ambitions had been deemed by her parents to be far too reckless.

And right now, was it just as back then, was she still repeating the same things?

Even though the power of song was real, was the person delivering the song still a fake?

Was it this place where she wanted to end up at?

Liliana: “—!”

At such a thought that inflicted herself pain, her throat faltered. And in that moment,

???: “Liliana—lovely Songstress. That singing voice, I want to it to captivate me forever.”

A silly man, with such a silly pick-up line, appeared in Liliana’s mind.

He was an odd man. He was doubtlessly a weirdo. Perverted might have been more accurate.

Upon hearing Liliana’s song, there had been those who had approached her with evil intents in mind.

Liliana had remained distant from all of them. She could not lend her throat to those who were not sincere, attempting to use song for ulterior motives. That was the sense of duty of a bard.

???: “I fell in love with your beauty. Please stay by my side!”

And so, he had been the first to try to become close to her from his heart.

Awareness that Liliana was a bard was something that had only come to him after his declaration of love to her, made upon seeing her. The first time she had performed in front of him, rather than her song, his eyes raked over her face, chest, feet, honestly rather uncomfortably.

However, that was not to say that he did not find himself touched by Liliana's song, nor that his feelings for Liliana had been hiding via deceit.

He liked her appearance, understood her singing voice, knew that, as a person, leaving was impossible.

???: "The city of Pristella has four large gates. So, within the city are several shelters as an emergency measure. This magical device is used to encourage citizens to be aware of daily predicaments, and to help them make decisions on the event of an emergency."

Liliana: "Eh… So what's this for…?"

